meanours. I do agree, that for Felony, Treason, or Surety of the Peace, the Persons of Peers may be Committed; and that which is called Surety of the Peace in our Books, Mr. Solicitor knows very well, in some of the Rolls of Parliament, is called Breach of the Peace, but it is all one; and the meaning, in short, is, That it is such a Breach of the Peace, as for which a Man by Law may be obliged to find Sureties for the Peace. If it should mean a Breach of the Peace by implication, as all Trespasses and Misdemeanours are said to be Contra Pacem in the Indictment or Information, then it were a simple thing to enumerate the Cases wherein Priviledges did not lie; for there could be no Information whatsoever, but must be Contra Pacem, and so there could be no such thing as Priviledge at all: And besides, we say, the very Course of this Court is contrary to what they would have; for in the Case of a Peer, for a Misdemeanour, you go first by Summons, and then you do not take out a Capias as against a common Person, but the next Process is a Distingas, and so ad Infinitum; And I do appeal to them on the other side, and Challenge them to shew any one President, when a Peer was brought thus into Court, to be charged with an Information, without it were in the Case of an apparent Breach of the Peace, for he must be Charged in Custody, and there must be a Committitur to the Marshal, to intitle the Court to proceed; your Lordship will find very few Presidents of Cases of this Nature about common Persons, for till within these 14 or 15 years there was no such thing ever done against a common Person; But this was the Rule; first there went out a Subpœna, and then an Attachment, and when the Party was taken upon the Attachment, he is taken to come in upon Process, and then the Court would Charge him presently, but if he did appear upon the Summons, they would not Charge him, but he had time to take a Copy of the Information, and an Imparance of Course, till the next Term, before he could be compelled to Plead. But in the Case of a Peer, there never was any such President, as the Attaching his Person, but only a Summons and Distress; and I would be glad the KING's Council would shew that ever there was any such process taken out against the Person of a Peer, for a meer Misdemeanour. My Lord, 'tis plain, what Breach of the Peace means in every Information, and I only speak this to acquaint the Court how the constant Proceedings in all these cases have been. These Informations were anciently more frequent in the Star-Chamber; and what was the Process there? Not the common Process of a Subpœna, that was not the course there; but the Process was a Letter from the Chancellor, that if the Party upon that Letter did not appear, in a Common Case, there went out an Attachment; but in a Peers Case, never; and so it appears by Cromptons Jurisdiction of Courts. Tit. Star-Chamber 32. This appears likewise by the Proceedings in Chancery against the Peers, till the Queens time, they did not so much as take out an Attachment after default upon a Subpœna, but they would then in the Queens time, be so bold as to take out an Attachment against a Lord for not appearing; but that Course was condemned as illegal; so we find in my Lord Dyer.

Mr. Attor. Gen. That was at a common Persons Suit.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But the proceedings in the Star-

Star-Chamber were at the King's Suit, and I am sure Mr. Solicitor knows that the Peers Priviledges reach to Informations, but as I was saying, it was so adjudged as to the Chancery in my Lord Cromwell's Case. iiii Eliz. Dyer, 315.

Id. Ch. Just. You take a great compass, Sir Robert Sawyer, but pray remember what you laid down at first, for the Ground of your discourse, That there was never any Commitment of a Peer for a bare Misdemeanour, you must keep to that, that is the Point you are to look after.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, I will so, I do not Cite these Cases but for this purpose, to shew, that in all Courts the Peers have particular Priviledges, and I am sure they can produce you no Precedents for any such proceedings against a Peer; in my experience of these matters, I never knew any such; nay, I knew it always to be otherwise, That in Informations for Misdemeanours, there did never issue out a Capias against a Peer; and Mr. Attorney knows very well, it was so in the late Case of my Lord Lovelace; for that Case of my Lord Devonshire, that was an express Breach of the Peace, tho' it was debated and disputed then; so that I take it, these Noble Lords cannot be charged with this Information, because they do not come in by Legal Process; and unless they can shew me any Cases, where a Peer did ever come in upon such a Commitment, and answered to an Information upon that Commitment, it must certainly be allowed not to be the Legal Course; though if such a Precedent could be shewn, that past sub Silentio, without debate or solemn determination, that would not do, nor could bind the rest of the Peers; If one man would lose a particular Benefit he has, all the whole Body must not lose it; and the benefit is not small, of Time to make his Defence; of Imparling; of taking a Copy of the Indictment, and preparing himself to plead as his Case will bear; and indeed a common person has used to have these priviledges, tho in some Cases of late, they have taken the other Course; and if a Capias went out (which We say, cannot go against a Lord) and the Party were brought in, he was to answer immediately: Now, my Lord, I take it, That the Priviledges of Peers is in all times the same with the Parliamentary Privilege in Parliament time, which reacheth to Informations, as well as other Actions. (My Lord Coke is express in this point) in the 4 Instit. 25. If that Objection should hold good, that every Information being Contra Pacem, that should be a Breach of the Peace, then (as I said before) Priviledge will hold in no Information, which is contrary to that and all our other Books; 'tis only such a Breach of the Peace, as for which Security of the Peace may be required. But further, that this a Priviledge enjoyed by the Peers Spiritual as well as Temporal, I suppose will not be denied, for I think they will not question, but that the Bishops, and Abbots that were Lords of Parliament were Peers, and we find in our Books when the Court has been moved for a Capias against an Abbot, if he were a Mitred Abbot, and sat in the Lords House, it was always said, that no such Process ought to go, and so it is in the case of Bishops; but indeed for other Noblemen, the difference is this, Where it does not appear upon Record, that they are Lords in Parliament, there the Courts have put them to bring their Writs of Privilege, but where it does appear upon Record, that they are Peers the Court is to allow and take notice of their priviledge, and there needs no such Writ. Now that the Parliament priviledge, and the priviledge of Peers (as to their persons) is the same, appears by the form of the Writ in the Register fol. 287. Fitz. Herb. Nat. Brev. 247. The Words of the Writ are these, That if such a one be Sued at the Suit of another, the Writ commands, that a Peer out of Parliament time should have the same priviledge with those summoned by the King to the Parliament; and I know not any difference that can be put between them, and it cannot be denied, that all Informations whatsoever, unless such as are for Breaches of the Peace, for which Surety of the Peace may be required, are under the Controul of the Parliament priviledge; so that upon these grounds, I do press that my Lords the Bishops may be discharged: If there be any Information against us, we are ready to enter our Appearance to answer it according to the course of the Court; but if the Information be for no other thing than what is contained in the Warrant of Commitment, then their Persons ought to be priviledged from Commitment.

Mr. Pollexfen. If your Lordship please to take it altogether, you will find it a case very well worth your consideration, it being the case of all the Peerage of England.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, these Gentlemen have taken a great deal of Liberty, and spent much of your time in making long Arguments, and after all, truly I do not know where to have them, nor can understand what they would be at; it seems they agree that for Treason, Felony, and Breach of the Peace, a Peer may be Committed.

L. C. J. That is (say they) such a Breach of the Peace, as for which Surety of the Peace may be required.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then all the Learning they have been pleased to favour us with, is at an end, for if here be any thing charged upon the Bishops, for which Sureties of the Peace may be required, then this is a good Commitment.

L. C. J. That they must agree upon their own Arguments.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can then any Man in the World say, that a Libel does not require Sureties of the Peace? for we must now take it as it is here upon this Return. How my Lords the Bishops will clear themselves of it, is a Question for another time; but the Warrant says they were committed for Contriving, Framing, and Publishing a Seditious Libel against His Majesty, and his Government; is there a greater Misdemeanour? Or is there any thing on this side a capital Crime that is a greater Offence? Is there any thing that does so tread upon the Heels of a capital Offence, and comes so near the greatest of Crimes that can be committed against the Government? Not to enlarge at this time upon what the consequences of such things may be, is there a greater Breach of the Peace than such Seditious Practices? No doubt, any Man may be committed for it, and may be bound to find Sureties for his good Behaviour.

Sir Robert Sawyer. I say Sureties of the Peace, not of the good Behaviour.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray my Lord, would you consider where we are, we are going towards France, I think, or some farther Country; they have set us out to Sea, and I do not see after this rate, when we shall come to Land; certainly, these Gentlemen are mightily out of the way, and would fain have us so too; we are here upon a single

single Question, as this Case stands before your Lordship, upon the Return; here is a Libel, a Seditious Libel, said to be contrived, made and published against the King and his Government, by these Noble Lords the Prisoners; this is the Accusation; suppose this be true, (that is to be proved hereafter) (I hope they are innocent, and will prove themselves so) but suppose it to be true, that they have made a Seditious Libel against the King and His Government, will any Man say, that this is not done Vi & Armis? This is a Libel with a Witness; nay, two or three degrees more will carry it to High Treason, and all the Informations that were exhibited by Sir Robert Sawyer, when he was Attorney General, (and he exhibited a great many for Libels) constantly these Words were in, Vi & Armis & contra Pacem.

Bishop of Peterborough. Was it so in your own Case, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, it was so in my Case, and you were one of them that Prosecuted me, for ought I know; or if you did not prosecute me you Preached against me; or if you did not, some of your Tribe did: But so, my Lord, it was in many other Cases, within time of Memory. Sir Robert Sawyer has past a Complement upon me, of my great Skill in Parliament matters; but truly there needs no great Skill in matters where the Law is so plain; a Peer they agree may be in Prison for Treason, Felony, or Breach of the Peace; but that Breach of the Peace (say they) is where the Law requires Sureties of the Peace; but is there any certainty where Sureties of the Peace shall be required, and where not? Then I would put this Case, These Lords have contrived and published a Seditious Libel against the King and His Government; and whether this be not such a Breach of the Peace, as will require Sureties of the Peace, is the Question before you: And it plainly appears to be so, in Sir Baptist Hick's Case, in Hobbs. If a Man write a private Letter, provoking another to Fight, although there be no Fighting, this is a Breach of the Peace; now a Letter can do no Wrong in that kind, but as it incites and stirs up to Fighting, which may occasion Blood-shed, and I think there cannot be a greater Breach of the Peace, than for a Man to come to the King's Face, and publish a Libel against Him, and yet according to their Doctrine, this Man shall go away, and you shall not take him up, but take a Subpoena against him, and wait for the delay of all the ordinary Process; and they tell you another thing, that a Capias does not lie upon an Information against the Person of a Peer, and that there is no precedent of any such thing, but I would pray them to remember the Case of my Lord Lovelace, about some three Years ago for breaking a Foot-man's Head. It seems, if a Man libels the King in his own presence, that is not so great a matter, as a little Correction to an insolent Foot-man; but there he was bound in a Recognizance to appear here in this Court, and accordingly he did appear, and was charged with an Information, and as to that precedent I do believe Sir Robert Sawyer and Mr. Finch won't contradict me; this was in the first Year of this King: There was likewise my Lord of Pembroke's Case, who went to a disorderly House, and there frightened some People, we moved the Court, and had an Attachment against him, for a Misdemeanour, and he was glad to Compound the thing, or it had not ended so soon as it did; and yet if a Lord comes to the King's Person, and affronts Him to his very Face, will not an Attachment lie against him for it? Certainly it will. My Lord, we have gone out of the way too much already, and these Gentlemen will lead us farther, but we hope your Lordships will reduce us to the methods of the Law: Here is an Information which we desire may be read, if they have any thing to plead to it, their time for that will come after it is read; if they think they have been illegally imprison'd, it appears plainly upon this Return, who they were that did Commit them; here are a great many Noble Lords to Answer an Action of false Imprisonment, if these Lords think fit, and may have these Learned Gentlemen, that are very well able to advise them what they should do in it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We pray your Lordships Judgment, whether the Cases put by Mr. Solicitor are like our Case.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They are as like, as Sir Robert Sawyer is to Mr. Attorney that was.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Those Cases are of apparent Breaches of the Peace, so likewise was my Lord of Devonshire's Case, but certainly that was not at all like this.

Mr. Finch. With your Lordships Favour I would add but one Word, and I would repeat nothing of what has been said; all that I shall say is this, There is a great deal of difference between an Actual Breach of the Peace, and that which in the bare Form of an Information is a Breach of the Peace, by Construction of Law, it being contra pacem: Suppose it be laid that a Man did Vi & Armis speak Words, will that make the Words a Breach of the Peace?

Mr. Sol. Gen. It must be Vi & Armis, and certainly is a Breach of the Peace.

Mr. Finch. If a Man write a Petition, are the Pen and Ink that he uses, the Arms?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I hope Mr. Finch remembers what I heard him say in Algernon Sidney's Case scribere est agere.

Mr. Finch. I think it is so, Mr. Solicitor, but every Action is not a Breach of the Peace.

L. C. J. Well, let my Brothers deliver their Opinions, I will give you mine.

Mr. Just. Allyb. The single Question now is, Whether or no that which Mr. Solicitor was pleased to name as the Crime, and lay it to the charge of my Lords the Bishops, that is a Seditious Libel, be a Breach of the Peace: I do confess that there is little of Argument to be drawn from Forms of Indictments; and I shall put no great stress upon the Words vi & armis, where the Fact will not come near it, but if a Commitment may ensue, (as they seem to agree) wherever Surety of the Peace may be required, nothing seems more important to me, than that Surety of the Peace should be required, where there is any thing of Sedition in the Case; and wherever there is a Seditious Act, I cannot tell how to make any other Construction of it, but that it is an Actual Breach of the Peace, that is my Opinion.

Mr. Just. Powel. I am of the same opinion in this point too, as I was in the other point before, it was a matter of great consequence (I thought) upon the former point, but now it appears to me, to be of far greater consequence than it did at first; for here, all the Great, High, and Noble ble Peers of England are concerned in it, as to their Privilege. Our Predecessours in this Court heretofore would not determine the Privileges of the Peers, but left them to themselves to make what Judgment they pleased of them: I think truly 'tis a thing of that weight, that it may be very fit for the Court to take time to consider of it, and I declare for my own part, I will not take upon me to deliver any Opinion in a matter of this Consequence, before I have consulted all the Books, that can give me any Light in the Case.

Mr. Just. Allyn. Brother Powell, I am not determining, limiting, or cramping the Privilege of Peers, but I am only considering whether or no a Seditious Libel be a Breach of the Peace; 'tis agreed to be on all hands a Breach of the Peace. Is there any thing that will require Sureties of the Peace to be given upon the doing of it? For there Sir Robert Sawyer has laid the Foundation of his distinction, and if that shall draw any Person under a Commitment, then, say I, in my Judgment, wherever there is a Seditious Libel, there is that which is an actual breach of the Peace; for I am sure, there is that, which is sufficient to require Sureties of the Peace; I controvert not the right of the Peers one way or other, but only declare my opinion, That this is a fact that comes within the Rule laid down by them, that what will require Sureties of the Peace, is a breach of the Peace.

Mr. Just. Holloway. God forbid that in a Case of this Nature, any one should take upon him here to say, that every Misdemeanour were a breach of the Peace, I say not so; but certainly there are some such Misdemeanours as are breaches of the Peace; and if here be such a Misdemeanour before us, then it is acknowledged that even in Parliament time, a privileged Person might be Committed for it: For in Treason, Felony, and breach of the Peace, Privilege does not hold. I will not take upon me (as my Brother said) to determine concerning the Privilege of the Peers; it is not of our Cognizance, nor have we any thing to do, either to enlarge or confine privilege, nor do we determine whether this be such a Libel as is charged in the Information, that will come in question another time, but certainly as this Case is, the Information ought to be read, and my Lords ought to appear and plead to it.

L. C. J. Certainly we are all of us here as tender of the privileges of the Peers, as any in the World can be, and as tender as we would be, and ought to be in trying any Man's right; it becomes us to do it with great respect and regard to my Lords the Bishops; and therefore I would be as careful (if that were the question before me) to consider very well, before I give my Opinion, as ever I was in my Life. But when I see there can come no mischief at all to the Privileges of the Peers, by what is agreed on all hands; I think I may very justly give my Opinion; for here is the Question, Whether the fact charged in the Warrant, be such a Misdemeanour as is a breach of the Peace, and the Words of the Warrant (which is now upon the Record) being such as have been recited, I cannot but think it is such a Misdemeanour as would have required Sureties of the Peace, and if Sureties were not given, a Commitment might follow, and therefore I think the Information must be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray the Clerk may read it.

Clerk reads. Middlesex, ss. Memorandum. That Sir Thomas Powys, Knight, Attorney General of our Lord the King, who for our said Lord the King in this behalf Sues, comes in his own person here into the Court of our said Lord the King, before the King himself at Westminster, on Friday next, after the Morrow of the Holy Trinity in this Term, and for our said Lord the King, gives the Court here to understand, and be informed, that our said Sovereign Lord the King out of His signal Clemency —

Mr. Soll. Gen. Read it as it is in Latin.

Bishop of Peterborough. My Lord, we desire it may be read in English, for we don't understand Law-Latin.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, my Lords the Bishops are very learned Men (we all know) pray read it in Latin.

JAMES R.

IT having pleased Almighty God, not only to bring Us to the Imperial Crowns of these Kingdoms through the greatest difficulties, but to preserve Us by a more than ordinary Providence upon the Throne of our Royal Ancestors, There is nothing now that We so earnestly desire as to Establish Our Government on such a Foundation as may make Our Subjects happy; and Unite them to Us, by Inclination as well as Duty, which We think can be done by no means so effectually, as by Granting to them the Free Exercise of their Religion for the time to come, and add that to the perfect enjoyment of their Property; which has never been in any case invaded by Us since our coming to the Crown, which being the two things Men value most, shall ever be preserved in these Kingdoms during Our Reign over them, as the truest methods of Our Peace, and Our Glory. We cannot but heartily wish, as it will easily be believed, that the People of Our Dominions were Members of the Catholick Church, yet We humbly thank Almighty God, it is, and hath long time been Our constant Sense and Opinion (which upon diverse occasions We have declared) that Conscience ought not to be constrained, nor People forced in matters of meer Religion. It has ever been directly contrary to Our Inclination, as We think it is to the Interest of Government which it destroys by spoiling Trade, depopulating Countries, and discouraging Strangers, and finally, that it never obtained the end for for which it was employed. And in this we are the more Confirmed by the Reflections We have made upon the Conduct of the four last Reigns. For after all the frequent and pressing endeavours that were used in each of them, to reduce these Kingdoms to an exact Conformity in Religion, it is visible, the Success has not answered the design: And that the difficulty is invincible. We therefore, out of our Princely Care and Affection unto all our Loving Subjects, that they may live at ease and quiet, and for the increase of Trade, and encouragement to Strangers, have thought fit by Virtue of Our Royal Prerogative, to issue forth this Our Declaration of Indulgence, making no doubt of the Concurrence of Our two Houses of Parliament, when we shall think it convenient for them to meet. In the first place we do Declare, that we will Protect and Maintain Our Arch-bishops, Bishops, and Clergy, and all other Our Subjects of the Church of England, in the Free Exercise of their Religion as by Law Established, and in the quiet and full enjoyment of all their Possessions without any molestation or disturbance whatsoever. We do likewise Declare, that it is Our Royal Will and Pleasure, that from henceforth the execution of all and all manner of Penal Laws in matters Ecclesiastical, for not coming to Church, or not receiving the Sacrament, or for any other Non-conformity to the Religion Established, or for or by reason of the Exercise of Religion in any manner whatsoever, be immediately Suspended, and the further Execution of the said Penal Laws and every of them is hereby Suspended. And to the end, that by the Liberty hereby granted the Peace and Security of Our Government in the practice thereof, may not be endangered, We have thought fit, and do hereby streightly Charge and Command all Our Loving Subjects, that as We do freely give them leave to meet and serve God after their own way and manner, be it in Private Houses, or places purposely hired or built for that use, so that they take special care that nothing be preach'd or taught amongst them which may any ways tend to alienate the Hearts of Our People from Us or Our Government, and that their Meetings and Assemblies be Peaceably, Openly and Publickly held, and all Persons freely admitted to them; and that they do signifie and make known to some one or more of the next Justices of the Peace, what place or places they set apart for those uses: And that all Our Subjects may enjoy such their Religious Assemblies with greater Assurance and Protection, We have thought it requisite, and do hereby Command, that no Disturbance of any kind be made or given unto them, under pain of Our Displeasure, and to be further proceeded against with the uttermost Severity. And forasmuch as We are desirous to have the benefit of the Service of all our loving Subjects, which by the Law of Nature is inseparably annexed to, and inherent in Our Royal Person, and that none of Our Subjects may for the future be under any Discouragement or Disability (who are otherwise well inclined and fit to serve Us) by reason of some Oaths or Tests that have been usually administred on such Occasions, We do hereby further declare, That it is Our Royal Will and Pleasure, that the Oaths commonly called the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and also the several Tests and Declarations mentioned in the Acts of Parliament made in the 25th and 30th Years of the Reign of Our late Royal Brother King Charles the Second, shall not at any time hereafter be required to be taken, declared, or subscribed by any Person or Persons whatsoever, who is or shall be employed in any Office or Place of Trust, either Civil or Military, under Us, or in Our Government. And We do further declare it to be Our Pleasure and Intention from time to time hereafter to grant Our Royal Dispen-sations under Our Great Seal to all Our loving Subjects so to be employed, who shall not take the said Oaths, or subscribe or declare the said Tests or Declarations in the above mentioned Acts, and every of them. And to the end that all our Loving Subjects may receive and enjoy the full benefit and advantage of Our Gracious Indulgence hereby intended, and may be acquitted and discharged from all Pains, Penalties, Forfeitures, and Disabilities by them or any of them incurred or forfeited, or which they shall or may at any time hereafter be liable to, for or by reason of their Nonconformity, or the Exercise of their Religion; and from all Suits, Troubles or Disturbances for the same, We do hereby give Our free and ample Pardon unto all Nonconformists, Recusants, and other Our Loving Subjects for all Crimes and Things by them committed or done contrary to the Penal Laws formerly made relating to Religion, and the Profession or Exercise thereof, hereby declaring that this Our Royal Pardon and Indemnity shall be as good and effectual to all Intents and Purposes, as if every individual Person had been therein particularly named, or had particular Pardons under Our Great Seal, which We do likewise declare shall from time to time be granted unto any Person or Persons desiring the same, willing and requiring Our Judges, Justices, and other Officers, to take notice of and obey Our Royal Will and Pleasure herein before declared. And although the Freedom and Assurance We have hereby given in relation to Religion and Property, might be sufficient to remove from the Minds of Our Loving Subjects all Fears and Jealousies in relation to either; Yet We have thought fit further to declare, That we will maintain them in all their Properties and Possessions, as well of Church and Abby-Lands, as in any other their Lands and Property whatsoever.

James Rex.

OUR Conduct has been such in all times, as ought to have perswaded the World, that we are firm and constant to our Resolutions; yet that easie People may not be abused by the Malice of crafty wicked Men, we think fit to declare, that Our Intentions are not changed since the 4th of April 1687. when we issued out our Declaration for Liberty of Conscience, in the following Terms—

And to the end, that by the Liberty hereby granted the Peace and Security of Our Government in the practice thereof, may not be endangered, We have thought fit, and do hereby streightly Charge and Command all Our Loving Subjects, that as We do freely give them leave to meet and serve God after their own way and manner, be it in Private Houses, or places purposely hired or built for that use, so that they take special care that nothing be preach'd or taught amongst them which may any ways tend to alienate the Hearts of Our People from Us or Our Government, and that their Meetings and Assemblies be Peaceably, Openly and Publickly held, and all Persons freely admitted to them; and that they do signifie and make known to some one or more of the next Justices of the Peace, what place or places they set apart for those uses: And that all Our Subjects may enjoy such their Religious Assemblies with greater Assurance and Protection, We have thought it requisite, and do hereby Command, that no Disturbance of any kind be made or given unto them, under pain of Our Displeasure, and to be further proceeded against with the uttermost Severity. And forasmuch as We are desirous to have the benefit of the Service of all our loving Subjects, which by the Law of Nature is inseparably annexed to, and inherent in Our Royal Person, and that none of Our Subjects may for the future be under any Discouragement or Disability (who are otherwise well inclined and fit to serve Us) by reason of some Oaths or Tests that have been usually administred on such Occasions, We do hereby further declare, That it is Our Royal Will and Pleasure, that the Oaths commonly called the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, and also the several Tests and Declarations mentioned in the Acts of Parliament made in the 25th and 30th Years of the Reign of Our late Royal Brother King Charles the Second, shall not at any time hereafter be required to be taken, declared, or subscribed by any Person or Persons whatsoever, who is or shall be employed in any Office or Place of Trust, either Civil or Military, under Us, or in Our Government. And We do further declare it to be Our Pleasure and Intention from time to time hereafter to grant Our Royal Dispen-sations under Our Great Seal to all Our loving Subjects so to be employed, who shall not take the said Oaths, or subscribe or declare the said Tests or Declarations in the above mentioned Acts, and every of them. And to the end that all our Loving Subjects may receive and enjoy the full benefit and advantage of Our Gracious Indulgence hereby intended, and may be acquitted and discharged from all Pains, Penalties, Forfeitures, and Disabilities by them or any of them incurred or forfeited, or which they shall or may at any time hereafter be liable to, for or by reason of their Nonconformity, or the Exercise of their Religion, and from all Suits, Troubles or Disturbances for the same, We do hereby give Our free and ample Pardon unto all Nonconformists, Recusants, and other Our Loving Subjects for all Crimes and Things by them committed or done contrary to the Penal Laws formerly made relating to Religion, and the Profession or Exercise thereof, hereby declaring that this Our Royal Pardon and Indemnity shall be as good and effectual to all Intents and Purposes, as if every individual Person had been therein particularly named, or had particular Pardons under Our Great Seal, which We do likewise declare shall from time to time be granted unto any Person or Persons desiring the same, willing and requiring requiring Our Judges, Justices, and other Officers, to take notice of and obey Our Royal Will and Pleasure herein before declared: And although the Freedom and Assurance We have hereby given in relation to Religion and Property, might be sufficient to remove from the Minds of Our Loving Subjects all Fears and Jealousies in relation to either; Yet We have thought fit further to declare, That We will maintain them in all their Properties and Possessions, as well of Church and Abby Lands, as in any other their Lands and Properties whatsoever.

Given at Our Court at Whitehall the 4th day of April, 1687. in the Third Year of Our Reign.

Ever since We granted this Indulgence, We have made it Our Principal Care to see it preserved without Distinction, as We are encouraged to do daily by Multitudes of Addressees, and many other Assurances We received from Our Subjects of all Perswasions, as Testimonies of their Satisfaction and Duty, the Effects of which We doubt not but the next Parliament will plainly shew, and that it will not be in vain that We have resolved to use Our uttermost Endeavours to establish Liberty of Conscience on such just and equal Foundations, as will render it unalterable, and secure to all People the free Exercise of their Religion for ever, by which future Ages may reap the benefit of what is so undoubtedly for the general good of the whole Kingdom. It is such a Security We desire, without the burden and constraint of Oaths and Tests, which have been unhappily made by some Governments, but could never support any; nor should Men be advanced by such means to Offices and Employments, which ought to be the Reward of Services, Fidelity and Merit. We must conclude, that not only good Christians will join in this, but whoever is concerned for the increase of the Wealth and Power of the Nation. It would perhaps prejudice some of our Neighbours, who might lose part of those vast Advantages they now enjoy, if Liberty of Conscience were settled in these Kingdoms, which are above all others most capable of Improvements, and of commanding the Trade of the World. In Pursuance of this great Work we have been forced to make many Changes both of Civil and Military Officers throughout Our Dominions, not thinking any ought to be employed in Our Service, who will not contribute towards the establishing the Peace and Greatness of their Country, which We most earnestly desire, as unbiassed Men may see by the whole Conduct of Our Government, and by the Condition of Our Fleet, and of Our Armies, which with good Management shall be constantly the same, and greater, if the Safety or Honour of the Nation require it. We recommend these Considerations to all Our Subjects, and that they will reflect on their present Ease and Happiness, how far above three Years, that it hath pleased God to permit Us to Reign over these Kingdoms, We have not appear'd to be that Prince Our Enemies would have made the World afraid of, Our chief Aim having been not to be the Oppressor, but the Father of Our People, of which We can give no better Evidence than by conjuring them to lay aside all private Animosities as well as groundless Jealousies, and to choose such Members of Parliament, as may do their part to finish what We have begun for the Advantage of the Monarchy over which Almighty God hath placed Us, being resolved to call a Parliament, that shall meet in November next at farthest.

The Humble Petition of William Archbishop of Canterbury, and of divers of the Suffragan Bishops of that Province (now present with him) in behalf of themselves and others of their absent Brethren, and of the Clergy of their respective Diocesses,

Humbly sheweth,

THAT the great Averseness they find in themselves to the distributing and publishing in all their Churches, Your Majesties late Declaration for Liberty of Conscience, proceedeth neither from any want of Duty and Obedience to Your Majesty; our Holy Mother the Church of England being both in her Principles and in her constant Practice unquestionably Loyal, and having, to her great Honour, been more than once publicly acknowledged to be so by Your Gracious Majesty; nor yet from any want of due Tenderneſs to Dissenters, in relation to whom they are willing to come to such a Temper as shall be thought fit when that matter shall be considered and settled in Parliament and Convocation. But among many other Considerations, from this especially, because that Declaration is founded upon such a dispensing Power, as hath been often declared illegal in Parliament, and particularly in the Years 1662. and 1672. and the beginning of Your Majesties Reign; and is a matter of so great Moment and Consequence to the whole Nation; both in Church and State, that your Petitioners cannot in Prudence, Honour or Conscience, so far make themselves Parties to it, as the Distribution of it all over the Nation, and the solemn Publication of it once and again, even in God's House, and in the time of his Divine Service, must amount to, in common and reasonable Construction.

—In contemptum dicti Domini Regis nunc, & Legum hujus regni Angliæ, manifestum, in malum exemplum omnium aliorum in tali casu delinquentium, ac contra pacem dicti Domini Regis nunc, Coronam & Dignitatem suas, &c. Unde idem Attornatus dicti Domini Regis nunc generalis pro eodem Domino Rege petit advisamentum Curie hic in præmissis, & debitum legis processum versus præatos Willielmum Archiepiscopum Cantuariensem, Willielmum Episcopum Asaphensem, Franciscum Episcopum Eliensem, Johannem Episcopum Ciceſtrenſem, Thomam Episcopum Bathonensem & Wellensem, Thomam Episcopum Petriburgensem, & Jonathanum Episcopum Bristollensem fieri; ad respondendum dicto Domino Regi de & in præmissis, &c.

T. Powys.

W. Williams.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we humbly pray, that according to the Rules of the Court in such Cases, my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and my Lords the Bishops may plead to the Information.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lords the Bishops are here in Custody in the Court, upon the highest Commitment that can be in this Kingdom, to wit, That of the King in Council; and we pray, that according to the course of the Court they may plead to the Information presently.

Vol. III.

L. C. J. What does his Grace and my Lords the Bishops say to it?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Will your Lordship give us leave who are of Council for his Grace my Lord of Canterbury, and the rest of my Lords the Bishops, to speak a word in this Matter?

L. C. J. Ay Brother, go on.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. That which we have to desire of your Lordship and the Court is this, We have now heard this Information read, and 'tis plain we could know nothing of this before, the Warrant of Commitment being only in general for a Libel; and this being a Case of the greatest Consequence, peradventure, that ever was in Westminster-Hall, (that I think I may boldly say, it is a Case of the greatest Consequence that ever was in this Court) and it being a matter of this Nature, that these Great and Noble Persons my Lords the Bishops are here taxed with, that is, For making a Seditious Libel, contained in such a Petition (as though it was a Libel to Petition the King) we do beg this of your Lordship, that (it being of this great Importance) to the end we may come prepared to say what we have against it, we may have an Imparlanec till the next Term.

Mr. Finch. Pray my Lord favour me with a Word on the same side, for my Lords the Bishops. Your Lordship sees now, how necessary the trouble we gave you before, in making our Objections against the reading of the Information was, and what the drift and aim of the King's Council was, in the desiring the Information to be read first; for now it is read, What is it that they desire of your Lordships? They desire that my Lord Archbishop, and my Lords the Bishops being in Custody, and brought here in Custody, they may be now so charged with this Information, as to plead presently: This my Lord we oppose, and with humble Submission we ought to have time to Imparle, and a Copy of the Information, that we may consider what we have to plead to it; for however we come here into Court, whether legally or not legally, yet ought we in the one and in the other Case, to have time to consider of our Defence. And, my Lord, till of later time this Practice which the King's Council now calls the Course of the Court, was never used, nor was any Man required to plead immediately; and my Lord, if the Practice of the Court has not been anciently so (as I do believe they will scarce shew it to be ancients than a few Years last past) then with humble Submission, though the Course of the Court have been so for some little time past, yet it is not in the power of the Court (as we humbly conceive) to make a Course in prejudice of all the Privileges that the King's Subjects are by the ancient Rules of Law intituled to; they cannot make a new Law in prejudice of any Right or Privilege which the Subject hath, and call it the Course of the Court: Now that this which we desire for my Lords the Bishops, is the Right and Privilege of the Subject, is most manifest; for there might be many Defences that a Man may have to make to an Accusation of this Nature, which it is impossible for him to know at the first hearing of an Information read, and yet which would be necessary for him to make use of, or at least it would be impossible for him to make use of in such a manner as the Law doth allow of and require. It may be the Pleas which he has to plead may be such as that he has not time to put into form; there may be Matters upon the hearing the Information read, that it would be necessary for him to give answer to, which he knew not of before, and therefore may neither have Materials ready, nor be capable of putting them (if he had them ready) into such Form as the Law requires. They tell you on the other side, that if a Man be brought into Court by legal Process, he may be charged with any Information whatsoever, that they are not tied to the Fact alledged in the Commitment, but finding the Party under a legal Imprisonment, they can exhibit an Information against him for any other Offence. Then, my Lord, would I fain know, which way any Man alive can be prepared to make his just and legal Defence, for he knows not his Accusation; for tho' he think it may be for that for which he was committed, yet it may prove otherwise, and then he can be no way provided with Materials for his Defence, but he must lose all Advantages which the Law gives him for his Defence. My Lord, if this be the course of latter times, yet you will not take that to be such a Law, as is binding to all future times; and we are sure the King's Council cannot shew, that this was the ancient Practice, for that was quite otherwise.

L. C. J. Mr. Finch, you were not here, I suppose when this Question came in debate in this Court lately, in the Case of a very great Person; 'twas urged very earnestly and very learnedly by one that stands by you; we upon that Debate asked Sir Samuel Astry, what the Course of the Court was, and he told us, that the Course of the Court (of his own Knowledge for all the time that he had sat as Clerk of the Crown in this Court) was, that when any one was brought in Custody, or upon a Recognizance, they were to plead presently.

Mr. Finch. Sir Samuel Astry has not been here so very long, as to make the Practice of his time the course of the Court.

L. C. J. But I will tell you what he said further, if you will hear me; he said, he had enquired of Mr. Waterhouse, whom we all know to have been an old Clerk in the Crown Office, and he told him, that that had been the practice all his time.

Mr. S. Pemb. My Lord, I hope the course of the Courts of Westminster-Hall shall not depend upon the Certificate of such a one as Mr. Waterhouse, who is a Man (we all know) is superannuated, and very defective in his Memory.

Mr. Just. Powell. Certainly what they desire for the Defendant is very reasonable, for I take the Point to be only this; whether a Man may be compelled, being in Custody, to plead to an Information presently.

Mr. Just. Allibone. Pray Brother Powell spare me a word in this Matter; Mr. Finch, I suppose you labour that, the Court will not deny you, that you may have time to plead according to the course of the Court: We are not making Courses for particular Facts, that by my consent we will never do; but if you say such a thing is not the course of the Court, and the King's Council affirm it is, how shall this be determined? and from whom can we take our Information to determine what is the course? I am sure there is none of us that are here now, can pretend to tell what the ancient course was, for my part I declare it I cannot; and I know no reason there should be any Novelty introduced into the Court upon any ground or reason whatsoever, nor will I consent to any while I sit here. Therefore I desire to know what is the Ancient Course, and how we shall come to the knowledge of that Course, if not by the Certificate of those who have been Ancient Officers of the Court?

L. C. J. Nay, that is certain, the Court will bring in nothing new in any such Case as this.

Mr. Just. Allibone. If that hath not been the Ancient Course without exception, I am against it; I know no Reason my Lords the Bishops should have any thing new put upon them; on the other side, they must not expect to have the Ancient Course of the Court declined in their Case.

Mr. Pollif. Pray, my Lord, hear me a little in this matter; 'tis not my desire that any Law should be alter'd for any particular Case, and the Course of the Court I know is the Law of the Court; but I humbly crave leave to say, That I take the Ancient Course of the Court to be quite otherwise, than what the King's Council would have it; there may be particular things done now and then, perhaps in particular Cases, and upon particular Occasions, which will not make what is so done to be the Course of the Court, nor be a binding Rule to you. Now as to this matter, of time or no time, to plead to an Information, I remember the time very well, when I and some others that stood at the Bar, and wondred when we saw this practice coming in, and thought it a very hard and mischievous thing, for (in truth) the several Plots that have been, and the heats of men about those things, have brought in this Course; for certain I am, and I dare affirm there never was any such Course here before, neither upon Warrant from the Chief Justice, nor upon Recognizance, or any other Process, was a Man compelled to plead instantly, without having a Capias in the regular form after a Contempt for not appearing upon Summons: Truly, my Lord, we had no interest in the matter one way or other, to make us scruple it any otherwise than as we were concerned that the Law and Justice of the Nation should have its true and ancient Current. And this I can assure your Lordships, that here was both my Lord Chief Justice Saunders, and Mr. Serj. Holt and my self, who taking notice when this was first offered at, to make a man plead immediately without giving him time to consider what he should plead, could not but say among our selves, that it was an unreasonable thing; and we were inclined to speak to the Court to inform them of the Consequence of it, which needs must be very mischievous. Sir Samuel Astry, we know, came to be Clerk of the Crown in my Lord Scroggs's time; we know 'tis usual and customary for the Court to ask what is the Course of the Court in doubtful Cases, and to receive the Information from the Officers of the Court on both sides. If it be on the Plea side, from Mr. Aston, if on the Crown side, from Sir Samuel Astry, concerning things of Practice, but I did never think that what they reported was final and conclusive to the Court: But to make this matter clear, I humbly pray, that you would please to give order for the search of old Precedents, how the old Practice really hath been; every thing that has been done in hot times, is not to be made a standing Rule: If there do any such thing appear to have been done and practised antiently, truly, my Lord, I will submit, and say I am under a mighty mistake; stake; but if this which is now urged for the Course of the Court, is nothing, but what the Zeal of the Times, and Heat of Persecutions hath introduced; surely that is not fit to be a constant Rule for the Court to go by; for every one knows, that the Zeal of one time may bring in that by surprize upon one Man, which when things are cool, or at another time will appear to be plain Injustice. We have indeed seen strange things of this kind done before, but I hope to God they are now at an end, and we shall never see any such thing done hereafter; and as for this particular Point, I think it is a wonderful thing in the Consequence of it, if the Law should be as they would have it: Here is a long Information just read over to a Man (but whether long or short, as to the main Point, 'tis the same) and you say the Course of the Court is, he must plead to it immediately; surely matters of Crime that require Punishment to be inflicted on men, are of as much consequence and concern, as any Civil matter whatsoever; and Men are to have their Rights in those matters preserved, as well as in other matters, which is all I press; for suppose a man has a special matter to plead, as particularly suppose it be the King's Pardon, I cannot give this in Evidence upon a Tryal after not guilty pleaded, then I ought to plead it; but what if I have it not ready? 'tis not telling the Court of it, without shewing of it, that will do; and it may be a man that is taken up, and brought hither in Custody, cannot have it ready to shew; but yet then by this Rule a man shall lose the benefit of his Plea, by being compelled to answer immediately: But they say, the Court will do right, I suppose they will; and my Lords the Bishops in this case I believe do not distrust, but that the Court will do right; but I never thought the Law was brought to that pass, that such things as these were left wholly in the discretion of the Court; certainly Imparances, time to plead, and just Preparations for a man's defence are things that the Law has settled, and not left in the discretion of the Court; and truly to me it seems all one utterly to take away a man's Defence, as to hinder him of the means to prepare for it. My Lord, here is an Information before you against these Noble Lords, it is a matter of great moment, and tho', I hope in God, there is no great cause for it, yet however since such Persons are concerned, and 'tis a matter of such great weight, I hope you will give us such an Imparance, as if we had this day appeared upon the ordinary Process, which is an Imparance until the next Term.

L. Ch. Just. There is a difference between this and that other Case, if my Lords the Bishops had appeared upon the Summons, they would have had an Imparance of Course; but when they are brought up hither in Custody, that mightily alters the Case, but that we may not be too hasty in a thing of this nature, let the Clerk of the Court be consulted with, that we may know what the true Course is.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we pray Sir Samuel Astry may be examined a little about it.

Mr. Just. Allynbone. Mr. Pollixfen, I believe the Court is unanimous in their Resolutions of making nothing new in this Case; but pray give me leave to tell you, this is not the first time that this Question has come to be agitated in this Court since I came hither. Now from whence can the Court take their measures to be rightly informed what the Practice of the Court is, but from the Information of the Officers of the Court? who by their constant Employment, are most capable of knowing what the Course is. Now if you come to offer any thing that may be matter of doubt to the Court, concerning the Practice of the Court, you having known that this thing was controverted before (for so it has been) should have provided your self with something that must be a reasonable motive for us to doubt; for this has not been only once, but often moved; and our Officers have been consulted with concerning this Question, which took its rise from such Objections as you have made now: Now for you to tell us, That you desire that we would look into Presidents, is, methinks, pretty odd; if you had brought us any Precedents, it had been something: And withall I must tell you, that you must not reckon the favour of the Court in any particular Case, to be the standing Rules for the Practice and Course of the Court; but instead of bringing Precedents, you only offer your own Thoughts, and those would create no doubt in us, but what has been before satisfied upon Examination of the Officers of the Court.

Mr. Pollixfen. Pray Sir, will you give me leave to answer one Word.

Mr. Just. Powell. Truly I have not observed that ever this Point was started so, as to beget a Question since I came hither, but only in the Cases of the Quo Warranto's; and truly in that Case I thought it hard they should be denied time to plead, especially the Consequence being so fatal.

L. C. J. Yes; yes, Brother, it has been several times.

Mr. Just. Powell. Truly, my Lord, I have not observed it, nor do I remember it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, I have always taken the distinction, as to these Matters, to be this—

Mr. Just. Powell. But, my Lord, if the ancient Course of the Court hath been to grant an Imparance, and a Copy of the Information before they plead, I see no reason why my Lords the Bishops should not have the benefit of that ancient Course; for if a Man that is Sued at Law for a Two penny Trespass, shall have that advantage as to receive a Declaration, and have time to plead what he can to it, why should not my Lords the Bishops in a matter of so great weight, have the same advantage too? But indeed, if the Course of the Court had been anciently otherwise, I can say nothing to it; for the Course of the Court is certainly the Law of the Court.

Mr. Just. Allynbone. Brother Powell, you say well, if they did produce any one Precedent to give us occasion to doubt in the matter.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, good my Lord, will you give me leave—

Mr. Att. Gen. Why, Sir Robert Sawyer, will you never have done?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, they are so zealous, and eager in this Case, that they wont permit either the Court, or any body else to speak a word but themselves.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Good Mr. Solicitor, give us leave to answer the Objection that the Court hath made to us; we would satisfy your Lordship where the Distinction really lieth, where there has been an Opportunity for the party to come in, as by Summons or Subpœna, or the like, and he has slipped that opportunity, and so the King is delayed, in that Case they always used to put the Party upon Pleading presently, when he was taken up upon a Capias, and brought in Custody; but when there was never any Subpœna taken out (as the Case is here,) so that the Party never had an opportunity to come in and render himself, and appear to Answer it according to the due Course of Law, an Imparlance was never yet denied, nor time to Plead; and that is the Case here.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, Mr. Serjeant has given you the true distinction, where Process has gone out to summon any one to appear to an Information, and he hath failed to appear according to the Summons, and the Prosecutor for the King takes out a Capias, if he be brought in upon that Capias, the ancient Course has been so as they say: But for that other matter, where a Man comes in upon a Commitment at the first Instance, and an Information is put in just as this is, the same Morning and not before; if they can shew any one Precedent of this kind Fifteen Years ago, I would be contented to yield that they are in the right, but I am sure they are not able to do it: In Sir Mathew Hales's time when this was moved, it was refused; and he was clear of another Opinion.

Mr. Att. Gen. I hope now my Lord we shall be heard a little for the King, and I cannot forbear observing in the first Place somewhat that these Gentlemen have offered at, who are now inveighing against the heat of the Times, when a great part of that heat, we know who were the Inflamers of; but what is all this to the purpose? The Question is barely this, Whether when a Man is brought in Custody into this Court, and charged with an Information, he shall not by the course of the Court be compelled to plead presently.

Sir Robert Sawyer. To Indictments for Treason and Felony, he shall be compelled to Plead presently, but not to an Information for Misdemeanours.

Mr. Just. Powell. It seems to me very hard he should.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir, there are many things that seem hard in Law, but yet when all is done, the Judges cannot alter the Law; 'tis a hard Case that that a Man is tryed for his Life for Treason or Felony cannot have a Copy of his Indictment, cannot have Council, cannot have his Witnesses sworn, but this has been long practiced, and the usage is grown to a Law, and from time to time it hath been so taken for Law, it cannot be altered without a new Law made, as it hath been heretofore, so it must be now, till a greater Authority alter it; and so, as to the Case here at present, if it were a new Case, and it was the first Instance, I must confess I think I should not press it, but if this be the constant practice of the Court, and if these Gentlemen that now oppose it, some of them Ministerially, some of them Judicially, have themselves Established this Practice, they have no reason to wonder, that we follow them in it; we do not blame them for what they do now, for Men when they are of Council may be permitted to argue for their Client contrary to their former Opinions, but if these things by their procurement have been done thus before, surely without Offence we may pray the like may be done now. 'Tis our duty on behalf of the King to desire that he may have Right done him, as well as they on behalf of my Lords the Bishops, and for the usage to cite Precedents were endless, especially of late times, and these Gentlemen know them all very well, for they were some of them Parties to them themselves, and we can do no more, nor need, than to put them in mind of their own doings, whether it was so before their time or not, it concerns them to make out and retract their own Errors; but in our Observation, if ever this was pressed or insisted upon on the Kings behalf, this course has always been pursued.

Sir Robert Sawyer. For a Precedent my Lord there is the Case of my Lord Hollis, where there was given time after time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That was only time to argue the Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court.

Mr. Just. Powell. Mr. Solicitor, have you ever known it contested, and upon Debate so Ruled, in an Information for a Misdemeanour, as this Case is?

Mr. Sol. Gen. If you please to ask Sir Samuel Astry, he will inform you how the Course has been.

L. C. J. What say you, Sir Samuel Astry?

Sir Samuel Astry. My Lord, when I came into this Place, there was an Ancient Gentleman that had been long a Clerk in the Office.

L. C. J. How many Years is it since you came into this Office?

Sir Samuel Astry. About a dozen Years, I think, my Lord; and he sat in this place where Mr. Harcourt does now, he was always accounted a Loyal, Honest, and Intelligent Man, that is Mr. Waterhouse, who is now alive; and when I came into my Office, I took my Instructions in a great measure from him, and asked him, what the course of the Court was, in such Cases which I my self did not understand; for tho' I had been an Attorney Twenty Years, yet it was on the other side, the Civil side; and tho' I knew some things of my own knowledge, yet I did not so well know the whole practice of the Court, and particularly I asked him, what was the course of the Court in this Case that is now in Question, and he told me, that in all his time and Experience, if a Man appears upon a Recognizance, or was a Person in Custody, or appeared in propria persona, as a person Priviledged, he ought to plead at the first instance, and according to that practice, when Sir Robert Sawyer was Attorney General it was the constant practice, and I am sure he knows it is no new thing.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But upon what Informations, Sir Samuel Astry, were they Informations upon Misdemeanours?

Sir Sam. Astry. Yes, several.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But was there no Process taken out first to call the Party in?

Sir Sam. Astry. Yes, where Process was never taken out.

Mr. Att. Gen. For how long time is that you speak of your own knowledge, Sir Samuel?

Sir Sam. Astry. About a dozen Years.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. It was never done till very lately, but after the Party was in Contempt for not appearing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I would ask you, Sir Samuel Astry, one Question: Was the usual Process of Subpœna first taken out? for Mr. Serjeant Pemberton says it was, do you find any Warrant for such a difference as that?

Mr. Serj.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Do you find any such Case as this is?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nay, pray Mr. Serjeant, give us your favour, and let us ask our Questions according to your own Doctrine. How do you find the Practice to have been as to that distinction they have made?

Sir Sam. Astry. Sir, I would be very loath to enlarge the Precedents of the Crown Office further than the truth is; I tell you whence I took my Instructions, from Mr. Waterhouse, who was an Ancient Clerk in the Office, he has been in that Office Sixty Years, and the Instructions I took from him, were, that this was the Practice all his time, and it has been asserted all my time; it has been often contested, I confess, and Mr. Pollexfen has always opposed it, and moved against it, but it has been always ruled against him: I know it was against his Judgment, but the Court always over-ruled it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Sir Samuel Astry, can you give any one Precedent before you came into this Office?

Sir Sam. Astry. Sir, I can go no farther than this that I have told you, what Information I received from him.

Sir Robert Sawyer. What is all this but a Certificate from Mr. Waterhouse?

L. C. J. We can be informed no otherways than by Certificate from the old Clerks of the Office.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Alas, he is a Child, and not fit to do any thing.

Mr. Pollexfen. We all know Mr. Waterhouse very well, he is a very weak Man, and always was so, and there is no depending upon any thing that he says.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, will you hear us a little for the King.

The Bishop of Peterborough whispering with Sir Robert Sawyer, Mr. Solicitor said to him, My Lord, you had better look another way, and look towards the Court, for there your business lies.

L. C. J. Well Mr. Solicitor, What say you?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, it appears plainly, that the King is in possession of this Privilege, and has been so for these dozen Years, for so long the Justice of the Kingdom towards all the Subjects, hath run in all the instances of it in this Channel; and tho' it hath been contested as often as Mr. Pollexfen has been of Council for the Defendant, in such Cases it has always been ruled against him; he indeed has made his continual Claims (Sir Samuel Astry says) he has raised the Dust, and made a Hue and Cry, but it has always gone against him. And I would ask the rest of you Gentlemen that are of Council for my Lords the Bishops, (for some, or one of you I am sure, has been concerned in every Information that has been exhibited in this Court for this nine or ten Years last past, I would ask you) whether in any Information that you have been concerned in, if the Party being brought in by Process, insisted to have time and an Impar lance, it was ever granted him. I know you will not say, it ever was; why then should there be more done in this Case, than has been done in all other Cases this ten Years? Tis not sufficient to make Declarations against the unreasonableness of the Practice, for it is but what you have done yourselves, and insisted upon for Law; and all those Men that upon Informations have been compelled to plead, have had Injury done them; or else these Lords will have no Injury by the Court's taking the same Course. It is true, my Lords, the Bishops are Peers, and here are Seven of them, and Seven Lords go a great way; they make a Committee, I think, in the House of Peers, and a mighty matter is made of it, that this is the Case of so many Lords: But will you alter the course of the Court, because Seven of my Lords the Bishops are concerned in it, and they make a mighty stir about the Reasonableness of the thing? How can it be believed that the Law will not give a Man time to make his Defence? They agree themselves; that if it were in the Case of Life and Death, they must plead presently; and doth not the same Reason hold? and may not an Argument be drawn a fortiori, in the Case of a Misdemeanour? If I am not to have time when I plead for my Life, there is less Reason I should have time to answer a Trespass: But, my Lord, 'tis not Reason that weighs in the Case, 'tis the course of the Court; which is the Law of the Court that we are contending for: and what is there in the Case that should require so much time for my Lords the Bishops to plead to it? It is charged in the Information, that these Noble Prelates did make a Libel which was produced by them, and published in the Kings presence, they can easily tell whether they have done this, or not done it: what can they plead, but the general Issue? They talk of special matter to be pleaded, but can they shew any more that they can say, than what any poor ordinary Country-man, if he were here to plead to an Information, could say? that is, whether he was Guilty or not Guilty. These Lords can tell whether it be true, that they did publish the Paper laid in the Information, and then your Lordship will tell them what will be the Consequences of that Publication in point of Law. We say all this was done at Westminster, there the Scene is laid, and it is not an Information for an old stale thing done a great while ago, but a thing that was done Yesterday, and a thing notorious enough, their contesting with the King about his Declaration of Indulgence. And as to what Mr. Finch has said, That this is a Novel Invention, and a Trick to rob a Man of his just Defence; sure he forgets who it is that taught us the Trick, if it be a Trick, we have learnt it from those that trick'd before us; and what is it that these Lords do desire? they would have an Impar lance till Michaelmas Term: does or can your Lordship think they ask that which is reasonable? to have six Months time to plead not Guilty to an Information for a Libel; and when so many Men have been denied it formerly upon the instigation of those very Gentlemen, that now press so very hard to have it granted; sure they must expect to be denied it too; and all this while these Lords lye under this Accusation, which is not so trivial a matter as some would make it, I believe my Lords the Bishops have a desire to be cleared, I suppose it is only their Council that desire to delay it, upon what ground I know not, I believe they themselves would be glad to remove the Imputation, which would be best done by a Tryal, and the sooner the better: If they have a mind to justify themselves, that is the readiest course for it, and they may do it presently, by Pleading Not Guilty; My Lord, I know I am in a great Auditory, and abundance of your Lords.

Lordships time has been taken up already, I press it therefore for the sake of the King, and for the sake of my Lords the Bishops, we shall else have all hang in suspense, and hang in the Air for six Months longer, therefore let the matter be put upon a fair Issue, so as it may come to a speedy Determination; I am sure if these Lords be Innocent to Day, they will be Innocent to Morrow, and if it were my own Case, I would desire to have it Tryed as speedily as I could, and therefore I pray they may plead immediately.

Mr. J. Powell. Mr. Solicitor, what do you say to the Difference that was taken between a Person that was brought in Custody at the first instance where there is no contempt to the Process of the Court, and one that comes here by Capias, upon default of appearing at the Summons?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, If I apprehend them aright, they give us more than we did ask, for Mr. Solicitor has laid it down as a Rule, that if a Man is taken upon a Capias in a Mean Process, he shall have no Imparance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, you are greatly mistaken, Sir, and I pray don't lay down Rules for me.

Mr. Finch. If I am Sir, I beg your pardon, but this I am sure of, if a Venire Fac goes out, which is in the nature of a Subpœna, and the party appear to it, that being the first time he could come into Court, you cannot force him to plead to an Information, but he has an Imparance of Course.

Mr. J. Powell. Methinks it seems very reasonable, that this forcing a Man to plead presently should be only a punishment for a Contempt of the Court, and pray, were my Lords the Bishops in contempt to the Court when they came here to Day? Certainly they were not, for no Man is in contempt, but he that being served with Process, disobeys that Process, and if my Lords the Bishops had been served with a Subpœna and had not appeared, then there would have gone out a Capias to bring them in, and then they would have come in upon a Contempt, and then they would have come within the Rule.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If you have a mind to it, you may ask Sir Samuel Astry again.

Mr. Att. Gen. If they come in upon Bail, they ought to plead presently.

Mr. J. Allybone. Mr. Finch, I'll tell you what sticks with me, truly you could not but be aware that this would be required of you; for this very thing was in debate last Term, and you know what Rules the Officer said was the Course of the Court, why did you not therefore come prepared with some Presidents, to shew us what the course of the Court is?

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly my Lord, at this rate, we shall keep your Lordship here all this Afternoon, if these Gentlemen will not be satisfied with the Rule of the Court; and for an Answer to what Mr. Justice Powell says, if any Riot be committed in the Countrey, and the Parties are bound by Recognizance to appear here, that is no process of this Court, and so consequently there can be no contempt, and yet they must plead presently.

Mr. J. Powell. There is a particular reason for that, because they are bound by Recognizance, Sir Samuel Astry and others say, that if they come in by Recognizance they must plead presently.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But for the thing it self, (that the people that hear us may not imagine that this Court puts a hardship upon my Lords the Bishops, more than is done in other Cases) it is best to keep the same Rule as in all other Cases; for when all is done, when Justice goes with an equal Current, without any regard to one Person or other, then every body is safe, and all persons concerned do their Duty; so in this case, here be no Presidents produced, wherein it has been otherwise, then can no person complain but that things go in this Case, as they do in all other Cases; perhaps such a Case (as to the Fact of it) never hapned before, but for the Law of it, that is plain, and the same is in all other Cases; for that there may be an Information against my Lords the Bishops, as well as other People, if they make Libels, sure it is no doubt at all; and if an Information lies against them for it, they are under the same Rules as others are: but these Gentlemen talk of being surprized, and that this is the first time they have heard of this Information, but have we told any News in this Information? Was not all that is contained in it, notoriously enough known before? Was not the Kings first Declaration very well known? Was not his second Declaration very well known? Was not his Order of Council for Reading of the Declaration very well known? Is not your own Petition a thing very well known to your selves and all the World? Then these being the particular Facts, of which this Information is made up, and we only say you did this Fact, and we ask you, did you do it, or did you not? Can there be any great surprize in this? My Lord, I cannot see any thing that alters this from the common Case, but only their being Peers, and since this question has been heretofore under contest, these Gentlemen have had time enough to have prepared Precedents, to differ this from the common Rule, if they could; but since they cannot, we desire they may have the same Rule, that is in all other Cases, and then to be sure, all will go right.

L. C. J. Sir Samuel Astry, pray will you tell us, whether ever the Court used to grant an Imparance where a Person comes in in Custody; or did you ever know, when a Person comes in upon a Commitment, time was given him to Plead?

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Have you ever known it disputed, and denied?

Sir Sam. Astry. My Lord, I have known that 'tis in the discretion of the Court to grant what time they please.

L. C. J. Is it the course of the Court to give an Imparance?

Sir Sam. Astry. No, 'tis the favour of the Court, and if the Defendants have at any time shewed a reasonable Cause, that they have a special Matter to plead, or any other cause allowed by the Court, the Court has sometimes Indulged them so far, as to give them time.

L. C. J. But how is the ordinary course, Sir Samuel Astry?

Mr. Just. Allybone. Ay, for as I said before, things done in particular Cases in favour, are not Precedents.

Sir Sam. Astry. I have told your Lordship the Course is this, that any Person that appears upon a Recognizance, or is taken up by your Lordships Warrant, or by a Warrant from a Justice Justice of Peace, or any other way in Custody, or any Officer of the Court that is a privileged Person, and that must appear in propria persona, must plead presently; if the Court upon particular Reasons do not give him time; and this I received Information of, as the practice of the Court, from Mr. Waterhouse, who had been a Clerk in the Office sixty Years.

Mr. Soll. Gen. He said so before, but these Gentlemen will never be contented, unless they have a new Law made for them.

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, I would not unnecessarily trouble your Lordship; but truly this is a Case of great Concern. And first of all, I think we shall all agree, that what has been used for ten or twelve Years past will not make the course of the Court, and next I perceive they do not bring any one instance for any proceeding of this sort above ten or twelve Years old, but then (say they) on the other side, Why do not you bring Presidents, that it has gone otherwise heretofore? My Lord, that cannot be done, for it is a Negative on our side, that this which they desire is not the Course of the Court; but then (as it is impossible) to prove a Negative, so the Proofs should come on the other side, that this has been done: they ought to shew it, if there has been any such thing as a standing Rule, or else it shall be presumed an Innovation, as being contrary to all Reason; But my Lord, because they put it upon us, there is this Proof on our side, as much as a Negative can afford: In those Proceedings, that were in the great Case of the Habeas Corpus, there was an Information against Elliot and others, they had time given them to plead over and over, so that there is one Precedent: And as many of these Cases in former times as can be found, will shew that this was always the course; but pray (say they) produce us one instance, that ever there was a Man that came in upon a Recognizance, that had time to plead; truly my Lord, I cannot just now tell whether any such instance can be produced, but I verily believe there may be a great many, but I turn it upon them, and that with great Reason, with Submission to your Lordship, Shew me any Man (if you can) above a dozen Years ago, that had not time allowed him to plead; Ay but (say they) Mr. Waterhouse an ancient Clerk of the Crown Office, that has been there these sixty Years, hath certified that this hath been the practice of all his time: My Lord, we that have been Conversant in the business of this Court, did all very well know Mr. Waterhouse when he was here, and sat in Court in the place of Sir Samuel Astry.

Sir S. Astry. No, Sir, it was in Mr. Harcourt's place.

Mr. Pollixfen. Well, he executed a place here, and 'tis no matter whether he were Master of the Office or no; but I think we all knew him very well, he was a Man as lame in his Business as could be, for there are some Men that will never do business well, let them be never so long at it; and he was as weak in the practice of the Court, and every thing else, as 'tis possible for one that has been bred in an Office can be; and at this time he is grown so decrepit and superannuated, that you may as well depend upon the Certificate of an old Woman, as any thing that he shall say in such a Matter as this; he is now almost fourscore years of Age, and has lost that little Memory and Understanding he had, but if his Certificate must be depended upon, because of his standing in the Office; pray my Lord, let him come hither, and do you ask him what he has to say in this Matter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Aye, that is very well indeed.

Mr. Pollixfen. Good Mr. Solicitor spare us, certainly there needs not such great haste in this Matter, we are upon a business of very great Weight and Concernment, for you are now making a Law for the whole Kingdom in point of Practice, in Cases of this Nature. We do say indeed, that by the Reason of the Heat and Zeal of these last ten years, such a Usage has been introduced, but Sir Samuel Astry tells you, it was opposed, and I hope that neither I, nor the thing will be the worse thought of, because I opposed what I thought an unreasonable and new Invention; my Lord, I know in the Case of the City of London, we had time to plead a whole Vacation after an Imparllance, and were not at all hurried on, as the King's Council would do in this Case; my Lord, if they can produce any ancient Precedent for it, I will say no more, but there is no Case in Print in any of our Books that ever I read or can remember, that countenances such an Opinion; a Man by this means may lose his just Defence, and he has no Remedy, nor will it ever be in his Power to retrieve it, for he may be brought on a sudden into Court upon a Warrant, and when he is here he shall be charged with an Information, and presently he must plead not Guilty, because he has not time to prepare a Plea of any other Nature, let him have never so much other special Matter, or occasion for it; if you please to let this Matter be examined what the Precedents are, and what Age those Precedents are, then perhaps your Lordship will get some Satisfaction; but otherwise, if the bare Certificate of the Master of the Office is to be a Guide to the Court what is Law, and what is not, we shall be in a very uncertain Condition, especially when the Matter carries in the very face of it, a great deal of Unreasonableness and Injustice. They on the other side will argue that is not more unreasonable than the practice in the Case of Treason and Felony, where Persons are compelled to plead instantly. But under favour my Lord, there is no Comparison between this Case and that, though I know it was always thought a hardship and defect in our Law, that a person should be denied time to plead in Case of Life and Death, except he can shew some special Matter of Law that he has to plead, and then he has always time allowed him to put it into Form; and I could never think there was any Reason to be given for it, but because the common Defences of Felons would be little Shifts and Arts, which would destroy Proceedings, and make them tedious, and that would be an Encouragement to People to commit Felony; and beside there is a Trust which the Law reposes in the Court in Capital Cases, to take care that these Men should not suffer upon any little Tricks in Law; but if you come below Treason and Felony, the Law puts no such hardship upon the Defendant, nor reposes such a special Trust in the Court; but a Man may plead any thing he has to plead; and can any Man plead before he sees what he is to plead to? and shall the Law allow him Council to prepare his Plea, and not allow him time to consult with that Council about it? These are things my Lord, that truly to me seem unreasonable : But as to the Practice and course of the Court, I pray your Lordship to give Order, that the Precedents may be searched, that you may know what the ancient Practice was.

Mr. Finch. Whether you will grant an Imparlance now or no, yet I hope however, you will think fit to give my Lords the Bishops time to plead.

L. C. J. But Mr. Finch, we have had a Certificate from Sir Samuel Astry, which truly weighs a great deal with me, he tells you the Practice has been so ever since he came here, and that Mr. Waterhouse told him, that it had been so all his time, which is sixty Years.

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, there are Persons here that will upon their Oaths declare, That Mr. Waterhouse has often told them the Practice was otherwise ; even in his time, and afterwards a long time before this new way of Proceeding came in.

Mr. Ince. My Lord, if I might have liberty to speak, I can say Mr. Waterhouse has told me.

L. C. J. Pray be quiet Mr. Ince.

Mr. Just. Allybone. But pray Mr. Pollixfen give me leave to mind you, how the Evidence stands against you, the Objections are, that this has been a Practice but for twelve years last past : if that be true, I think it goes a great way, for the Practice of twelve years is Precedent enough, Frimâ Facie, that such is the practice, for how shall we come to the Knowledge of the practice, but from our Officer Sir Samuel Astry, who has been here examined ? and he tells you, that upon his coming into the Office, when it could not be so doubtful as now (it seems) it is, he took Instructions from Mr. Waterhouse ; I allow you 'tis but his Certificate, but that must go a great way with the Court.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Such a practice as this has been always very rare in Informations for Misdemeanours ; and they bring you nothing of any Precedent older than Sir Samuel Astry's time.

Mr. Finch. Pray my Lord, give me leave to vary the Question, I do not now make it a Question, whether your Lordships should grant my Lords the Bishops an Imparlance, but whether you would think fit to look into the course of the Court before that time, that Sir Samuel Astry speaks of, and take time to consider, and search into Precedents.

Mr. Just. Allybone. Do you Mr. Finch give us any one Reason or Precedent, that may make us doubt, whether this be the course of the Court or no ? And you could not but be aware of this before, and therefore should have come prepared to make out your Objection.

Mr. Finch. Mr. Pollixfen and the rest of the Practicers in my Lord Hale's time will tell you, that the course was otherwise in his time ; Sir Samuel Astry indeed tells you, it has been so since his time ; but this was one of the Points (it seems) that he was ignorant of, which made him inquire of Mr. Waterhouse, so doubtful was this Practice.

Sir Samuel Astry. I was an Attender upon this Court before I came into this Office, but it was in another place on the other side of the Court ; and therefore was not concerned so much to know what was the course on this side, till I came into this Office.

Mr. Sol. Gen. These Gentlemen differ among themselves, one would have an Imparlance, the other only time to plead, I believe truly they cannot tell well what they would have, I pray the Rules of the Court may be kept to.

Sir Sam. Astry. Here are two Clerks that sit by me, that have been a long time in the Office, Mr. Harcourt my Secondary, and the Clerk of the Rules ; I pray they may be asked their Knowledge of this matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Certainly these Gentlemen think they have a Privilege above all other People, that they must not be subject to the same Rules as others are, we on our parts have taken all the Methods that we could to make this matter manifest, and what is it that these Gentlemen now propose ? They pray you to take time to consider, but have they used the right means of creating a jealousy or suspicion in the Court, that the course is otherwise, they can give no instance of it, and all they say is, 'tis a Negative, that this is not the course of the Court, but the Imparlance that they beg is in the Affirmative, surely that they can find proof of, if it be so : As for my Lord Hollis's Case, that is with us, and not against us ; let Mr. Pollixfen shew that ever any one of the Men that were brought into Court in Custody either had time to plead, or an Imparlance.

L. C. J. Sir Samuel Astry says he has given you his Opinion, and here are two other Clerks of the Office that he refers himself to, are you willing that they should be asked ?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Yes my Lord, with all our hearts.

L. C. J. Mr. Harcourt, How long have you been a Clerk in the Crown-Office ?

Mr. Harcourt. About seventeen or eighteen Years, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long have you known the practice of the Court in this matter, and what is it ?

Mr. Harcourt. I cannot charge my self so with Particulars from the time of my coming into the Office, but for these ten or twelve Years past (I remember) it has been as the King's Council pressed, and as Sir Samuel Astry has declared.

L. C. J. What say you, Mr. Sillyard, how long have you known the Crown Office ?

Mr. Sillyard. I have been a Clerk here about thirty Years.

L. C. J. Well, and how has the practice been all your time ?

Mr. Sillyard. I have not sat here as Clerk of the Rules but a little while, but since I have sat here, I have always observed it to be the Practice, that one that comes in Custody should plead immediately, it was a thing heretofore that did not so often happen, as it hath done here of late, therefore I cannot so well speak to it ; but it hath fallen out frequently within some Years last past, and that hath been the constant course.

Sir Samuel Astry. When you first came to be Attorney General, Sir Robert Sawyer, I am sure it was so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let me ask you Mr. Sillyard, you say, you have known the Office thirty Years, when you first came to the Office, were Informations as frequent as they are now, and have been of late ?

Mr. Sol. Gen. It was so in the Case of Mr. Hampden, when you were Attorney General, Sir Robert Sawyer, he was forced to plead immediately to an Indictment, for a Crime that perhaps you will say was near upon Treason.

Sir Rob.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Yes truly, it wanted but one Witness, that was all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But yet the Indictment was only for a Misdemeanour, and there we struggled and debated the Matter, but were forced to give it over, because the course of the Court was against us, so it has been by the unquestionable Testimony of Sir Samuel Astry for these twelve Years last past, and in those twelve Years we have had many changes, perhaps there may have been twelve Chief Justices, and they have all affirmed it, and if I then make it out, that in all these Judges times that are within our Remembrance it has gone thus, then there are enough Precedents in the Matter.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But my Lord, I desire to know, whether that were the ancient Course, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. They that make the Objection ought to prove it; but I will name Sir Rob. Sawyer another Case, and that is the Case of Sir Samuel Barnardiston, which was the Case of a Libel too, he was forced to plead immediately, and it cost him 10000 l. Fine.

L. C. J. Well, Gentlemen, have you done on either side?

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. If your Lordship will please to give us time till to morrow Morning, we will come hither by Rule of Court, and bring you some Certificates and Affidavits, or else some Precedents that we hope will satisfy your Lordship in this Matter.

L. C. J. No Brother, we cannot do that, the Question is what the Course of the Court is, we have an account of that from Sir Samuel Astry, for twelve Years of his own Knowledge, and from Mr. Waterhouse by him for sixty Years; but for Mr. Waterhouse they except against him, and say he was a Person that was always lazy and did not so well understand his Business, and now is superannuated, that is said, but is but gratis dictum, perhaps it may be so, perhaps not; and they have offered to Examine Mr. Ince about some Opinion that he has had from this Mr. Waterhouse; it may be he may have asked him some Question that may lead to it, and he may have given some flight Answer, but then here are these two Persons Mr. Harcourt, and Mr. Sillyard, and the one has been a Clerk these sixteen or seventeen Years, and the other has known the Office thirty Years; though there were not heretofore so many Informations of this nature and kind as now of late, but still they say, that a Person that comes in upon a Commitment, or a Recognizance, shall never have any Imparllance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can they give any one Instance that has any the least shadow to the contrary?

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, if we had time, we hope we should be able to satisfy you in this Matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have had time enough to prepare your selves for this Question, if you had thought you could do any good in it.

L. C. J. Would the course of the Court be otherwise to Morrow than it is to Day, we have taken all the Care we can to be satisfied in this Matter, and we will take care that the Lords the Bishops shall have all Justice done them, nay, they shall have all the Favour by my consent that can be shewn them, without doing wrong to my Master the King, but truly I cannot depart from the course of the Court in this Matter, if the King's Council press it.

Vol. III.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we must pray your Judgment in it, and your Direction, that they may plead.

L. C. J. Truly I think they must Plead to the Information.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Samuel Astry, pray ask my Lords whether they be Guilty or Not Guilty.

Then his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury stood up, and offered a Paper to the Court.

Archbish. of Cant. My Lord, I tender here a short Plea, (a very short one,) on behalf of my self and my Brethren the other Defendants; and I humbly desire the Court will admit of this Plea.

L. C. J. If it please your Grace, it should have been in Parchment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is that my Lord offers to the Court?

L. C. J. We will see what it is presently, Mr. Solicitor.

Bish. of Peter. I pray, my Lord, that the Plea may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But not received.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, we desire to know what it is first.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Attorney, if they will plead, the Court sure is obliged to receive it.

L. C. J. If it is a Plea, your Grace will stand by it.

L. Archbish. of Cant. We will all stand by it, my Lord, it is subscribed by our Council, and we pray it may be admitted by the Court.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. I hope the Court will not deny to receive a special Plea, if we offer one.

L. C. J. Brother, let us hear what it is?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read it if you please, but not receive it.

Clerk Reads the Plea; which in English is thus:

The Bishops P L E A.

AND the aforesaid William Archbishop of Canterbury, William Bishop of St. Asaph, Francis Bishop of Ely, John Bishop of Chichester, Thomas Bishop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Bishop of Peterburgh, and Jonathan Bishop of Bristol, being present here in Court in their own Persons, pray Oyer of the Information aforesaid; and it is Read to them, which being Read and heard by them the said Archbishop, and Bishops: The said Archbishop and Bishops say, that they are Peers of this Kingdom of England, and Lords of Parliament, and each of them is one of the Peers of this Kingdom of England, and a Lord of the Parliament, and that they being (as before is manifest) Peers of this Kingdom of England, and Lords of Parliament, ought not to be compelled to answer instantly for the Misdemeanour aforesaid, mentioned in the said Information exhibited here against them in this Court; but they ought to be required to appear by due Process in Law issuing out of this Court here upon the Information aforesaid, and upon their Appearance to have a Copy of the said Information exhibited against them, and reasonable time to impart thereupon, and to advise with Council Learned in the Law, concerning their Defence in that behalf, before they be compelled to answer the said Information; Whereupon, for that the said Archbishop, and Bishops were Imprisoned, and by Writ of our Lord the King, of Habeas Corpus, directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, are now brought here in Custody, without any Process upon the Information aforesaid issued against them, and without having any Copy of the said Information, or any time given them to imparl, or be advised; They pray Judgment, and the Priviledge of Peers of this Kingdom, in this Case to be allowed them; and that They the said Archbishop, and Bishops, may not be compelled instantly to answer the Information aforesaid, &c.

Rob. Sawyer.

Hen. Finch.

Hen. Pollixfen.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with your Lordship's favour, this, in an ordinary Person's Case, would perhaps be thought not fair dealing, or that which (it being in the Case of these Reverend Prelates) I shall not now name; to make all this Debate and Stir in a Point of this nature, to take the Judgement of the Court after three or four hours arguing, and when the Opinion of the Court has been delivered, then to put in a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court, —

Sir Rob. Sawyer, It is no such Plea.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is so in effect, but certainly it is such an Irregularity, and such an unfair way of Proceeding, as would not be endured in an ordinary Case, and I hope you will give so little countenance to it, as to reject it, and make them plead according to the usual course and way of proceedings; certainly a Plea of this nature, after so long an Argument, would be reckoned nothing but a trick.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. We hope the Court and you are not of one mind Mr. Attorney in this matter, we desire the Court to receive the Plea.

Mr. Att. Gen. With submission, the Court is not bound to receive Pleas, that are put in purely for delay, as this is; for the Judgment of the Court has been already given in the very matter of this Plea; and for rejecting a Plea, it is done every day, if a Man puts in a mere trifling dilatory Plea, the Court may reject it; Does this Plea contain any thing in it, but what has been argued and debated pro & con and settled by the Court already? If they will put in any Plea in chief they may, but such a Plea as this, I hope shall not have so much countenance, as to be receiv'd by the Court.

Mr. Pollixfen. Do you Demur to it, if you please Mr. Attorney, we will joyn in Demurrer with you.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, there will be no need of that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Surely the Court will never give so much Countenance to it, as to receive it.

Mr. Finch. If you will please either to Reply or Demur, Mr. Solicitor, we are here to maintain the Plea.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If you were here you would say the same thing that we do; My Lord, this Plea is, That my Lords the Bishops are not bound to Plead instantly; so that 'tis not a Question, Whether they ought to Answer, or not to Answer, but whether they ought to Answer immediately, and what do they say more? They would have an Impar lance, and time to consult with their Council what they shall Plead, which is all but one and the same thing; and what is the reason they give for this? They induce it thus, These Noble Persons are Peers of the Realm, and so ought not to be compelled to Plead immediately; this, if I mistake not, is the sum of their Plea. Now pray my Lord, what sort of Plea is this? It is not a Plea to the Juris-dition of the Court, tho it do in a sort decline the Justice of the Court? Is it a Plea in Abatement? No, it is not, for it is only to gain time, and do they now offer any thing more for themselves, than what was said by their Council before? Only, That we are Peers of the Realm, and that such is the Priviledge of Peers, that they ought to have an Impar lance, and time to Plead, and that they ought not to answer presently: My Lord, this Matter hath been long agitated in the Court already, your Lordship, and the Court have given your Judgments, and we know your Lordship, and the Court will not admit of Tricks to delay the Kings Causes, we all know the Term is a short Term, and what I said in the beginning upon this matter, I say again, it is the Interest, and for the Honour of my Lords the Bishops (if they understand their own Interest, and value their Honour) to have this Cause tryed as soon as may be; but this trifling and tricking is only for delay: For what issue can be taken upon this Plea? Certainly none; And if we should Demurr, what will be the end of that? But only to get time to slip over the Term. If there were any thing worth the considering in this Plea, and that had not been already debated and settled, then it might concern us to give some Answer to it; but we have spent three hours (by my Watch) in the Dispute, and the Matter having been over-ruled already, it is time to have an end of it; sure the Court will never be so treated by these Persons, that are of Council for my Lords the Bishops, for it cannot be thought that my Lords the Bishops do it of themselves; and whether the Court will be so served, we submit to your Lordship. Certainly you will not receive such a Plea as this, especially it being in Paper, you will never countenance such a Practice so far as to give these Lords time to trifle with the Court; if any such thing as a Plea be tender'd to the Court, it ought to be in Parchment, and if they would have an Impar lance, there ought to have been an entry of a Petit Licentiam interloquendi upon the Roll, but not such a Plea as this, for this in effect is no more than desiring an Impar lance, which if it be granted of course, upon such a Prayer entred upon the Roll, you take it of course; but if it be not of course, you cannot come in by way of Plea, it must be by suggestion upon the Roll, and a Conceditur entred, if this be admitted as a Precedent, every Man hereafter that comes in upon any Information, will take advantage of it, and plead such a Plea as this, and if you grant an Impar lance in this Case upon this Plea, you must grant an Impar lance in every Case; certainly the Law is not to be altered, the Methods of Proceedings ought to be the same in every Case: And I hope you will not make a particular Rule in the Case of my Lords the Bishops, without a special Reason for it.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. We put in this Plea, my Lord, and are ready to abide by it, and we say, that according to the course of the Court, it ought to be received.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, but good Mr. Serjeant, 'tis in the discretion of the Court, whether they will receive it or not, for the matter has been in debate already, and has receiv'd a determination, the Court has over-ruled them in this very Point already, and there is no more in this Plea, than was in the Argument before, and therefore it ought to be rejected as a frivolous Plea.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Here is a Plea offered in Writing, and and in Paper, the Court sees what it is, and I hope you will give no countenance to it.

Mr. Pollexfen. I do hope my Lord, you will not judge this as a frivolous Plea, I think our Case is such, that you will not do that, if you think fit you may over-rule it, but I hope you will not refuse it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Court will certainly reject a frivolous Plea, and they may do it.

Mr. Pollexfen. But Mr. Solicitor, I hope the Court will consider of it, whether it be a frivolous Plea or not. It is true, there has been a Debate about the course of the Court, and there has been an Examination of the Clerk of the Office, and the Court has gone upon his Certificate, but yet still perhaps it may remain in doubt, and it being a Question of such a consequence as this, it may very well deserve the Court's Consideration; there never was a Judicial Settlement of it (that I know of yet) nor do I know any way of having it satisfactorily settled, but by the Judgment of the Court entered upon Record; here we offer a Plea that contains the matter in debate, and this Plea will appear upon Record, and if upon consideration of the Plea your Lordship shall think fit to over-rule it, and be of Opinion against the Plea, then will you by your Resolution in a Judicial way, settle the Question that has hitherto been in Controversy.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, I would ask you whether the Council have dealt ingenuously with the Court or no in this matter; after four Hours debate, and the Opinion of the Court delivered, to come and sum up all the Arguments in such a Plea as this, and so put us upon debating it over again.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, certainly this has been done before, without Offence; after we had moved for a thing which was denied upon Motion, it is no such great disrespect to the Court (with submission) to put the same Matter into a Plea, for the Judicial Opinion of the Court.

Sir Robert Sawyer. That without all Question has been done a great many times.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How many times have you been accused of playing Tricks, Sir Robert Sawyer?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Not so many as you, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I don't ask it as if I questioned it, for I assure you I don't doubt it of your part at all.

L. C. J. Pray Gentlemen don't fall out with one another at the Bar, we have had time enough spent already.

Mr. Pollexfen. Truly, My Lord, I would not trick with the Court in any Case, nor on the other side would I be wanting to Advise and do for my Client, what I am able and lawfully may; we have laboured all we could to get time for my Lords the Bishops to Imparle to this Information, and we have been the more earnest in it, because it concerns us; who attend this Bar, to take what Care we can, that the Course of the Court may be observed; but as for this matter, we suppose this Practice of the Court is not in Law a good Practice; Now what way in the World has any Man to bring this so in question, as to have a Judicial Resolution of the Court about it, but by such a Plea? We take it, that it is usual and legal for us to have an Impar lance, and a Man would Imparle, but the Court upon Motion refused to give him an Impar lance; Is it not (think you) very fit for the Party to have this Judicially entered upon Record? where all this Matter will appear, and the Party may be relieved by Writ of Error, if the Judgment of the Court should be wrong; but truly I cannot see how the Court can refuse the Plea, for if so be a Plea be pleaded, they have their liberty to Answer it on the other side by a Replication, or else to Demur, and the Judgment of the Court may be had upon it one way or other, but the Court will never go about to hinder any Man from pleading where he may plead by Law; here is a Plea put in, and the Court sure will take no notice what is the Matter of the Plea, till the other party have either replied or demurred; the same thing may happen in any other Plea that is pleaded, and the Party will be without Remedy upon a Writ of Error, because the Plea being rejected, there does nothing appear upon Record; truly for the Court to reject and refuse the Plea, would be as hard as the refusing of the Impar lance, and we know no way we have to help our selves.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You might have entered your Suggestion for an Impar lance upon the Roll, and then it would have appeared upon Record, and if the Court had unjustly denied it you, you would have had the benefit of that Suggestion elsewhere: Truly, My Lord, I think if any thing be tricking, this is, for it is plainly ill pleading.

Mr. Finch. Then pray demur to it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No Sir, 'tis Fencing with the Court, and that the Court won't suffer, it is only to delay, and if we should demur, then there must be time for Arguing; and what is the Question after all, but whether you would be of the same Opinion to Morrow, that you are to Day?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. I would put Mr. Solicitor in mind of Fitz Harris's Case, which he knows very well, he put it in a Plea, and we for the King desired it might not be received, but the Court gave him time to put it into Form, and I was fain to joyn in Demurrer presently, and so may these Gentlemen do if they please.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, Sir Robert Sawyer, I do know the Case of Fitz Harris very well, I was assigned of Council by the Court for him, we were four of us, and there was a Plea put in, but no such Plea as this, there was an Indictment of High Treason against him, in which Case it is agreed on all hands, that the party must answer presently, but because he suggested here at the Bar, (says he) I have Matter to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court, and shewed what it was, I was Impeached before the Lords in Parliament for Treason, for the same Matter of which I am here Accused: The Court did give him time to put this into Form, and we were assigned his Council to draw it up for him, and accordingly we did put that Matter into a Plea, that we were here Indicted for one and the same Treason, for which we were Impeached in Parliament, and that that Impeachment was still depending, and so we rested in the Judgment of the Court, whether we should be put to Answer it here; this was a Plea that carried something of weight in it, and not such a trifling one as this. It is true, Sir Robert Sawyer who was then Attorney General did press the Court to over-rule it immediately, but it being a matter of some Importance, the Court would not do that, but had it argued solemnly by Council on both sides, and at last there was the Opinion of three Judges against one that the Plea was no good Plea. But what is that to such a trifling Plea as this?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray my Lord favour me a few words about that Case of Mr. Fitz Harris, it is true, there was a Plea put in, and it is true also, that that which brought that Plea to be argued, was the Demurrer that was put in by Sir Robert Sawyer, who was so zealous and hasty in the matter, that because the Court did not presently over-rule the Plea, as he desired, he immediately Demurred, before the rest of the King's Council could offer at any thing about it; and thereupon it was put to the Judgment of the Court, and no doubt must be argued, and spoke to on both sides; but where Pleas are really in abuse of the Court, the Court never gives any Countenance to them: Nay, truly I have known another Course taken, I am unwilling to mention a Case that hapned much about that time too in this Court, because of that regard I have to my Lords the Bishops, but Sir Robert Sawyer remembers it very well, I am sure: it was the Case of one Whitaker, who for a thing like this, putting in a trifling Plea, not only had his Plea rejected, but something else was ordered, I could shew the Precedent, but that I am more tender than to press it in this Case, because there the Court order'd an Attachment to go against him, but I will put these Gentlemen in mind of another Case, and that is the Case of a Peer too, it is the Case of my Lord Delamere, which they cannot but remember, it being in the highest Case, a Case of Treason, when my Lord Delamere was Arraigned and to be Tryed for High Treason, he put in a Plea before my Lord Chancellour, who was then High Steward, and Sir Robert Sawyer who was then Attorney General, prayed the Lord Steward and the Peers to reject it, and the Court did reject it, (as we hope the Court will do this) and would never so far delay Justice as to admit of a Plea that carried no Colour in it, and there was no Demurrer put into the Plea, but it was absolutely refused: My Lord, in this Case we have had the Judgment of the Court already, and therefore we must now desire that this Plea may be rejected.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have now gone out of the way far enough already; it is time for us to return, and bring the Case into its due methods. We pray your Lordship to reject this Plea.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, we are in your Judgment, whether you will receive this Plea or not.

L. C. J. You shall have my Judgment presently; but my Brothers are to speak first.

Mr. Just. Allybone. Mr. Pollexfen makes it a Question, whether this Plea may be rejected or not, or whether it ought to be received, and the Court give their Judgment upon it.

Mr. Just. Powell. Truly I do not know whether the Court can reject this, as a frivolous Plea.

L. C. J. Surely we may and frequently do.

Mr. Att. Gen. You do it every day, 'tis a frequent Motion; if a frivolous Plea be put in, before it be entred upon Record as a Plea, the Court may refuse it, if they see cause.

Mr. J. Allybone. Truly if it may be, this appears to me a frivolous Plea.

Mr. J. Powell. I do not know how the Court can reject any Plea that the Party will put in, if he will stand by it, as they say they will here; and I cannot think this a frivolous Plea, it concerning the priviledge of Peers, and Lords of Parliament.

Mr. J. Allybone. Brother Powell, I would be as tender of the Priviledges of Parliament, and speak with as much respect of the Priviledges of the Peerage, as any body else; but for the matter of the Plea, truly it appears to me, that the Peers are named in it only for fashion sake, and it is frivolous.

Mr. J. Powell. The matter of the Plea, except only their being said to be Peers and Lords of Parliament, was spoke to before, but it was only obiter, and by way of motion; but now it may come before us for our Judicial Determination.

Mr. J. Allybone. Pray let the Plea be read again.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Just. Allybone. This Plea is no more but that which has been denied already upon solemn debate, and if it be in the power of the Court to reject any Plea, surely we ought to reject this. Indeed I know not what power we have to reject a Plea; but if we have power, this ought to be rejected.

Mr. J. Powell. I declare my Opinion, I am for receiving the Plea, and considering of it.

Mr. J. Holloway. I think as this case is, this Plea ought not to be received, but rejected, because 'tis no more than what has been denied already. I am not ashamed to say, That I should be very glad and ready to do all things that are consistent with my Duty, to shew respects to my Lords the Bishops, some of whom are my particular Friends; but I am upon my Oath, and must go according to the course of Law.

L. C. J. We have asked and informed our selves from the Bar, whether we may or can reject a Plea, and truly what they have said, hath satisfied me that we may, if the Plea be frivolous; and this being a Plea that contains no more than what has been over-ruled already, after hearing what could be said on both sides, I think the Court is not bound to receive the Plea, but may reject it, and my Lords the Bishops must plead over.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray they may plead in chief.

Clerk. My Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, is your Grace guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

A. B. C. Not Guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, is your Lordship guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Bish. of St. Asaph. Not Guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of Ely, is your Lordship guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Bish. of Ely. Not Guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of Chichester, is your Lordship guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information or not guilty?

Bish. of Chichester. Not Guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells, is your Lordship guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Bish.

Bish. of Bath and Wells. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of Peterborough, is your Lordship guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Bish. of Peterborough. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of Bristol, is your Lordship guilty of the matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Bish. of Bristol. Not Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray the Clerk may join Issue on the behalf of the King, that so we may come to Tryal; and we would have these Gentlemen take notice, that we intend to try this Cause on this day fortnight, and we pray liberty of the Court, that we may try it at Bar.

L. C. J. Are you not too hasty in that Motion, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we should indeed make it the Motion of another day; but we do now tell them this ex abundanti, because my Lords the Bishops are now here, and will I suppose take notice that we do intend to move it another Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We now give them notice, that we intend to move.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. For that you need not trouble your selves; we are very desirous it should be tryed at Bar, and that as soon as you please.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well then you take notice it will be tryed this day fortnight.

L. C. J. Well, what shall we do with my Lords the Bishops?

Mr. Att. Gen. They are baylable, no question of it, my Lord, if they please.

L. C. J. Then, my Lords, we are ready to bail you, if you please.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We desire your Lordship would be pleased to take their own Recognizance.

L. C. J. What say you Mr. Attorney? I think that may do well enough.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with all my heart, we will do it.

L. C. J. In what Penalty shall we take it?

Mr. Att. Gen. A 1000 l. I think my Lord his Grace, and 500 l. apiece the rest.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. What necessity is there for so much?

Mr. Att. Gen. Look you, Sir Robert Sawyer, to shew you that we do insist upon nothing that shall look like hardship, what my Lords have been pleased to offer, concerning taking their own Recognizance, we agree to, and what Sums the Court pleases.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is all one to us, we leave it wholly to the Court.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Only I have one thing more to beg of your Lordship on the behalf of my Lords the Bishops, that you will please to order, that in the Return of the Jury there may be forty eight returned.

Mr. Att. Gen. I tell you what we will do, Sir Samuel Astry shall have the Freeholders Book, if you please, and shall return twenty four.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Eight and forty has been always the course, when the Jury is returned by Sir Samuel Astry.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I pray the Officer may return the Jury, according as is usual in Cases of this nature.

Mr. Att. Gen. You do admit of a Tryal at Bar, Gentlemen?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Yes, and try it when you will.

L. C. J. They say it shall be this day fortnight, and let there be a Jury according to the usual course.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We pray it may be in the presence of the Attorneys or Solicitors on both sides.

L. C. J. What is the usual course, Sir Samuel Astry? Do you use to return twenty four, or forty eight, and then strike out twelve a piece, which I perceive they desire for the Defendants?

Sir Samuel Astry. My Lord, the course is both ways, and then it may be, as your Lordship and the Court will please to order it.

L. C. J. Then take forty eight, that is the fairest.

Mr. Att. Gen. We agree to it; we desire nothing but a fair Jury.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Nor we neither, try it when you will.

L. C. J. Take a Recognizance of his Grace my Lord of Canterbury in 200 l. and the rest of my Lords in 100 l. a piece.

Mr. Att. Gen. What your Lordship pleases for that, we submit to it.

Clerk. My Lord of Canterbury, your Grace acknowledges to owe unto our Sovereign Lord the King, the Sum of 200 l. upon condition that your Grace shall appear in this Court on this day fortnight, and so from day to day, till you shall be discharged by the Court, and not to depart without leave of the Court. Is your Grace contented?

A. B. C. I do acknowledge it.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, you acknowledge to owe unto our Sovereign Lord the King, the Sum of 100 l. upon condition that your Lordship shall appear in this Court on this day fortnight, and so from day to day, untill you shall be discharged by the Court, and not to depart without leave of the Court. Is your Lordship contented?

Bishop of Asaph. I do acknowledge it.

The like Recognizances were taken of all the rest of the Bishops, and then the Court arose.

William Wubbers, Esq;	Richard Shoreditch, Esq;

Clerk. You Gentlemen of the Jury who are sworn, hearken to the Record; Sir Thomas Powys, Knight, His Majesty's Attorney-General, has exhibited an Information, which does set forth as followeth.

Memorandum, That Sir Thomas Powys, Knt.
Attorney-General of our Lord the King, who for our said Lord the King in this behalf prosecutes, came here in his own Person into the Court of our said Lord the King, before the King himself at Westminster, on Friday next after the morrow of the Holy Trinity in this Term; and on the behalf of our said Lord the King, giveth the Court here to understand and be informed, That our said Lord the King, out of his signal Clemency, and gracious intention towards his Subjects of his Kingdom of England, by his Royal Prerogative, on the fourth day of April, in the third Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, at Westminster in the County of Middlesex, did publish his Royal Declaration, entituled, His Majesty's Gracious Declaration to all his Loving Subjects for Liberty of Conscience, bearing date the same Day and Year, sealed with the Great Seal of England; in which Declaration is contained, James R. prout in the first Declaration before recited.

And the said Attorney-General of our said
Lord the King, on behalf of our said Lord the King, further giveth the Court here to understand and be informed, That afterwards, to wit, on the twenty seventh day of April, in the fourth Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, at Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, our said Lord the King, out of his like Clemency, and gracious intention towards his Subjects of his Kingdom of England, by his Royal Prerogative, did publish his other Royal Declaration, entituled, His Majesty's Gracious Declaration, bearing date the same day and year last mentioned, sealed with his Great Seal of England; in which Declaration is contained, James R. Our Conduct has been such, &c. prout in the second Declaration before recited.

Which said Royal Declaration of our said
Lord the King last mentioned, our said Lord the King afterwards, to wit, on the thirtieth day of April, in the fourth Year of his Reign aforesaid, at Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, did cause to be printed and published throughout all England; and for the more solemn Declaring, Notification, and Manifestation of his Royal Grace, Favour, and Bounty towards all his Liege-people, specified in the Declaration last mentioned, afterwards, to wit, on the fourth day of May, in the fourth year of his Reign, at Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, our said Lord the King in due manner did order as followeth:

At the Court at Whitehall the Fourth of May, 1688.

By the King's most Excellent Majesty, and the Lords of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council.

IT is this day Ordered by His Majesty in Council,
That His Majesties Gracious Declaration bearing date the Twenty Seventh of April last, be read at the usual time of Divine Service upon the Twentieth and Twenty-Seventh of this Month, in all Churches and Chappels within the Cities of London and Westminster, and Ten Miles thereabout: And upon the Third and Tenth of June next in all other Churches and Chappels throughout this Kingdom. And it is hereby further Ordered, That the Right Reverend the Bishops cause the said Declaration to be sent and distributed throughout their several respective Diocesses, to be read accordingly.

Wm. Bridgman.

And further, the said Attorney General of our said Lord the King, on behalf of our said Lord the King, giveth the Court here to understand and be informed; That after the making of the said Order, to wit, on the eighteenth day of May, in the fourth year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, at Westminster afore said, in the County of Middlesex afore said, William Archbishop of Canterbury, of Lambeth in the County of Surry; William Bishop of St. Asaph, of St. Asaph in the County of Flynt; Francis Bishop of Ely, of the Parish of St. Andrew Holbourn in the County of Middlesex; John Bishop of Chichester, of Chichester in the County of Sussex; Thomas Bishop of Bath and Wells, of the City of Wells in the County of Somerset; Thomas Bishop of Peterburgh, of the Parish of St. Andrew Holbourn in the County of Middlesex; and Jonathan Bishop of Bristol, of the City of Bristol, did consule and conspire among themselves to diminish the Regal Authority and Royal Prerogative, Power and Government of our said Lord the King in the premises, and to infringe and elude the said Order; and in prosecution and execution of the Conspiracy afore said, They the said William Archbishop of Canterbury, William Bishop of St. Asaph, Francis Bishop of Ely, John Bishop of Chichester, Thomas Bishop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Bishop of Peterburgh, and Jonathan Bishop of Bristol, on the said eighteenth day of May, in the fourth Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King afore said, with Force and Arms, &c. at Westminster afore said, in the County of Middlesex afore said, falsely, unlawfully, maliciously, seditiously, and scandalously, did frame, compose, and write, and caused to be framed, composed, and written, a certain false, feigned, malicious, pernicious, and seditious Libel in writing, concerning our said Lord the King, and his Royal Declaration and Order afore said, (under pretence of a Petition) and the same false, feigned, malicious, pernicious, and seditious Libel, by them the afore said William Archbishop of Canterbury, William Bishop of St. Asaph, Francis Bishop of Ely, John Bishop of Chichester, Thomas Bishop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Bishop of Peterburgh, and Jonathan Bishop of Bristol, with their own Hands respectively being subscribed, on the day and year and in the place last mentioned, in the presence of our said Lord the King, with Force and Arms, &c. did publish, and cause to be published; in which said false, feigned, malicious, pernicious and seditious Libel is contained, The humble Petition, &c. prout before in the Petition, to these words [reasonable construction,] in manifest contempt of our said Lord the King, and of the Laws of this Kingdom, to the evil example of all others in the like case offending, and against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c. Whereupon the said Attorney General of our said Lord the King, on behalf of our said Lord the King, prays the Advice of the Court here in the premises, and due Process of Law to be made out against the afore said William Archbishop of Canterbury, William Bishop of St. Asaph, Francis Bishop of Ely, John Bishop of Chichester, Thomas Bishop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Bishop of Peterburgh, and Jonathan Bishop of Bristol, in this behalf, to answer our said Lord the King in and concerning the premises, &c.

T. Powys.

W. Williams.

To this Information the Defendants have pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Tryal have put themselves upon their Country, and His Majesty's Attorney General likewise, which Country you are: Your Charge is to enquire whether the Defendants, or any of them, are guilty of the matter contained in this Information that hath been read unto you, or Not Guilty: If you find them, or any of them Guilty, you are to say so; and if you find them, or any of them not Guilty, you are to say so; and hear your Evidence. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes! If any one will give Evidence on behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King against the Defendants of the matters whereof they are impeached, let them come forth, and they shall be heard.

Mr. Wright. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Information exhibited by His Majesty's Attorney General against the most Reverend my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and six other Honourable and Noble Bishops in the Information mentioned. And the Information sets forth, That the King, out of his Clemency and benign intention towards his Subjects of this Kingdom, did put forth his Royal Declaration, bearing date the fourth day of April in the third year of his Reign, entituled, His Majesty's Gracious Declaration to all his Loving Subjects for Liberty of Conscience; and that afterwards, the twenty seventh of April, in the fourth year of his Reign, he published another Declaration, both which have been read to you; and for the further Manifestation and Notification of his Grace in the said Declaration, bearing date the twenty seventh of April last, His Majesty did order, That the said Declaration should be read on the twentieth and twenty seventh of the same Month in the Cities of London and Westminster, and ten miles about, and on the third and tenth of June throughout the whole Kingdom; and that the Right Reverend the Bishops should send the said Declaration to be distributed throughout their respective Diocesses, to be read accordingly. But that the said Archbishop and Bishops the eighteenth of May, in the said fourth Year of His said Majesty's Reign, having conspired and consulted among themselves to diminish the King's Power and Prerogative, did falsely, unlawfully, maliciously, and scandalously, make, compose and write, a false, scandalous, malicious and seditious Libel, under pretence of a Petition; which Libel they did publish in the presence of the said King; the Contents of which Libel you have likewise heard read. To this they have pleaded not Guilty: You, Gentlemen, are Judges of the Fact; if we prove this Fact, you are to find them Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard this Information read by the Clerk, and it has been likewise opened to you at the Bar, but before we go to our Evidence, perhaps it may not be amiss for us, that are of Council for the King, now in the beginning of this Cause, to settle the Question right before you, as well to tell you what my Lords the Bishops are not prosecuted for, as what they are; First, I am to tell you, and I believe you cannot your selves but observe, that my Lords are not prosecuted as Bishops, nor much less are they prosecuted for any point or matter of Religion, but they are prosecuted as Subjects of this Kingdom, and only for a temporal Crime, as those that have injured and affronted the King to his very Face; for it is said to be done in his own Presence: In the next place, they are not prosecuted for any Nonfeasance, or not doing or omitting to do do any thing, but as they are Actors, for censuring of His Majesty and his Government, and for giving their Opinion in Matters wholly relating to Law and Government; and I cannot omit here to take notice, that there is not any one thing which the Law is more jealous of, or does more carefully provide for the Prevention and Punishment of, than all Accusations and Arraignments of the Government; no Man is allowed to accuse even the most inferior Magistrate of any misbehaviour in his Office, unless it be in a legal course, though the Fact is true; no Man may say of a Justice of Peace to his Face, that he is unjust in his Office; no Man may come to a Judge, either by Word or Petition, you have given an unjust, or an ill Judgment, and I will not obey it, it is against the Rules and Law of the Kingdom, or the like; no Man may say of the great Men of the Nation, much less of the great Officers of the Kingdom, that they do act unreasonably or unjustly, or the like; least of all may any Man say any such thing of the King, for these matters tend to possess the People, that the Government is ill administered, and the Consequence of that is, to set them upon desiring a Reformation, and what that tends to, and will end in, we have all had a sad and too dear bought Experience; the last Age will abundantly satisfy us, whither such a thing does tend: Men are to take their proper Remedies for redress of any Grievances they lie under, and the Law has provided sufficiently for that: These things are so very well known to all Men of the Law, and indeed to all the People of England of any Understanding, that I need not, nor will not, stand any longer upon it, but come to the matter that is now before you Gentlemen, to be Tried. The Fact that we have laid, we must prove, rather to keep to the formality of a Tryal, than to pretend to inform you, or tell you what you do not know, it is publickly notorious to the whole World; but because we must go on in the regular methods of Law, we shall prove the Facts in the order they are laid in the Information. First, we take notice, that His Majesty, of his great Clemency and Goodness to his People, and out of his desire that all his Subjects might live easily under him (of which I think never Prince gave greater or more plain Evidence of his Intentions that way) the fourth of April, 1687. He did issue forth his Royal Declaration for Liberty of Conscience; this matter, without all question, was welcome to all his People that stood in need of it, and those that did not, could not but say, the thing in the nature of it was very Just, and Gracious; but presently it must be surmised, that the King was not in Earnest, and would not, nor could not make good his Promise; but to take away all Surmises, his Majesty was pleased by his Declaration of the twenty seventh of April last, not only to repeat his former Declaration, but likewise to renew his former Promises to his People, and to assure them that he still was, and yet is, of the same Opinion, that he had at first declared himself to be of; nay, we further shew you, that to the end that this thing might be known to all his People, even to the meanest Men, who it may be were not willing or able to buy the Declaration, and that the King himself might be under higher Obligations, if it were possible, than his own Word, he was desirous it should be repeated in the Churches, and read in that Sacred Place, that all his People might hear what he had promised, and given his own Sacred Word for; and he himself might be under that Solemn Tye and Obligation to keep his Word, by remembering that his Promises had, by his own Command, been Published in the time of Divine Service, in the House of God; and thereupon was the Order of Council made, that has been likewise read to you, which does direct, that it should be read in all the Churches and Chappels in the Kingdom; and you have heard, and we shall prove, what a return His Majesty has had for this Grace and Kindness of his; you'll find when we come to read that which they call a Petition, all their Thanks his Majesty had for his Favour and Goodness to his People, 'tis only hard Words, and a heavy Accusation, such as a private Person would be little able to bear, I will not aggravate the matter, but only say thus much, that his Majesty, who was always a Prince of as great Clemency as ever this Kingdom had, and who was represented for all that, as a Prince of the greatest Cruelty before his Accession to the Crown, by his Enemies, is now accused by his Friends for this Effect of his Mercy; My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, His Majesty resented this ill usage so far, that he has ordered and thought fit to have a publick Vindication of his Honour in this matter, by this Tryal; and we shall go on to our Proofs, and we do not doubt but you will do his Majesty (as you do all other Persons) Right.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we will go on to prove the Parts of this Information, and we will proceed according to the Method which Mr. Attorney has opened, and which is pursuant to the order of the Facts laid in the Information. Give us the first Declaration under the Great Seal, the Declaration of the 4th of April, 1687.

The Declaration was delivered into the Court.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read the Date of it first.

Clerk Reads. Given at our Court at Whitehall, the 4th day of April, 1687, and in the third Year of our Reign.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read the Title of it, Sir.

Clerk. It is Entituled, His Majesties Gracious Declaration to all his Loving Subjects for Liberty of Conscience.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is it under Seal? Is the Great Seal to it?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Give it down to Sir Robert Sawyer, that he may see it, for I would have every thing as clear as possible. — Sir Robert Sawyer, will you have it Read?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. No, we would save as much of the time of the Court, as may be.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then pray put in the Second Declaration of the 27th of April last.

Clerk Reads. Given at our Court at Whitehall, the 27th day of April, 1688, in the fourth Year of our Reign, and it is Entituled, His Majesties Gracious Declaration.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is that under the Great Seal too?

Clerk. Yes it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Deliver that down likewise, that they may see it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We are satisfied, you need not read it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then where is the Order of Council for the Reading of it?

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Sir John Nicholas.—There he is.

Sir John Nicholas Sworn.

L. C. J. Come Mr. Attorney, what do you ask Sir John Nicholas?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hand the Order to Sir John Nicholas.—Is that the Order of Council, Sir John?

Sir John Nicholas. The Book, Sir, is not in my Custody — there is the Register that keeps it, he has it here to produce.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Gantlett.

Mr. Gantlett Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that the Council Book?

Mr. Gantlett. Yes, this is the Council Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then turn to the Order of the fourth of May, the King's Order of Council, for the Reading the Declaration.

Mr. Gantlett. There it is, Sir.

The Book delivered into Court.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read it I pray.

Clerk Reads. At the Court at Whitehall, the fourth of May, 1688. — and so reads the Order of Council.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have one thing that is mentioned in the Information, that this Declaration was Printed; if that be denied, we will call Henry Hills, His Majesties Printer, because we would prove all our Information as it is laid.

L. C. J. You must do so, Mr Solicitor, you must prove the whole Declaration.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Cryer, call Henry Hills.

He was called, but did not presently appear.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Bridgeman — though these Declarations prove themselves, we have them here Printed — but Swear Mr. Bridgeman.

Mr. Bridgeman Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew Mr. Bridgeman the two Declarations.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We ask you, Sir, if the two Declarations were Printed.

Mr. Bridgeman. What Declarations do you mean, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You know what Declarations I mean well enough, but we'll ask you particularly; you know the Declaration that was made the 4th of April, in the third year of the King. — was it Printed?

Mr. Bridgeman. Yes, it was Printed by the King's Order.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that of the 27th of April, in the 4th Year of the King Printed?

Mr. Bridgeman. Yes, they were both Printed by the King's Order.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then the next thing in course, is the Bishops Paper.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Bridgeman, pray let me ask you one Question; Did you ever compare the Print with that under Seal?

Mr. Bridgeman. I did not compare them Sir Robert Sawyer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He does Swear they were Printed by the King's Order.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Good Mr. Solicitor give me leave to ask him a Question — Can you Swear then that they are the same?

Mr. Bridgeman. I was not asked that Question, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Come then Mr. Bridgeman, I'll ask you — Do you believe they are the same?

Vol. III.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is that an Answer to my Question?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We must ask him Questions as well as you, Sir Robert — what say you? Do you believe it to be the same?

L. C. J. You hear Mr. Solicitor's Question, answer it Mr. Bridgeman.

Mr. Bridgeman. Yes my Lord, I do believe it.

L. C. J. Well, that's enough.

Mr. Att. Gen. If there were occasion, we have them here compared, and they are the same.

Sir Robert Sawyer. With Submission, my Lord, in all these Cases, if they will prove any Fact that is laid in an Information, they must prove it by those that know it of their own Knowledge.

— Do you know it to be the same?

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's very well, Sir.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Ay, so it is, Mr. Solicitor, It is a wonderful thing, my Lord, that we cannot be permitted to ask a Question. — Do you know it to be the same; Mr. Bridgeman, I ask you again?

Mr. Bridgeman. I have not compared them I tell you, Sir Robert Sawyer.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Then that is no Proof.

L. C. J. Would you have a Man Swear above his Belief, he tells you he believes it is the same.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is that Proof of an Information?

L. C. J. Well, you'll have your time to make your Objections by and by.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then Swear Sir John Nicholas.

Sir John Nicholas. I am Sworn already.

Mr. Att. Gen. I see you have a Paper in your Hand, Sir John Nicholas, pray who had you that Paper from?

Sir John Nicholas. I will give you an Account of it, as well as I can.

Mr. Pollexfen. Before they go to another thing, my Lord, we think they have failed in their Proof of their Information, about the Printing this Declaration.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where is Mr. Hills?

Mr. Just. Allyb. They have laid, That it was printed by the King's Order; and it is such a matter, Mr. Solicitor, as you may clear, if you will, sure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is Mr. Hills, now I see him.

L. C. J. I was going to give Order that you should send to the Printing-house for him.

Mr. Just. Allyb. They may put this matter out of doubt too, if they will, on the other side; for I see they have a Copy in Print, and there's the Original, they may compare them if they please.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I am very glad to hear such a strong Objection.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We would clear the way for you, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, you put Straws in our way; we shall be able enough to clear it without your help. Swear Mr. Hills and young Mr. Graham here.

Hills and Graham sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Graham, did you compare any of these Printed Declarations with the Original?

Graham. Yes, I did compare some of them, and did make Amendments as I went along.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew one that you have compar'd with the Original.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hills is here himself, we'll ask him. Are you sworn, Sir?

Cryer. He is sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray were the King's Declarations for Liberty of Conscience printed both of them?

Hills. Ay, an't please you, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. You printed them, I think.

Hills. Yes, I did print them.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Hills, you say they were printed: Upon your Oath, after they were printed, did you examine them with the Original under Seal?

Hills. They were examined before they were printed.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Did you examine them?

Hills. I did not, here's one that did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who is that?

Hills. It is Mr. Williams here.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear him.

Williams sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you hear, Williams? Do you know that the King's Declaration for Liberty of Conscience, two of them, one of the 4th of April, and the other of the 27th of April, were printed?

Williams. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you examine them after they were printed, by the Copy they were printed by?

Williams. Yes, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where had you the Copy; who had you it from?

Williams. I had it from Mr. Hills.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Williams, did you examine them with the Original under the Great Seal?

Williams. The First Declaration I did.

Sir Robert Sawyer. The Second Declaration is the main.

Williams. The Second was Compos'd by the First.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Why, is there no more in Second Declaration than there was in the First?

Williams. Yes, there is, Sir.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Did you examine That with the Original under the Great Seal?

Williams. No, I did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can any one tell who did examine it under the Great Seal?

Mr. Finch. Pray what did you examine it by, Mr. Williams?

Williams. By a Copy that I receiv'd from Mr. Hills.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we will go on; and we desire Sir John Nicholas to give an account where he had that Paper that he has in his hand.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, it does not appear that the Copy that was printed is the true Copy of the Declaration.

Mr. Att. Gen. He says he had it from Mr. Hills.

Mr. Finch. Pray, Mr. Hills, what did you examine that Copy by, which you gave to Mr. Williams?

Hills. I had the Copy from Mr. Bridgeman.

Mr. Finch. Did you examine it with the Original under the Great Seal?

Hills. I did not examine it, I had it from Mr. Bridgeman.

Mr. Finch. What, was it under Seal?

Mr. Bridgeman. It was the Original signed by the King.

Mr. Finch. But I ask you, was it under Seal?

Mr. Bridgeman. Not under the Great Seal it was not, it was the very Declaration the King signed.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But it ought to be compared with the Original, or it is no good proof that it is the same.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir Robert Sawyer, you understand Collation better sure, you should be asham'd of such a weak Objection as this.

Williams. We never bring our Proof to the Great Seal.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But if you will have it Proof at Law, you must have it compared with the Original.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you think there is any great stress to be laid upon that? we only say it was printed.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But you have made it part of your Information, and therefore you must prove it.

L. C. J. I think there's proof enough of that; there need no such nicety.

Mr. Pollixfen. Well, my Lord, we must submit, let them go on, we won't stand upon this.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then pray let me go on. Where had you that Paper, Sir John Nicholas?

Sir John Nicholas. I had this Paper from the King's Hand.

L. C. J. Put it in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who had you it from, do you say?

Sir J. Nich. From the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. About what time had you it from the King, Sir?

Sir J. Nich. I had it twice from the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was the first time, Sir?

Sir J. Nich. The first time was in Council the 8th of this Month.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What became of it afterwards?

Sir J. Nich. The King had it from me the 12th, and the 13th I had it from the King again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray deliver it this way into the Court: We will now go on, and prove the Bishops hands to it. This is the Paper upon which we bring this Information; Gentlemen, it is all the Hand-writing of my Lord Archbishop, and signed by Him and the rest of the Bishops.

Mr. Att. Gen. I suppose my Lords the Bishops will not put us to prove it, they will own their Hands.

L. C. J. Yes, Mr. Attorney, their Council will put you to prove it; I perceive your best way is to ask nothing of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we will desire nothing of them, we will go on to our Proofs. Call Sir Thomas Exton, Sir Richard Raynes, Mr. Brooks, Mr. Recorder, and Mr. William Middleton.

Sir Thomas Exton appeared, and was sworn.

L. C. J. What do you ask Sir Thomas Exton?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray convey that Paper to Sir Thomas Exton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew that Paper to Sir Thomas Exton. — Sir Thomas, I would ask you one Question: Do you know the Hand-writing of my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury?

Sir Thomas Exton. I'll give your Lordship what account I can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, answer my Question; Do you know his Hand-writing?

Sir

Sir Tho. Exton. never saw him write five times in my life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I ask you, upon your Oath, do you believe that to be his Hand-writing?

Sir Tho. Exton. I do believe this may be of his Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe all the Body of it to be of his Hand-writing, or only part of it?

Sir Tho. Exton. I must believe it to be so, for I have seen some of his Hand-writing, and this is very like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What say you to the Name? do you believe it to be his Hand-writing?

Sir Tho. Exton. Yes, I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any of the rest of the Names that are upon that Paper?

Sir Tho. Exton. No, I do not.

L. C. Just. Do you for the Defendants ask Sir Tho. Exton any Question?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then call Sir Richard Raynes.

Sir Tho. Exton. My Lord, Sir Richard Raynes has been sick this month, and has not been at the Commons.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have no need of him. Call Mr. Brooks.

Mr. Brooks sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray shew Mr. Brooks that Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Brooks, I ask you this Question, Do you know my Lord Archbishop's Hand-writing?

Mr. Brooks. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray look upon that Paper; do you take that to be my Lord Archbishop's Hand?

Mr. Brooks. Yes, my Lord, I do believe it to be my Lord Archbishop's Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. What say you to the whole Body of the Paper?

Mr. Brooks. I do believe it to be his Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you say to his Name there?

Mr. Brooks. I do believe this Name is his Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. William Middleton.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Brooks don't go away, but look upon the Names of the Bishop of St. Asaph, and my Lord of Ely.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Bishop of St. Asaph's Hand-writing?

Mr. Brooks. I have seen my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of St. Asaph's Hand-writing, and I do believe this is his hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look you upon the Name of my Lord of Ely; do you know his Hand-writing?

Mr. Brooks. My Lord, I am not so well acquainted with my Lord of Ely's Writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But have you seen his Writing?

Mr. Brooks. Yes, I have.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that his Writing do you think?

Mr. Brooks. It is like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his Hand?

Mr. Brooks. Truly I do believe it.

Sir Geo. Treby. Did you ever see him write?

Mr. Brooks. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But he has seen his Writing.

Sir Geo. Treby. How do you know that it was his Hand-writing that you saw?

Mr. Brooks. Because he own'd it.

L. C. Just. How do you know it, do you say?

Mr. Brooks. I know it, I say, because I have seen a Letter that he writ to another person, which he afterwards own'd.

L. C. Just. What did he own, Mr. Brooks?

Vol. III.

Mr. Brooks. That he wrote a Letter to another person, which I saw.

Sir Geo. Treby. To whom, Sir?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Have you the Letter here Sir?

Mr. Brooks. No, Sir, the Letter was writ to my Lord Bishop of Oxford.

Sir Geo. Treby. Can you tell what was in that Letter?

Mr. Att. Gen. What is, that to this Question? You ask him, how he knows his Hand-writing; and, says he, I did not see him write, but I have seen a Letter of his to the Lord Bishop of Oxford.

L. C. Just. And he does say, my Lord of Ely own'd it to be his Hand that is there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, my Lord, that's a mistake, he own'd a Letter that he had writ to the Bishop of Oxford to be his Hand-writing, and by comparison of this with that (says he) I take this to be his Hand-writing.

Mr. Brooks. That is my meaning, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray speak out, and tell us what are the reasons that makes you say you believe this to be the Bishop of Ely's Writing?

Mr. Brooks. Because it resembles a Letter that I have by me of his writing to the Bishop of Oxford.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you say he own'd that Letter to be his?

Mr. Brooks. My Lord Bishop of Oxford did answer it, and I waited upon the Bishop of Ely with the Answer; and he did own it.

Sir Geo. Treby. How did he own it, Sir?

Mr. Brooks. I had some Communication with my Lord of Ely about the substance of that Letter, and therefore I apprehended he own'd it.

Mr. Just. Powell. That's a strange Inference, Mr. Solicitor, to prove a man's Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have more Evidence; but let this go as far as it can.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Certainly, my Lord, you will never suffer such a Witness as this.

L. C. Just. Brother Pemberton, I suppose they can prove it otherwise, or else this is not Evidence.

Mr. Just. Powell. So they had need, for it is a strange Inference of Mr. Solicitor, that this is a Proof of my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing.

Mr. Just. Holloway. The Bishop of Oxon was dead before any of this matter came in agitation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we will bring other Proofs.--Call Mr. Cherwood and Mr. Smith.

Mr. Cherwood and Mr. Smith sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Cherwood, we would know of you if you know my Lord Bishop of Ely's Hand-writing?

Mr. Cherwood. I never saw him write.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's not an Answer to my Question: Do you know his Hand-writing?

Mr. Cherwood. I do not certainly know it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you seen any of it?

Mr. Cherwood. I have seen my Lord of Ely's Writing, that has been said to be his.

L. C. Just. But surely you had better take a Witness that has seen him write.

Mr. Just. Powell. I think 'tis hardly possible for a man to prove his Hand, that has not seen him write.

L. C. J. I think 'tis better proof indeed, to bring some that has seen him write.

Mr. Cherwood. My Lord, 'tis a long time since I saw my Lord of Ely's Writing.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pray bring some other Proof, if you have it.

Bp. of Peterburgh. My Lord, we are here as Criminals before your Lordship, and we are prosecuted with great Zeal: I beg your Lordship that you will not be of Council against us, to direct 'em what Evidence they shall give.

L. C. Just. My Lord of Peterburgh, I hope I have not behaved my self any otherwise hitherto than as becomes me: I was saying this (and I think I said it for your Lordships advantage) That this was not sufficient Proof; and I think, if your Lordship observed what I said, it was for you, and not against you.

Bp. of Peterb. It was to direct them against us, how they should give Evidence.

Mr. Serj Pemberton. Pray, my Lord of Peterburgh, sit down, you'll have no wrong done you.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We that are of Council will take care of that; and pray, my Lord, will you please to pass it by.

L. C. Just. We are not used to be so serv'd, and I will not be used so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If your Lordship pleases to pass that by, for what your Lordship said was in favour of my Lords the Bishops, but I see they do not take it so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Chetwood, do you look upon the Name of my Lord of Ely; do you believe that to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I do believe it is.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That's very well, when he says he never saw him write.

Mr. Just. Powell. What is the reason of that belief of his, I would feign know?

Mr. Chetwood. I have formerly seen his Hand, I think it was his; but I never saw my Lord of Ely write his Hand.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Then the Question is, Whether this be Evidence?

Mr. Finch. How do you know that that which you saw formerly was my Lord of Ely's Hand?

Mr. Chetwood. I have no such Certainty, as positively to swear that that was his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will go on to other Proofs; and if we want better Evidence at the end, we will argue with them.

Mr. Chetwood. I am not certain that what I saw was my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing, because I never saw him write.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do very well to shew your good affection.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Smith, I would ask you this Question, Do you know my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing?

Mr. Smith. I have seen it often.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon the Name of my Lord of Ely in that Paper; Do you believe it to be my Lord's Hand-writing, or no?

Mr. Smith. I did not see him write it, Sir; I cannot tell whether it is or no.

L. C. Just. Did you ever see his Name?

Mr. Smith. Yes, but it was a great while ago, and here are but seven Letters, and I cannot judge by that: I was better acquainted with his Hand writing heretofore.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, answer me; Do you believe it to be his writing, or do you not?

Mr. Smith. I believe it may, for I did not see him write it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But my Question is, Do you believe it, or do you not?

Mr. Smith. I say, I was better acquainted with it heretofore than I am now.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But pray answer my Question: Do you believe that to be my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing, or do you not?

Mr. Smith. I believe it may, Sir.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Why do you believe it?

Mr. Smith. I have no other reason to believe it, but because I have seen something like it.

Mr. Just. Powell. How long ago is it since you saw him write?

Mr. Smith. I have not seen him write, so as to take notice of it, for some years: I could better judge of it when he writ his Name Turner, than now it is Ely, because there was more Letters to judge by.

Mr. Middleton sworn.

L. C. Just. Here's Mr. Middleton; what do you call him for?

Mr. Sol. Gen. To prove many of their Hands.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray shew him that Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. First, Mr. Middleton, do you know my Lord Archbishop's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. I have seen his Grace's Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his?

Mr. Middleton. It is very like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But do you believe it, or do you not?

Mr. Middleton. I do believe it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Bishop of St. Asaph's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. I never saw it as I know of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you say to my Lord of Ely's his Name is next.

Mr. Middleton. It is like his Lordship's hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it, or do you not?

Mr. Middleton. It is like it, that's all I can say.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Cannot you tell whether you believe it, or not believe it?

Mr. Middleton. I do believe it is his hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever see him write? for I would clear this matter beyond exception.

Mr. Middleton. I have seen his Lordship write, but I never stood by him so near as to see him make his Letters.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that his Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. It is like it, I believe it is his.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You did not guide his Hand I believe. Do you know my Lord of Chichester's Hand writing?

Mr. Middleton. Sir, I am acquainted with none of their Hands but with my Lord of Canterbury's and my Lord of Ely's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord of Peterburgh's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. I had my Lord of Peterburgh's Writing two years ago for some money, but I cannot say this is his.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his?

Mr. Middleton. I never took notice of it so much, as to say, I believe it to be like it, I never saw it but once.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any other of the Names there? What say you to the Bishop of Brissol's Name?

Mr. Middleton. I saw once my Lord of Bristol's Hand writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What say you to that Writing there?

Mr. Middleton. It is like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his or no?

Mr.

Mr. Middleton. Truly, that I cannot say, for I never saw it but once.

L. C. J. You never saw him write, did you?

Mr. Middleton. No, my Lord, I never did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will call Sir Thomas Pinfold is there, swear him.

Sir Thomas Pinfold sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir Thomas Pinfold, do you know my Lord Bishop of Peterburgh's hand-writing?

Sir Thomas Pinfold. Truly, not very well, I never saw but one Letter from him in my Life; shew me his Hand, and I will tell you—Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well Sir, what say you to it?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. Then upon my Oath I say, I cannot well tell upon my own Knowledge that it is his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ask you, do you believe it to be his Hand?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. Sir, upon the Oath that I have taken I will answer you, that upon this account, that I have heard there was a Paper delivered by my Lords the Bishops to the King, and this Paper that you offer me, I suppose to be the same, upon that Score I do believe it, but upon any other Score I cannot tell what to say.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ask you upon your Oath, Sir, do you believe it is his Hand writing or no?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. Sir, I have answered you already, that upon my own Knowledge I cannot say it is his Hand writing; but because I have heard of such a Paper, I do believe it may be his.

L. C. J. Did you ever see my Lord Bishop write?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. I have been in his Chamber several times when he has been writing, but I had more Manners than to look upon what he writ.

L. C. J. Did you never see him write his Name?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. I do not know that I ever saw him write his Name, but I have seen him writing I say, and so my Lord Bishop may have seen me writing, but I believe he does not know my Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have seen him write you say.

Sir Tho. Pinfold. I tell you, Mr. Solicitor, I have been in his Chamber when he has been writing, but I had more Manners than to look over him.

Mr. J. Powell. Then you did never see any of that writing?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. I cannot say I did, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did you never see any of his writing but that Letter you speak of?

Sir Tho. Pinfold. No, not that I remember.

Mr. J. Powell. Mr. Solicitor, you must call other Witnesses, for this does not prove any thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will go on——Swear

Mr. Clavel.

Mr. Clavel sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Bishop of Peterburgh's Hand writing or no?

Mr. Clavel. I have seen it many times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know it when you see it?

Mr. Clavel. I believe I do, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray look upon that Paper, and upon your Oath tell us, do you believe that Name to be his writing or no?

Mr. Clavel. I do believe it is, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray look upon the rest of the Hands there, do you know any of the other Names?

Mr. Clavel. No, I do not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you ever seen any of their Writing?

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is probable I may have seen some, but do not now remember it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think you are a Bookseller, Mr. Clavel?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, I am so, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I suppose you have had some Dealings with them in the way of your Trade. Did you never see any of their Writing?

Mr. Clavel. I have seen the Names of some of them, but it is so long since that I cannot remember.

L. C. J. Did you ever see my Lord of Peterborough Write?

Mr. Clavel. I cannot tell whether I ever saw him Write his Name or no; but I have had several Letters from my Lord of Peterborough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that his Hand-writing?

Mr. Clavel. I cannot say it is, I believe it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have had Letters from him you say?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, and it seems to be like his Hand.

Mr. Pollixfen. But you never saw him Write his Hand you say?

Mr. Clavel. I cannot say I ever did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. These Letters that you have received from my Lord of Peterborough, did he own them? Do you think they were Counterfeit, or of his own Hand-writing?

Mr. Clavel. I suppose he has owned them, Sir.

Mr. J. Powell. But you must answer directly, Sir, did he own them?

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did those Letters concern? were they about Books, or what?

Mr. Clavel. They were sometimes about one business, sometimes about another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the subject matter of any of these Letters about Money; and was it paid you? Did you receive, or did you give any account of it?

Mr. Clavel. They were about several Businesses.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Clavel, you must give us as particular account as you can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, upon those Letters were the things done that those Letters required?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, they were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you do your part?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now I would ask you, Do you believe that Name of my Lord Bishop of Peterborough to be the Hand-writing of my Lord Bishop?

Mr. Clavel. I believe it is.

Mr. J. Powell. Do you know that those Letters that you say you received from my Lord, were of my Lords own Hand-writing, Do you Swear that?

Mr. Clavel. My Lord, I cannot Swear that.

Mr. Finch. Do you know whether the Letters that you received, as you say, were written by my Lord himself, or by his Secretary?

Mr.

Mr. Clavel. I have received Letters from him, and his Secretary too.

Sir G. Treby. But were you present with him when he writ any Letters with his own Hand?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do not mean a Letter to your self sure, Sir George?

Sir G. Treby. No, Sir, I say any Letters.

Mr. Clavel. I have been present with my Lord often, but I cannot say I have seen my Lord write.

L. C. J. He has here told you, he has had several Letters of my Lords own Hand, and from his Secretary too.

Mr. J. Powel. He has said it, but you see he says he never saw him write.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have given Evidence against my Lord Arch-bishop, Lord Bishop of Ely, St. Asaph, Peterborough, and Bristol.

Mr. J. Powel. Certainly Mr. Solicitor you mistake — But go on —

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have given Evidence I say against them, Sir, but whether it be sufficient Evidence, we shall Argue by and by. — Call Mr. Hooper and Mr. Chetwood again.

Mr. Chetwood appeared.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the Hand-writing of my Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells?

Mr. Chetwood. I have seen it Twice or Thrice, but it is a considerable time since I did see it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe that is his Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I never saw him write his Name in my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray look upon the Name, and tell us what you believe of it?

Mr. Chetwood. I believe it may, but I do not certainly know it to be his Hand, I rather believe it is my Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells his Hand, than I believe that other to be my Lord of Peterboroughs.

Sir G. Treby. Do you believe that to be my Lord of Peterborough's Hand or no?

Mr. Chetwood. I say, I rather believe that this is the Bishop of Bath and Wells his Writing, than that which is above it or below it, to be their Writing; but truly I do not distinctly know my Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Hooper.

L. C. J. You are very lame in this matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Witnesses are unwilling, and we must find out the Truth as well as we can.

Mr. Hooper did not appear.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. James and Mr. Powell.

Mr. James appeared and was Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Bishop of Bristol's Writing, Mr. James?

Mr. James. Yes, I believe I do, but I am not so certain, because my Lord writes several times several Hands.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew him the Paper: Is that my Lord of Bristol's Hand?

Mr. James. I cannot say it is or no.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you believe?

Mr. James. It looks like his Hand, and that's all I can say.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But pray hearken, and Answer to what I ask you; you are prepared for one Question it may be, and I shall ask you another: Upon your Oath, do you believe it to be the Hand-writing of my Lord of Bristol?

Mr. James. Upon my Oath, I can only say it looks like it, that's all.

L. C. J. Did you ever see him write?

Mr. James. Yes, my Lord, I have seen his Hand-writing several times, and it is like his Hand-writing, that is all I can say.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir, remember you are upon your Oath, and answer my Question.

Mr. James. Upon my Oath, I know no more than that, Sir William Williams.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ask you Sir, whether you believe it to be his Hand or not?

Mr. James. My Lord, it looks like his Hand, and it may be his Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you do think and believe one way or other: What do you believe?

Mr. James. It may be his Hand, for what I know, and it may not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It may be your Hand.

Mr. James. No, Sir, it cannot be mine, I am sure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you believe?

Mr. James. I believe it may be his Hand, or it may not be his Hand, that is all I can say.

L. C. J. Come, Sir, you must Answer fairly, Do you believe it to be his Hand, or do you not?

Mr. James. Yes, I do believe it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are very hard to believe methinks.

Mr. James. No, I am not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do very well now, Mr. James; when you do well, we'll commend you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Nathaniel Powell.

Mr. Powell was Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, let's know what's your Name?

Mr. Powell. My Name is Nathaniel Powell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray do you know the Hand-writing of my Lord Bishop of Chichester?

Mr. Powell. I have not seen the Paper, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know his Hand writing?

Mr. Powell. Yes, I believe I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look upon that Name of his.

Mr. Powell. I did not see my Lord write that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who says you did: no Body asks that of you; how you Answer! Pray Sir, remember your Oath, and Answer seriously, Do you believe it to be his Writing or no?

Mr. Powell. I believe it is like my Lords Hand-writing, but I never did see him write it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No Body says you did.

Mr. Powell. Therefore I cannot Swear positively it is his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We do not ask that neither.

Mr. Powell. I cannot tell whether it be his Hand or no.

L. C. J. Sir, you must Answer the Question directly, and seriously: Do you believe it, or do you not believe it?

Mr. Powell. I cannot tell what to believe in the Case.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then I ask you another Question, upon your Oath, Do you believe it is not his Hand?

Mr. Powell. I cannot say that neither.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Once again, I ask you, upon your Oath, Do you believe it to be his Hand? I ask you plainly, and let Mankind Judge of you.

Mr. Powell. I tell you, Sir, I cannot tell what to believe.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, if these things be endured, there will be an end of all Testimony, if Witnesses do not answer fairly to the Questions that are asked them.

Mr. J. Powell. Truly to me, for a Man to Swear his Belief in such a matter, is an extraordinary thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He is obliged to answer Questions, when they are fairly put to him.

Mr. Pollixfen. I think that is a hard Question, not to be Answered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Make your Exceptions to the Evidence if you please.

L. C. J. First, he says, He knows his Hand; then he says, He has seen him write; and then he says, He did not see him write this; but he shuffles, he won't answer whether he believes it or not.

Mr. Pollixfen. The Question is, Whether belief in any case be Evidence?

Mr. Sol. Gen. If they have a mind to a Bill of Exceptions upon that point, let them Seal their Bill, and we'll Argue it with them when they will; in the mean time, we'll go on, and that which we now pray, my Lord, is, That this Paper may be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have given sufficient Evidence sure to have it Read, therefore we desire it may be Read.

Mr. Serj. Lewinz. My Lord, before this Paper be Read, we hope you will let us be heard to it: we think that what they desire (to have this Paper Read) ought not to be: for what is all the proof that they have given of this Paper? they have a proof by Comparison of Hands, which in a Criminal Case ought not to be received: and besides, my Lord, what is that Comparison of Hands, that they have offered? Some persons come here and say, they cannot tell whether it be their Hands, they believe it may or may not, for ought they know; How shall we Convict any Man upon such a Testimony as this? can we have our Remedy against him for Perjury, for saying, He believes it to be our Hand? therefore here is not any Evidence to Charge us. For first, It is only a Comparison of Hands; And secondly, That Comparison is proved in such an uncertain manner: Some of them tell you; They do not know what to believe; another tells you, I believe 'tis rather such a Lord's Hand, than the others are such a Lord's Hands, I believe 'tis rather his Hand than that above it, or that below it; what sort of proof is all this? Therefore we pray it may not be read, till they prove it better.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, spare me a word or two in this matter for Evidence sake, there is a great deal of reason we should take Exceptions to the Evidence that has been given: for truly I think I never heard such a sort of Evidence given before; It is a Case of as great Concernment as ever was in Westminster-Hall; and for them to come to prove Hands only by those that saw Letters, but never saw the persons Write; this I hope will not amount to so much as a Comparison of Hands. Your Lordship knows, that in every petty Cause, where it depends upon the Comparison of Hands, they use to bring some of the Parties Hand-writing, which may be Sworn to, to be the Parties own Hand, and then it is to be compared in Court with what is endeavoured to be proved, and upon comparing them together in Court, the Jury may look upon it, and see if it be right; and never was there any such a thing as this admitted in any poor petty Cause, that is but of the value of Forty Shillings. And therefore as to this Evidence, First, We say Comparison of Hands ought not to be given at all in the Cases of Criminals; And I believe it was never heard of that it should. In the next place, if it be admitted to be Evidence, yet it is not such an Evidence, as that by Comparison of Hands the Jury can take notice of it; for in such manner of proofs by Comparison of Hands, the usage is, That the Witness is first asked, concerning the Writing he produces, Did you see this Writ by the Defendant, whose Hand they would prove? If he answers yes, I did, then should the Jury upon Comparison of what the Witness swears to, with the Paper that is to be proved judge whether those Hands be so like as to induce them to believe, that the same person Writ both; and not that the Witness should say, I had a Letter from such a person, and that is like the Hand of that Letter, therefore I believe it to be his Hand: My Lord, I hope this shall never be admitted for Evidence in this Court.

L. C. J. I do take it, that the Witness himself is Judge of the Comparison; for if he does know the Parties Hand, and a Paper be offered him to prove the Parties Hand, he is to compare it in his own mind.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. It never was admitted to be so, that I know of; my Lord, or ever Read of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You may remember several Cases about that, particularly Sidney's Case.

Mr. Pollixfen. Pray, my Lord hear me a little as to that: it is a Point of very great moment, whether in the Case of a Misdemeanour either in an Indictment or Information, it be good Evidence to offer Comparison of Hands; and that this Court did adjudge quite contrary upon an Indictment of Forgery against my Lady Carr, appears in Sydesin's Reports; they went to prove her Letters Written by her to Cox, the Court rejected it, and gave their judgement here, That it was no Evidence; and that for this Reason, Because of the evil consequences of it. For said they, It is an easie matter for any Man's Hand to be Counterfeited; that they sure will agree, for frequent daily experience shews how easily that may be done: is it not easie then to cut any Man down in the World, by proving it like his Hand? and proving that likeness by comparing it with something that he hath formerly seen? this strikes mighty deep; the honestest Man in the World and the most Innocent may be destroyed, and yet no fault to be found in the Jury or in the Judges; if the Law were so, it would be an unreasonable Law. Next, my Lord, for the Case of Sidney, that was a Case of Treason. Now in the Case of Treason there is always other Evidence brought; and this Evidence comes in but as a Collateral Evidence, to strengthen the other; but in this Case it is the single Evidence, for ought that appears, for there is nothing more (for ought I can see) in the Case, but whether this were their Hands, and proved only by what another believes: Now shall any be condemned by anothers belief without proof? surely, my Lord, that was never Evidence yet to Convict any one; so that their proof fails in both Points; For first, it ought to be considered whether Comparison of Hands be Evidence in a Case of Misdemeanour; And next if it be Evidence; whether you will take it, that the belief of a Man that brings nothing to compare with it, or never saw the Party Write, but has received Letters, and says, This is like it, and therefore he believes it to be his Hand, be good Evidence as a Comparison of Hands.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. My Lord, they are pleased to mention —

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Serj. you have been heard already, and you are not to reply upon us; or if you would, we must be heard first.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. I would only speak to that Case of Sidney: my Lord, that Case differs from this to Carlo, the Writing was found in his possession, in his Study; there was the proof that nailed him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You shall see how we'll apply it by and by.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, favour me a word in this matter: that there is stronger and weaker Evidence no Man doubts; but that which these Gentlemen say, that in this Case there is no Evidence, must needs be a mistake: if they mean, that it is not so strong an Evidence as is possible to be given, I agree with them, it is not: For if we had brought three or four Men that had seen them Write this very Paper, and put their Names to it, that had been a stronger Evidence than this, that we have given; but whether we do not give such a sort of Evidence as may induce the Jury to believe, that this is their Paper, and their Hands to it, we submit: they say, This is such a method as never was taken; but I admire that that should be said by Men of their Experience and Knowledge in the Law; for is there any thing more usual, or any other course taken for the proof of Hands, than for a Witness to say, He knows the Hand of the Party very well, for he has often seen his Hand-writing, or received Letters from him? and if you shew him the thing that you would prove to be his Hand, and he says, I do believe this to be his Hand, for this reason, because I have had other things of his Writing: Certainly in the Experience of any Man that has practised, this is an Evidence that is given every day, and allowed for Evidence. For the Case of Mr. Sidney, which your Lordship has heard mentioned, it is certainly very apposite to this purpose; it is insisted upon and pretended, That that was Evidence, because it was found in his Study: but without all doubt, that would not be the reason: for may not a Book of another Man's Writing be found in my Study? and he insisted upon it in his own Defence: but the Answer was, That it should be left as the Question, Whether the Jury would believe it upon the Evidence that was given, of its being his own Hand-writing: And so in this Case, though it be not so strong Evidence, as if we had brought those that had seen them Write it; yet Evidence it is, and whether it be sufficient to satisfy the Jury, may be a Question; but no Question, it is good Evidence in Law.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is a wonderful thing, they say, That such Evidence should be offered: but truly, my Lord, it is a much stranger thing to hear Mr. Serj. Pemberton say, It was never done before; and then to make that Remark to your Lordship upon the Case of Sidney, which I'll put to your Lordship and the Court as a Case, and let him contradict me if he can; and then we shall see how far it goes. Sidney was indicted for High Treason; and the Treason insisted upon was,

A Writing supposed to be his, it being found in his Study; the Question was, Whether it was his Hand-writing or no? there was no positive Evidence that it was his Hand-writing; there was no Evidence produc'd, that prov'd it to be his Hand-writing; for there was no one that Swore, that they saw him Write it; there was nothing proved, but the similitude of Hands. Ay, but says Mr. Serj. Pemberton, It was found in his Study: will Mr. Serj. Pemberton be content, that all the Libels that are found in his Study, shall, for that reason, be adjudged to be Libels, to be his Hand-writing, and he to be a Libeller for them? I think he will make a severe Declamation against that, and he would have very good reason for it: Certainly that which was Evidence in one Man's Case, will be Evidence in another. God forbid there should be any such distinction in Law; and therefore I conclude that this is good Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. The Court went upon this, That it was found in his Study, and compared with Letters and Bills of Exchange produced in Court; which were Sworn to be of his Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I was by all the time; for I was ordered to attend him in the Tower; and therefore I can tell what passed as well as any Body. My Lord, they proved no more as to that Libel, but only by Comparison of Hands; they had no other proof in that Case, but by comparing the Hand-writing; and that was insisted upon to be a mighty fallible thing: That which they would have for us to compare, Paper with Paper, it is true, would make the proof somewhat stronger, if we could, in such a Case as this, be able to produce such Evidence: but I appeal to your Lordship, and shall leave it to the Jury, to consider which is better Evidence; these Men, that have been produced, that have been Conversant with these Lords, and acquainted with their Hand-writing, and who (as your Lordship sees) are not willing Men to give Evidence, they avoid it as much as they can; and they Swear it all to be the Hand-writing of the Archbishop of Canterbury, as they believe; which is as far as any Man can Swear. One says the whole Body of the Paper is my Lord of Canterbury's Hand, and he knows it very well; so that we are not upon a single Name, but a whole Paper that contains many Lines; and this is as much as can be proved by any one, that did not see the thing Written. Then, my Lord, for the rest of the Company, the Evidence is not so strong against every one of them, as it is against my Lord Archbishop; but is strong enough certainly to Convict them of what we accuse them of: and pray, my Lord, what was the Objection in Sidney's Case, but what has been mentioned here? That any Man's Hand might be Counterfeited. I remember in that Case, there was one Mr. Wharton, a young Gentleman, then in the Court, that undertook to the Court, That he would Counterfeit that Hand presently; and he that was to Swear the Comparison, should not know, which was the one, and which was the other; which certainly was a stronger Case than this. And I see some of the Gentlemen that are now standing at the Bar, who pressed this matter very hard against Mr. Sidney, and Mr. Sidney lost his Life upon that Comparison of Hands; though Mr. Wharton did Testifie how easie a matter it was to have a Man's Hand Counterfeited; and we all know was a Man of Value and Quality; so there is a President for Mr. Serj. Pemberton, that never heard of this Law before. They say the proving of Similitude of Hands is no Evidence, unless you prove the actual Writing; what a Condition then will England be in, when Witnesses are dead? Is it not the most common Practice that can be, to produce Witnesses to prove such Men are dead, whose Names are set as Witnesses to Deeds; and they swear, They believe it to be the Hand writing of those Witnesses? Can there be any greater Evidence of such a Case, unless it be the Confession of the Party himself? My Lord, we are now only upon reading this Paper. We have been heard, and they have been heard; now we pray the Paper may be read.

Mr. Recorder. We pray it may be read.

Mr. Serj. Lewin. If your Lordship please—

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are not to be replied upon, Mr. Serjeant.

L. C. J. You have spoke Brother Lewin, and you have spoke Brother Pemberton, and I would willingly hear you what you have to say; but we must not have vying and revying, for then we shall have no end.

Mr. Serj. Lewin. I would offer your Lordship some new matter which has not been touched upon yet; why it is not to be read.

L. C. J. What's that Brother?

Mr. Serj. Lewin. All the proof that has been given whatsoever it amounts to, has been only of its being Written, but no proof has been given of its being Written in the County of Middlesex, where the Information is laid, and the matter is local.

Mr. Sol. Gen. First read it, and then make your Objection.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, as to the Evidence that has been given, I would only put your Lordship in mind of one Case; and that was the Case of Sir Samuel Barnardiston: and the great Evidence there, was the proof of its being his Hand writing; and that being proved, was sufficient to convict him of a Libel: for they could not believe Sir Samuel Barnardiston was guilty of making Libels, unless they were proved to be his Hand writing.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. He owned them to be his Hand writing.

L. C. J. If you do expect my Opinion in it, whether this be good Evidence, and whether this Paper be proved or no; I am ready to give it.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I desire to be heard before the Opinion of the Court be given.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If there be not proof enough to induce the Jury to believe this is their Paper; yet sure there is enough to read it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we have not been heard to this yet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why, is this fit to be suffered?

L. C. J. Mr. Solicitor I am always willing to hear Mr. Finch.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I hope your Lordship, and the Court, are not to be Complimented into an unusual thing.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. It is not a Complement, but Right and Justice.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Certainly it is Right and Justice, that there should be some Limits put to Men's speaking, that we may know when to have an end.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Solicitor does mistake the Right my Lord, for we desire to be heard to this Point; as not having spoke to it yet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, let me make my Objection to your being heard: for I believe you and I have been chid several times, for speaking over and over the same thing.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This that we now offer, is not to the same Point, that we have spoken to already.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are now speaking to the reading of the Paper, and you have spoken to it already.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. If the Court will please to hear us, we have that to offer against the reading of the Paper, which has not been offered yet.

L. C. J. Sir Rob. Sawyer, I take it, it is in the Breast of the Court to hear when they will, and as much as they will, and whom they will; for if three or four have been heard of a side to speak what they will, the Court may very well depend upon the Learning of those three or four, that they say what can be said upon the Point, and that's enough; but if six or seven desire to be heard over and over to the same thing, certainly the Court may stop at three or four, if they will.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This is a new Objection that none of us have been heard to yet.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, that which I offer is not contrary to the Rules of Law, nor contrary to the Practice of the Court; nor was I going any way to invade that Privilege which Mr. Solicitor claims of making Objections, and not receiving an Answer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What a fine Declamation you have now made! I never claimed any such right; but I oppose your being heard over and over to the same thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let's come to some issue in this matter.

L. C. J. I will hear you; but I would not have you introduce it with a Reflection upon the King's Council.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, if you impose that upon him, you stop his Mouth; for some Men cannot speak without Reflection.

L. C. J. On the other side, pray Mr. Solicitor, give us leave to hear fairly what they have to say; for I perceive he cannot offer to speak, but you presently stop his Mouth.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, that which I was going to say, is another matter than any thing that has been yet offered: We say, that this Paper ought not to be read; for that they are obliged by Law to prove their Information; and consequently, having laid a particular place where the thing was done, in the Information, they ought to prove that this was done in that place. The Evidence that they have given, is of my Lords the Bishops writing this Paper; and they have laid it to be done in Middlesex: and this, with Submission to your Lordship, is local; and they must prove it to be written in Middlesex, where they have laid it, or else they fail in their Proof. This is another Objection, which as yet hath not been spoken to: That if there be a Proof of their Hand writing, yet there is no Proof where that Hand was written; and therefore they are not yet got so far, as to have it read against my Lords.

Mr. Att. Gen. For that Point, my Lord, we say, This would have been as properly said after the Paper had been read, when they come to make Objections against our Proof, by way of Defence: and with Submission, it had been more proper then, than it is now: For what are we now doing? My Lord, we are proving that such a Paper was subscribed by my Lords the Bishops; and Sir John Nicholas gives you an account, that he had it from His Majesty at the Council: and that certainly is in the County of Middlesex; and it will concern you to prove that it was written elsewhere.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. That's very well Mr. Attorney; sure you do not think as you speak.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is a Paper composed and written by you, that Sir John Nicholas says he had from His Majesty: how he came by it, I suppose you will tell us by and by: this is your Hand writing, that I think we have proved sufficiently; this is found in the County of Middlesex: and you come and tell us, that we must prove that it was written in the County of Middlesex; and it is taken to be written where it was found, unless you prove the contrary.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. That's pretty Doctrine indeed, and very new.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, here's an Objection made too timely: we are now upon reading of this Paper: and the Question is, Whether it shall be read or not be read. Surely we have given Evidence enough to induce the Court to read it: and it is another Question, that will come time enough afterwards; where it was written?

L. C. J. Truly, I do not think it was proper for you to stand upon the Place where it was written as yet.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. When we are upon an Information of a Fact in Middlesex, will you hear them give Evidence of a Fact in Yorkshire?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are not to be driven by these Gentlemen; we are to be directed by the Court.

L. C. J. I think truly it is yet too early to make this Objection.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Surely, my Lord, this is our time to oppose the reading of it, as not proved.

Mr. J. Powell. Mr. Solicitor, I think you have not sufficiently proved this Paper to be subscribed by my Lords the Bishops.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Not to read it, Sir?

Mr. J. Powell. No, not to read it, it is too slender a Proof for such a Case: I grant you, in Civil Actions a slender proof is sufficient, to make out a Man's Hand, by a Letter to a Tradesman, or a Correspondent, or the like; but in criminal Causes (such as this) if such a Proof be allowed, where is the safety of your Life or any Man's Life here.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We tell you a Case where it was allowed; and that is Mr. Sidney's Case; a Case of Treason, and printed by Authority: We tell you nothing, but what was done t'other day.

L. C. J. I tell you what I say to it; I think truly there is proof enough to have it read: and I am not ashamed nor afraid to say it; for I know I speak with the Law: say what you will of criminal Cases, and the danger of Peoples Lives; there were more danger to the Government, if such proof were not allowed to be good.

Mr. J. Powell. I think there is no danger to the Government at all, in requiring good proof against Offenders.

L. C. J. Here's my Lord Archbishop and the Bishop of St. Asaph and my Lord of Ely, their Hands are proved; it is proved to be my Lord Archbishop's writing by Mr. Brookes, and he proves my Lord of Ely's Hand by Comparison, and so my Lord of St. Asaph's. Now Brother Pemberton, there's an answer to your Objection; it being proved that it is all my Lord Archbishop's Hand: then they come and say, we'll prove the Hands of the others by Comparison: and for that they bring you Witnesses that say, They have received Letters from them, and seen their Hand writing several times: and comparing what they have seen with this very Paper; says the Witness, I do believe it to be his Hand. Can there be a greater Evidence or a fuller?

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Admit it be a full Evidence again my Lord Archbishop: What's that to the rest? There's no Evidence against them.

Mr. J. Allybone. Brother Pemberton, as to the Objection you make of comparing of Hands; it is an Objection indeed, I do agree: but then consider the inconvenience which you and Mr. Pollifsen do so much insist upon: If a Man should be accused by Comparison of Hands, Where is he? He is in a lamentable Case; for his Hand may be so Counterfeited, that he himself may not be able to distinguish it. But then you do not consider where you are on the other side: that may be an Objection in matters of Fact, that will have very little weight, if compared and set altogether. For on the other side, where shall the Government be, if I will make Libels, and traduce the Government with Prudence and Discretion, and all the secrecy imaginable? I'll write my Libel by my self, prove it as you can; that's a fatal blot to the Government; and therefore the Case is not the same; nor is your Doctrine to pass for current here; because every Case depends upon its own Fact. If I take upon me to swear I know your Hand, the Inducements are to my self, how I came to know it, so as to swear it: Knowledge depends on Circumstances; I swear that I know you, but yet I may be under a mistake, for I can have my knowledge of you no other way but from the visibility of you, and another Man may be so like you, that there is a possibility of my being mistaken; but certainly, that is Evidence, good Evidence: Now here are several Gentlemen that swear as to my Lord Archbishop's Hand-writing; I do agree, as to some of the others, that the Evidence is not so strong; for what that Man said, that he did believe it was rather such a Lord's Hand, than that which went before, or that which came after, it is of no weight at all, and so some of the others; but it is positively proved against my Lord Archbishop and one or two more; so that that's enough to induce the reading of this writing.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Good my Lord, let me give my opinion.

L. C. Just. Ay, with all my heart, Brother.

Mr. Just. Holloway. My Lord, I think as this Case is, there ought to be a more strong proof, for certainly the proof ought to be stronger and more certain in Criminal matters than in Civil matters; in Civil matters, we do go upon slight proof, such as the comparison of Hands, for proving a Dead, or a Witnesses Name, and a very small proof will induce us to read it; but in Criminal matters we ought to be more strict, and require positive and substantial proof, that is fitting for us to have in such a Case, and without better proof, I think it ought not to be read.

L. C. J.

L. C. Just. You must go on to some other proof, Mr. Solicitor, for the Court is divided in their Opinions about this proof.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we will come to the Confessions of my Lords the Bishops, and I hope that will be believed by all Mankind.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, we did forbear that Evidence, and would not have proceeded this way, if we had had fair play on the other side.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Attorney, give us leave to defend our Clients all the ways we can; I think we do nothing but what is fair; the Court you see is divided, therefore we did not without reason insist upon it.

L. C. Just. You must go on as you can, for they will put you upon it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mr. Blathwayt.

Mr. Blathwayt Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray hand the writing to him.

The writing shown to him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Have you seen that Writing formerly Sir?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did you hear my Lord Arch-Bishop say about that Paper?

Mr. Att. Gen. And the rest of my Lords the Bishops.

Mr. Sol. Gen. First we'll ask as to my Lord Arch-Bishop; did he own it to be his Hand writing?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I believe this to be the Paper that my Lord Arch-bishop did own to be subscribed by him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When was it owned by him?

Mr. Blathwayt. On the Council day, the Eighth of this Month.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where was it owned, because we would obviate that Objection of the County?

Mr. Blathwayt. It was at the Council Table at Whitehall.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What say you to the Bishop of St. Asaph? Did he own it?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes; All my Lords the Bishops did own it?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Name them particularly; what say you of the Bishop of Ely?

Mr. Blathwayt. In the same manner, my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Bishop of Chichester?

Mr. Blathwayt. In the same manner.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Bishop of Bath and Wells?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Bishop of Peterborough?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And the Bishop of Bristol?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. So; We have proved they all owned it.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Could not this have been done at first, and saved all this trouble?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Have you done with Mr. Blathwayt, Mr. Attorney, that we may ask him some questions?

Mr. Att. Gen. Ask him what you will.

Mr. Ser. Pemb. Pray, Mr. Blathwayt, upon what occasion did they own it, you are sworn to tell the whole truth; pray tell all your Knowledge, and the whole Confession that they made.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I am called here by a Subpena to answer on behalf of the King; my Lord, I am ready to do my duty, and I beg of your Lordship that you would please to tell me what is my duty; for whatsoever I shall answer, I shall speak the truth in.

Vol. III:

Mr. Ser. Pemb. There is nothing desired, but that you would speak the truth.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord I am easily guided by your Lordship what I ought to answer to.

L. C. Just. What is it you ask him, Brother Pemberton?

Mr. S. Pemb. We desire Mr. Blathwayt to tell the whole discourse that passed at the Council, when he says my Lords the Bishops owned this Paper.

Mr. Soll. Gen. That's a very pretty thing indeed.

L. C. Just. Look you, Mr. Blathwayt, you must answer them what they ask you, unless it be an insnaring Question, and that the Court will take care of.

Mr. Blathwayt. If your Lordship please to ask me any Question, I shall readily answer it.

L. C. Just. You must answer them.

Mr. S. Pemb. We ask you upon what occasion they came to own their Hands? What discourse was made to them, and what they answered?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I beg your Lordship's directions.

L. C. Just. Come, tell it, Sir.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, the occasion was this: This Paper was read in Council, and I had the honour to read it before the King, and it having been read before his Grace the Arch-Bishop, and my Lords the Bishops, they were asked whether they did own that Paper, and my Lord, they did own it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Blathwayt, was that the first time that my Lords the Bishops came in?

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I was not asked that Question.

L. C. Just. What would you have, Sir Robert Sawyer?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We would have an account what passed at the Council.

L. C. Just. Would you have all the Discourse betwixt the Council and my Lords the Bishops?

Mr. Ser. Pemb. All that relates to their Accusation, my Lord, their whole Confession, and what was said to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you think, Mr. Serjeant, that when we call a Witness, you are at liberty to examine him to every impertinent thing?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we desire they may only ask reasonable and proper Questions.

Mr. S. Pemb. Mr. Solicitor he is sworn to answer and tell the whole truth, and that's all we ask of him.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Sir, I will ask you a plain Question upon your Oath, did not my Lord Arch Bishop, and the rest of my Lords the Bishops, at first refuse to own it; or to answer whether it were their Hands or not?

Mr. Soll. Gen. That is not a fair Question Sir Robert Sawyer; 'tis a leading Question.

Mr. Ser. Pemb. Then I ask you in short, what did they refuse? I am sure that is a fair Question, for God forbid that any should hinder the King's Evidence from telling truth.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. And God forbid that half Evidence should condemn any man.

L. C. Just. God forbid the Truth should be concealed any way.

Mr. Ser. Pemb. Pray, Sir, when they were first asked, whether that was their Hands or not, what answer did they give?

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I have beg'd the favour of my Lords the Judges to tell me what I am to answer, and what Questions are proper for me to answer to.

F f f f f z

L. C. J. You must answer any Questions that are not enflaming Questions.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Blathwayt, you are upon your Oath to testify the Truth.

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I am not acquainted with the Methods of Law, I desire my Lords the Judges would instruct me.

Mr. Just. Allybone. Answer to the Question that they ask you.

L. C. J. We observe what they ask you; we'll take care that they ask you nothing but what they should.

Mr. Blathwayt. I desire the Question may be repeated.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. When they were first asked if it were their Hands, what answer did they give the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. His Grace the Archbishop, and my Lords the Bishops, at first did not immediately answer whether the Paper were theirs or no.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. What did they say?

Mr. Blathwayt. They said they did humbly hope, if they were put to answer, no advantage should be taken against them.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. What did they say farther at that time concerning His Majesties Pleasure?

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's a leading Question, Mr. Serj. Pemberton; you cannot leave your way of leading Witnesses.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. It is a very strange thing; if we ask a Question that's general, that's excepted to; if we ask any Question in particular, then they find fault with us, that it is a leading Question; so that we can never ask a Question that will please them. Pray Mr. Blathwayt, what did they say concerning the King's Pleasure, whether they would answer if the King commanded them?

Mr. S. Trinder. How can it be material what they said?

L. C. J. It is material that it should be asked, and that it should be answered.

Mr. S. Levins. You are to tell the whole Truth, Sir. Pray tell us what did my Lords the Bishops say about submitting to the King's Pleasure?

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is that to the purpose?

Mr. Pollifsen. Mr. Solicitor, his Oath is to tell the Truth, and the whole Truth, and therefore he must answer my Question.

Mr. S. Pemb. You are mighty loth Mr. Solicitor, to let us hear the Truth; I would not willingly lead him in any thing, and I cannot see that this is any leading Question, unless his Oath be against Law, which says he is to tell the whole Truth.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I do beg your Lordship's favour of a Word in this thing: It is certain, if they ask any thing that shall take off the Evidence that was first given, that it is not true, I cannot oppose it; but if they ask Questions only to enflame, and to possess people with foolish Notions, and strange Conceits, that is not to the Fact that we are now trying—

Sir Rob. Sawyer. 'Tis only to have the Truth out that we do it.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. There is no body here that will be enflamed, Mr. Attorney; I have asked a fair Question, the Court has ruled it so.

Mr. Blathwayt. I shall readily answer any Question that the Court thinks fit.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Sir, by the Oath you have taken you are to tell the whole Truth.

L. C. J. Is he to tell you all that was done at the Council Board that Day?

Mr. Serj. Pemb. No, my Lord; only what passed there about my Lords the Bishops Confession, the whole of that matter.

Mr. Blathwayt. There has been so much said between the asking of the Question and this time, that I desire it may be repeated, that I may know what to answer to.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. I ask you in short, Sir, What did my Lords the Bishops say at the time of their appearing in Council concerning the King's Pleasure, whether they should answer or not?

Mr. Blathwayt. The first time my Lords the Bishops came into the Council, they were asked the Question whether they did own that Paper; they did immediately answer, They humbly hoped, as they stood there Criminals, His Majesty would not take advantage against them, but however they would obey His Majesties Command.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Were they commanded to withdraw?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, thereupon they were commanded to withdraw, which they did.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. When they came in again what Questions were asked them?

Mr. Blathwayt. They came in several times, more than twice, I have reason to remark this, that they did so; do you mean the second time, Sir?

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Blathwayt. The second time they seemed unwilling to own the Paper.

Sir Robert Sawyer. And what did they do the third time?

Mr. Serj. Pemb. But first let us know what more was done the second time.

Sir George Treby. How was that unwillingness of theirs overcome?

Mr. Serj. Pemb. When they express their unwillingness what did they say farther?

Mr. Blathwayt. If I remember right, they said as they did the first time, they humbly hoped His Majesty would not take advantage against them.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Then what did they say the third time?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, were they asked whether they published it?

Mr. Blathwayt. As to the publishing it, it was laid before them, and I think they were asked the Question whether they published it?

Sir Robert Sawyer. And what answer did they make?

Mr. Blathwayt. I remember his Grace, and my Lords the Bishops, did not own they had published it, but they denied it.

Sir George Treby. After they discovered their unwillingness the second time, what followed next?

Mr. Blathwayt. They did withdraw after the second Attendance.

Mr. S. Levins. But what was said to them? Was that all that was said to them the second time?

Mr. Blathwayt. I have said two things already, that they were unwilling to answer, and that they denied the publishing.

L. C. J. This is a strange usage of a Witness, to put him to tell every thing that was said.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. I would ask you this Question, Sir. When they came in the second time, whether they did desire to know if it were His Majesties Command that they should own it?

L. C. J. That I must not permit you to ask, Brother, that is to lead the Witness.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. My Lord, he will not answer general Questions; I have asked him all along general Questions, and I cannot yet get an answer from him to them.

Mr. Blathwayt. I am ready to answer any Questions that the Court thinks I should answer; I am not backward to answer according to my duty.

L. C. J. Let one of you ask a Question at a time, and not chop in one upon another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In all the Tryals that ever I have been in, in all the Cases of Criminals, the King's Witnesses used to be treated with respect, and not to be fallen upon in this manner.

L. C. J. He shall be sure to have all respect paid him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He is in Office under the King.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. I do not think Mr. Blathwayt does believe I would shew him any disrespect, more than he would shew me.

Mr. Att. Gen. I beg one word, my Lord.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, What do you say?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I say I do oppose the asking of this Question, not but that every Man has a right to cross-examine a Witness, but if they ask such a Question, let them tell us what use they would make of it.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney General, for that matter—

Mr. Serj. Pemb. My Lord, if you please I'll give Mr. Attorney an answer.

L. C. J. Brother Pemberton, I was speaking to Mr. Attorney, and pray hear me, I will not ask you what use you'll make of the Question you ask, but do you ask fair and regular Questions, and I'll take care you shall have an answer to them.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. I will deal plainly with the Court, and tell you what Use we intend to make of our Question; if they answered under a Promise from His Majesty, that it should not be given in Evidence against them, I hope they shall not take advantage of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I say that is a very unmannerly Question, but however it shall be answered.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Why so, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, it is to put something upon the King which I dare hardly name.

L. C. J. We do not know what Answer will be made to it yet, but it does look like an odd kind of Question.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If men will be so pressing, I, for the King, desire the Question may be entered.

Sir Robert Sawyer. What do you mean, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I know very well what I mean, Sir; I desire the Question may be recorded in Court.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Record what you will, I am not afraid of you, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you afraid of the Law?

Mr. Serj. Pemb. No, nor of you neither.

L. C. J. Pray be quiet, Gentlemen.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Blathwayt, answer

whether there was any promise made to my Lords the Bishops from the King.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I take the Question to be, whether the King was pleased to make my Lords the Bishops any promise of not taking advantage of what answer they made.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is the Question.

Mr. Blathwayt. As that Question is stated there was no such made.

L. C. J. Look you, he tells you there was no such promise made; there is an Answer to your Question, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. We made no such Question; but the Question I would ask is this,—

Mr. Sol. Gen. For the Satisfaction of the Court repeat what you said just now, Mr. Blathwayt.

Mr. Blathwayt. I take the Question to be, whether the King made any promise to my Lords the Bishops, that no advantage should be taken of what they said, and I say the King made no such promise.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. We did not ask you the Question, but we only told you what use we would have made of another Question.

Mr. Pollixfen. Mr. Blathwayt, I see you can very well distinguish what Questions are to be answered; I ask you in short upon your Oath, when they were first called in, what was said to them, and what was answered by them?

L. C. J. Here has been a great deal of wrangling, but this is a fair Question, and may reduce us to order again; tell us over again from the beginning what passed when my Noble Lords the Bishops came in the first, second and third time, when they were examined about this Paper?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I shall comply with your Lordship's Directions; I apprehend I am to answer together concerning the first, second, and third comings in of my Lords the Bishops into the Council. The first time, (as I said before,) my Lords the Bishops were unwilling to own the Paper, and did say they humbly hoped His Majesty would not take advantage against them, but that they were ready to obey his Command. The second time they were called in they did repeat it again, that they hoped His Majesty would not take advantage against them; after that there was mention made of the Paper being published, I remember my Lords the Bishops said they had not published it.—

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is that all?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have no mind to hear all, I think.

L. C. J. How do you expect to be answered your Questions, if you interrupt them? Go on, Mr. Blathwayt.

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I said last, that they having prayed the King that no advantage might be taken against them for what they should say, there was mention made of the Paper its being published, and my Lords the Bishops did say they had not published it; and his Grace my Lord Archbishop said it was written with his own Hand, and that he had not made use of his Clerk.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is that all you can remember that passed at that time?

Mr. Blathwayt. This is the substance of what I remember.

L. C. J. Was this the third time?

Mr. Blathwayt. No; that was the second time, my Lord.

Mr. Pollixfen. If there be not some order in this Evidence, my Lord, we shall not be able to observe any thing upon it.—Pray what was done afterwards?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord Chancellour, upon their coming in, did require them to answer whether they did own that Paper or not; my Lords the Bishops did own the Paper.

Mr. Pollixfen. Do you remember in what words or expressions (as near as you can) they did own it?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is this a practice to be endured?

Mr. Finch. Why, he may apprehend and take that to be an owning of it which was not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Has not he sworn the manner of it, and almost the very words?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. We desire nothing of him but that he will tell us what words they said when they owned it.

Mr. Blathwayt. It was the third time that they came in, that they owned it.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Why, what did they say?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord Chancellour required them to answer, whether they owned the Paper or no.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. What did they say then?

Mr. Blathwayt. As near as I can remember, His Grace and my Lords the Bishops did own the Paper.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. What words did they own it in? tell the manner of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What's this to the purpose?

Mr. Finch. Mr. Blathwayt, Did you take notes of what passed there?

Mr. Blathwayt. I answer, Sir, I did not take notes, for I attended the King at his Elbow, and did not take notes; Mr. Finch, you know the manner of the Council in such cases very well.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we ask you for the King, because they shall not enflame People by such an expression, In what words did they own it, if you can remember?

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I have declared my memory as well as I can; when the other Clerks come to be examined, if they can tell any more, let them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But we will have no Discourse to enflame the World; Did the King promise or declare that no advantage should be taken of their confession?

L. C. Just. I would ask him that question, What was the manner that my Lord Chancellour expressed himself in to them, when they came in the third time?

Mr. Blathwayt. As soon as my Lord Chancellor had required them to declare whether they owned that Paper, as well as I remember, His Holding it forth to the Court. Grace took the Paper in his hand, and it was handed over, or shewed, ed, to my Lords the Bishops, and they owned and declared so, just as if they should lay it before the Court, just so: I do not recollect my self of all the circumstances that passed, I only can tell you the substance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He does not remember what they said particularly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Solicitor, I know well enough what they mean by the question; I know they would fain possess the World with a belief that there was such a promise made them, and yet they are prosecuted notwithstanding that promise; therefore I do ask you, Mr. Blath-wayt, and for the King's Honour I must ask it. Did the King make any Promise or Declaration, that no advantage should be taken, or use made of it?

Mr. Blathwayt. The King did not make any Promise or Declaration that no advantage should be taken, or use made of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He only put them upon it, whether they did own it or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ask you upon your Oath Did my Lord Archbishop own it to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes he did, and said he writ it with his own Hand, and would not let his Clerk write it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he own the whole to be his Hand-writing, or not?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did every one of the Bishops own their names subscribed to it?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we pray now that it may be read.

L. C. Just. I suppose now they will be content it should be read.

Mr. Finch. If your Lordship please to favour me one word, I think it cannot yet be read, and my Objection is this:—

L. C. Just. I thought you had made all your Objections before, as to the reading of it.

Mr. Finch. Pray, my Lord, spare us: Here are two parts of this Information; the one is for consulting and conspiring to diminish the King's Royal Prerogative, and for that end they did make and write a seditious Libel; the other part is, that they did publish this seditious Libel; We are hitherto upon the first part, the making and writing of it; both parts are local; until they have proved the making and writing of it to have been in Middlesex, it is not Evidence upon this Information.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have proved it written and published in Middlesex.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. The contrivance and writing of a Libel is in itself penal, and they may be punished for it, if they be found guilty. Now if they could give an undeniable Evidence concerning the publishing of it, that is nothing to this point; but if they should not give such Evidence, or any Evidence at all of the publication, yet if it be proved that it was written and contrived by them, they would be guilty for so much, if it be a Libel, and this we say is local as well as all the rest: and therefore we insist upon it, that the writing and contriving must as well be proved to be in Middlesex, as the publication, for all is local.

L. C. Just. There is no publishing yet proved.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. It is true, my Lord, here is nothing of a Publication yet, (with your Lordship's favour,) for their Answer to His Majesty in Council was, that they did not publish it; all that is said yet, is, that they owned the Paper to be their hands: My Lord, does the owning of that own that it was written in the County of Middlesex? or that it was contrived or made there? No surely, upon this Evidence the place is clearly at large: My Lord, this might have been done in the County of Surrey, or Somerset, or any other County: Their Information is, that they did consult and contrive to diminish the King's Prerogative at Westminster in the County of Middlesex, and there they did write, write, and cause to be written, this Libel, and there they did publish it; suppose it should be granted that it is proved that this is the Archbishop's Hand-writing, and these are their Names to it, is there any one Evidence that any thing of this was done in Middlesex? and, my Lord, that is the thing they are to prove.

Mr. Sommers. If your Lordship please, all matters of Crime are so local, that if it be not proved to be done in the County where it is laid, the Party accused is as innocent, as if he never had done the thing; and, with submission, it is the very point of the Information; that it be proved they are guilty of the Fact in the place where it is laid to be done.

L. C. Just. This is the same thing over and over again; but I am content to hear you, Mr. Sommers, at any time; I have told you my opinion about reading of the Paper already, if you'll have it again you may.

Mr. Pollixfen. Pray good my Lord, spare us before it be read.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Mr. Pollixfen, you have not yet had the Directions of the Court for the reading of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord when this Paper is read, which we pray it may be, we will answer their Objections, but at present we say, they are out of time.

Mr. Pollixfen. Good Lord, what a strange thing is this! We object against the reading of it, and you'll answer us after it is read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Certainly, my Lord, we have done enough to prove that this is a Paper owned by them in the County of Middlesex, and we pray it may be read.

L. C. Just. Truly I am of the same mind I was before, that it is too soon to make the Objection, and that the Paper ought to be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We submit to your Rule.

Mr. Pollixfen. If it be the Will of the Court, I have nothing to say.

Mr. Just. Powell. My Lord, The Contrivance and Publication are both matters of Fact, and upon Issue joined the Jurors are Judges of the Fact, as it is laid in the Information; but how can they be Judges of a matter of Fact done in another County? and it must be presumed, in favour of Innocence; not to be done in this County, but in another, except they prove it.

Mr. Att. Gen. We are not yet ripe for arguing that point.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are speaking only to the Court now for the reading of this Paper, and the Jury are not Judges of that, whether the Paper ought to be read or no; that is merely a matter of Law, and under the direction of the Court; and therefore I pray, since it is now in your Lordship's Judgment, whether that Paper should be read, that you would please to order it to be read.

L. C. Just. I can only give you my own opinion, let my Brothers give theirs.

Mr. Just. Holloway. There is no body against the reading of it, my Lord; I suppose my Brother Powell is not against its being read.

Mr. Just. Powell. But they say the King's Council must make it out first, that the writing of it, and the conspiring about it was in the County of Middlesex or there can be no Judgment, so much as to read it.

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, If the Objection be saved to us, we shall not so much oppose the reading it, only we would not be surprized in point of time.

Mr. Just. Powell. Nay, if they consent to the reading, we have no reason to hinder it.

L. C. J. Brother, I believe they know well enough what they have to say for their Clients; let the Paper be read.

Clerk reads. The Humble Petition of William Archbishop of Canterbury —

Sir Robert Sawyer. Read the whole Petition; Pray, my Lord, that the whole may be read. Read the Top first, Sir; to whom it was directed.

L. C. J. Read the whole.

Clerk reads.

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty.

The Humble Petition of William Archbishop of Canterbury, and of divers of the Suffragan Bishops of that Province, now present with him, in behalf of themselves and others of their absent Brethren, and of the Clergy of their respective Dioceses.

Humbly sheweth:

THAT the great averseness they find in themselves to the distributing and publishing in all their Churches your Majesties late Declaration for Liberty of Conscience; proceedeth neither from any want of Duty and Obedience to your Majesty, (our holy Mother, the Church of England, being both in her Principles and in her constant practice unquestionably loyal; and having (to her great Honour) been more than once publicly acknowledged to be so by your Gracious Majesty,) nor yet from any want of due tenderness to Dissenters, in relation to whom they are willing to come to such a Temper as shall be thought fit, when that matter shall be considered and settled in Parliament and Convocation; but amongst many other considerations, from this especially, because that Declaration is founded upon such a Dispensing Power, as hath been often declared illegal in Parliament, and particularly in the Years 1662, and 1672, and in the beginning of your Majesties Reign; and is a matter of so great moment and consequence to the whole Nation, both in Church and State; that your Petitioners cannot in Prudence, Honour, or Conscience, so far make themselves parties to it, as the Distribution of it all over the Nation, and the solemn Publication of it once and again, even in God's House, and in the time of his Divine Service, must amount to, in common and reasonable Construction:

Your Petitioners therefore most humbly and earnestly beseech your Majesty, that You will be graciously pleased not to insist upon their Distributing and Reading your Majesties said Declaration:

And Your Petitioners (as in duty bound) shall ever pray, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we shall leave our Evidence here, and hear what they can object to it.

Mr. Finch. Have you no farther Evidence, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. We leave it here for the present.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Gentlemen of the Jury desire to see the Petition.

L. C. J. Shew it them.

(The Petition was shewn to the Jury.)

Mr.

Mr. Finch. But will you give no farther Evidence, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. I tell you we'll leave it here, till we see what you say to it.

Mr. Finch. There is nothing that we should say any thing to.

Mr. Att. Gen. Make your Advantage of it; if it be nothing, we can have nothing.

L. C. J. What say you for the Defendants, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, in short, we say that hitherto they have totally failed, for they have not proved any Fact done by us in Middlesex, nor have they proved any Publication at all.

Sir Robert Sawyer. They have given no Evidence of any thing.

L. C. J. Pray Gentlemen speak One at once, and then we shall understand the better what we hear.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, We say, they have given no Evidence of the Conspiring, Writing, or publishing in Middlesex; Nay, as to the Publication, there is none at all proved.

Mr. Finch. Here is no proof of any Publication, nor of the writing or making in Middlesex; so that there is no proof at all against my Lords, the Bishops.

L. C. J. You heard what Mr. Blathwayt said, they owned it in Middlesex.

Mr. Finch. That is not a Publication sure, or any Evidence where it was done.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Suppose, my Lord, that I own in Middlesex, that I robb'd a man in Yorkshire, will that make me guilty in Middlesex?

Mr. Att. Gen. But if you had stole a Horse in Yorkshire, and had that Horse in Middlesex, and owned it, I doubt it would go hard with you in Middlesex?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Serjeant thinks he has put a very home Comparison, but we shall shew how little significant it is by and by.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. My Lord, in the first place we insist upon it; here is no proof in this Case at all, as to the doing of any Fact at all in the County of Middlesex; in the next place, this Information and Petition do not agree; for they have brought an Information, and set forth, That my Lords the Bishops under pretence of a Petition did make a Libel, and they have set forth no Petition at all, all the Petitionary part is omitted: If I will take part of a Man's Words, and not the whole, and make a Libel of that part, certainly that is very disingenuous and injurious; For that part that I omit may alter the Sense of the whole. They here ought to set forth the Petition, with the Direction to the King, and the Prayer at the end, whereby it will appear what the whole is, and what was desired by their Petition. But, my Lord, to make this matter a little more clear, whatsoever they say of its being my Lord Archbishop's Hand, we shall prove that if it were so, it could not be done in Middlesex; for we shall prove that my Lord of Canterbury hath not been in Middlesex for three or four Months before.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray let the Information be read, then you will see the variance.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is not the latter part (we acknowledge) in the Information.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There may be, and is, a sic Continetur, and there is no Objection in that at all.

L. C. J. It is sic Continetur, and that's—

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The truth of it is, this Information has made a very deformed thing of it, has left it neither Head nor Tail; they style it a Petition, but it is without any Direction to any body, and without any Prayer for any thing; and without those two it cannot be told what it is.

Mr. J. Allybone. Sir Rob. Sawyer, if I mistake not, it is said only under pretence of a Petition.

Sir Robert Sawyer. There may be more in the Paper, than in the Information, and if all were in, one part might explain another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So there may be more; and I wonder to hear that Objection from Sir Rob Sawyer, who has exhibited so many Informations for Libels in pieces taken out of Books.

Mr. Recorder. All that we alledge in the Information is contained in the Paper, and that's enough for our purpose; we are not bound to recite the whole.

L. Ch. J. Indeed I think it is no material Objection at all.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Truly I think it is very material in this Case; here's a Petition that is preferred to his Majesty; take the whole Petition together, and, say they, it is a reasonable Petition; chop off the Direction and the Prayer, and then here's nothing but the body of a Petition, without beginning or ending; or if a Man will say any thing concerning the King, and do it by way of Petition to himself, that will alter the Case mightily, from a Paper spread about, that should contain only the body of a Petition, and nothing else.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray read that part of the Information.

Mr. Pollixfen. If so be there be an Information, and that Information charges a man with a pretended Petition, and the Evidence comes and proves a Petition both top and bottom, that is not the Petition in the Information; for that lacking the proper parts of a Petition, is called a pretended Petition, but that which is proved, is proved is a real one.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. My Lord, there is nothing in this Objection, as this Record hath it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, give us leave to state it on our side, as they have done on theirs, and it will be the better understood upon the reading: I hope it is not come to that pass that they would have it, sure these Gentlemen have not forgot altogether the practice that has been so frequent in this Court; if there be an Information for a Libel, is there any thing more frequent, than only to recite the material part? Sure they may say in such a Libel is contained so and so, without setting forth the whole Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How many Tryals have we had here, wherein there has been only a Clause taken out of a Book? as particularly, Baxter's Bible, and Johnson's Book, and all by vertue of a sic continetur.

Mr. Finch. That comes not up to our Objection here.

Mr. J. Powell. Let us hear the Record read, and then we can judge of it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We pray, Sir, the Information may be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We are here upon all Occasions chopp'd in upon, and I do not know how they come to take this Liberty; I am sure other people had it not in former times, when these Gentlemen stood where we do; as soon as ever we offer to speak, presently there are two or three upon us.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Let me hear them, Mr. Attorney, make their Objection, and let the Record be read, and that will answer that Objection.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as for that other thing, they come and tell us, we have set forth a Petition, we say no such thing; in the Information we say, you composed a certain Libel pretensu Petitionis, in which are contained such and such things; and now I pray let it be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, hear me a little first; Take the Information as we have laid it, and I believe there are twenty Presidents that I could give you in an instant of late days practice; so was the Information against Mr. Baxter, so was the Information against Mr. Johnson, so was the Information against Doctor Eades, and so was the Information against Sir Samuel Barnardiston. They are all in this form, sic continetur; so that as for that matter, we are well enough. But here's another thing (say they,) You do not set out the Petition; we say, it is a Libel, and it is not the Name we rely on, but there is such a Libel, so we in our Information call it; if it be not a Libel, then are they very innocent; and whether it be or no, is now in Judgment before your Lordship; but if it be as we say, then it is not the speaking ill things in the body of a Petition, and then giving it a good Title, and concluding it with a good Prayer at the end of it; 'tis not, I say, any of these that will sweeten this Crime, nor alter, nor alleviate it at all; if there be that which is Seditious and Libellous in the Body of it, call the Paper what you will, and smooth it with a Preamble, or a Conclusion, that will not make it any thing less a Libel; these things are plain and manifest: We say there is such a thing done, a Libel made, pretensu Petitionis, do you call it what you will; but we say, these and these things are a Libel upon the King and the Government: We have proved our Case, we have proved there was such a Paper under their Hands, we have proved it was owned in Middlesex, and then we are in your Judgment, whether this be not Evidence sufficient to convict the Defendants.

L. C. J. But they do make an Objection about the Writing and Contriving of it, that it is not proved to be in Middlesex.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, our Information does not go with a continued Clause, that they framed a Libel, ut sequitur in hæc verba, but we only say, they made a Libel pretensu Petitionis, and then we say, In quo quidem Libello continetur, so and so; we do not tie our selves up to a particular Recital of all that's in the Paper.

L. C. J. Read the Record.

Clerk Reads.

Vol. III.

quidem falso ficto malitioso pernitioso & seditioso Libello continetur The humble Petition of, &c.—

Mr. Serj. Levinz. It is quite another thing; that which is produced from that which is in the Information, by this leaving out a part; for here is the Prayer omitted, and the Direction.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, I think there is nothing in the Case, but this mighty Objection of the County; and, says Mr. Serj. Levinz, if my Country-man Confesses in this County, that he stole a Horse in Yorkshire, you shall not try him in London, but in Yorkshire, because by his own Confession the Fact is in another County.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. I did not put the Case so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But take the Fact of the Case as it is here; my Lord, the Bishops come in Middlesex and own this Paper, my Lord Archbishop owns it to be his Writing, and the rest of the Bishops own their Hands; if they had done as Mr. Serjeant's Yorkshire-man did, and said, we own we did this, but it was in the County of York, then it would have been like the Case that these Gentlemen put; but here we are in a plain Case of another nature; my Lord Archbishop comes here in Middlesex, and owns that he writ the Paper, the other Bishops they signed it; now it does lie certainly in their knowledge where this was done, and they should have declared then; but they have owned it as their Paper, and the signing and writing of it, which is enough for us.

Mr. Finch. I own this to be my Paper, therefore I writ it in the County of Middlesex; Is that a Consequence? I am very glad they are no better at their Inferences.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They have owned the thing in Middlesex, that we insist upon, and they have not owned it with any qualifications; if they had said, it was done in another County, then you must have taken it to be as they said it; then if they do not distinguish the place of the Fact, your Lordship can only take it to be where they owned it, it would be supposed to be done in that place, for when they owned the Fact, it will be supposed, if they do not say where it was done, that it was done where they own'd it, because the King can't tell where it was done; but the Evidence comes out of their own mouths, they may give satisfaction where it was done, for they know it; and till that be done, the Supposition is against them, that it was done in the place where they owned it; and that is a plain Case, wheresoever a man is to speak of his own Fact. Indeed if I publish the Writing of another person which is Libellous; then there must be a particular proof of the place, because it is not my own Fact; but if those Lords publish a Libel that they make themselves, it is their own knowledge, and in their own power to tell where it was done, because it is their own Act and Deed: it is true, if my Lords had published a Paper that was contrived by some of their Council, it had been some Excuse, and they must have only suffered for that Publication in the place where it was done; but they are here for Writing this they have owned in this County, and therefore it lies upon them to prove it done elsewhere. There is another Objection, my Lord, made; That here is no Evidence of a Publication; my Lord, I take it to be a Publication in it self; Is it possible for a man to write a Libel? to set his Name? and part with it? and it coming to the hands of the King, that this is not a Publication? It is not their saying, we did not publish it, that will excuse them; for can there be a greater Publication in it self than this, when men have set their Hands to it, and owned their Names? what makes the Fact in this Case? If a Deed be denied to be factum of such a one, what is the proof of it, but setting the Hand and Seal, and the Delivery? There is owning the Paper, and setting their Hands is a Publication in it self, and therefore they cannot make any such Objection. My Lord, if there were occasion, we have Authorities enough to this purpose, and we will give them scope enough if they will argue this matter; and if they have any Evidence, we desire to hear what they can say to it.

G g g g g

Mr. Att. Gen. As for this matter of Fact, my Lord, if I take it right, they do not Controvert the Publishing, but (say they) pray make it out, where it was written or composed; I confess this would be a business worth the while, for all persons that act in this manner, and are concerned in making of Libels, to understand for their advantage. No man doubts in the matter of Treason, but it is local; then put the Case a man is found in Middlesex with a treasonable Paper in his Pocket, I do not make a Comparison, as if this was such a Paper, I hope I am not so understood, but I only put it as a Case, and that the Law is so, is beyond all Controversie; then the man is indicted here in Middlesex, for framing and composing such a Treasonable Libel, and he comes to be tryed, and (says he) Pray prove where I made and composed it, for though you found it in my Pocket, in the County of Middlesex, yet I might do it in the County of York; and upon my word, this had been a very good Defence for Mr. Sidney, who was indicted, convicted, and attainted, for making a Treasonable Paper which was found in his Study; might not he have put the same Objection? might not Mr. Sidney have said (it was great pity he did not understand it) pray prove where I did it, for I did it elsewhere than in this County. —

Mr. Sol. Gen. He did say it, I remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I would not hear any Answer given to this, for it would make the King in a very woful Case: Here is a Paper that is found in the County of Middlesex, and this is there owned by you to be written and subscribed by you; pray do you prove it, that it was written elsewhere.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. My Lord, we will do it, we will be governed by Mr. Attorney for once.

Mr. Serj. Lewinz. We will prove that my Lord Archbishop was not in Middlesex, in seven Months before; and truly I think Mr. Attorney's Case of a Paper found about a Man, or in his Custody, will not come up to our Case; for was this Paper found about us, surely that is not pretended.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Your Lordship sees by the very frame of the Petition, that this Petition which they call a Libel, was made after the King's Order concerning reading this Declaration: Now we shall prove that my Lord Archbishop, whose Hand-writing they prove this to be, was not out from Lambeth House in two Months before, nor till he was before the Council.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Which was long after that time when it was made.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. So that this cannot be written in the County of Middlesex.

Call Francis Nichols.

Mr. Nicholls was sworn.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Do you remember the 18th of May last?

Mr. Nicholls. Yes, Sir.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray how was it with my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury at that time, and before that, did he go abroad?

Mr. Nicholls. My Lord, I am very sure that my Lord his Grace of Canterbury, whom I have served in his Bed-Chamber this seven Years, never stirred out of the Gate of Lambeth House since Michaelmas last.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Till when, Mr. Nicholls?

Mr. Nicholls. Not till the time he was summoned before the Council.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Now I hope we have given them a full proof that it could not be in Middlesex.

Call Thomas Smith.

Mr. Smith was not examined.

Mr. Finch. Truly, my Lord, I think that what we have proved or what Proof we further offer of my Lord of Canterbury's not being in Middlesex for so long a time, is ex abundanti, and we need it not; for with humble submission, in point of Law, it is incumbent upon them that are to prove the Charge in the Information, to prove where it was done; because, the Locality of it is part of the thing, they ought to prove it; in it's nature it is local, there is a Place assigned in the Information, and unless they prove it was done in the Place that they have laid, they have not proved the Charge in the Information. Now, my Lord, they have not made Proof of that, and for proof of Publication, I think they have offered none to your Lordship, they never did call it so yet, and truly I never did hear or know that the owning of their Hands at the Council-Table was a Publication of a Libel; it is owning the Writing, but it is not an owning where the Writing was made; but where it was written, and where it was made, is of necessity to be proved; before the Charge upon a Record, in a Court of Justice, can be said to be made out, it is a Local Charge, and in Justice, the locality must be proved, or the Information fails; my Lord, they have offered no Proof to it, and they have not yet gone to the second part of the Information, for as to the Publication of it, there is not a tittle of Proof offered, but only the owning of their Hands upon their Examination at the Council, and no Man did ever yet think that the answering a Question, and owning a Paper at the Council-Table, upon a Question put by the King himself, was a Publication of a Libel.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. Pray, my Lord, hear me a Word to that; Though the thing be never so local, yet there must be some place where a thing that was done, was done: Then if nothing else appears, but what was done in Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, unless they shew the contrary, that must be the very place where it was done.

Mr. Solicitor General. Here is a great deal of Prevarication in this matter, and I would observe to your Lordship how they do use the Court ill in it; pray, my Lord, What is it we are upon? we are proving that these seven Lords, the Bishops signed this Paper; and I think we have proved it sufficiently out of their own Mouths: But (say they) it was not signed in the County of Middlesex, but in the County of Surry. All this is but Imagination, and they would have the Court

Court to imagine it too ; For how do they prove it ? They would have your Lordship and the Jury believe, That it was signed elsewhere, because my Lord Archbishop has not been out of his House in some Months before ; it is all but Inference, and Argument, and Imagination. But still Gentlemen, do you answer what I objected to you ? Does it not lie in their Power to shew where it was signed ? Here are six more, besides the Archbishop, where was it signed by them ? Here are six of the Bishops, that it does not appear where they signed it ; but they confess at White-Hall, in Middlesex, that they did set their Hands—

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Ay, they did so, and what then ?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, and ay too ; if they did so, the Presumption and Common Intendment upon such Evidence is, That it was done in the Place where it was owned ; and the rather, for that Reason that I said before, That it lies in their Knowledge, and therefore it is incumbent upon them to prove, That it was not in the County of Middlesex : So that this Objection I take rather to be an Invention of the Council than the Truth of the Fact, because they that can make this out, do not. And as to what they say of my Lord Archbishop, That he has not been out of Doors for so long, who can prove such a thing ? Certainly my Lord was able to come, for any thing that appears ; he has been here twice, and he was able to come to the Council-Board : But when all is done, my Lord Archbishop is certainly able to put this matter out of doubt, for he may easily prove it, if the Fact be so, and that will satisfy the Court and every Body, That it was signed by him at Lambeth ; if he designs to deal sincerely with your Lordship and the Court, and the Jury ; but certainly it is not to be proved by a Circumstance, such a one as this is, but he ought to give your Lordship and the Jury Satisfaction about this Fact : He ought to say, 'Tis true, I did sign it, but it was at Lambeth-House ; that indeed would be a downright Stroke to us : But to go upon a Supposition, That because my Lord Archbishop was not out of his House for so long together, therefore they are all not Guilty, is a very hard and foreign Inference. My Lord, there's another Matter that they insist upon ; and that is about the Publication, that is as plain as any thing can be, that here is a full Proof of a Publication, for if the Paper be Libellous, where-ever that Paper is, that is a Publishing, where-ever the Paper travels, how far soever it goes, it is a Publication of it by these Persons that signed it : I believe no body thinks that this should fly into the King's hand, but some body brought it to him ; and certainly, my Lord, if your Opinion should be, that this Paper is Libellous, then where-ever it is, it is a Publishing, which is our offence ; where-ever it is found, it is a Publication ; for there is the mistake of these Gentlemen, they fancy, that unless there was a Publick Delivery of this Paper abroad, nothing can be a Publication ; but I rely upon it, they setting their Names to it, made it their Paper ; and where-ever it was afterwards found, that did follow the Paper where-ever it went, and was a Publication of it ; it was in their Power, being their own Contrivance ; it was made and formed by themselves, and no body will believe, when it was their own Hands that they put to it, that any body else could have any power over it ; for ought appears, no body else was at work about it, and when there were so many Learned Prelates that had signed such a Paper, no one can believe they would let it go out of their Hands, but by their Consent and Direction : Is not this a Proof of the Publishing ? Do they give your Lordships any Evidence that they had stifled this Paper ? If they had so done, they had said something, but will any body believe that this thing was done in vain ? Can any body assign a Reason why so solemn a thing as this should be done to no end and purpose ? Why a Paper should be framed that rails at the King's two Declarations ? Why a Paper that gives Reasons why they could not read it in their Churches, and signed with such Solemnity by all these Noble Lords, we submit this to you in point of Law, and the Law is plain in it, that if this Paper be Libellous, and it is found in the County of Middlesex, there is a Publication of that Libel. I shall mention to your Lordship that Case of Williams, which is reported in the second Part of Roll's Reports, Mr. Finch made use of it in the Case of Sidney ; it was the great Case relied upon, and that guided and governed that Case (as I apprehend) from the Verdict and Judgment that was given in it. This Case was 15 Jacobi. It seems Williams was a Barrister of the Inner Temple, and it seems being an high Catholick for Opinion and Judgment, he was expelled the House, and he being so expelled (being a sort of a Vertuoso) wrote a Book called Balam's Ass, and therein he makes use of the Prophet Daniel, and he makes Application of it according to his own particular fancy. He writes there, That this World was near at an end ; and he said, Those ill days were come that that Prophecy spoke of, and because of the Impurity of Prince, and Priest, and People, and other things that hapned, those were the worst of days, and therefore the last ; and that certainly we had the worst Prince that ever was in the World, when he wrote this Book, what does he do ? He was a little more close than my Lords the Bishops, and pins it up, or seals it up, and it was brought to the King ; and what is this more than the Case before your Lordship ? They indeed say, I do this by way of Advice to the King ; so, said he, I do this by way of Advice to the King, for God forbid that any of this should happen to the King, and so what he does was by way of Advice, and he prayed God to avert it from him ; here was as good a Prayer as there is in this Paper ; and there was a good design, he made use of the Prophet Daniel, and applied his words. Well, what was done upon it ? This was never published ; for the Question was before the Court, whether this Sealing of it up, and not delivering it to any other body were a Publication, the Court was of Opinion, that the very Writing of it was a Publication ; they did not value the delivery of it to the Prince, but it was proved he Writ it, and that made it Treason. My Lord, we have Cases enough in my Lord Hobart for this Matter, Sir Baptist Hick's Case, and my Lady Hatton's Case, there was only a Letter sealed up and delivered to the Party.

L. C. J. You need not trouble your self about that Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If the Case then be thus, I take it, it will turn upon this Fact ; they have given your Lordship no Proof where this Paper was Signed by them ; here are seven Persons that had had a hand in it, and here is only one Person whom they have insisted upon to be infirm, and kept his House for a great while together. We say the Publishing follows the Libel wherever it goes; the Libel is in the County of Middlesex, they have confessed it in the County of Middlesex, and they did not distinguish when it was done. Then if they will not distinguish upon the Evidence, no Man ought to distinguish, but ought to presume it was done in that place where they owned it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I did not apprehend we were got so far, that they opposed us in the Publication.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Yes we did, for you have given no Evidence of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Surely, my Lord, for that we have given a sufficient Evidence, and they have given some Proof of it, as to my Lord Archbishop; that because he had not been from Lambeth, therefore he did not publish, nor could cause it to be published; for your Lordship sees by this Information, they are not only to answer the Publicavit, but also the Publicari causavit; for do you doubt, Gentlemen, of the Law in this Case, that if I compose a Libel in Surrey, for Example, and send a Person over into Middlesex, I am not Guilty of the Publishing?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That is not your Case, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Finch. That were clear if it were so, but it is not so.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Archbishop's Case signifies nothing, if we shew it was published in Middlesex, and you give no Evidence to the contrary but it might be there; and I am sure as to the rest of my Lords the Bishops, there is no Evidence at all given. Here is a Petition that we say is a Libel, they it may be will make that a Question; this is delivered to the King's own Hand in the County of Middlesex, and there are as many Cases as any one Man can name, that this amounts to a Publication by the Party; for if I send a Letter by the Post sealed, that no body can see but the Party himself, and he that writ it, it is adjudged over and over again, it is a Libel.

Mr. Just. Powel. That you need not labour, Mr. Attorney, for that's the Case of Williams of Essex; but how do you apply it to the Case now before us?

Mr. Att. Gen. That's an Answer to their Objection as to the Publication.

Mr. Just. Powel. But what say you to the first part, you have not proved that it was written in Middlesex.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is the Case of Barrow and Lewellin in Hobart, and likewise the Case of Sir Baptist Hicks, which is reported both in Hobart and in Popham; and in Popham, towards the end of the Case, there is a remarkable Passage. Says that Case, If it should not be punishable at the Suit of the King, there would be no Remedy; for the Party cannot bring an Action, because he can be no Witness for himself, and it is only known betwixt them two; but a Witness for the King he may be, to prove his own Receipt of the Letter, and the Party's Hand.

Mr. Just. Powel. You need not labour that Point, I'll tell you, Mr. Attorney; for the Law is very clear in that Point, I think, if you bring it home to your Case.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then here's the Case in short, my Lord; That my Lords the Bishops have caused to be made and written this Petition, they are made Parties to it by setting their Names, and this is a continued Act; whatsoever is written there is my Lord Archbishop's Writing, wherever it goes, as I'll put a Case that's very well known. If I take away Goods from a Man in the County of Cumberland, and I am found with them in the County of Middlesex, it is a continued Act, and makes all but one Felony, and I shall be tried here in Middlesex for it; If a Man write a thing in one County, and it is sent and dispersed in another County, that still continues to be his Fact, though it may be the first part was not in the same County with the other; but suppose all this while that part should not affect my Lord of Canterbury, the causing it to be published does.

Mr. J. Powel. Do you think, Mr. Attorney, that writing in one County is such a continued Act, that he may be said to write it in another County?

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir I take it, where there is a complicated Crime of Writing and Publishing a Libel, and the beginning of it is in one County, and the carrying it on is in another, that is a continued Act, and may be tried in either County.

L. C. J. It is all one Act of Libelling (as they say.)

Mr. J. Holloway. In Cases of Felony 'tis so, taking in one County, and being found with the Goods in another, it is Felony in either County.

Mr. Just. Powel. But in that Case they are two Felonies; for it is Robbery in the one County, and but bare Felony in the other.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Suppose that my Lords the Bishops signed this Paper in another County, and my Lord Archbishop consents to have it sent into Middlesex, is not this a causing it to be published in another County?

Mr. J. Powel. Yes, it may be, if you prove his Consent.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then suppose further, which may very well consist with my Lord Archbishop's Evidence of his not being out of Lambeth in so long time, the rest of the Bishops might sign it in Middlesex, or it may be in that Place; and then they carry it by my Lords consent over hither, into this County, is not this a causing it to be published? the Delivery with his Consent certainly is a Proof of that, for our Information goes two ways, for Making, Contriving, Writing and Publishing, that's one: And then, for causing it to be Made, Contrived and Published, that's the other: And if I prove that he caused it to be published, he may be found Guilty as to that part, and not Guilty as to the other; for the Information is not so entire, but that the King has his choice, if the Archbishop had not signed it, or written it, but had caused it to be published, he may be found guilty of so much: But if he be Guilty of any one of these things, it is enough; and if he be Guilty of none of the other things laid in the Information; yet if he be Guilty of causing it to be published, by his consenting that the rest of the Bishops should do it, that will be enough to maintain this Information. Then, my Lord, is there any Evidence brought against what we have proved, That he did not consent?

Mr. Just. Powel. But where was this Consent of his given, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, good Sir, give me your Favour, I think I am in a plain Case.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. So you are truly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why, good Sir, you ought to make out the Locality, if you'll take advantage of it.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. That's very well indeed, this is the first time I ever heard that Doctrine.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I cannot help that, but certainly the Law is plain, we have proved there was such a Fact as this was done; and they do not go about to prove that it was done elsewhere than where we have laid it; for if they did, their Witnesses would be cross-examined by us; and then we know what would become of them, then the Truth of the matter would come out: Therefore I would make all this constare. The Archbishop might be at Lambeth, and yet Guilty in Middlesex, by his Concurrence with what was done in Middlesex: And I say, my Lord, this is natural, upon the Evidence that has been given, because when they were interrogated at the Council, and confessed the Paper to be theirs, they made no such Explanation of their Confession, of which they can make any Advantage in their Defence. Here has been no Body produced that proves any thing to be done out of Middlesex; so that still if he's Guilty of the Fact proved, he must be Guilty in Middlesex.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. And it does not appear, in this Case, but that my Lord Archbishop might write the same thing in Middlesex, tho' he was at Lambeth so long as the Witness speaks of.

Mr. Just. Powell. How do you make out that, Brother?

Mr. Serj. Baldock. He might do it when he came over to the Council.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. He must do it after it was presented.

Mr. S. Baldock. Might he not be so long here on this side the Water, as to make such a short thing as this, before it was delivered? half a quarter of an Hour would have done it.

L. C. J. That's a thing not to be presumed, Brother, especially since he is proved not to have been in Middlesex for so long together.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Serjeant is mightily mistaken, for it is not pretended, That it was delivered at the time when the Archbishop, and my Lords the Bishops, were before the Council.

Mr. Recorder. Either the Making and Contriving, or the Publishing of this Libel will do upon this Information; for they shall be taken to be one continued complicated Act; and then the Party may be tried in either of the Counties, as the King will; as in the Case of Treason, it has been over and over again adjudged: That if a Man does one Act of Treason in one County, and afterwards goes into another County, and does another Act of Treason, the Jury of either of the Counties may enquire of the Fact done in the other. If they then should take those two as several Acts, they were several Offences, and they may be found Guilty of the one and acquitted of the other; but if they are taken as one continued Act, they are but one Offence, and the Jury of either County may try it. If then, in this Case, the Jury of this County may take notice of the Publication, which was here, as certainly they may, if they will agree, as the Law certainly is; That the Writing of a Letter will be a sufficient Publication, if the matter be Libellous. And there are multitudes of Precedents for that; and that the bare setting of a Man's Hand has been adjudged to be a Publication: Then give me leave, my Lord, to bring it to a similar Case; Suppose a Man write a scandalous Letter from London, to a Judge or Magistrate in Exeter; and sends it by the Post, and the Letter is received from the Post at Exeter, and there opened; would any Man make a Question whether the Gentleman that sent the Letter may not be indicted and prosecuted for a Libel at Exeter, where the Libel was received?

Mr. J. Powell. There's no question of that, Mr. Recorder; that comes not home to the Fact in our Case, undoubtedly in the Case that you put, the Law is as you said, but it is far different from this Case.

L. C. J. There's no Body opposes the Publication, but the framing of it where it was made.

Mr. Recorder. Supposing then the Party were at Exeter; and he were interrogated before the Magistrate, Whether that were his Hand or no? and he should own it to be his Hand; can any body doubt whether his owning that to be his Hand, would be a sufficient Evidence to prove a Publication?

Mr. Just. Powell. But is that any Evidence where it was written? Or if it be not proved that it was received at Exeter, would that be a Proof of a Publication at Exeter?

L. C. J. They do not deny the Publication.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We do deny that there was any Publication; and they have proved no place where it was made.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we are not for turning my Lords the Bishops out of the way of Proof, that is usual in such Cases; let them take it if they will, That this was contrived and made in Surrey. But can they publish it in Middlesex, without committing an Offence? and that is it we stand upon: We are not for laying a greater Load upon my Lords the Bishops than our Proof will answer.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We thank you for your Complement, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is this a fair way, of interrupting us when we are speaking? Durst any one have served you so when you were in the King's Service? We would make our Duty as easie as we can to my Lords the Bishops; and it may be easier than other Men would have made it. But my Lord, let it be a doubtful Case, that we cannot tell which County it was made and contrived in, if it were made and contrived in another County; yet when they brought it into Middlesex, there was a Publication in Middlesex; and if my Lord of Canterbury consented to it, and if he caused it to be published, how can any Body ever get him off from that causing of it to be published? Here is a Paper that must be supposed to be my Lord Archbishops Paper: Now either the World must look upon it to be an Imposture put upon my Lords the Bishops, or a real Paper made by them. If it were an Imposture and an Affront put upon the Bishops, they ought to make it out for their own Vindication, and to prove themselves Innocent: If they do that, they do well, and they ought to have Satisfaction made them by those that have so highly injured them; and the King cannot be better pleased, I am sure, than to find them so: But if Men will look one way and act another, they must expect to be dealt with accordingly. Will any Man that has heard this Evidence, and sees that these Gentlemen will not go go the right way to work to prove their own Innocence, believe them to be not Guilty? 'Tis plain they contrived it and signed it; for can any one imagine that they set their Hands to a Paper that was not formed and contrived by themselves? then let it go, That this was done in another County, and we cannot punish the Writing of it in this County; yet still they are Guilty of causing it to be published in this County, and for that we may punish them here: We will be content with having that found that we have proved, which certainly is an Offence.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We oppose that, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You oppose it, I know you'll oppose common Sense, we don't speak to you, we speak to the Court; we are content with what is plain, and do not desire to insist upon any strained Construction; we say this is Natural Evidence for us; If this thing be a Libel, as we say it is, then the causing it to be published, is an Offence: The Publication we say was here in Middlesex, and of that there is a clear Evidence, because it was found there, and came from the King's Hand, to whom it was directed, and it could not come to the King's Hand out of their Custody, without their Consent: This (we say) is a clear Evidence of causing it to be published let the rest go as it will, because we will take the easiest part of the Case, and not go upon Strains.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. The greatest Question is, I think, now come to the Publishing.

L. C. J. The Court is of Opinion, that its coming to the King is a publishing.

Mr. J. Powel. Ay, my Lord, if it be proved to be done by them.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Before the Court deliver their Opinion, we desire to be heard.

L. C. J. Brother, you shall be heard in good time, but let them make an end on the other side, and when the King's Council have done, we'll hear you.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, upon the Question of Publishing, it has been insisted upon, and the Court seems to be very much of the same Opinion; That the Writing of it is a Publishing: That it is without Controversie, if the Writing of it fell out to be in Middlesex, where the Information is laid; but that they would not have to be so by Argument, because the Archbishop had kept in at Lambeth so long. But suppose, that it were so as they would have it; that is only as to the Archbishop, he being the Writer of it, but yet notwithstanding that, the other six might subscribe it in Middlesex, taking it, that there is such a Face in their Argument as they would have it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will lay no greater load on the other six than we do upon my Lord Archbishop, and we say they are all Guilty of the Publication in Middlesex.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. Pray, Sir, spare me; this Paper was in the Archbishops Custody and Power, he taking of it himself; and regularly it could not have come out of his Custody, in common Supposition, but it must come with his Consent. It was afterwards in the Power of the other six, they had it to subscribe; where the Subscription was non constat, they it may be can prove it themselves, but I will only deduce this Argument; That if it after comes into Middlesex, it must be taken by presumption to be subscribed by them there and published, it must taken by Presumption so to be.

L. C. J. No Brother, we ought not to do any thing by Presumption here.

Mr. J. Powel. No, no, by no means, we must not go upon Presumptions but Proofs.

L. C. J. I will not presume it to be made in Middlesex.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. But it is proved to be published in Middlesex.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, with Submission, there is no Evidence of the Publication.

Mr. Att. Gen. That the Court is to judge of.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, good my Lord, what Instance of a Publication have they given?

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Court has heard the Evidence, we leave it there.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Was it their owning and acknowledging it was their Hands, when the King asked them the Question at the Council-Table? Surely the King's Council won't pretend that was a Publication, when it was done at the King's Command; it was certainly the King that published it then, and not my Lords the Bishops.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well said.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Don't you remember that, when Mr. Blathwayt said the King gave it to be read, and it was shewed to the Bishops?

L. C. J. I remember what Evidence Mr. Blathwayt gave of the Passages at the Council-Board very well; and I know what Mr. Attorney did press about the King's promising to take no advantage.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Attorney is on the other side, he did not press it.

L. C. J. Sir Robert Sawyer (I mean), I beg both your Pardons, Gentlemen, I think I have done Injury to you both.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we say there is no Evidence at all, that ever this was sent to the King by the Archbishop, or any of my Lords the Bishops: And as for the Cases that they have put, they might have put five hundred Cases; and all nothing to the purpose.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So they might, and done just as others had done before them.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. And so are these; for here is the Question, We are in a Case, where the Publication is that which makes it a Crime: Now I would have them (if they can) put me any such Case, and then apply it to this; in Williams's Case, the Question is quite otherwise, and so in any Case of Treason it must be; where-ever there is an Overt Act proved, it is the Treasonable Intention, and the ill Mind of the Traytor that is the Crime, and the Treason (the Overt Act) is only to be the Evidence of it: In that Case of Williams, with Submission, my Lord, the Publication was not at all necessary, but the very secretest Act that could be done by him (if it were an Act) is an evidence of the Mind, and so the sending of the Book to the King himself, though no body else did see it, was an Evidence of the Crime of Treason, yet it could not be called a Publication. But in the other Case of Sir Baptist Hicks, which was in the Star-Chamber, about sending a Letter of Challenge, it was plainly resolved that it was no Publication of the Letter, and that was not the ground of the Judgment given against him there, that it was the Publication of a Libel, but the very Fact was a particular Offence; for (said the Court there) if you will send a Letter to a private Man, and that is a Letter that will provoke him to break the the Peace, that is an Offence punishable in the Star-Chamber; but that is not the Reason which was alledged, because no Action will lie for want of Proof, but quite the contrary; because they may produce the Porter or Party that brought it, and prove it that it came from this Man's Hands; and I do not question but that in the King's Bench at this Day, if a Man will write a Letter privately to provoke another Man to fight, there will lie an Information, but not for a Libel; for there it will be necessary for to make an Offence, that there may be a Publication; for that is the very form of the Crime, and upon that ground were all those Judgments against Libels in the Star-Chamber. My Lord, I agree to write a Letter to the King of another Person, or to make a Petition to the King concerning another Person, as of my Lord Chancellor, or the Judges, or the like, to complain to the King of them scandalously, with provoking and reviling Language, that is a Publication; and so if I write a Letter to one Man of another; if there be Scandal in a Letter, that is a Publication of a Libel; and that is the difference that has been always taken, where it is essential to make it a Libel, that there be a Publication, such a Publication must be proved, and the delivery of a Letter to a Man that concerns himself, is no Publication, but in this case they have not so much as proved that it was delivered to the King.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. My Lord, with your Lordship's leave, I take it, that they have given no manner of Evidence of a Publication; to say, the writing and subscribing of their Names to a Paper, is a Publication of that Paper, is such a Doctrine truly as I never heard before; supposing this Paper had lain in my Study, subscribed by me, but never went further; would this have been a Publication? They never said any such thing. As to Algernoon Sidney's Case, there was no colour for it, that it should a Publication; but it was an Overt Act of Treason to compose such a Book; They have proved by our Confession here, that we have subscribed this Paper, they would take it now; that therefore it must be presumed we sent this to the King, and so surmise us into an Information for making and publishing a Libel, which we sent to the King; but they do not prove it at all: My Lord, there are a thousand ways that it might come into Middlesex, and perhaps come to the King's Hands too, without our Knowledge of Delivery; and sure you will not presume these Noble Persons without Evidence to be guilty of such an Offence as this is suggested to be; so that, my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, 'tis impossible for you to find this a Publication in Middlesex; and for the other thing, (the writing this Paper) they that would make it an Offence, must prove where it was done.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. My Lord, The Answer that I shall give to what has been said on the other side, is very short; the Cases that have been cited are all Law, but not one tittle to this purpose: In Sir Baptist Hicks's Case, and Williams's Case, it was proved they all sent them to the Places whither they were directed; but is there a tittle of Proof that these Bishops sent it here? In all those Cases, they must send it either by a Porter or a Carrier, and they send it as their own Act, and when it comes there, by their sending, that is sufficient Proof of their Act in the place whither it is sent: And for Sidney's Case, there was Treason in the very Libel and Book that he made; and he was not indicted for publishing, but for Treason in the place where it was found, because it was found in his Possession: But was this ever in my Lord Archbishop's Possession in Middlesex, or the rest of the Bishops, and were they publishing of it? if it had, then it had been their Act clearly: But that is the thing wherein they are defective, that they do not prove that my Lords the Bishops sent or brought it here; but upon the Question asked them by the King, they acknowledged it to be their Hands: So that my Lord there is no proof of any Fact done here, but an Acknowledgement of a Fact done, no Body knows where, upon the King's Question here in Middlesex; Is that any Proof of this Information?

Mr. Finch. Pray, my Lord, spare me a Word on the same side, let us see what the Evidence is. The Evidence is this, That the King brought the Paper to the Council-Table, and the Bishops owned their Hands to it: This is the Effect of the Evidence, and all that is to prove the Forming and Making a Libel in Middlesex, and the Publication of that Libel. And what is therefore inferred from thence? Why, having proved that the King brought the Paper to the Council-Table, and the Bishops owned their Hands: Therefore, First the Bishops made this Libel in Middlesex. Secondly, they brought it to the Council-Table, and published it at the Council-Table, or else there is no proof at all: For here is nothing of Evidence given of any Fact, but because they acknowledged it, therefore they made it, therefore they gave it to the King in Middlesex: This were good Evidence if they had had the Help of a Supposition to make it good; but they want that, nor must any such thing be admitted; but I think they are such gross false Consequences, that I doubt not you'll be of Opinion, Here's no proof of a Publication in Middlesex, and then there is no proof at all against my Lords the Bishops.

Mr. Pollixfen. I must confess I hear them say two Acts prove a Publication in this Case; the one is, the Writing of the Libel, and the Subscribing. If so, then I think upon the Evidence that has been given, the Court must needs be satisfied, that the Writing of it was in Surrey: The next is, their owning their Hands; for there is no Act done that appears, or any Evidence against them of any Act done, from the time of the Writing, to the time that they were asked, is this your Hand? Surely no Man would ever think this to be a Publication, where one is asked by Authority, whether such a Paper be his Hand, and he acknowledges it in Answer to that Question; to turn this to be a Crime, I think it can never be done, nor never was before. Then there is nothing in the Case, that they can hold to for Evidence, and Proof against my Lords the Bishops, but the Writing; and that is apparent to have been in Surrey, or otherwise they must hold that the Answer to the King's Question, this is my Hand, is a Publication. But truly, my Lord, I think neither of these will do: But my Lord, to me this is a great Evidence in itself against the Proof of a Publication, the Care and Wariness that has been used, that there should be nothing at all of this Matter known, from the time that it was written, to the time that they came to be examined and summoned to appear as Offenders. My Lord, the Nature of Libels is to publish publish and proclaim Scandal and Defamation, or else it loses its End, and consequently its Name: This, as it stands upon their Evidence, is a monstrous Proof for my Lords the Bishops, against the King's Council; for it seems, 'tis a very private Matter, so cautiously and warily carried, that there is not any Evidence of the Fact, but only the Names of the Persons that writ it, till they come to be examined by the greatest Authority, Is this your Hand? and then they own it so to be; how can this be taken to be a Publication? and it will be a thing of wonderful Consequence, if an Answer to a Question put by Authority, should amount to a Crime, as it would in this Case; that would be as if Authority that should be employed to do Right, would be turned to do the greatest Wrong; for it is the Duty of all Men to answer when examined by a lawful Authority, and it would never be offered at sure in any other Case: If a Man comes before a Magistrate, and confesses any thing, that indeed is Evidence, but is not a Crime; for there is a great deal of difference between Evidence and the Crime; but that this should be both an Evidence and a Crime too, is, I think, a very strange Construction; and for the other part (the writing of it) I suppose the Court is satisfied that it was in another County.

Sir Geo. Treby. I desire your Lordship to spare me a Word, which I think has not been observed by the Council that have spoke before. The Question that remains, is, Whether my Lords the Bishops did Publish this Paper? This is a matter of Fact that lies upon the Prosecutors to prove. Now I think they are so far from having proved that the Bishops did publish it, that on the contrary, they have proved that their Lordships did not Publish it. The Evidence they have offered for this matter is a Confession. This Confession is testified by Mr. Blathwayt, and he says the Bishops were ask'd at the Council whether they did subscribe and publish this paper, and that their answer was that they did subscribe but not publish it.

Now a Confession must be taken together, and must be admitted to be intirely true by them that produce it; they shall never be allowed to take out and use one piece, and wave the rest.

Why then by this Evidence of Confession, taken as it ought, it appears that the Bishops (though they did subscribe) did not publish the paper. So that, I say, the King's Council have hereby plainly proved that the Bishops did not publish this paper, and yet this is the only Evidence upon which they would infer that they did publish it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look you, it does lie upon you Gentlemen to prove it was done elsewhere than in Middlesex.

Mr. Finch. Sure Mr. Attorney is in jest.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, I am in good earnest, all the proof that we have given has been in Middlesex, and you can best tell whether you did it in Middlesex or no.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we have done as to this Objection; for we say they have not proved their Case.

L. C. J. Mr. Finch you may observe (and I am sure you do observe as well as any body in all Cases,) but I say you may observe that they are off of every thing but causing it to be published; now that does lie upon the King's Council to prove, that my Lords the Bishops did cause it to be published, for their owning their Hands does not amount to a Publication.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. My Lord, We are upon this point with them, whether here be any Evidence of a Publication at all.

Mr. J. Powell. Pray let us clear this first; for if there be no Publication, there can be no causing of it to be published.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if you think fit, we shall go on and reserve this point till afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They may make Objections, if they think fit.

L. C. J. So they may, and they say if these Objections are with us, we need go no farther.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. But, my Lord, if they be not with us, we have a reserve to give a farther Answer to it, and to offer Evidence against the Evidence they have offered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. With all our Hearts, give in Evidence what you can.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then pray my Lord let us go on to answer this Objection.

L. C. J. Pray do Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord and Gentlemen of the Jury, I would first observe how far we have gone. That there was such a paper written is clear beyond all Question, and written by my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and that it was signed by the rest of the Bishops, but not in the County of Middlesex, and that this paper was published is agreed on all hands.

Mr. Jus. Holloway. No, they do not agree that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do I say it was published by them? but there was such a Paper published.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. No, we say it was never published at all.

L. C. J. Pray Brother Pemberton be quiet, if Mr. Attorney in opening does say any thing that he ought not to say, I will correct him, as I would do any body that does not open things right as they are proved, but pray don't you that are at the Bar interrupt one another, it is unbecoming Men of your Profession to be chopping in and snapping at one another——Go on Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. I say, that the Paper is proved to be written and signed by my Lords the Bishops, that I take for granted, and that the Paper so signed and written is now published to the World, is also evident; but the Question is who it was done by, or who caused it to be done, we are reduced to that Question: Now, first, it is agreed on all hands, that if I send a Letter to a private Man containing Scandalous things in it, though there is no proof more, but that it was sent sealed, and received by the party, in that Case it was a fault punishable in the Star-Chamber, as a Crime; but now that this was received by the King, and written by them, there is no room for doubt; for you hear it was produced by the King at the Council-Board, and they asked upon it, if it were their Hands? that the King did receive it, there is no room for question, or that they did write it; but the question is, from whom the King had it? I am sure they must shew that some body else did it; and unless they do show that, I hope there is no manner of question, but it came from them, and they did it; though no Man Living knew any thing of this matter, but whom they thought fit to communicate it to; yet still they putting the King upon the the necessity of shewing this Power in order to his obtaining satisfaction for it, or else he must remain under the indignity without reparation, it ought to be put upon them to clear the Fact; for if he does not produce it, then must the King put up the highest injury and affront, that perhaps a Man can give the King to his face, by delivering a Libel into his own hands; and if he does produce it, then say they, that is not our publication, we prove it to be your writing and signing, and we prove it to come from the hand of the King against whom it was composed, for we say it is a Libel against his Majesty, his Government and Prerogative; if then, all those cases that have been cited be Law, then sure there never was a stronger case in the World than this; and I hope the Law goes a little farther in the case of the King, than it does in the case of a private Man; no Man must think by policy to give private wounds to the Government, and disparage the Administration of it, and then when he is called in question about it, says he, pray prove that I published it, or else you shall not punish me for it, we prove you framed it and writ it and signed it, and we prove it came to the King's hand, of whom it was composed, must we produce two Witnesses of the delivery of it to the King? Surely there will be no need of any thing of that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have reduced it now to a very narrow question, for (as Mr. Attorney has said) my Lord, there is no doubt but that my Lords the Bishops are the Authors of this Paper, there is no doubt but they signed it, and there is no doubt but that their signing of it, though it were at Lambeth (as they say) is a publishing of it, but however this is plain and manifest, that this Paper was published, and that this was published in Middlesex, this is as plain too; now then there is nothing left but this question, whether my Lords the Bishops who framed the thing, who wrote the thing, who signed the thing, were not the occasion or cause of its publication, or privy or consenting to it; my Lord, I will reduce it to a very plain point; for we are upon a rational question, before a rational Court, and a rational Jury, whether these Lords did all of them in the County of Surry, consent to the publishing of this Paper in Middlesex; for it is published in Middlesex, (that we see,) and if they are guilty of that part of the Information, of causing it to be published, now what do they say to it, say they, it is agreed that it is published in Middlesex, but it is not proved to be published by us.

L. C. J. No, they do not say so, they agree it was in Middlesex, but not published.

Mr. J. Powel. Mr. Solicitor, they do agree it was in Middlesex, but not published to be sure, nor by them.

L. C. J. Mr. Solicitor, I'll tell you what they stand upon, they say you ought to prove it to be delivered to the King by the Bishops, or some body employed by them; for upon that went the Resolution that was in Williams's case, that he sent it to the King; but here is no body that proves that it was delivered to the King in this case, so that how it came to the King Non constat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There will be the question between us, whether this be not a publication.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray Mr. Solicitor prove your Case before you argue it.

Vol. III.

L. C. J. First settle what the case is, before you argue it.

Mr. Sol Gen. My Lord, I'll put you the case, here does appear in Middlesex a Paper that is a Libel in it self, and this Libel is proved to be written and formed by these persons, this Libel coming into Middlesex, the question is, whether they are privy to it, I say in point of presumption, it must come from them.

L. C. J. I cannot suppose it, I cannot presume any thing.

Mr. Sol Gen. My Lord, I speak of that which is a common presumption, a natural presumption, what we commonly call a violent presumption, which is a legal presumption, and has always been allowed for Evidence; now whether there be not such a presumption in our Case, as to induce your Lordship and the Jury to believe that it cannot be otherwise, or at least to put the labour upon them, to shew how it came out of their Studies, and how it came to the King's hands, for it is in their power to shew the truth of this matter, how it was, if they do not, the presumption will lie upon them; that the Paper came to the King, that is plain enough, and its coming to the King's hands, is a plain proof of a publication in Middlesex, and who should bring it to the King, but these Gentlemen in whole power it was? there is no Man undertakes to say, he lost it, then what else is to be believed, but that it came from them, I speak of common supposition and belief, they may very well shew it if it were not so; all that we can say in it, is, here is a Paper in Middlesex, this you agreed was once your Paper, and in your power, pray shew what became of it, it lies upon you to clear this doubt.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, there is but this question in the case, the question is not, whether the owning it be a publication, but whether here be any Evidence that they did deliver it to the King; now if they did deliver it to the King, that will be agreed to me to be a publication.

Mr. Just. Holloway. No doubt of it, if you can prove it.

Mr. Recorder. Pray Sir spare me, that they did it you have this Evidence; first, that they were the Authours of this Paper by their own Confession, that this was in the County of Middlesex, and that when they were asked concerning it, they owned it to be their hand Writing; now whether you can in the least question after all this, their delivering of it to the King, or that it came to the King's hands without their knowledge or consent, is that which lies before your Lordship for your Judgment.

L. C. Just. I will ask my Brothers their Opinion, but I must deal truly with you, I think it is not Evidence against my Lords the Bishops.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Truly I think you have failed in your Information, you have not proved any thing against my Lords the Bishops in the County of Middlesex, and therefore the Jury must find them not guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. I'll put you but one case my Lord, a Man has an opportunity secretly to deliver a Libel into the King's hands, when no Body is by, and so there can be no proof of the delivery.

Mr. Just. Powel. 'Tis a dangerous thing Mr. Attorney on the other side, to convict People of Crimes without proof.

H h h h h

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. But shall a Man be permitted thus to affront the King, and there be no way to punish it?

L. C. Just. Yes, there will sure, but it will be a very strange thing if we should go and presume that these Lords did it, when there is no sort of Evidence of it; 'tis that which I do assure you I cannot do, we must proceed according to Evidence and forms and methods of Law, they may think what they will of me, but I always declare my mind according to my Conscience.

Mr. S. Trinder. But as to that other point whether their owning of it be a publication, has not been particularly spoke to.

L. C. Just. Mr. Attorney, and Mr. Solicitor, if there were enough to raise doubt in the Court, so as to leave it to the Jury, I would sum up the Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we know it is with the Court, these Lords insisted upon it, that it was a great while in their hands, but it seems as far as our Evidence has gone hitherto, their Confession went no farther than that it was their Paper, and we must not extend their Confession further than it was; but I think we shall offer a fair Evidence that they did deliver it in the County of Middlesex.

L. C. Just. Indeed, indeed, you ought to have gone to this, Mr. Solicitor, before the Court gave their Opinions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray call Mr. Blathwayt again.

Mr. Blathwayt called.

L. C. Just. Mr. Solicitor, unless you are sure that Mr. Blathwayt is a Witness to the publication, 'tis but spending the Courts time to no purpose to call him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are sure of nothing, my Lord, but we must make use of our Witnesses, according to our Instructions in our Briefs.

Then Mr. Blathwayt appeared.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Blathwayt you were sworn before.

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. You were present when this Paper or Petition was delivered by the King, at the Council-Board.

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, I was so Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember any thing of the Bishops acknowledging their delivery of it to the King?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Blathwayt I would ask you, was there any mention of discourse with my Lords the Bishops, how that Paper came into the King's hands, was there any mention of what it was done for, upon the account of Religion or how?

Mr. Blathwayt. I don't remember any thing of that Mr. Solicitor, at which there was a great Laughter.

L. C. Just. Pray let us have no laughing, it is not decent, can't all this be done quietly without noise? pray Mr. Blathwayt let me ask you, do you remember there was any discourse how that writing came into the King's hands?

Mr. Blathwayt. I received it from the King's hands, and I know it was presented to him by my Lords the Bishops.

L. C. Just. How do you know it was presented to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. I heard the King say so several times.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray mind my question Sir, first I ask you who produced the Paper at the Council-Table?

Mr. Blathwayt. The King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What said the Bishops when that Paper was shewed them?

Mr. Blathwayt. Then (as I remember) they were asked, whether that was the Paper that they delivered to the King?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then what said the Bishops?

Mr. Blathwayt. They at first scrupled to answer, and they said it might be made use of to their prejudice if they owned it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Blathwayt consider again, was that the question put to my Lords the Bishops, whether that was the Paper that was presented by them to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. I do think, to the best of my remembrance, that my Lord Chancellor did ask them to that purpose, I cannot speak to the very words.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And upon this, what answer did they make?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lords the Bishops scrupled to answer the first and second time (as I told you before) but they did own it was the Petition that they presented to the King, to the best of my remembrance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Archbishop do any thing to own it?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, both my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury and the rest of the Bishops did own all the same thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was this done at Whitehall?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, at the Council-Table.

L. C. Just. Pray recollect your self, and consider what you say, did they own that that was the Paper they delivered to the King?

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Pray my Lord give us leave to ask a question to clear this matter, was the question put to them, Whether it was the Paper that they delivered, or whether it were their hands that were to it?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I do not exactly recollect the words.

L. C. Just. But pray tell us, if you can, what the question was?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I do not remember the very words, but I think if Mr. Serjeant Pemberton be pleased to repeat his question, I shall give him a satisfactory answer, as well as I can.

Mr. Serj. Pemb. Sir, that which I ask you is this, Whether the question that was put to my Lords the Bishops at that time was, Whether this was the Paper that they deliver'd to the King, or whether those were their Hands that were to it?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I did always think that it was a plain Case, that that was the Paper that they deliver'd to the King; and my Lords the Bishops did never deny but that they gave it to the King, and I had it from the King's hands.

L. C. Just. But we must know from you (if you can tell us) what the question was that was put to my Lords the Bishops, were they asked, Whether those were their hands that were to that paper, or was it Whether they delivered that paper to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. As to the first part, that they owned 'twas their hands, that I am sure of; but as to the other, I do not remember what the words were.

At which there was a great Shout.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Blathwayt recollect your self, you say the King produced it.

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember that the King

King asked them any question upon the producing of it?

Mr. Blathwait. My Lord Chancellour asked them, if those were not their Hands to the Petition.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any other matter in discourse, whether that was the paper that was delivered by them to the King?

Mr. Blathwait. I cannot so positively say, what were the words that my Lord Chancellor used.

Mr. S. Levinz. Pray do not twist a man so, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you are not to untwist a man neither, Mr. Serjeant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember that the King said any thing of the paper being delivered to him?

Mr. Blathwait. The King has said it several times, I believe I have heard him say it ten times at least.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he say it at that time?

Mr. Blathwait. I cannot positively say that he did, Sir.

Mr. S. Pemberton. He cannot answer it, why will you press it?

Mr. Blathwait. My Lord, here is the Clerk of the Council that was then in waiting, he took minutes, and perhaps can remember more than I.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here they cry he cannot answer it, as if they could tell what he can answer better than himself; pray Mr. Bridgman, was there any question to this purpose either from my Lord Chancellor, or from the King, whether that was the Paper that was presented by my Lords the Bishops, or delivered to the King, for I see you are very nice as to words, and you do very well; but was there not a question to that purpose?

Mr. Bridgman. Sir, I do not remember, for I speak to the best of my remembrance in all this matter; I say, I do not remember that that question was asked in those very words, but I do remember something was said to that purpose, but by whom I cannot particularly say.

Sir Robert Sawyer. To what purpose?

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is very strange that they won't let the Witness speak, but are continually interrupting him.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Solicitor, no body interrupts him.

L. C. J. Why do not I behave my self between you all as I ought to do? pray, Sir Robert Sawyer, sit down, you cannot be contented when the man does you no harm.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray consider, did my Lords the Bishops say any thing, or was there any discourse concerning the Paper, whether it was delivered to the King or no?

Mr. Bridgman. Mr. Solicitor, I have told you as near as I can what I do remember; I know not by whom it was said, but that question or to that purpose was asked, whether that was the Petition they delivered, but I do not remember whether the question was directly asked or answered, there was something about it, and several passages there were; but whether spoken by my Lord Chancellor or who, I cannot remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say there was that which sufficiently denoted a question to that purpose, and they said nothing against it.

Mr. Bridgman. No, there was no denial of it.

Vol. III.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I see you do not remember the particular, nor do we desire it of you.

Mr. Bridgman. They did not deny it nor confess it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then in your apprehension did they own that they delivered that Paper to the King?

L. C. J. You must not ask that Mr. Solicitor, it is not a fair question to ask him what he apprehended.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He said it before himself.

L. C. J. But his apprehensions are no Evidence, and it is a sort of a leading question which we must not allow of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then if your Lordship do not it like, I will not ask it, but I will ask him another question.

L. C. J. Ay, ten if you will, so they be fair ones.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it upon the first or second time of their being examined?

Mr. Bridgman. I cannot tell, it was not the first time, all of it, I believe; for at the first time my Lords the Bishops made some scruple of answering or owning any thing, and whatsoever they owned, they said, they hoped it should not be made use of to their prejudice; I remember no reply that was made, nor any thing farther, only my Lord Chancellor said, they were not to capitulate with their Prince; but they were required to answer the questions that were asked them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What were those questions?

Mr. Bridgman. I have told you already as well as I can remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But did you take it upon the main that they owned the delivery of that paper to the King?

Mr. Just. Powel. Mr. Solicitor, you have been told you are to ask no such questions.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Nor never was there such wire-drawing of a Witness in this World before.

L. C. J. Pray sit still, Sir Robert Sawyer, you are not to teach us what we are to do, Mr. Solicitor must ask questions that are proper for him and not such as these; but the Court must correct him and not you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Bridgman is very cautious, and he is to be commended for it, but we would get the truth out of him, if we could; pray Sir, if you can remember, recollect your self, whether by any question to that purpose, it was believed that they did own the delivery of the Paper to the King.

Mr. Bridgman. I told you, Mr. Solicitor, as to that at first, that I do not remember the very words of the question, but I believe there was no body doubted that that was not the Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You speak well in your way, but these Gentlemen are very unwilling you should tell your opinion.

L. C. J. His opinion is no Evidence, therefore you must not ask any such questions, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Bridgman. As soon as the Petition was delivered, within a few hours after, I saw it, the King shewed it to several people, and he said, it was the Petition the Bishops had delivered, he took it into his own custody, and afterwards commanded me to write a Copy of it, and there was no Copy made of it but that one, but notwithstanding that, I do remember I did see a Copy of the Petition, within a day day or two after it was presented, about the Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray how many days was this before the discourse in Council upon their Examination?

Mr. Bridgman. How many days was what, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. When the King gave the Paper to be copied.

Mr. Bridgman. It was upon the Sunday.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But you say (as you believe) it was in a few hours after the Paper was delivered to the King, that you did see it?

Mr. J. Powel. But what makes him say that this was delivered to the King, but only hear-say?

L. C. J. Pray Mr. Solicitor, will you produce that which is Evidence, and not spend our time in that which is not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I would make no more of it than it is.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. 'Tis a shameful thing to offer such things in a Court of Justice.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. 'Tis a practice that ought not to be endured.

L. C. J. Pray Brothers be quiet, or I'll turn him loose upon you again, if you'll not be quiet; what is the matter? cannot you let us alone? we shall do every body right: come, to shorten this matter, I ask you but this one question, and that may satisfy any one that has common honesty about him; do you remember whether or no they were asked, if that was the Petition that they delivered to the King?

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord, I have answered that question as directly as I can, I do not positively remember that that was the question.

L. C. J. Mr. Solicitor General, you must be satisfied, when proper questions are fairly answered, and therefore pray be quiet.

Mr. Att. Gen. However we pray we may ask the Clerks of the Council, it may be they may remember more—Sir John Nicholas you were at the Council-Table that day my Lords the Bishops were examined about this Paper.

Sir John Nicholas. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did you observe that the King produced the Petition?

Sir John Nicholas. No indeed, I did not see it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe any thing that passed there in discourse?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you observe any questions that were asked the Bishops, either by the King or by my Lord Chancellor?

Sir John Nicholas. I think my Lord Chancellor did ask them, if that was their hands to the Petition, and they owned it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember whether they owned, that they delivered that Paper to the King?

L. C. J. I'll ask you, Sir John Nicholas, did my Lord Chancellor ask them this question, is this the Petition you delivered to the King?

Sir John Nicholas. I do not remember that.

Then there was a great shout.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here's wonderful great rejoicing that truth cannot prevail.

Mr. S. Pemberton. No, Mr. Solicitor, Truth does prevail.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are all very glad that Truth is stifled, Mr. Serjeant.

Mr. S. Trinder. Pray Sir John Nicholas, let me ask you one question, was there any discourse about delivering that Petition to the King?

Sir John Nicholas. Indeed I do not remember it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is Mr. Pepy's, we'll examine him.

Mr. Pepy's sworn.

L. C. J. Come I'll ask the questions, were you bye at the Council-Board when my Lords the Bishops were committed?

Mr. Pepy's. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. What were the questions that were asked either by the King or by my Lord Chancellor?

Mr. Pepy's. My Lord, I would remember as well as I could, the very words, and the very words of the question were (I think) my Lords, do you own this Paper? I do not remember any thing was spoken about the delivering, but I believe it was understood by every body at the Table, that that was the Paper that they had delivered.

L. C. J. Well, have you done now? But to satisfy you I'll ask this question, was this question asked, my Lords was this the Paper you delivered to the King?

Mr. Pepy's. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Sir, do you remember whether the King himself asked the question?

Mr. Pepy's. You mean I suppose Mr. Attorney that these were the words, or something that imported their delivering it to the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Pepy's. Truly I remember nothing of that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you observe any discourse concerning their delivery of it to the King?

Mr. Pepy's. Indeed Mr. Solicitor I do not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mr. Musgrave.

Mr. Musgrave Sworn.

L. C. J. You hear the question Sir, what say you to it?

Mr. Musgrave. My Lord, I will give as short an account of it as I can, the first time after his Majesty had produced the Petition and it was read at the Board, his Grace my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury and the other six Reverend Lords the Bishops were called in, and it was asked of them, if they owned that, or if it was their hands, my Lord Archbishop in the name of the rest, did decline answering, upon the account that they were there as Criminals, and were not obliged to say any thing to their own prejudice, or that might hurt them hereafter; but if his Majesty would command them, and if he would promise that no advantage should be made of whatsoever they confessed, then they would answer the question; his Majesty made no answer to that, but only said he would do nothing but what was according to Law, whereupon the Bishops were ordered to withdraw, and being called in a second time the Petition was shewn to them, and they were asked if they did own it, or if it was their hands, and I think my Lord Archbishop did say then, we will rely upon your Majesty, or some such general thing was said, and then they did all own it that it was their hands, I cannot say the Petition was read to them.

Mr. Just. Powel. Mr. Blathwait (as I remember) said it was the third time.

Mr. Musgrave. It was the second time (to the best of my remembrance)

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pray Sir, was there any question to this purpose? is this the Paper you delivered to the King?

Mr. Musgrave. I do not remember that ever any such direct question was asked.

Mr. J. Allybone. But (as my Brother Pemberton did very well before distinguish) there is a great deal of difference between the owning the subscription of a Paper, and between the owning of that Paper, Mr. Pepy's did say that they did own the Paper, and upon my Word that will look very much like a Publication.

Mr. Musgrave. I remember, my Lord, there was at the same time a question asked, because several Copies had gone about the Town, whether they had published it, and my Lord Archbishop did say, he had been so cautious that he had not admitted his own Secretary, but writ it all himself, and the rest of the Bishops did say, they did not publish it, nor never gave any Copies of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord (I confess) now it is to be left to the Jury upon this point, whether there not being a positive Witness that was by when the thing was done, yet upon this Evidence the Jury can't find any otherwise, than that the thing was done; truly I think we must leave it as a strong case for the King, I could have wished indeed for the satisfaction of every body, that the proof would have come up to that, but we must make it as strong for the King upon the Evidence given as it will bear; now my Lord, take all this whole matter together, here is a Paper composed, framed, and written by seven learned Men, and this must be written by such Persons, sure for some purpose; it is directed as a Petition to the King, and this Petition did come to the hands of the King, (for the King produces it in Council,) and my Lord Archbishop and the rest of the Bishops owned their hands to it, then the question is, my Lord, whether or no there be any room for any body living to doubt in this case that this was not delivered by my Lords the Bishops to the King, though it be not a conclusive Evidence of a positive Fact, yet unless they shew something on the other side, that may give way for a supposition to the contrary, that it came out of their hands by surprise, or that any body else delivered it to the King without their knowledge or consent; here must needs be a very violent presumption, that they did do it; and when nothing of that is said on their side, can any Jury upon their Consciences say that it was not published by them? and it being found in Middlesex, though it might be written and composed in Surrey, yet surely we have given a convincing Evidence that either they published it or caused it to be published in Middlesex.

Pray call Mr. Grayham.

Cryer. He is gone out of the Hall.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, there is in Law a presumption that is Evidence, though there be no positive proof.

Sir Robert Sawyer. But not in an Information for a Libel.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is a meer question of Fact, there is no difficulty in the Law of it at all, for it is plain, if these Lords or any of them did consent and agree to the publishing of this Paper in Middlesex, they are guilty of this Information, and whether they are guilty or not guilty, we do rely upon the Circumstances proved, which are violent; First, that they were the Men that contrived and set their hands to it, and so were the Authors of it is undeniable; for they have owned it. Men of their learning and parts never did any such thing in vain; and then that they were concerned in the publishing of it in Middlesex, we offer for proof that which was said by Mr. Pepy's and Mr. Blathwait, who though they do not come directly and expressly to the formal words of such a question, yet they tell you, especially Mr. Blathwait, that they did apprehend it, and it was the Collection of all their thoughts, and they took it for granted, as a thing that every body was satisfied in, that they did deliver that Paper to the King. I must confess and agree there is no proof of the delivery of it by my Lords the Bishops to the King, but we know very well, that it is no wonder, when a Paper is Libellous, that Men should use all the skill they can to publish it with impunity, and this is a thing that was done after some time of Premeditation and serious Consultation; for it was some days after the Order for reading the Declaration was published, that this was framed and delivered, and it concerned them to be wary, (as it seems they have been) but take this altogether, my Lord, the Paper being found in the King's Hands, it is in these Persons Power, and it lies upon them to make it out plain, what became of this Paper, which once lay in their own Hands and Custody; they can give an Account of it, they can give Light unto it: If they do not, I shall submit to the Jury, whether this is not sufficient Evidence to Convict them, especially when being examined, they did not make that their Excuse, they never said, this Paper indeed we signed, but we did not intend to publish it, we intended to stifle it; that had been some excuse: But for them to say now, they did not present it to the King, I must submit to the Jury, whether they will believe upon this Evidence, that these Lords the Bishops did present it, or cause it to be presented to the King, then they are guilty of this Matter: And I leave it to them and their Consciences, what they will think upon the whole.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, if your Lordship please—

L. C. J. What, again? Well, go on Sir Bartholomew Shore, if we must have a Speech—

Mr. Recorder. Nay, my Lord, I would not trespass upon your Lordship

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, here is an Information against my Lords the Bishops; I think I need not trouble my self to open all of it, because I see you are Men of Understanding, Men of great Diligence, and have taken Notes your selves some of you; therefore, I say, only something of the Proof that is required in such a Case, and of the manner of the Proof that has been given in this Case, and then tell you my Opinion in Point of Law. Here is an Information brought by Mr. Attorney General on behalf of the King, against these Reverend Fathers of the Church, the Archbishop and the rest; and it is for publishing a Seditious Libel, under the pretence of a Petition, in which are contained the words that are seen. Gentlemen, the Information is long, it tells you, That the King, out of his Gracious Clemency to all his Loving Subjects, and for other Considerations, had thought fit to publish a Declaration of Indulgence, that all his Loving Subjects might have Liberty of Conscience, upon the 4th of April, in the 3d Year of his Reign; and that this was set forth by the the King; and that the King of his farther Grace, about the 27th of April then next following—

Mr. Finch. I humbly beg your Lordships Favour.

L. C. J. What say you, Mr. Finch?

Mr. Finch. I ask your Pardon for breaking in upon you when you are directing the Jury: I know I should not do it, but I hope you will not be angry with me for it.

L. C. J. If I thought you did any Service to your Client, I should willingly hearken to you.

Mr. Finch. That which I humbly offer to your Lordship, is only to remember your Lordship where we were.

L. C. J. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Finch. I would only say this, my Lord, the Question is, Whether this be Evidence, or no?

L. C. J. I am sorry, Mr. Finch, you have that Opinion of me, as to think I should not leave it fairly to the Jury.

Mr. Finch. I only speak it, my Lord, because if it be Evidence, we have other Matters to offer in Answer to that Evidence, and in our own Defence.

L. C. J. If you have more to offer, why did you conclude here, and let me begin to direct the Jury? but since you say you have other Matter to offer, we will hear it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, we submit to your Lordships direction.

L. C. J. No, no, you do not, you say you have further Matter to offer.

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, we shall rest it here.

L. C. J. No, no, I will hear Mr. Finch; Go on, my Lords the Bishops shall not say of me, I would not hear their Council; I have been already told of being Council against them, and they shall never say that I would not hear their Council for them.

Mr. S. Levinz. My Lord, we beseech your Lordship go on with your Directions; for all that Mr. Finch said, was only that this was not sufficient Evidence.

L. C. J. No, Brother, he says you have a great deal more to offer, and I will not refuse to hear him; the Court will think there was something more than ordinary, therefore I will hear him, such a Learned Man as he shall not be refused to be heard by me, I'll assure you; Why don't you go on Mr. Finch?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I beg your pardon for interrupting you; but all that I was going to say, would have amounted to no more than this, that there being no Evidence against us, we must of course be acquitted.

Mr. Just. Holloway. My Lord did intend to have said as much as that I dare say.

L. C. J. Well, Gentlemen of the Jury, we have had Interruption enough—

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I must beg your Pardon for interrupting you now; and I am very glad these Gentlemen have given us this Occasion, because we shall now be able to clear this Point. There is a Fatality in some Causes, my Lord, and so there is in this, we must beg your Patience for a very little while; for we have notice that a Person of very great Quality is coming, that will make it appear, that they made their Addresses to him, that they might deliver it to the King.

L. C. J. Well—You see what comes of the Interruption, Gentlemen, now we must stay—

—Then there was a Pause for near half an hour.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, put the Case that a Man writes a Libel in one County, and it is found in another, is not he answerable, unless he can shew something that may satisfy the Jury how it came there?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ought he not to give an account what became of it?

L. C. J. No: look you Mr. Attorney, you must look to your Information, and then you will find the Case that you put, does not come up to it; It is for Writing, Composing and Publishing, and causing to be published, and all this is laid in Middlesex; Now you have proved none of all these things to be done in the County.

Mr. Att. Gen. They did in Middlesex confess it was theirs.

L. C. J. Ay, but the owning their Hands is not a publication in Middlesex, and so I should have told the Jury.

Mr. Finch. I beg your Lordship's pardon for interrupting you.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, my Lord, does it not put the Proof upon them, to prove how it came out of their Hands into the King's Hands?

L. C. J. No, the Proof lies on your part.

Mr. Pollixfen. Pray, my Lord, give us your favour to dismiss us and the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, our Witnesses will be here presently.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sure, my Lord, the Presumption is on our side.

Mr. J. Powel. No, the Presumption is against you, for my Lord Archbishop lived in Surry; and it is proved was not out of Lambeth-House since Michaelmas, till he came before the Council.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, good my Lord, we stand mightily uneasy here, and so do the Jury, pray dismiss us.

L. C. J. I cannot help it, it is your own Fault.

—Then there was another great Pause.

L. C. J. Sir Bartho. Shore, now we have time to hear your Speech, if you will.

Mr. Pollixfen. My Lord, there is no Body come, nor I believe will come.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, he will come presently, we have had a Messenger from him.

[Call Mr. Graham.]

Cryer. He is gone, and said he would come presently.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, he will bring our Witnesses with him.

—Then there was another Pause.

Mr. S. Pemb. My Lord, this is very unusual to stay thus for Evidence.

L. C. J. It is so; but I am sure you ought not to have any Favour—Mr. Solicitor, Are you assured that you shall have this Witness that you speak of?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, my Lord, he will be here presently.

L. C. J. We have staid a great while already, and therefore it is fit that we should have some Oath made that he is coming.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Cryer tells you, that Mr. Graham did acquaint him, that he would return presently.

L. C. J. Give him the Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Let your Left-hand give your Right-hand the Oath.

The Cryer sworn.

L. C. Just. By the Oath that you have taken, did Mr. Graham tell you, there was any further Witness coming in this Case?

Cryer. Yes, my Lord, he did; he went out of the Hall, and returned when your Lordship was directing the Jury, and he asked me what the Court were upon? and I told him you were directing the Jury, and then he said my Lord Sunderland was a coming, but he would go and prevent him; and afterwards he returned and finding your Lordship did not go on to direct the Jury, he said he would go again for my Lord Sunderland, whom he had sent away, and he is now gone for him, and he said he would bring him with him presently.

L. C. Just. Well then, we must stay till the Evidence for the King comes, for now there is Oath made that he is coming.

— And after a considerable pause the Lord President came.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we must pray that my Lord President may be sworn in this Case, on behalf of the King.

The Lord President sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with your Lordship's favour, I would ask my Lord President a Question; Your Lordship remembers where we left this Cause; we have brought it to this Point, That this Petition came to the King's Hands, that it is a Petition written by my Lord Archbishop, and subscribed by the rest of my Lords the Bishops, but there is a Difficulty made, whether this Petition thus prepared and written was by them delivered to the King, and whether my Lords the Bishops were concerned in the doing of it, and were privy or Parties to the Delivery: Now that which I would ask your Lordship my Lord President, is, Whether they did make their Application to your Lordship to speak to the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did they make their Application to your Lordship upon any account whatsoever?

L. President. My Lord, my Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, and my Lord Bishop of Chichester came to my Office, and told me, they came in the Names of my Lord Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and four others of their Brethren and themselves, with a Petition which they desired to deliver to his Majesty, and they did come to me to know which was the best way of doing it, and whether the King would give them leave to do it or not? they would have had me read their Petition, but I refused it, and said; I thought it did not at all belong to me, but I would let the King know their desire, and bring them an Answer immediately, what his pleasure was in it; which I did, I acquainted the King, and he commanded me to let my Lords the Bishops know, they might come when they pleased, and I went back and told them so, upon which they went and fetch'd the rest of the Bishops, and when they came, immediately they went into the Bed-Chamber, and into another Room where the King was: this is that I know of the matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. About what time was this, pray, my Lord?

L. President. I believe there could not be much time between my coming from the King, and their fetching their Brethren, and going in to the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They were with the King that day.

L. President. Yes, they were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was this before they appeared in Council?

L. President. Yes, it was several days before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then I think now, my Lord, the matter is very plain.

Mr. Just. Allibone. Did they acquaint your Lordship that their business was to deliver a Petition to the King?

L. President. Yes, they did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And they would have had my Lord read it (he says.)

Mr. Att. Gen. And this was the same day that they did go in to the King.

L. President. The very same day, and I think the same hour, for it could not be much longer.

L. Ch. Just. Now it is upon you truly, it will be presumed to be the same unless that you prove that you delivered another—Pray, my Lord, did you look into the Petition?

L. President. No, I refused it, I thought it did not concern me.

Mr. Just. Powel. Did you see them deliver it to the King, my Lord?

L. President. I was not in the Room when it was delivered.

Mr. Just. Powel. They did open their Petition to your Lordship, did they?

L. President. They offered me to read it, but I did refuse.

L. C. Just. Will you ask my Lord President any Question, you that are for the Defendants?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then my Lord, we must beg one thing for the sake of the Jury, if your Lordship can turn your self a little this way, and deliver the Evidence you have given over again that they may hear it.

L. President. My Lord, I will repeat it as near as I can, I think I shall not vary the Sense: The Bishops of St. Asaph and Chichester came to my Office, I do not know just the day when, but it was to let me know, that they came in the Name of the Arch-bishop and four other of their Brethren—Is it necessary I should name them?

L. C. Just. Do it, my Lord, if you can.

L. President. They were the Bishops of Ely, Bath and Wells, Bristol, and Peterborough; they came to let me know, in the Name of the Arch-bishop, those four and themselves, that they had a Petition to deliver to the King, if he would give them leave; and desired to know of me which was the best way to do it. I told them I would know the King's Pleasure, and bring them word again: they offered me their Petition to read, but I did not think it fit for me to do it, and therefore I refused and would not read it, but I went immediately to the King, and acquainted his Majesty with it, and he commanded me to let them know they might come when they would, which I immediately did, they said they would go and speak with some of their Brethren that were not far off; in the mean time I gave order that they should be admitted when they came, and they did in a little time return, and went first into the Bed-Chamber, and then into the Room where the King was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And this was before they came and appeared at the Council.

L. President. Yes it was.

Mr.

Mr. Pollixfen. Your Lordship did not read any thing of the Petition?

L. President. No, Sir, I did not, I refused it.

Mr. Pollixfen. Nor does your Lordship know what Petition they did deliver to the King?

L. President. I did not know any thing of it from them then.

L. C. J. Now you may make your Observations upon this two hours hence; now we shall hear what Mr. Finch had further to offer, I suppose.

Then my Lord President went away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think now it is very plain.

L. C. J. Truly, I must needs tell you, there was a great Presumption before, but there is a greater now, and I think I shall leave it with some effect to the Jury, I cannot see but that here is enough to put the Proof upon you: they came to the Lord President, and asked him how they might deliver a Petition to the King, he told them he would go see what the King said to it; they would have had him read their Petition, but he refused it; he comes and tells them the King said they might come when they would; then those two that came to my Lord President went and gathered up the other four (the Archbishop indeed was not there) but they six came, and my Lord President gave Direction they should be let in, and they did go into the Room where the King was; now this, with the King's producing the Paper, and their owning it at the Council, is such a Proof to me, as I think will be Evidence to the Jury of the Publication.

Mr. Pollixfen. Then my Lord thus far they only can go, the Archbishop was not there, and so there is no Evidence against him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. As to the Writing, we have given Proof against him, for it is all his Hand.

Mr. Pollixfen. That still is in another County, and there is nothing proved to be done by my Lord Archbishop in Middlesex; and next, for the other six Lords, my Lord President does not say that this is the Petition that they said they had to deliver to the King; nor did he see them deliver any thing to the King, but that is left still doubtful, and under your Judgment, so that it stands upon Presumption, not upon Proof, that this is the same, and left under Consideration.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we will leave it fairly to the Jury upon this Fact.

Mr. Pollixfen. If so, then we desire to be heard in our Defence.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard this Charge which Mr. Attorney has been pleased to make against my Lords the Bishops, and that is this, That they did conspire to diminish the Royal Authority, and Regal Prerogative, Power, and Government of the King, and to avoid the Order of Council, and in prosecution of this, they did falsely, maliciously and seditiously make a Libel against the King, under pretence of a Petition, and did publish the same in the King's Presence.

This, Gentlemen, is a very heinous and heavy Charge; but you see how short their Evidence is; The Evidence they bring forth is only, that my Lords the Bishops presented the Paper to the King in the most private and humble manner they could, that which they have been so many hours a proving, and which they cry up to be as strong an Evidence as ever was given, proves it to be the farthest from Sedition in the doing of it that can be; and you see what it is, it is a Petition to be relieved against an Order of Council, which they conceive they were aggrieved by, they indeed do not deal fairly with the Court nor with us, in that they do not set it forth that it was a Petition.

L. C. J. That was over-ruled before.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. I do not insist upon it now, so much an Exception to the Information, as I do to the Evidence; they set this forth to be a scandalous matter; but it only contains their Reasons, whereby they would satisfy His Majesty why they cannot comply in a Concurrence with His Majesty's Pleasure; and therefore they humbly beseech the King, and beg and request him (as the words of it are) that His Majesty would be pleased not to insist upon their distributing and reading of this Declaration; so the Petitioners on behalf of themselves, and the whole Clergy of England, beg of the King that he would please not to insist upon it.

Gentlemen, you may observe it, that there is nothing in this Petition that contains any thing of Sedition in it, and it would be strange this Petition should be Felo de se, and by one part of it destroy the other, it is laid indeed in the Information, that it was with intent and purpose to diminish the King's Royal Authority, but I appeal to your Lordship, the Court, and the Jury, whether there be any one word in it, that any way touches the King's Prerogative, or any tittle of Evidence that has been given to make good the Charge; It is an Excuse barely for their non-Compliance with the King's Order, and a begging of the King with all Humility and Submission, that he would be pleased not to insist upon the reading of His Majesty's Declaration upon these grounds, because the Dispensing Power upon which it was founded, had been several times in Parliament declared to be against Law, and because it was a Case of that Consequence that they could not in Prudence, Honour or Conscience concur in it.

My Lord; Mr. Attorney has been pleased to charge in this Information, that this is a false, malicious and seditious Libel: both the falsity of it, and that it was malicious and seditious are all Matters of Fact, which with Submission they have offered to the Jury no proof of, and I make no question but easily to demonstrate the quite contrary.

For my Lord, I think it can be no question, but that any Subject that is Comanded by the King to do a Thing which he conceives to be against Law, and against his Conscience, may humbly apply himself to the King, and tell him the Reason why he does not that thing he is commanded to do, why he cannot concur with His Majesty in such a Command.

My Lord, that which Mr. Attorney did insist upon in the beginning of this Day (and he pretended to cite some Cases for it) was, that in this Case, my Lords the Bishops, were not sued as Bishops, nor prosecuted for their Religion: truly, my Lord, I do not know what they are sued for else; the Information is against them as Bishops, it is for an Act they did as Bishops, and no otherwise; and for an Act they did and do conceive they lawfully might do with relation to their Ecclesiastical Polity, and the Government of their People as Bishops.

The next thing that Mr. Attorney offered was, That it was not for a Non-feasance, but for a Feasance; Feasance; it is true, my Lord, it is for a Feasance in making of the Petition, but it was to excuse a Non-feasance, the not reading according to the Order, and this sure was lawful for all the Bishops as Subjects to do; and I shall shew it was certainly the duty of my Lords the Bishops, or any Peer of this Realm to do the same in a like Case. It was likewise said, they were prosecuted here for affronting the Government, and intermeddling with Matters of State; but I beg your Lordship and the Jury to consider, whether there is one tittle of this mentioned in the Petition, or any Evidence given of it; the Petition does not meddle with any thing of any Matter of State, but refers to an Ecclesiastical Matter, to be executed by the Clergy, and to a Matter that has relation to Ecclesiastical Causes; so that they were not Busybodies, or such as meddled in Matters that did not relate to them, but that which was properly within their Sphere and Jurisdiction.

But after all, there is no Evidence, nor any sort of Evidence that is given by Mr. Attorney, that will maintain the least tittle of this Charge; and how he comes to leave it upon this sort of Evidence I cannot tell, all that it amounts to is, That my Lords the Bishops being grieved in this manner, made this Petition to the King in the most private and respectful manner; and for him to load it with such horrid black Epithets, that it was done libellously, maliciously, and scandalously, and to oppose the King and Government, 'tis very hard, 'tis a Case of a very extraordinary Nature, and I believe my Lords the Bishops cannot but conceive a great deal of trouble, that they should lie under so heavy a Charge, and that Mr. Attorney should draw so severe an Information against them, when he has so little Proof to make it out.

My Lord, by what we have to say to it, we hope we shall give your Lordship and the Jury Satisfaction, that we have done but our Duties, supposing here has been a sufficient Evidence of the Fact given, which we leave to your Lordship and the Jury.

My Lord, we say in short, That this Petition is no more than what any Man if he be Comanded to do any thing, might humbly do it, and not be guilty of any Crime: And, my Lord, as to the matter of our Defence, it will consist of these Heads;

First, We shall Consider the Matter of this Petition.

Secondly, The Manner of the delivering it, according as they have given Evidence here; and,

Thirdly, The Persons that have delivered this Petition. And we hope to make it appear, beyond all Question, that the Matter contained in this Petition, is neither false nor contrary to Law, but agreeable to all the Laws of the Land in all Times. We shall likewise shew you (though that appear sufficiently to you already) that the Manner of delivering it was so far from being Seditious, that it was in the most secret and private manner, and with the greatest Humility and Duty imaginable. And then as to the Persons, we shall shew you that they are not such as Mr. Attorney says, who meddle with Matters of State, that are out of their Sphere, but they are Persons concerned, and concerned in Interest in the Case, to make this humble Application to the King. And when we have proved all this Matter, you will see how strangely we are blackned with Titles and Epithets which we no ways deserve, and of which, God be thanked, there is no Proof.

Vol. III.

For, my Lord; for the Matter of the Petition, we shall consider two things.

The First is, The Prayer, which is this, They humbly beg and desire of the King, on behalf of themselves and the rest of the Clergy, that he would not insist upon the Reading and Publishing of this Declaration.

Surely, my Lord, there is nothing of Falsity in this, nor any thing that is contrary to Law, or unlawful for any Man that is pressed to any thing, especially, by an Order of Council; and this is nothing but a Petition against an Order of Council, and if there be an Order that commands my Lords the Bishops, to do a thing that seems grievous to them, surely they may beg of the King that he would not insist upon it.

And for this Matter, they were so well satisfied about it, and so far from thinking that it was any part of a Libel, that they left it out of the Information, and so have made a deformed and absurd Story of it, without Head or Tail, a Petition directed to no Body, and for nothing, it being without both Title and Prayer; so that this is plain, it was lawful to Petition.

Then, my Lord, the next thing is, the Reasons which my Lords the Bishops come to acquaint the King with, why, in Honour and Conscience, they cannot comply with, and give obedience to this Order; and the Reasons, my Lord, are two.

The first Reason that is assigned, is, the several Declarations that have been in Parliament, (several of which are mentioned) that such a Power to dispense with the Law, is against Law; and that it could not be done but by an Act of Parliament, for that is the meaning of the word Illegal, that has no other Signification, but unlawful; the same word in point of Signification with the word Illicite, which they have used in their Information, a thing that cannot be done by Law; and this they are pleased to tell the King, not as declaring their own Judgments, but what has been declared in Parliament; though if they had done the former, they being Peers of the Realm, and Bishops of the Church, are bound to understand the Laws, especially when (as I shall come to shew you) they are made Guardians of these Laws; and if any thing go amiss, and contrary to these Laws; they ought to inform the King of it.

My Lord, the next thing is, Because it is a Thing of so great moment, and the Consequences that will arise from their publishing of this Declaration, and that too, my Lord, (for the latter I shall begin first with) there can be no Question about, or any pretence that this is libellous or false, for certainly it is a Case of the greatest Consequence to the whole Nation that ever was, therefore it cannot be false or libellous to say so.

My Lord, I would not mention this, for I am loth to touch upon things of this Nature, had not the Information it self made it the very Gist of the Charge; for the Information (if there be any thing in it) says, that it was to diminish the King's Prerogative and Regal Power in publishing that Declaration.

Now, my Lord, what the Consequence of this would be, and what my Lords the Bishops meant by saying, It was a Cause of great Moment, will appear, by considering that which is the main Clause in the Declaration, at which my Lords the Bishops scrupled, which is the main Stumbling block to my Lords, and has been to many honest Men besides, and that is this.

I i i i i

' We do likewise declare, It is our Royal Will and Pleasure, that from hence forth the Execution of all and all manner of Penal Laws, in Matters Ecclesiastical, for not coming to Church, or not receiving the Sacrament, or for any other Nonconformity to the Religion Established; or for or by Reason of the Exercise of Religion in any manner whatsoever, be immediately suspended; and the further Execution of the said Penal Laws, and every of them, is hereby suspended.

Here the Lord Chief Justice speaking said;

L. C. Just. I must not suffer this, they intend to dispute the King's Power of suspending Laws.

Mr. Just. Powell. My Lord, they must necessarily fall upon that Point; for if the King hath no such Power, (as clearly he hath not in my Judgment) the natural Consequence will be, that this Petition is no diminution of the King's Regal Power, and so not seditious or libellous.

L. C. Just. Brother, I know you are full of that Doctrine; but however, my Lords the Bishops shall have no occasion to say, that I deny to hear their Council. Brother, you shall have your Will for once, I will hear them, let them talk till they are weary.

Mr. Just. Powell. I desire no greater liberty to be granted them than what in Justice the Court ought to grant, that is, to hear them in defence of their Clients.

under this Clause; and thus all our Laws for keeping the Sabbath, and which distinguish us from Heathens, will be suspended too.

Now, my Lord, this Clause either is of some legal Effect and Signification, or it is not. If Mr. Attorney, or the King's Council, do say it is of no Effect in Law, then there is no harm done, then this Petition does no ways impeach the King's Prerogative. in saying, it has been declared in Parliament, according, as the King's Council do agree the Law to be.

But my Lord, if it have any Effect in Law, and these Laws are suspended by virtue of this Clause in the Declaration, then certainly, my Lord, it is of the most dismal Consequence that can be thought of, and it behoved my Lords, who are the Fathers of the Church, humbly to represent it to the King.

For, my Lord, by this Declaration, and particularly by that Clause in it, not only the Laws of our Reformation, but all the Laws for the preservation of the Christian Religion in general are suspended, and become of no force; if there be such an Effect in Law wrought by this Declaration as is pretended, (that is) that the Obligation of Obedience to them ceaseth, the Reason of it is plain, the words cannot admit of such a Quibble as to pretend, that the Execution of the Law is not the suspending of the Law, and that the suspending the Execution of the Law, is not a suspending of the Law; for we all know the Execution of every Law, in its primary Intent, is Obedience to it, that of the Penalty comes in by way of Punishment and Recompence for their Disobedience.

Now, my Lord, if this Declaration does discharge the King's Subjects from their Obedience to, and the Obligation from those Laws: then pray, my Lord, where are we? Then all the Laws of the Reformation are suspended, and the Laws of Christianity it self, by those latter words, [or for, or by reason of Religion in any manner whatsoever] so that it is not confined to the Christian Religion, but all other Religions are permitted

My Lord, this is such an Inconvenience as (I think) I need name no more; and it is a very natural Consequence from that Clause of the Declaration, it discharges at once all Ministers and Clergymen from performing their Duty in reading the Service of the Church, it discharges their Hearers from attending upon that Service. When a Law is suspended, the Obligation thereof is taken away; and those that before thought themselves bound to obey, now conclude they are not so obliged; and what a mischief that will be to the Church, which is under the Care of my Lords the Bishops, your Lordship will easily apprehend.

These things, my Lord, I only mention, to shew the great and evil Consequences that apparently follow upon such a Declaration, which made my Lords the Bishops decline obeying the Order, and put them under a necessity of applying thus to the King, to acquaint him with the Reasons why they could not comply with his Commands, to read this Declaration to the People, because the Consequences thereof were so great, it tending naturally to lead the People into so great an Error, as to believe those Laws were not in force, when in Truth and Reality they are still in force, and continue to oblige them.

And that being the second Reason in this Petition, I come next to consider it, to wit, that the Parliament had often declared this pretended Power to be Illegal, and for that we shall read the several Records in Parliament mentioned in their Petition, and produce several ancient Records of former Parliaments that prove this Point; and particularly in the Time of Richard the Second, concerning the Statute of Provisors, where there were particular Dispensations for that Statute, the King was enabled to do it by Act of Parliament, and could not do it without.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir Robert Sawyer, go to your Proofs, and reserve your Arguments till afterwards.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, I do but shortly mention these things; so that, my Lord, as to the Matter of this Petition, we shall shew you, that it is true and agreeable to the Laws of the Land.

Then, my Lord, as to the manner of delivering it, I need say no more, but that it is plain from their Evidence, that it was in the most private and humble manner. And, as my Lord President said, Leave was asked of the King, for them to be admitted to present it: Leave was given, and accordingly they did it.

We come then, my Lord, to the third thing, the Persons, these noble Lords; and we shall shew, they are not Busybodies, but in this Matter have done their Duty, and medled with their own Affairs. That, my Lord, will appear,

First, By the general Care that is reposed in them by the Law of the Land: They are frequently in our Books, called the King's Spiritual Judges; they are intrusted with the Care of Souls, and the Superintendency over all the Clergy is their principal Care.

But, besides this, my Lord, there is another special Care put upon them, by the express Words of an Act of Parliament; for, over and above the general Care of the Church, by virtue of their Offices as Bishops, the Act of 1 Eliz. cap. 2. makes them special Guardians of the Law of Uniformity, and of that other Law in His late Majesty's Reign; where all the Clauses of that Statute Statute of 1 Eliz. are revived, and made applicable to the present State of the Church of England: Now in that Statute of 1 Eliz. there is this Clause.

And for the due Execution hereof, the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and all the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, do, in God's Name, earnestly require and charge all the Archbishops, and Bishops, and other Ordinaries, that they do endeavour themselves, to the utmost of their Knowledges, that the due and true Execution hereof may be had throughout their Diocesses and Charges, as they will answer before God, for such Evils and Plagues, wherewith Almighty God may justly punish his People, for neglecting this good and wholesome Law.

This is the Charge that lies upon the Bishops, to take care of the Execution of that Law; and I shall pray by and by, that it may be read to the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That is very well, indeed! To what purpose?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. So that, my Lord, by this Law it is plain, that my Lords the Bishops, upon pain of bringing upon themselves the Imprecation of this Act of Parliament, are obliged to see it executed; and then, my Lord, when any thing comes under their Knowledge, especially if they are to be Actors in it, that has such a tendency to destroy the very Foundations of the Church, as the Suspension of all the Laws that related to the Church must do, it concerns them that have no other Remedy, to address the King, by Petition, about it.

For that, Mr. Attorney, my Lord, has agreed, That if a proper Remedy be pursued in a proper Court, for a Grievance complained of, though there may be many hard Words that else would be scandalous, yet, being in a regular Course, they are no Scandal. And so it is said in Lake's Case, in my Lord Hobart.

My Lord, we must appeal to the King, or we can appeal to no body, to be relieved against an Order of Council, with which we are aggrieved; and it is our Duty so to do, according to the Care that the Law hath placed in us.

Besides, my Lord, the Bishops were commanded by this Order, to do an Act relating to their Ecclesiastical Function, to distribute it to be read by their Clergy: And how could they in Conscience do it, when they thought part of the Declaration was not according to Law?

Pray, my Lord, What has been the reason of His Majesty's consulting of his Judges? And if His Majesty, or any the great Officers, by his Command, are about to do any thing that is contrary to Law, was it ever yet an Offence to tell the King so? I always look'd upon it as the Duty of an Officer or Magistrate, to tell the King what is Law, and what is not Law.

In Cavendish's Case, in the Queen's time, there was an Office granted of the Return of the Writs of Superfedeas in the Court of Common-Pleas; and he comes to the Court, and desires to be put into the Possession of the Office: The Court told him, They could do nothing in it, but he must bring his Affize. He applies to the Queen, and she sends, under the Privy Seal, a Command to sequester the Profits, and to take Security to answer the Profits, as the Judgment of the Law should go: But the Judges there return an Answer, That it was against Law, and they could not do it. Then there comes a second Letter, reciting the former, and commanding their Obedience: The Judges returned for Answer, They were upon their Oaths, and were sworn to keep the Laws, and would not do it.

My Lord, The like was done in the time of my Lord Hobart: We have it reported in Anderson, in a Case where a Prohibition had gone; There came a Message from Court, that a Consultation should be granted; and that was a Matter wherein there were various Opinions, whether it was Ex Necessitate, or Discretionary, but there they return'd, That it was against Law; for any such Message to be sent.

Now here, my Lord; is a Case full as strong: My Lords the Bishops were commanded to do an Act, which they conceived to be against Law, and they declined it, and tell the King the reason; and they have done it in the most humble manner that could be, by way of Petition. If they had done (as the Civil Law terms it) Rescribere generally, that had been lawful; but here they have done it in a more respectful manner, by an humble Petition: If they had said the Law was otherwise, that sure had been no Fault; but they do not so much as that; but they only say, it was so declared in Parliament; and they declare it with all Humility and Dutifulness. So that, my Lord, if we consider the Persons of the Defendants, they have not acted as Busybodies; and therefore, as this Case is; when we have given our Evidence, here will be an answer to all the Implications of Law, that are contained in this Information: For they would have this Petition work by Implication of Law, to make a Libel of it; but by what I have said, it will appear, there was nothing of Sedition, nothing of Malice; nothing of Scandal in it; nothing of the Salt, and Vinegar, and Pepper; that they have put into the Case: We shall prove the Matters that I have open'd for our Defence; and then, I dare say, your Lordship and the Jury will be of Opinion, we have done nothing but our Duty.

Mr. Finch. May it please your Lordship, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, This Information sets forth (as you may observe upon opening it) that the King having, by his Royal Prerogative, set forth his Declarations that have been read, and made an Order of Council for the reading the said Declarations in the Churches; and that the Archbishop and Bishops should severally send them into their Diocesses, to be read; my Lords the Bishops, that are the Defendants, did consult and conspire together to diminish the Kingly Authority, and Royal Prerogative of the King, and his Power and Government in his Regal Prerogative, in setting forth his Declaration; and that, in prosecution of that Conspiracy, they did contrive (as it was laid in the Information) a malicious, seditious, false, and feigned Libel, under pretence of a Petition, and so set forth the Petition; and that they published the Petition in the presence of the King.

To this Charge in the Information, not Guilty being pleaded, the Evidence that hath been given for the King, I know hath been observed by the Court and the Jury, and I know will be taken into Consideration, how far it does come up to the Proof of the Delivery of this Petition by my Lords the Bishops; for all that was said till my Lord President was pleas'd to come, was no Evidence of any Delivery at all; and my Lord President's Evidence is, that they were going to deliver a Petition; but whether they did deliver it, or did it not, or what they did deliver, he does not know. This is all the Evidence that has been given for the King.

But supposing now, my Lord, that there were room to presume that they had delivered this Petition tition set forth in the Information, let us consider what the Question is between the King and my Lords the Bishops: The Question is, Whether they are guilty of Contriving to diminish the King's Regal Authority, and Royal Prerogative, in his Power and Government, in setting forth this Declaration? Whether they are guilty of the making and presenting a malicious, seditious and scandalous Libel; and whether they have published it, as it is said in the Information, in the King's Presence?

So that the Question is not now reduced to this, Whether this Paper, that is set forth in the Information, was delivered to the King by my Lords the Bishops; but whether they have made a malicious and scandalous Libel, with an Intent to diminish the King's Royal Prerogative, and Kingly Authority? And then, if you Gentlemen, should think that there is Evidence given sufficient to prove that my Lords the Bishops have delivered to the King that Paper which is set forth in the Information; yet, unless they have delivered a false, malicious, seditious and scandalous Libel; unless they have published it, to stir up Sedition in the Kingdom; and unless they have contrived this by Conspiracy, to diminish the King's Royal Prerogative and Authority, and that Power that is said to be in the King, my Lords the Bishops are not guilty of this Accusation.

There are in this Declaration several Clauses, which, upon reading of the Information (I am sure) cannot but have been observed by you, Gentlemen of the Jury; and one special Clause hath been by the Council already opened to you, and I shall not enlarge upon it.

My Lord, This Petition that is thus delivered to the King, if it be a Libel, a scandalous and seditious Libel (as the Information calls it) it must be so, either for the Matter of the Petition, or for the Persons that deliver'd the Petition, or for the manner of their presenting and delivering it: But neither for the Matter, nor for the Persons, nor for the manner of presenting it, is there any Endeavour to diminish the King's Royal Prerogative, nor to stir up Sedition, nor Reflection upon the King's Royal and Kingly Authority.

The Petition does humbly set forth to His Majesty, that there having been such a Declaration, and such an Order of Council, they did humbly represent to His Majesty, that they were not averse to any thing commanded them in that Order, in respect to the just and due Obedience that they owed to the King, nor in respect of their want of a due Tenderneſs to those Persons to whom the King had been pleased to shew his Tenderneſs; but the Declaration being founded upon a Power of Dispensing, which had been declared illegal in Parliament several times, and particularly in the Years 1662, 72, and 85. they did humbly beseech His Majesty (they not being able to comply with his Command in that matter) that he would not insist upon it.

Now, my Lord, Where is the Contrivance to diminish the King's Regal Authority, and Royal Prerogative?

This is a Declaration founded upon a Power of Dispensing, which undertakes to suspend all Laws Ecclesiastical whatsoever; for not coming to Church, or not Receiving the Sacrament, or any other Nonconformity to the Religion established, or for or by reason of the Exercise of Religion in any manner whatsoever; ordering that the Execution of all those Laws be immediately suspended, and they are thereby declared to be suspended; as if the King had a Power to suspend all the Laws relating to his establish'd Religion, and all the Laws that were made for the Security of our Reformation. These are all suspended by His Majesty's Declaration (as it is said) in the Information, by virtue of his Royal Prerogative, and Power so to do.

Now, my Lord, I have always taken it, with Submission, that a Power to abrogate Laws, is as much a part of the Legislature, as a Power to make Laws: A Power to lay Laws asleep, and to suspend Laws, is equal to a Power of Abrogating them; for they are no longer in Being, as Laws, while they are so laid asleep, or suspended: And to abrogate all at once, or to do it time after time, is the same thing; and both are equally parts of the Legislature.

My Lord, In all the Education that I have had, in all the small Knowledge of the Laws that I could attain to, I could never yet hear of, or learn, that the Constitution of the Government in England was otherwise than thus, That the whole Legislative Power is in the King, Lords and Commons; the King and his two Houses of Parliament. But then, If this Declaration be founded upon a part of the Legislature, which must be by all Men acknowledged, not to reside in the King alone, but in the King, Lords and Commons, it cannot be a legal and true Power, or Prerogative.

This, my Lord, has been attempted, but in the last King's time; it never was pretended till then; and in that first Attempt, it was so far from being acknowledged, that it was taken notice of in Parliament, and declared against: So it was in the Years 1662. and 1672.

In the Year—62. where there was but the least Umbrage given of such a Dispensing Power; although the King had declared, in his Speech to the Parliament, that he wished he had such a Power, which his Declaration before seemed to assume; the Parliament was so jealous of this, that they immediately made their Application to His Majesty, by an Address against the Declaration; and they give Reasons against it, in their Address: One, in particular, was, That the King could not dispense with those Laws, without an Act of Parliament.

There was another Attempt in 1672. and then, after his Majesty had, in his Speech, mentioned his Declaration to them, the Parliament there again, particularly the House of Commons, did humbly address to His Majesty; setting forth, that this could not be done by Law, without an Act of Parliament: And your Lordship, by and by, upon reading the Record, will be satisfied what was the Event of all this. His Majesty himself was so far pleased to concur with them in that Opinion, that he cancell'd his Declaration, tore off the Seal, and caused it to be made known to the House of Lords, by the Lord Chancellor, who, by His Majesty's Command, satisfied the House of it, that His Majesty had broken the Seal, and cancell'd the Declaration; with this further Declaration, which is enter'd in the Records of the House, That it should never be drawn into Example, or Consequence.

My Lord, The Matter standing thus, in respect to the King's Prerogative, and the Declarations that had been made in Parliament; consider next, I beseech you, how far my Lords the Bishops Bishops were concerned in this Question, humbly to make their Application to the King.

My Lords the Bishops lying under a Command to publish this Declaration, it was their Duty, as Peers of the Realm, and Bishops of the Church of England, humbly to apply themselves to His Majesty, to make known their Reasons, why they could not obey that Command; and they do it with all Submission, and all Humility, representing to His Majesty what had been declared in Parliament; and it having been so declared, they could not comply with his Order; as apprehending that this Declaration was founded upon that which the Parliament declared to be illegal; and so his Majesty's Command to publish this Declaration, would not warrant them so to do. This they did, as Peers; and this they had a Right to do as Bishops; humbly to advise the King.

For, suppose, my Lord, (which is not to be supposed in every Case, nor do I suppose it in this; but suppose that there might be a King of England that should be misled;) (I do not suppose that to be the Case now, I say, but I know it hath been the Case formerly) that the King should be environed with Counsellors, that had given him evil Advice; it hath been objected as a Crime against such evil Counsellors, that they would not permit and suffer the Great Men of the Kingdom to offer the King their Advice. How often do we say in Westminster-Hall, That the King is deceived in his Grant? There is scarce a Day in the Term, but it is said in one Court, or other; but it was never yet thought an Offence to say so: And what more is there in this Case?

My Lord, if the King was mis-informed, or under a Misapprehension of the Law, my Lords; as they are Peers, and as they are Bishops, are concerned in it; and if they humbly apply themselves to the King, and offer him their Advice, where is the Crime?

My Lord; these noble Lords, the Defendants; had more than an ordinary Call to this; for besides the Duty of their Office, and the Care of the Church, that was incumbent on them as Bishops, they were here to become Actors; for they were, by that Order of Council, commanded themselves to publish it; and to distribute it to the several Ministers in their several Diocesses, with their Commands to read it: Therefore they had more than ordinary Reason to concern themselves in the Matter.

Next, we are to consider, my Lord, in what manner this was done; They make their Application to the King, by an humble Petition, with all the Decency and Respect that could be shewn; asking leave, first, to approach his Person; and having leave, they offer'd my Lord President the Matter of their Petition, that nothing might seem hard, or disrespectful, or as if they intended any thing that was unfit to be avowed. When they had taken all this Care in their Approach, and begging leave for it, they come secretly to the King, in private, when he was all alone, and there they humbly present this Petition to His Majesty. Now, how this can be called the Publication of a malicious and seditious Libel, when it was but the Presenting of a Petition to the King alone: And how it can be said to be with an Intent to stir up Sedition in the People against His Majesty, and to alienate the Hearts of his People from him, when it was in this private manner delivered to him himself only, truly, I cannot apprehend.

My Lord, I hope nothing of this can be thought an Offence: If the Jury should think that there has been Evidence sufficient given, to prove that my Lords the Bishops did deliver this Paper to the King, yet that is not enough to make them guilty of this Information, unless this Paper be likewise found to be in Diminution of the King's Royal Prerogative, and Regal Authority, in dispensing with, and suspending of all Laws, without Act of Parliament: Unless it be found to be a Libel against the King, to tell him, That in Parliament it was so and so declared: And unless the presenting this by way of Petition (which is the Right of all People that apprehend themselves aggrieved, to approach His Majesty by Petition) be a Libelling of the King: And unless this humble Petition, in this manner presented to the King in private, may be said to be a malicious and seditious Libel, with an Intent to stir up the People to Sedition: Unless all this can be found, there is no Man living can ever find my Lords the Bishops guilty upon this Information. Therefore, my Lord, we will go on, and make out this Matter that we have opened to your Lordship, if Mr. Attorney, and Mr. Solicitor think fit to argue the Points that we have opened.

Mr. Pollifsen. Pray, my Lord, spare me a Word on the same Side. For the first Point, it is a Point of Law, whether the Matter contained in this Petition be a Libel. The King's Council pretend it is so, because it says, the Declaration is founded upon a Power the Parliament has declared to be illegal. But we say, that whatsoever the King is pleased to say in any Declaration of his, it is not the King's saying of it, that makes it to be Law. Now we say, This Declaration under the Great Seal, is not agreeable to the Laws of the Land; and that for this Reason, Because it does, at one Blow; set aside all the Law we have in England.

My Lord, if this be denied, we must a little debate this matter; for they are almost all Penal Laws; not only those before the Reformation, but since; upon which the whole Government, both in Church and State, does in a great measure depend.

Especially, my Lord, in Matters of Religion, they are all Penal Laws: For, by the Act of Uniformity, which my Lords the Bishops are sworn to observe, and adjured by an express Clause in the Act; No Man is to preach, unless he be Episcopally ordained; no Man is to preach without a Licence. If all this be set aside, I confess, then it will go very far into the whole Ecclesiastical Government. If this be denied, we are ready to argue that too.

L C. J. They are to do so still.

Mr. Pollifsen. My Lord, I am sure the Consequence is otherwise, if this Declaration signify any thing. And if it be the Will of the King, my Lord, the Will of the King is, what the Law is. If so be the King's Will be not consonant to the Law, it is not obliging.

My Lord, The Cases that we have had of Dispensations, are all so many strong Authorities, against a general, or particular Abrogation. My Lord, that is a Matter of Law, which if it fall out to be any way doubtful, it will be fit to have it debated and settled.

If they will say, that the Penal Laws in Matters Ecclesiastical can be abrogated, or nulled, or made void pro tempore, or for Life, without the meeting of the King and People in Parliament; I must confess, they say a great thing, as it is a Point of great Concern; but I think, that will not be said: And all that has been ever said in any Case, touching Dispensations, proves quite the contrary, and asserts what I affirm. For, Why should any Man go about to argue, that the King may dispence with this or that particular Law, if at once he can dispence with all the Law, by an undoubted Prerogative? This is a Point of Law, which we insist upon, and are ready to argue with them; but we will go on with the rest of those things that we have offer'd: And first, we will read the Act of Uniformity, made 1 Eliz. that Clause of it, where they are so strictly charged to see the Execution of that Law.

This Act, my Lord, by the Act of Uniformity, made in the Beginning of the late King's Reign, is revived, with all the Clauses in it, relating to this Matter. If then this be a Duty incumbent upon them, and their Oaths require it of them; and if they find, that the Pleasure of the King, in his Declaration, is that which is not consonant to this Law, what can they do?

Can any thing be more humble, or done with a more Christian Mind, than by way of Petition, to inform the King in the Matter? For I never thought it, nor hath it ever (sure) been thought by any body else, to be a Crime to petition the King: For the King may be mistaken in the Law, so our Books say; and we, every Day, in Westminster Hall, argue against the King's Grants, and say, He is deceived in his Grants. It is the great Benefit and Liberty, which the King gives to his Subjects, to argue the Legality, or Illegality of his Grants.

My Lord, When all this is done, to make this to be a Libel, by putting in the Words, Malicious, Seditious, Scandalous, and with an Intent to raise Sedition, would be pretty hard.—My Lord, We pray, that Clause of the Statute may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What for?

Mr. Pollifsen. It is a general Law, and therefore the Court will take notice of it; and we pray, the Jury may hear it read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I agree it to be as Mr. Pollifsen has opened; and I agree it to be as Sir Robert Sawyer has opened it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, We shall put it upon a short Point. My Lords the Bishops are here accused of a Crime, of a very heinous nature as can be; they are here branded and stigmatized by this Information, as if they were seditious Libellers; when, my Lord, it will, in truth, fall out, that they have done no more than their Duty; their Duty to God, their Duty to the King, and their Duty to the Church.

For, in this Case, that which we humbly offer to your Lordship (and insist upon it, as very plain) is this; That the Kings of England have no power to suspend, or dispense with the Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom, that establish Religion: That is it, which we stand upon for our Defence. And we say, That such a Dispensing Power with Laws and Statutes, is a thing that strikes at the very Foundation of all the Rights, Liberties and Properties of the King's Subjects whatsoever. If the King may suspend the Laws of the Land, which concern our Religion, I am sure there is no other Law, but he may suspend. And if the King may suspend all the Laws of the Kingdom, what a Condition are all the Subjects in, for their Lives, Liberties and Properties? All at Mercy.

My Lord, The King's Legal Prerogatives are as much for the Advantage of his Subjects as of himself; and no Man goes about to speak against them: But, under pretence of Legal Prerogatives, to extend the Power of the King, to support a Prerogative that tends to the Destruction of all his Subjects, their Religion, and Liberties; in that, I think, they do the King no Service, who go about to do it.

But now we say, with your Lordship's Favour, that these Laws are the great Bulwark of the Reformed Religion; they are, in truth, that which fence the Religion and Church of England, and we have no other Human Fence besides. They were made upon a Foresight of the Mischief that had, and might come, by false Religions in this Kingdom; and they were intended to defend the Nation against them, and to keep them out; particularly, to keep out the Romish Religion (which is the very worst of all Religions) from prevailing among us; and that is the very Design of the Act for the Tests, which is intituled, An Act to prevent Dangers that may happen from Popish Recusants.

My Lord, If this Declaration should take effect, what would be the End of it? All Religions are let in, let them be what they will; Ranters, Quakers, and the like; nay, even the Roman Catholick Religion (as they call it;) which was intended, by these Acts of Parliament, and by the Act of Uniformity, and several other Acts, to be kept out of this Nation, as a Religion no way tolerable, nor to be endured here.

If this Declaration take effect, that Religion will stand upon the same Terms with the Protestant Religion. Suspend those Laws, and that Romish Religion, that was intended to be prohibited, and so much Care was taken, and so many Statutes made, to prohibit it, will come in; and all this Care, and all those Statutes go for nothing. This one Declaration sets them all out of doors; and then that Religion stands upon equal Terms with the established Religion.

My Lord, we say this farther, that my Lords the Bishops have the Care of the Church, by their very Function, and Offices; and are bound to take care; to keep out all those false Religions that are prohibited, and designed to be kept out by the Law. My Lords the Bishops finding this Declaration founded upon a meer pretended Power, that had been continually opposed, and rejected in Parliament, could not comply with the King's Command to read it.

My Lord, Such a Power to dispence with, or suspend the Laws of a Nation, cannot, with any shadow of Reason, be. It is not long since, that such a Power was ever pretended to by any, but such as have the Legislative too; for it is plain, that such a Power must, at least be equal to the Power that made the Laws. To dispence with a Law, must argue a Power greater, or, at least, as great as that which made the Law.

My Lord, It has been often said in our Books, That where the King's Subjects are concerned in Interest, the King cannot suspend, or dispense with a particular Law. But, my Lord, how can the King's Subjects be more concern'd in in Interest, than when their Religion lies at stake? It has been resolved, upon the Statute of Symony, that where the Statute has disabled the Party to take, there the King could not enable him, against that Act of Parliament: And shall it be said, that by his Dispensation, he shall enable one to hold an Office, who is disabled by the Test-Act?

My Lord, We say, The Course of our Law allows no such Dispensation, as the Declaration pretends to. And he that is but meanly read in our Law, must needs understand this, That the Kings of England cannot suspend our Laws; for that would be, to set aside the Law of the Kingdom: And then we might be clearly without any Laws, if the King should please to suspend them!

'Tis true, we say, the last King Charles was prevailed upon, by Mis-information to make a Dispensation, somewhat of the nature of this, though not so full an one; for that dispensed only with some few Ceremonies, and things of that nature: But the House of Commons (this taking Air) in 1662. represent this to the King, by a Petition. And what is it that they do represent? That he, by his Dispensation, has undertaken to do that, which nothing but an Act of Parliament can do; that is, the dispensing with Penal Laws; which is only to be done by Act of Parliament. And thereupon it was thought fit, upon the King's Account, to bring in an Act for it, in some Cases.

My Lord, the King did then, in his Speech to the Parliament (which we use, as a great Argument against this Dispensing Power) say this, 'That, considering the Circumstances of the Nation, he could wish with all his Heart, that he had such a Power, to dispense with some Laws, in some Particulars. And thereupon, there was a Bill, in order to an Act of Parliament, brought in, giving the King a Power to dispense; but, my Lord, with a great many Qualifications. Which shews plainly, that it was taken by the Parliament, that he had no Power to dispense with the Laws, of himself.

My Lord, Afterwards, in 1672. the King was prevailed upon again, to grant another Dispensation, somewhat larger.

L. C. Just. Brother Pemberton, I would not interrupt you, but we have heard of this over and over again already.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Then, since your Lordship is satisfied of these things (as I presume you are) else I should have gone on, I have done my Lord.

Mr. S. Levinz. But, my Lord, we shall go a little higher than that, and shew, that it has been taken all along, as the ancient Law of England, that such Dispensations ought to be by the King and the Parliament, and not by the King alone.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, if you will admit every one of the Council to speech it, before they give their Evidence, when shall we come to an End of this Cause? We shall be here till Midnight.

L. C. Just. They have no Mind to have an End of the Cause, for they kept it three Hours longer than they need to have done.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, This Case does require a great deal of Patience.

L. C. Just. It does so, Brother; and the Court has had a great deal of Patience: but we must not sit here only to hear Speeches.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, after all their Speeches, of two Hours long, let them read any thing, if they have it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We will begin with the Record of Richard the Second — Call William Fisher.

William Fisher, Clerk to Mr. Ince, sworn.

L. C. Just. What do you ask him?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Shew him that Copy of the Record.

The Record was then shewn him.

L. C. Just. Where had you those, Sir?

Mr. Fisher. Among the Records in the Tower.

L. C. Just. Are they true Copies?

Mr. Fisher. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Just. Did you examine them by the Record?

Mr. Fisher. Yes, my Lord.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Then hand them in; put them in.

Clerk reads: Ex Rotulo Parliamenti de Anno Regni Regis Richardi Secundi XV. N. 1. —

My Lord, It is written in French, and I shall make but a bad Reading of it.

Sir Sam. Astry. Where is the Man that examin'd it? — Do you understand French?

Mr. Fisher. Yes, my Lord.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The Record is in another Hand than this; they may easily read it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who copy'd this Paper?

Mr. Fisher. I did examine it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you examine it with?

Mr. Fisher. I look'd upon that Copy, and Mr. Halstead read the Record.

L. C. Just. Young Man, read out.

Fisher reads. Vendredy Lende maine del Almes qu'estoit le premier jour —

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, tell us what it is you would have read?

Mr. S. Levinz. I'll tell you what it is, Mr. Solicitor: 'Tis the Dispensation with the Statute of Provisors: And the Act of Parliament does give the King a Power to dispense, till such a time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Don't you think the King's Prerogative is affirmed by many Acts of Parliament?

Mr. S. Levinz. If the King could dispense without an Act of Parliament, what need was there for the making of it?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Serjeant, We are not to argue with you about that yet.

L. C. Just. Read it in English, for the Jury to understand it.

Mr. Fisher. My Lord, I cannot undertake to read it so readily in English.

Mr. J. Powell. Why don't you produce the Records that are mentioned in the Petition, those in King Charles the Second's time?

Mr. S. Levinz. We will produce our Records in Order of Time, as they are.

Sir Sam. Astry. There is the Clerk of the Records of the Tower, Mr. Halstead, will read it very well in French or English.

Then Mr. Halstead was sworn to interpret the Records into English, according to the best of his Skill and Knowledge; but not reading very readily — a true Copy of the Record in English follows, out of the Rolls of Parliament, in the 15th Year of King Richard the Second, Numero Primo.

*F*riday, the Morrow of All Souls, which was the first Day of this Parliament, holden at Westminster, in the fifteenth Year of the Reign Reign of our Lord, King Richard the Second, after the Conquest, the Reverend Father in God, the Archbishop of York, Primate and Chancellor of England, by the King's Commandment, being present in Parliament, pronounced and declared, very nobly and wisely, the Cause of the Summons of this Parliament: And said, First, That the King would, that holy Church principally, and afterwards the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and also the Cities and Burroughs, should have and enjoy their Liberties and Franchises, as well as they had them, and enjoyed them, in the Time of his Noble Progenitors, Kings of England; and also, in his own Time. And afterwards said, The Summons of this Parliament was principally for three Occasions: The first Occasion was, To ordain how the Peace and Quiet of the Land, which have heretofore been greatly blemished and disturbed, as well by Detraction and Maintenance, as otherwise, might be better holden and kept, and the Laws better executed, and the King's Commands better obeyed. The second Occasion was, To ordain and see how the Price of Wools, which is, beyond measure, lessened and impaired, might be better amended and inhaunced. And also, That in case the War should begin again, at the End of the present Truce, to wit, at the Assumption of our Lady next coming, to ordain and see, how and whereby the said War may be maintained at the least Charge of the People. And the third Occasion was, touching the Statutes of Provisors, To ordain and see how our Holy Father might have that which to him belongs; and the King, that which belongs to him, and to his Crown; according unto that, Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things which are God's.

Then the other Record of Richard the Second was read as follows, out of the Rolls of Parliament, the fifteenth Year of King Richard the Second (N. 8.)

Be it remembred, touching the Statute of Provisors, That the Commons, for the great Confidence which they have in the Person of our Lord the King, and in his most excellent Knowledge, and in the great Tenderneſs which he hath for his Crown, and the Rights thereof; and also, in the noble and high Discretions of the Lords, have assented, in full Parliament, that our said Lord the King, by Advice and Assent of the said Lords, may make such Sufferance, touching the said Statute, as shall seem to him reasonable and profitable, until the next Parliament, so as the said Statute be not repealed in no Article thereof: And that all those who have any Benefices by force of the said Statute, before this present Parliament; and also, That all those, to whom any Aid, Tranquillity, or Advantage is accrued, by virtue of the said Statute of the Benefices of Holy Church (of which they were heretofore in Possession) as well by Presentation, or Collation of our Lord the King, as of the Ordinaries, or Religious Persons whatsoever, or by any other manner or way whatsoever; may freely have and enjoy them, and peaceably continue their Possession thereof, without being ousted thereof, or any ways challenged, hindred, molested, disquieted, or grieved hereafter, by any Provisors, or others, against the Form and Effect of the Statute aforesaid, by reason of the said

Sufferance in any time to come. And moreover, That the said Commons may disagree at the next Parliament, to this Sufferance, and fully resort to the said Statute, if it shall seem good to them to do it: With Protestation, That this Assent, which is a Novelty; and has not been done before this time, be not drawn into Example or Consequence for Time to come. And they prayed our Lord the King, that the Protestation might be entred of Record, in the Roll of the Parliament: And the King granted, and commanded to do it.

Mr. S. Levinz. Now, my Lord, we will go on.—This was in Richard the Second's Time: And a Power is given by the Commons, to the King, with the Assent of the Lords, to dispense, but only to the next Parliament; with a Power reserved to the Commons; and to disagree to it, and retract that Consent of theirs the next Parliament.

Sir Geo. Treby. The Statute of Provisors was and is a Penal Law, and concerning Ecclesiastical Matters too; viz. The Collating and Presenting to Archbishopricks, Bishopricks, Benefices, and Dignities of the Church: And in this Record, now read, the Parliament give the King a limited Power, and for a short Time, to dispense with that Statute. But, to obviate all Pretence of such a Power's being inherent in the Crown, as a Prerogative, they declare, (1) That it was a Novelty; that is as much as to say, That the King had no such Power before. (2) That it should not be drawn into Example; that is to say, That he should have no such Power for the future.

Mr. S. Levinz. Now we will go on to the Records mentioned in the Petition; those in the last King's Time, in 1662, and 1672; and that in this King's Time, in 1685.—Where is the Journal of the House of Lords?

Mr. Walker sworn.

L. C. J. Is that the Book of the House of Lords?

Mr. Walker. It is the Journal of the House of Lords.

L. C. J. Is it kept by you?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is it kept?

Mr. Walker. In the usual place, here in Westminster.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is that?

Mr. S. Levinz. It is the Journal of the House of Lords.—But, my Lord, there is one thing that is mentioned in the last Record that is read, which is worth your Lordship's, and the Jury's Observation; That it is declared a Novelty, and a Protestation, that it should not be drawn into Precedent for the future.

L. C. J. That has been observed, Brother: Let us hear your Record read.

Clerk reads. — Die Mercurii 18. die Februarii, 1662.

His Majesty was present this Day, sitting in the Regal Crown and Robes, the Peers being likewise in their Robes: The King gave Order to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, to signify to the House of Commons his Pleasure, that they presently come up, and attend His Majesty, with their Speaker; who being present, His Majesty made this Speech following.

My Lords, and Gentlemen;

I Am very glad to meet you here again, having thought the Time long since we parted, and often wished you had been together,

'ther, to help me in some Occasions which have fallen out: I need not repeat them unto you, you have all had the Noise of them in your several Countries; and, God be thanked, they were but Noise, without any worse Effects.

'To cure the Distempers, and compose the differing Minds that are yet amongst us, I set forth my Declaration of the 26th of December. In which you may see, I am willing to set Bounds to the Hopes of some, and to the Fears of others; of which, when you shall have examined well the Grounds, I doubt not but I shall have your Concurrence therein. The truth is, I am in my Nature, an Enemy to all Severity for Religion and Conscience, how mistaken soever it be, when it extends to Capital and Sanguinary Punishments; which I am told, were began in Popish Times. Therefore, when I say this, I hope I shall not need to warn any here, not to infer from thence, that I mean to favour Popery. I must confess to you, there are many of that Profession, who, having served my Father, and my self very well, may fairly hope for some part in that Indulgence, I would willingly afford to others who dissent from us. But let me explain my self, lest some mistake me herein, as I heard they did in my Declaration: I am far from meaning by this, a Toleration, or Qualifying them thereby to hold any Offices or Places of Trust in the Government. Nay, further, I desire some Laws may be made, to hinder the Growth and Progress of their Doctrine.

'I hope you have all so good an Opinion of my Zeal for the Protestant Religion, as I need not tell you, I will not yield to any therein, not to the Bishops themselves; nor in my liking the Uniformity of it, as it is now established; which being the Standard of our Religion, must be kept pure, and uncorrupted, free from all other Mixtures. And yet, if the Dissenters will demean themselves peaceably and modestly under the Government, I could heartily wish, I had such a Power of Indulgence to use upon Occasion—

Sir Geo. Treby. Pray Sir, read that out distinctly.

Clerk reads.—'I could heartily wish I had such a Power of Indulgence to use upon Occasion, as might not needlessly force them out of the Kingdom; or, staying here, give them Cause to conspire against the Peace of it.

My Lords, and Gentlemen:

'It would look like Flattering in me, to tell you, in what degree I am confident of your Wisdom and Affection in all things that relate to the Greatness and Prosperity of the Kingdom. If you consider well what is best for us all, I dare say, we shall not disagree. I have no more to say to you at present, but, once again, to bid you heartily welcome.

Mr. Finch. The next thing we shall shew you is, that after the King had made this Speech, and wished he had such a Power of Indulgence to use upon Occasion, there was a Bill in the House of Lords brought in, to enable the King to dispense with several Laws: We shall shew you the Journal, where it was read and committed; but further than that it went not.

L. C. J. What use do you make of this, Mr. Finch?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. You may easily apprehend the Use we shall make of it. (The King, in his Speech, says, He wished he had such a Power;) the

Vol. III.

House of Lords thought he had not; and therefore they order'd a Bill to be brought in, to enable him.—Read the Journal of the Lords, of the 13th of March, 1662.

Clerk reads.

Die Veneris XIII. die Martii, 1662.

'After some Debate, whether the House should be put into a Grand Committee, for the further Debate of the Bill concerning His Majesty's Power in Ecclesiastical Affairs, it was put to the Question; (viz.)

'As many of your Lordships as would have this House adjourned, and put into a Committee, to consider of the said Bill, say, Content; others, Not Content.

'Passed in the Affirmative.

'And then the Lord Chamberlain of the Household was directed to take the Chair, as formerly; which he did accordingly.

'And after Debate, the House was resumed, after the Grand Committee had appointed a Sub-Committee, touching the said Bill.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This is all in the Journal of the House of Lords, about this Matter.— We will now shew you the Bill it self.

Clerk reads. 'An Act concerning His Majesty's Power in Ecclesiastical Affairs.

WHEREAS divers of His Majesty's Subjects, through Error of Judgment, and misguided Consciences (whereunto the Licentiousness of these late unhappy Times have much contributed) do not conform themselves to the Order of Divine Worship and Service established by Law; and although His Majesty and both Houses of Parliament are fully satisfied, that those Scruples of Conscience, from whence this Nonconformity ariseth, are ill grounded; and that the Government of the Church, with the Service thereof (as now established) is the best that is any where extant, and most effectual to the Preservation of the Protestant Religion: Yet hoping that Clemency and Indulgence may, in time, wear out those Prejudices, and reduce the Dissenters to the Unity of the Church; and considering that this Indulgence, how necessary soever, cannot be dispensed by any certain Rule, but must vary, according to the Circumstances of Time, and the Temper and Principles of those, to whom it is to be granted; and His Majesty being the best Judge, when, and to whom this Indulgence is to be dispensed, or as may be most consistent with the publick Peace, and without just Cause of Offence to others; and to the end His Majesty may be enabled to exercise it with universal Satisfaction, Be it Enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by Advice, and with the Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority thereof, That the King's Majesty may, by Letters Patents under the Great Seal, or by such other Ways as to His Majesty shall seem meet, dispense with one Act, or Law, made the last Session of this present Parliament (intituled, An Act for the Uniformity of Publick Prayers, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies; and for Establishing the Form of Making, and Ordaining, and Consecrating Bishops, Priests and Deacons in the Church of England) and with any other Laws or Statutes concerning the same; or requiring Oaths, or Subscriptions; or which do enjoin

Conformity to the Order, Discipline and Worship established in this Church, and the Penalties in the said Laws imposed, or any of them: And may grant Licences to such of His Majesty's Subjects of the Protestant Religion, of whose inoffensive and peaceable Disposition His Majesty shall be perswaded, to enjoy and use the Exercise of their Religion and Worship, though differing from the publick Rule; (the said Laws and Statutes, or any Disabilities, Incapacities, or Penalties, in them, or any of them contained, or any Matter or Thing to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.)

Provided always, and be it Enacted, That no such Indulgence, License, or Dispensation hereby to be granted, shall extend, or be construed to extend to the Tolerating, or Permitting the Use or Exercise of the Popish, or Roman Catholick Religion in this Kingdom; nor to enable any Person or Persons, to hold or exercise any Place or Office of publick Trust within this Kingdom, who, at the Beginning of this present Parliament, were, by the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, disabled thereunto; nor to exempt any Person or Persons from such Penalties, as are by Law to be inflicted upon such as shall publish or preach any thing to the Depravation, or Derogation of the Book of Common Prayer, or the Government, Order and Ceremonies of the Church established by Law.

Provided also, and be it Enacted, That no such Licence or Dispensation shall extend to make any Priest or Minister capable of any Ecclesiastical Living or Benefice, with Cure, who shall not, before the Archbishop of the Province, or Bishop of the Diocess where he lives, makes such subscription to the Articles of Religion, as is enjoined by the Statute of the 13th of Elizabeth, made for Reformation of Disorders in the Church. Nor shall extend, or be construed to extend to dispense with the Book of Common Prayer: But that the said Book shall be constantly read in all the Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and in all the Parish Churches, and publick Chappels.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Here your Lordship sees what the Lords did in this Matter.—We shall now shew you, out of the Commons Journal, what they did, concerning this Speech of the King—Shew the Journal of the 25th of February, 1662.

Mr. Jodrell sworn.

L.C. 7. Did you examine that, Mr. Jodrell?

Mr. Jodrell. It is the Original Book.

The Book delivered into the Court.

Clerk reads. Die Mercurii XXV. die Februarii, 15 Car. II. Resolved, that it be presented.—

Sir Rob. Sawyer. You must begin above—The House then took into Debate—

Clerk reads on.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, if there be any thing more, read on; you shall not parcel out a Record, and take, and leave what you will.

Mr. Finch. Did not you parcel out our Petition?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read on, if there be any thing about this matter.

Clerk. That is all.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Turn to the 27th of February, 1662.

Clerk reads. Veneris xxvii. Februarii xv. Car. II.

'Sir Heneage Finch reports from the Committee appointed to collect and bring in the Reasons of the House for their Vote of Advice to the King's Majesty; and in the close of those Reasons to add, That the House will assist His Majesty with their Lives and Fortunes, and to present an Address to His Majesty for that purpose; the several Reasons and Address agreed by the Committee in writing, he read in his place, and did bring up, and deliver the same in at the Clerk's Table.

'The First Paragraph was read, and upon the Question agreed to.

'The Second Paragraph was read, and upon the Question agreed to.

'The Third was read, and upon the Question agreed to.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Go over that, and go to the Address it self.

Clerk reads. 'May it please your most Excellent Majesty:

'We your Majesty's most Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeses of the House of Commons, in Parliament assembled, having with all Fidelity and Obedience considered of the several matters comprised in your Majesty's late Gracious Declaration of the 26th of December last, and your most Gracious Speech at the beginning of this present Session, Do in the first place for our selves, and in the Names of all the Commons of England, render unto your Sacred Majesty the Tribute of our most hearty Thanks for that infinite Grace and Goodness wherewith your Majesty hath been pleased to publish your Royal Intention of adhering to your Act of Indemnity and Oblivion by a constant and religious observance of it; and our Hearts are further enlarged in these returns of Thanksgiving, when we consider your Majesty's most Princely and Heroick Profession of relying upon the Affections of your People, and the abhorring all sorts of Military and Arbitrary Rule: but above all, we can never enough remember to the honour of your Majesty's Piety, and our own unspeakable Comfort, those solemn and most endearing Invitations of your Majesty's Subjects, jects, to prepare Laws to be presented to your Majesty against the growth and increase of Popery; and withal, to provide more Laws against Licentiousness and Impiety, at the same time declaring your own Resolutions for maintaining the Act of Uniformity: and it becomes us always to acknowledge and admire your Majesty's Wisdom in this your Declaration, whereby your Majesty is pleased to resolve, not only by sumptuary Laws, but by your own Royal Example of Frugality, to restrain that excess in men's Expences, which is grown so general, and so exorbitant, and to direct our endeavours to find out fit and proper Laws for advancement of Trade and Commerce.

After all this, we most humbly beseech your Majesty to believe; That it is with extream unwillingness and reluctancy of heart that we are brought to differ from any thing which your Majesty hath thought fit to purpose; and though we do no ways doubt but that the unreasonable distempers of mens Spirits, and the many Mutinies and Conspiracies which were carried on during the late intervals of Parliament, did reasonably incline your Majesty to endeavour by your Declaration to give some allay to those ill humours, till the Parliament assembled, and the hopes of an Indulgence, if the Parliament should consent to it, especially seeing the Pretenders to this Indulgence did seem to make some title to it by virtue of your Majesty's Declaration from Bredab; Nevertheless, we your Majesty's most Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, who are now returned to serve in Parliament from those several parts and places of your Kingdom, for which we are chosen, Do humbly offer it to your Majesty's great Wisdom, that it is in no sort adviseable that there be any Indulgence to such Persons who presume to dissent from the Act of Uniformity, and Religion established (for these Reasons.)

We have considered the nature of your Majesty's Declaration from Bredab, and are humbly of Opinion, That your Majesty ought not to be pressed any further.

Because it is not a Promise in it self, but only a gracious Declaration of your Majesty's Intentions to do what in you lay, and what a Parliament should advise your Majesty to do, and no such Advice was ever given, or thought fit to be offered; nor could it be otherwise understood, because there were Laws of Uniformity then in being, which could not be dispensed with but by Act of Parliament.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This is all that we read this for; your Lordship and the Jury see what is here declared by the Parliament, That the Act of Uniformity could not be dispensed with, without an Act of Parliament.

Next, my Lord, we shall shew you what was done in the Year 1672.——Read the King's Speech the 5th of February, 1672.

The Journals of the Lords House were delivered in.

Clerk reads. Die Mercurii, 5 Febr. 1672.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I am glad to see you here this day. I would have called you sooner together, but that I was willing to ease you and the Country, till there were an absolute necessity.

Since you were last here, I have been forced to a most important, necessary and expensive War, and I make no doubt but you will give me suitable and effectual assistance to go through with it; I refer you to my Declaration for the Causes, and indeed the necessity of this War; and shall now only tell you, That I might have digested the Indignities to my own Person, rather than have brought it to this Extremity, if the Interest as well as the Honour of the whole Kingdom had not been at Stake; and if I had omitted this Conjunction, perhaps I had not again ever met with the like advantage.

You will find that the last Supply that you gave me, did not answer Expectation for the ends you gave it, the Payment of my Debts; therefore I must in the next place recommend them again to your special Care.

Some few days before I declared the War, I put forth my Declaration for Indulgence to Dissenters, and have hitherto found a good effect of it, by securing my Peace at home, when I had War abroad; There is one part in it, that has been subject to Misconstructions, which is that concerning the Papists, as if more liberty was granted to them than to other Recusants, when 'tis plain there is less; for the others have publick Places allowed them, and I never intended that they should have any, but only have the freedom of their Religion in their own Houses, without any concurrence of others; and I could not grant them less than this, when I had extended so much more Grace to others, most of them having been loyal, and in the Service of me and the King my Father: And in the whole course of this Indulgence I do not intend that it shall any way prejudice the Church, but I will support its Rights, and It in its full power.

Having said this, I shall take it very ill to receive Contradiction in what I have done; and I will deal plainly with you, I am resolved to stick to my Declaration.

There is one Jealousie more which is maliciously spread abroad, and yet so weak and frivolous, that I once thought it not of moment enough to mention; but it may have gotten some ground with some well minded People, and that is, That the Forces which I have raised in this War were designed to controul Law and Property; I wish I had had more Forces the last Summer, the want of them then, convinces me, I must raise more against this next Spring; and I do not doubt but you will consider the charge of them in your Supplies.

I will conclude with this assurance to you, That I will preserve the true Reformed Protestant Religion, and the Church, as it is now Established in this Kingdom, and that no Man's Property or Liberty shall ever be invaded. I leave the rest to the Chancellor.

Mr. S. Pemb. Now go to the Journal of the Commons of the 14th of February, 1672.

The Journal put in

Clerk reads. Veneris xiiij. die Februarii, 1672.

Mr. Powle Reports from the Committee appointed to prepare, and draw up a Petition and Address to His Majesty, The said Petition and Address, which he read in his place, and afterwards delivered the same in at the Clerks Table, and the same being again twice read, is as followeth, (viz.)

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We your Majesties most Loyal and Faithful Subjects, the Commons Assembled in Parliament, do in the first place, as in all Duty bound, return your Majesty our most humble and hearty Thanks, for the many Gracious Promises and Assurances which your Majesty has several times during this Present Parliament given to us, That your Majesty would Secure and Maintain unto us the true Reformed Protestant Religion, our Liberties and Properties, which most gracious Assurances your Majesty out of your great Goodness has been pleased to renew unto us, more particularly, at the Opening of this present Session of Parliament.

And further, we crave leave humbly to represent, That we have with all Duty and Expedition, taken into our Consideration, the several parts of your Majesties last Speech to us; and withal, the Declaration therein mentioned, for Indulgence to Dissenters dated the 15th of March last: And we find our selves bound in Duty to inform your Majesty, That Penal Statutes in Matters Ecclesiastical, cannot be Suspended but by Act of Parliament.

We therefore, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeses of your Majesties House of Commons, do most humbly beseech your Majesty, That the said Laws may have their free Course, untill it shall be otherwise provided for by Act of Parliament. And that your Majesty would graciously be pleased to give such Directions herein, that no Apprehensions or Jealousies may remain in the Hearts of your Majesties good and faithful Subjects.

Resolved, &c.

That this House doth agree with the Committee in the Petition and Address by them drawn up, to be presented to his Majesty.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Now turn to the 24th of February, 1672. in the same Book.

Clerk Reads. Lunæ 24th of February, 1672.

Mr. Secretary Coventry Reports and Presents in Writing from his Majesty, his Answer to the humble Petition and Address of this House, which was thrice read, and the Matter debated, and is as followeth, (viz.)

CHARLES R.

HIS Majesty hath received an Address from you, and he hath seriously considered of it, and returns you this Answer, That he is very much troubled, that that Declaration which he put out for ends so necessary, for the quiet of his Kingdom, and especially in that Conjunction, should have proved the Cause of disquiet in his House of Commons, and give occasion to the questioning of his Power in Ecclesiasticks, which he finds not done in the Reigns of any of his Ancestors: He is sure he never had thoughts of using it otherwise than as it hath been intrusted in him, to the Peace and Establishment of the Church of England, and the ease of all his Subjects in general. Neither does he pretend to the Right of Suspending any Laws, wherein the Properties, Rights or Liberties of any of his Subjects are concerned, nor to alter any thing in the established Doctrine or Discipline of the Church of England. But his only design in this, was to take off the Penalties the Statutes inflicted upon Dissenters, which he believes when well considered of, you yourselves would not wish executed according to the Rigour and Letter of the Law; neither hath he done this with any thought of avoiding, or precluding the Advice of his Parliament; and if any Bill shall be offered, which shall appear more proper to attain the aforesaid

Ends, and secure the Peace of the Church and Kingdom, when tendred in due manner to him, he will shew how readily he will Concur in all ways that shall appear good for the Kingdom

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Turn to the 26th of February, 1672.

Clerk reads. Die Mercurii xxvj. Februarii, 1672.

Mr. Powle Reports from the Committee, appointed to consider of an Answer to return to his Majesties last Message, upon the debate of the House, an Answer agreed by the Committee, and drawn up, and put into Writing, which he read in his place, and then delivered the same in at the Clerks Table, where it was twice read, and is as followeth, (viz.)

Most Gracious Sovereign,

WE your Majesties most Humble and Loyal Subjects, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeses in this present Parliament Assembled, do render to your most Sacred Majesty, our most dutiful Thanks, for that to our unspeakable Comfort, your Majesty has been pleased so often to reiterate unto us those gracious Promises and Assurances of maintaining the Religion now Established, and the Liberties and Properties of your People; and we do not in the least Measure doubt but that your Majesty had the same gracious Intention in giving Satisfaction to your Subjects, by your Answer to our last Petition and Address; Yet upon a serious Consideration thereof, We find that the said Answer is not sufficient to clear the Apprehensions that may justly remain in the minds of your People, by your Majesties having claimed a Power to suspend Penal Statutes in Matters Ecclesiastical, and which your Majesty does still seem to assert in the said Answer, to be intrusted in the Crown, and never questioned in the Reigns of any of your Ancestors. Wherein we humbly conceive your Majesty has been very much misinformed: Since no such Power ever was claimed or exercised by any of your Majesties Predecessors; and if it should be admitted, might tend to the interrupting the free Course of the Laws, and altering the Legislative Power, which hath always been acknowledged to reside in your two Houses of Parliament.

We therefore with an unanimous Consent become again most humble Suiters unto your Sacred Majesty, That you would be pleased to give us a full and satisfactory Answer to our said Petition and Address, and that your Majesty would take such effectual order, that the Proceedings in this Matter may not for the future be drawn into Consequence or Example.

The Answer to his Majesties Message, was again read by Paragraphs, and the several Paragraphs to the last, were upon the question severally agreed.

The last Paragraph being read, and the Question being put, that the Word unanimous should stand in the Paragraph.

Resolved, &c.

That the whole Address be agreed to, as it was brought in by the Committee.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Now turn to the Lords Journal, and there your Lordship will see, that the King does Communicate this Address to the Lords, and desires their Advice.

Read the 1st of March, 1672.

Clerk reads, Die Sabbati primo die Martii, 1672.

His Majesty this Day made a short Speech, as follows.

My Lords,

You know, that at the Opening of this Session, I spoke here to your Satisfaction; it has notwithstanding, begotten a greater disquiet in the House of Commons, than I could have imagined.

I received an Address from them, which I looked not for, and I made them an Answer that ought to have contented them; but on the contrary, they have made me a Reply of such a nature, that I cannot think fit to proceed any further in this Matter without your Advice.

I have commanded the Chancellor to acquaint you with all the Transactions, wherein you will find both me and your selves highly concerned: I am sensible for what relates to me, and I assure you my Lords, I am not less so for the Priviledg, and the Honour of this House.

Afterwards the Lord Chancellor read the several Papers and Addresses of the House of Commons, and his Majesties Answer thereunto, and opened his Majesties proceedings upon them.

The Address of the House of Commons was read.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pass over that, you have read it already.

Clerk reads. The next, his Majesties Answer to the Address of the House of Commons, was read as follows,—

Sir Robert Sawyer. That hath been read too.

Clerk reads. Then was read the Reply of the House of Commons to his Majesties Answer, as followeth,—

Mr. Finch. You have read that likewise.

Clerk reads. Upon this it is ordered, that the Lord Treasurer, Duke of Buckingham, Earl of Bridgewater, Earl of Northampton, Earl of Bristol, Earl of Berks, Earl of Bullingbrook, and the Earl of Anglesey, do forthwith withdraw and consider what humble Thanks is fit to be given to his Majesty for his great Favour in communicating this Business to this House, and report the same. And accordingly, the said Lords Committees did withdraw themselves for that purpose.

The Lords being returned, the Duke of Buckingham reported what the Committee had prepared to present to his Majesty by way of Thanks, which was read as followeth.

We the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, do unanimously present to your Sacred Majesty, Our most humble Thanks, for having been pleased to Communicate to us, what has passed between your Majesty and the House of Commons, whereby you have graciously offered us the means of shewing our Duty to your Majesty, and of asserting the Ancient Just Rights and Priviledges of the House of Peers.

The Question being put, whether to agree with the Committee.

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Ordered that his Majesty be desired, that his Speech, and the Papers read this day, may be entered into the Journal Book of this House.

The Lord Treasurer, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Chamberlain, are appointed to attend his Majesty presently, to know his pleasure, what time and place, this whole House shall wait upon him, to present the humble Thanks of this House, for his great Favour shewed this day.

Ordered, that upon Monday morning next, this House will debate the whole Matter of his Majesties Speech, and these Papers; and to consider the Points of Priviledge, and what else may arise thereupon.

The Lords that were appointed to attend his Majesty, return with this Answer.

That his Majesty has appointed this Afternoon at five of the Clock, for this House to wait upon him in the Banqueting-house at Whitehall.

Ordered, that all the Judges now in Town, shall attend this House on Monday morning next.

Sir Robert Sawyer. The 3^d of March, 1672. is the next.

Clerk reads, Die Lunæ 3. die Martii, 1672.

The Lord Chancellor reported; That the whole House on Saturday last, waited upon his Majesty at Whitehall, and presented the humble Address of this House, and his Majesty was pleased to return this Answer.

My Lords,

I take this Address of yours very kindly; I will always be very affectionate to you, and expect you should stand by me, as I will always by you.

Then the House took into Consideration the whole Matter of his Majesties Speech on Saturday, and the three Papers which his Majesty acquainted this House withal, and all the said Papers in their order were read, and after a long debate, the Question being put,

Whether this House shall in the first place enter into Consideration of giving Advice to his Majesty?

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

It is ordered, that this Business shall be taken into Consideration to morrow Morning, at nine of the Clock, the first Business.

Ordered that the Judges now in Town, shall attend to morrow Morning.

Sir Robert Sawyer. The 4th of March, 1672.

Clerk reads, Next, The House took into Consideration the Advice to be given to his Majesty concerning the Addresses made to him from the House of Commons.

The Addresses of the House of Commons, and his Majesties Answer were read, and after a long debate, the Question being put, Whether the King's Answer to the House of Commons in referring the Points now controverted to a Parliamentary way by Bill, is good and gracious, that being a proper and natural Course for Satisfaction therein.

It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Sir Robert Sawyer. The 8th of March, 1672.

Clerk reads, Die Sabbati 8. die Martii, 1672.

His Majesty in his Royal Throne, adorned with his Crown and Regal Ornaments, commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black

Red,

' Rod, to give notice to the House of Commons, that they attend his Majesty presently.

' The Commons being come with their Speaker, his Majesty made this short Speech, following.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

' Yesterday you presented me an Address, as the best means for the satisfying and composing the Minds of my Subjects, to which I freely and readily agreed, and I shall take care to see it performed accordingly.

' I hope on the other side, you Gentlemen of the House of Commons will do your part; for I must put you in mind; it is near five Weeks since I demanded a Supply, and what you Voted unanimously upon it, did both give Life to my Affairs at Home, and dishearten mine Enemies abroad; but the seeming delay it hath met withal since, hath made them to take new Courage; and they are now preparing for this next Summer a greater Fleet, (as they say) than ever they have had yet, so that if the Supply be not very speedily dispatcht, it will be altogether ineffectual, and the Safety Honour and Interest of England, must of necessity be exposed. Pray lay this to heart, and let not the Fears and Jealousies of some draw an inevitable Ruin upon us all.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

' If there be any Scruple remaining with you, concerning the Suspension of Penal Laws, I here faithfully Promise you, That what has been done in that particular, shall not for the future be drawn either into Consequence or Example. And as I daily expect from you a Bill for my Supply, so I assure you, I shall as willingly pass any other you shall offer me that may tend to the giving you satisfaction in all your just Grievances.

' Next, my Lord Chancellor reported, That both Houses waited upon the King yesterday, and presented him with the Address against the growth of Popery, and his Majesty hath been pleased to return this Answer.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

' I do heartily agree with you in your Address, and shall give speedy Order to have it put in Execution; there is one part to which I believe it is not your Intention that it should extend; for I can scarce say, those are in my pay, that are presently to be employed abroad; but as for all other parts, I shall take care it shall be done as you desire.

' After which the Lord Chancellor said, he had somewhat more to impart to the House by the King's Command, which was,

That his Majesty last night, having spoken with several Members of both Houses, found some dissatisfaction remaining concerning his Answer to their Address in the particular of the Officers to be employed abroad, of which number he had five or six that were of the best Officers of France and Flanders, and being his own Subjects, he had been very solicitous to get; but if that bred any umbrage, the King commanded him to let them know, that he resolves to give both his Houses full satisfaction to their desires.

There was another particular that the Lord Chancellor said he thought fit to acquaint them with, which, though it was by his Majesties leave, yet it was not by his Command; however he thought it his duty to acquaint the House with it, (Mr. Secretary Coventry intending to acquaint the House of Commons with the same) That his Majesty had the last night, in pursuance of what he then intended, and declared this morning concerning the suspension of Penal Laws not being for the future drawn either into Consequence or Example, caused the Original Declaration, under the Great Seal, to be cancelled in his presence whereof himself and several other Lords of the Council were Witnesses.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Turn to the 10th of March, 1672.

Clerk reads. ' Die Lunæ decimo die Martii, 1672.

' Ordered, That what my Lord Chancellor said on Saturday last concerning his Majesty's causing the vacating his Indulgence under the Great Seal of England, shall be entred into the Journal Book of this House as on Saturday last.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We shall now come to that which pass in the Parliament in 1685. — Read the 9th of November, 1685.

' The Journal of the Lords, 1685. put in.

Clerk Reads. ' His Majesty being on his Royal Throne adorned with his Regal Robes and Crown (the Lords being in their Robes also) commanded the Gentleman Usher to give notice to the House of Commons that they immediately attend his Majesty; who being come, his Majesty made the following Speech.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

' After the Storm that seemed to be coming upon us when we parted last, I am glad to meet you all again in so great peace and quietness; God Almighty be praised, by whose blessing that Rebellion was suppressed; but when I reflect what an inconsiderable number of men began it, and how long they carried it on without any opposition, I hope every body will be convinced that the Militia, which hath hitherto been so much depended upon, is not sufficient for such Occasions, and that there is nothing but a good force of well disciplined Troops in constant pay that can defend us from such as either at home or abroad are disposed to disturb us.

' And in truth, my concern for the peace and quiet of my Subjects, as well as for the safety of the Government, made me think it necessary to increase the number to the proportion I have done; this I owed as well to the honour as to the security of the Nation, whose Reputation was so infinitely exposed unto all our Neighbours, by having lain open to this late wretched Attempt; that it is not to be repaired without keeping such a Body of Men on foot, that none may ever have the thoughts again of finding us so miserably unprovided.

' It is for the support of this great Charge, which is now more than double to what it was, that I ask your assistance in giving me a Supply answerable to the Expence it brings along with it; And I cannot doubt, but what I have begun so much for the honour and defence of the Government, will be continued by you with all the cheerfulness and readiness that is requisite for a Work of so great importance.

' Let no man take Exceptions that there are some Officers in the Army not qualified according to the late Tests for their Employments: The Gentlemen, I must tell you, are most of them well known to me, and having formerly served with me on several Occasions, and always approved the Loyalty of their Principles by their Practices, I think them fit now to be employed under me; and will deal plainly with you, that after after having had the benefit of their Services in such time of need and danger, I will neither expose them to disgrace, nor my self to the want of them, if there should be another Rebellion to make them necessary to me.

I am afraid some men may be so wicked to hope and expect that a difference may happen between you and me upon this Occasion; but when you consider what advantages have risen to us in a few months by the good understanding we have hitherto had, what wonderful effects it has already produced in the change of the whole scene of Affairs abroad, so much more to the honour of the Nation, and the figure it ought to make in the World, and that nothing can hinder a further progress in this way, to all our satisfactions, but Fears and Jealousies amongst our selves: I will not apprehend that such a misfortune can befall us as a Division, or but a Coldness between me and you; nor that any thing can shake you in your Steadiness and Loyalty to me, who, by God's blessing, will ever make you all returns of kindness and protection, with a Resolution to venture even my own Life in the defence of the true Interest of this Kingdom.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Turn to the Commons Journal the 16th of November, 1685.

The Journal of the House of the Commons put in.

Clerk reads. Die Lunæ xvi. die Novemb. 1685.

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We your Majesty's most Loyal and Faithful Subjects, the Commons in Parliament assembled, do in the first place (as in duty bound) return your Majesty our most humble and hearty thanks for your great care and conduct in the suppression of the late Rebellion, which threatened the overthrow of this Government both in Church and State, and the uttermost extirpation of our Religion by Law established, which is most dear unto us, and which your Majesty has been pleased to give us repeated assurances you will always defend and support, which with all grateful hearts we shall ever acknowledge.

We further crave leave to acquaint your Majesty, That we have with all duty and readiness taken into our consideration your Majesty's gracious Speech to us; and as to that part of it relating to the Officers in the Army not qualified for their Employment according to an Act of Parliament made in the 25th year of the Reign of your Majesty's Royal Brother of blessed Memory, Intituled, An Act for preventing danger that may happen by Popish Recusants: We do out of our bounden duty humbly represent unto your Majesty, That those Officers cannot by Law be capable of their Employments, and that the Incapacities they bring upon themselves thereby, can no ways be taken off but by Act of Parliament.

Therefore out of the great deference and duty we owe unto your Majesty (who has been graciously pleased to take notice of their Services to you) we are preparing a Bill to pass both Houses for your Royal Assent, to indemnify them from the Penalties they have now incurred; and because the continuance of them in their Employments may be taken to be dispensing with that Law without Act of Parliament, the consequence of which is of the greatest concern to the Rights of all your Majesty's Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, and to all the Laws made for the security of their Religion;

We therefore, the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of your Majesty's House of Commons, do most humbly beseech your Majesty, that you would be graciously pleased to give such directions therein, that no Apprehensions or Jealousies may remain in the hearts of your Majesty's good and faithful Subjects.

Mr. Pollifsen. My Lord, We pray that these half dozen lines of the Statute 1 Eliz. may be read.

A Statute-book was then produced by Mr. Ince. L. C. J. We will have it read out of our own Book. Which was delivered into Court.

Clerk reads. This is 1 Eliz. cap. 2. An Act for Uniformity of Religion, &c. Whereabout is it?

Mr. Ince. 'Tis the 15th Paragraph, [at these words] — And for the due execution, &c.

Clerk Reads. And for due Execution hereof, the Queens most Excellent Majesty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in this Parliament Assembled, do in Gods Name earnestly Require and Charge all the Archbishops and Bishops, and other Ordinaries, that they shall endeavour themselves to the utmost of their knowledge, that the due and true Execution hereof may be had throughout their Diocesses and Charges, as they will answer before God for such Evils and Plagues, wherewith Almighty God may justly punish his People for neglecting this good and wholesome Law.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Now, my Lord, if your Lordship pleases, the Charge is a Charge for a Libel, and there are two things to be Considered.

First, Whether the Bishops did deliver this Paper to the King? But that we leave upon the Evidence that has been given; only we say, there has been no direct proof of that.

In the next place, Supposing they did deliver this Petition to the King, Whether this be a Libel upon the Matter of it, the manner of delivering it, or the Persons that did it?

And with submission, my Lord, this cannot be a Libel, although it be true, that they did so deliver it.

First, my Lord, there is a little dissingenuity offered to my Lords the Bishops, in only setting forth part and not the whole, in only reciting the Body and not the Prayer.

But, my Lord, with your Lordships favour, taking the Petitionary part, and adding it to the other, it quite alters the Nature of the thing, for it may be, a Complaint without seeking redress might be an ill matter; but here taking the whole together, it appears to be a Complaint of a Grievance, and a desire to be eased of it.

With your Lordships favour, the Subjects have a right to Petition the King in all their Grievances, so say all our Books of Law, and so says the Statute of the Thirteenth of the late King; They may Petition, and come and deliver their Petition under the number of ten, as heretofore they might have done, (says the Statute) so that they all times have had a right so to do, and indeed if they had not, it were the most lamentable thing in the World, that Men must have Grievances upon them, and yet they not to be admitted to seek Relief in an humble way.

Now, my Lord, this is a Petition setting forth a Grievance, and praying his Majesty to give Relief. And what is this Grievance? It is that Command of his, by that Order made upon my Lords the Bishops, to distribute the Declaration, and cause it to be read in the Churches: And pray, my Lord, let us consider, what the Effects and Consequences of that Distribution and Reading is; It is to tell the People, that they need not submit to the Act of Uniformity, nor to any Act of Parliament made about Ecclesiastical Matters, for they are suspended and dispensed with; this my Lords the Bishops must do, if they obey this Order; but your Lordship sees, if they do it, they lie under an Anathema by the Statute of 1 Elizabeth. for there they are under a Curse if they do not look to the preservation and observation of that Act; But this Command to Distribute and Read the Declaration, whereby all these Laws are dispensed with, is to let the People know, they will not do what the Act requires of them.

Now, with your Lordships favour, my Lords the Bishops lying under this pressure, the weight of which was very grievous upon them, they by Petition apply to the King to be eased of it, which they might do, as Subjects; besides, my Lord, they are Peers of the Realm, and were most of them sitting as such, in the last Parliament, where (as you have heard) it was declared, such a Dispensation could not be, and then in what a Case should they have been, if they should have distributed this Declaration, which was so contrary to their own Actings in Parliament? What could they have answered for themselves; had they thus contributed to this Declaration? when they had themselves before declared, that the King could not dispense.

And that this was no new thing, for it had been so declared in a Parliament before, in two Sessions of it, in the late King's Reign, within a very little time one of another; and such a Parliament that were so liberal in their Aids to the Crown, that a Man would not think they should go about to deprive the Crown of any of its Rights; it was a Parliament that did do as great services for the Crown as ever any did, and therefore there is no reason to suspect, that if the King had had such a power, they would have appeared so earnest against it.

But, my Lord, if your Lordship pleases, these are not the beginnings of this matter, for we have shewed you from the Fifteenth of Richard the Second, that there was a power granted by the Parliament to the King to dispense with a particular Act of Parliament, which argues, that it could not be without an Act of Parliament: And in 1662. 'tis said expressly, that they could not be dispensed with, but by an Act of Parliament: 'Tis said so again in 1672; the King was then pleased to assume to himself such a power, as is pretended to in this Declaration; yet, upon Information from his Houses of Parliament, the King declared himself satisfied that he had no such power, Cancelled his Declaration, and promised, that it should not be drawn into Consequence or Example. And so the Commons by their Protestation said in Richard the Second's time, That it was a Novelty, and should not be drawn into Consequence or Example.

Now, my Lord, if your Lordship pleases, if this matter that was Commanded the Bishops to do, were something which the Law did not allow of, surely then, my Lords the Bishops had all the Reason in the World to apply themselves to the King, in an humble manner to acquaint him, why they could not obey his Commands; and to seek relief against that, which lay so heavy upon them.

Truly, my Lord, Mr. Attorney was very right in the opening of the Cause at first, that is, That the Government ought not to receive affronts, no, nor the Inferiour Officers are not to be affronted, a Justice of the Peace, so low a Man in Office, is not. For a Man to say to a Justice of Peace, when he is executing his Office, that he does not do right, is a great Crime, and Mr. Attorney said Right in it; But suppose a Justice of Peace were making of a Warrant to a Constable, to do something that was not Legal for him to do, if the Constable should Petition this Justice of the Peace, and therein set forth, Sir, you are about to command me to do a thing, which, I conceive, is not Legal, surely that would not be a Crime that he was to be punished for, for he does but seek relief, and shew his Grievance in a proper way, and the distress he is under.

My Lord, this is the Bishops Case with submission, they are under a distress, being Commanded to do a thing which they take not to be Legal, and they, with all humility by way of Petition, acquaint the King with this Distress of theirs, and pray him, that he will please to give Relief.

My Lord, there is no Law, but is either an Act of Parliament, or the Common Law, for an Act of Parliament there is none for such a power, all that we have of it in Parliamentary Proceedings, is against it; and for the Common Law, (so far as I have read it) I never did meet with any thing of such a Nature, as a Grant or Dispensation that pretended to dispense with any one whole Act of Parliament; I have not so much as heard of any such thing mentioned by any of the Kings Council; But here, my Lord, is a Dispensation that dispenses with a great many Laws at once, truly, I cannot take upon me to tell how many, there may be forty or above, (for ought I know.)

Therefore, my Lord, the Bishops lying under such a Grievance as this, and under such a Pressure, being Ordered to distribute this Declaration in all their Churches, which was to tell the People they ought to be under no Law in this Case, which surely was a very great Pressure, both in point of Law and Conscience too, they lying under such Obligations to the contrary, as they did. With submission to your Lordship and you Gentlemen of the Jury, If they did deliver this Petition, (Publishing of it I will not talk of, for there has been no proof of a Publication, but a delivering of a Petition to his Majesty in the most secret and decent manner that could be imagined) My Lords the Bishops are not guilty of the Matter Charged upon them in this Information; it has been expressly proved, that they did not go to disperse it abroad, but only deliver'd it to the King himself; And, in short, my Lord, if this should be a Libel, I know not how sad the Condition of us all would be, if we may not Petition, when we suffer.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I Challenge them to shew us any one instance of such a Declaration, such a General Dispensation of Laws from the Conquest, till 1672. The first Umbrage of such a thing is, that of Car. 2. 1662. but your Lordship hears the Declaration of the Parliament upon it. Before that, as there was no such thing, so your Lordship sees, what the Parliament did to enable the King (not to do this thing, but something like it) in Richard the Second's Time, where you see the Parliament did give the King a Power to Dispense with the Statute of Provisors for a time; time ; but at the same time declared, that very Grant of their own, to be a Novelty, and that it should not be drawn into Consequence or Example.

My Lord, we shall leave it upon this Point, to suspend Laws is all one, as to abrogate Laws ; for so long as a Law is suspended, whether the Suspension be Temporary, or whether it be for ever, whether it be at once, or at several times, the Law is abrogated to all Intents and Purposes: But the Abrogation of Laws is part of the Legislature, that Legislative Power is lodged (as I said before, and I could never find it otherwise, in all our Law) in King, Lords, and Commons—

Ld. Ch. Just. You did open that before, Mr. Finch.

Mr. Finch. With this, my Lord, That my Lords the Bishops finding this Order, made upon them to publish this Declaration, did what in Duty they were bound to do, and unless the Jury do find, that they have done that which is contrary to Law and to the Duty of their Places, and that this Petition is a Libel, and a seditious Libel, with an intent to stir up Sedition among the People, (We rely upon it) My Lords, the Bishops, can never be found Guilty upon this Information.

Ld. Ch. Just. Have you now done, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. Yes, my Lord, till they give us further occasion, if they have any other Evidence to offer, we must Answer it, if not, this is the Answer we give to what they have said.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We make no Bargain with you: If you have done, say so.

Ld. Ch. Just. You must know, that you are not to have the last word.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have been three hours already, if you have any more to say, pray conclude.

Mr. Finch. If they say they have no more Evidence, then we know what we have to do.

L. C. Just. If you do say any thing more, pray let me advise you one thing, don't say the same thing over and over again, for after so much time spent, it is irksome to all Company, as well as to me:

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we have no more Evidence to offer to your Lordship at present, unless they, by offering new Evidence, give us occasion to Reply upon them.

L. C. Just. Gentlemen, you shall have all the Legal favour and advantage that can be; but, pray, let us keep to an orderly decent Method of proceeding:

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, my Lord, favour me a word before we conclude, My Lord, I do find very few Attempts of this Nature, in any Kings Reign.

In the Reign of Henry the Fourth, there was an Act of Parliament that Foreigners should have a Free Trade in the City of London; notwithstanding the Franchises of London; after the Parliament rose, the King issued out his Proclamation, forbidding the Execution of that Law, and Commanding that it should be in Suspence, Usque ad Proximum Parliamentum, yet that was held to be against Law.

L. C. Just. Sir Robert Sawyer, that which you are to look to, is the publishing of this Paper, and whether it be a Libel or no. And as to the business of the Parliaments you mentioned, they are not to the purpose.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, I say, I would put it where the Question truly lyes, if they don't dispute the Point, then we need not labour it; but I don't know whether they will or no, and therefore I beg your Lordships favour to mention one Case more, and that is upon the Statute of 31 Hen. 8. cap. 8. Which enables the King by Proclamation in many Cases to create the Law; which Statute was repealed by 1 Edw. 6. cap. 12. That very Act does recite, that the Law is not to be altered, or restrained, but by Act of Parliament, and therefore the Parliament enables the King to do so and so: But that was such a Power, that the Parliament thought not fit to continue, and it was afterwards repealed, but it shews, that at that time the Parliament was of the same Opinion, as to this Matter, that other Parliaments have been since.

Mr. Sommers. My Lord, I would only mention the great Case of Thomas and Sorrel in the Exchequer Chamber upon the validity of a Dispensation of the Statute of Edward the Sixth, touching Selling of Wine. There it was the Opinion of every one of the Judges, and they did lay it down as a settled Position, that there never could be an Abrogation, or a Suspension, (which is a Temporary Abrogation) of an Act of Parliament, but by the Legislative Power. That was a Foundation laid down quite through the debate of that Case: Indeed it was disputed, how far the King might dispense with the Penalties in such a particular Law, as to particular Persons, but it was agreed, by all, that the King had no power to suspend any Law: And my Lord, I dare Appeal to Mr. Attorney General himself, whether in the Case of Godden and Hales, which was lately in this Court, to make good that Dispensation, he did not use it as an Argument then, that it could not be expounded into a Suspension; he admitted it not to be in the King's power to suspend a Law, but that he might give a Dispensation to a particular Person, was all, that he took upon him to justify at that time.

My Lord, by the Law of all civilized Nations, if the Prince does require something to be done, which the Person (who is to do it) takes to be unlawful, it is not only lawful, but his Duty, Rescribere Principi, this is all that is done here, and that in the most humble manner, that could be thought of; your Lordship will please to observe how far it went, how careful they were, that they might not any way justly offend the King. They did not interpose by giving advice, as Peers, they never stir'd till it was brought home to themselves, when they made their Petition, all they beg is, that it may not so far be insisted upon by His Majesty, as to oblige them to read it, whatever they thought of it, they do not take upon them to desire the Declaration to be revoked.

My Lord, as to Matters of Fact alledged in the said Petition, that they are perfectly true, we have shewn by the Journals of both Houses. In every one of those Years, which are mentioned in the Petition, this Power of Dispensation was considered in Parliament, and upon Debate, declared to be contrary to Law; there could be no Design to diminish the Prerogative, because the King hath no such Prerogative.

Seditious my Lord it could not be, nor could possibly stir up Sedition in the Minds of the People, because it was presented to the King in private and alone, false it could not be, because the Matter of it is true. There would be nothing of Malice, for the occasion was not sought, the thing was pressed upon them, and a Libel it could not be, because the intent was innocent, and they kept within the bounds set by the Act of Parliament, that gives the Subject leave to apply to his Prince by Petition, when he is aggrieved.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you done, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. We have done, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I shall be a great deal more merciful to your Lordship and the Jury, than they have been, who have spent these four hours, in that which I think is not pertinent to the Case in Question: They have let themselves into large Discourses, making great Complaints of the Hardships put upon my Lords the Bishops, by the Order of Council to read His Majesty's Declaration; and putting these words into the Information of seditious, malicious and scandalous: But my Lord, I admire that Sir Robert Sawyer should make such Reflections, and Observations upon these words, when I am sure he will scarce find any one of his own exhibiting, that has so few of those aggravating words as this has, and therefore, that might have been very well spared, especially by him.

In the next place my Lord, we are told, what great Danger our Religion is in by this Declaration, I hope we have an equal concern for that with them, or any Person else whatsoever: But however, I am sure our Religion teaches us, not to preserve our Religion, or our Lives, by any illegal Courses, and the Question is, whether the Course that my Lords the Bishops have taken to preserve (as they say) our Religion, be legal or not; if it be not legal, then I am sure our Religion will not justify the using such a Course, for never so good an End.

My Lord, for the thing it self, I do admire that they, in so long a time and search that they have made, should not (which I expected) produce more Presidents of such a Paper as this is; They challenge us to shew, that ever there was any such Declaration as this, I'll turn the same Challenge upon them; Shew me any one instance, that ever so many Bishops did come under pretence of a Petition, to reflect upon the King out of Parliament.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is that your way of Answering, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Attorney General. Pray, Sir Robert Sawyer, you have had your time, don't interrupt us, sure we have as much right to be heard as you.

L. C. J. You have been heard over and over again, Sir Robert Sawyer, already.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, I don't intend to interrupt him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We cannot make them be quiet, they will still be chopping in upon us.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is an Art that some People have always practised, not to permit any body to speak, but themselves.

But my Lord, I say, that those few Instances that they have produced, are nothing at all to this Matter, that is now upon Tryal before your Lordship and this Jury; nay, they are Evidences against them, for they are only matters transacted in Parliament, which are no more to be applied to this thing that is in Controversy now, than any the most remote matter that could be thought of; and though they have gone so high in point of time, as to the Reign of Richard the Second, yet they have nothing between that and the late King's Reign, to which at last they have descended down.

But my Lord, I say, that all the talk of Richard the Second's time is wholly out of the Case; truly, I do not doubt, but that in Richard the Second's time they might find a great many Instances of some such sort of Petitioning as this, for our Histories tell us, that at that time they had 40000 Men in Arms against the King, and we know the troubles that were in that King's Reign, and how at length he was deposed; but certainly there may be found Instances more applicable to the Case, than those they produce; as for those in King Charles the Second's time, do they any ways justify this Petition? for now they are upon justifying the words of their Petition, that this power has been declared to be illegal in 1662, 1672, and 1685.

For what was done in 1662, do they shew any thing more than some Debates in the House of Commons? And at last an Address, an Answer by the King, a Reply of the Commons, and then the thing dies. Pray, my Lord, is a Transaction in the House of Commons, a Declaration of Parliament? Sure, I think, no one will affirm that any thing can be a Declaration of Parliament, unless he that is the Principal part Concurs, who is the King: for if you speak of the Court of Parliament in a Legal Sense, you must speak of the whole Body, King, Lords and Commons, and a Declaration in Parliament must be by all the whole Body, and that is properly an Act of Parliament.

Why then they come to the Year 1672, where your Lordship observes, that the late King did insist upon his Right, for after the Dispute which was in 1662, His Majesty did issue out another Declaration, and when it comes to be debated in Parliament, he insists upon his Right in Ecclesiastical Matters, and though his Declaration was cancelled, yet there is no formal Disclaimer of the Right.

My Lord, after all, how far these things that they have offered may work, as to the point that they have debated, I shall not now meddle with it, nor give your Lordship any trouble about it, because it is not at all pertinent to the Case in question, for I do (after all this time and pains that they have spent) take leave to say, that these Gentlemen have spent all this time to no purpose.

L. C. J. Yes, Mr. Attorney, I'll tell you what they offer, which it will lie upon you to give an Answer to; They would have you shew, how this has disturbed the Government, or diminished the King's Authority?

Mr. Att. Gen. Whether a Libel be true or not, as to the matter of Fact, was it ever yet in any Court of Justice permitted to be made a Question, whether it be a Libel or not? Or whether the Party be punishable for it; and therefore I wonder to hear these Gentlemen to say, that because it is not a false one, therefore 'tis not a Libel: Suppose a Man should speak scandalous Matter of any Noble Lord here; or of any of my Lords the Bishops, and a Scandalum Magnatum be brought for it, though that which is spoken has been true, yet it has been the Opinion nion of the Courts of Law, that the Party cannot justify it, by reason it tends to the disturbing of the Peace, to publish any thing that is matter of Scandal; The only thing that is to be lookt into, is, whether there be any thing in this Paper, that is reflecting and scandalous, and not whether it be true or no, for if any Man shall Extra-Judicially, and out of a legal Course and way, reflect upon any of the great Officers of the Kingdom, nay, if it be but upon any Inferior Magistrate, he is to be punished, and is not to make his Complaint against them, unless he do it in a proper way; A Man may Petition a Judge, but if any Man in that Petition shall come and tell the Judge, Sir, you have given an illegal Judgment against me, and I cannot in Honour, Prudence or Conscience obey it, I do not doubt, nor will any Man, but that he that should so say would be laid by the Heels, though the Judgment perhaps might be illegal.

If a Man shall come to Petition the King, as (we all know) the Council Doors are thronged with Petitioners every day, and Access to the King by Petition is open to every body, the most Inferior Person is allowed to Petition the King, but because he may do so, may he therefore suggest what he pleases in his Petition, shall he come and tell the King to his Face, what he does is Illegal? I only speak this, because they say, in this Case His Majesty gave them leave to come to him to deliver their Petition; but the King did not understand the Nature of their Petition I suppose, when he said, he gave them leave to come to him.

My Lord, for this Matter we have Authority enough in our Books, particularly there is the Case of Wrenham in my Lord Hobart, the Lord Chancellor had made a Decree against him, and he Petitioned the King, that the Cause might be reheard, and in that Petition he Complains of Injustice done him by my Lord Chancellor, and he put into his Petition many reflecting things, this my Lord, was punished as a Libel in the Star-Chamber; and, in that Book it was said, that though it be lawful for the Subject to Petition the King against any Proceedings by the Judges, yet it must not be done with Reflections, nor with Words that turn to the Accusation or Scandal of any of the King's Magistrates or Officers, and the Justice of the Decree is not to be questioned in the Case; for there Wrenham in his Defence would have opened the Particulars, wherein he thought the Decree was unjust, but that the Court would not meddle with, nor would allow him to justify for such Illegality in the Decree; so in this Case, you are not to draw in question the truth or falshood of the Matter complained against, for you must take the way the Law has prescribed, and prosecute your Right in a legal Course, and not by Scandal and Libelling.

My Lord, there is a great deal of difference between not doing a thing that is Commanded, if one be of Opinion that it is unlawful, and coming to the King with a Petition highly reflecting upon the Government, and with scandalous Expressions telling him, Sir, you act illegally, you require of us that which is against Prudence, Honour or Conscience, as my Lords the Bishops are pleased to do in this Petition of theirs. I appeal to any Lord here, that if any Man should give him such Language, either by Word of Mouth or Petition, whether he would bear it, without seeking Satisfaction and Reparation by the Law?

My Lord, there is no greater proof of the Influence of this Matter than the Croud of this Day, and the Harangue that hath been made, is it not apparent that the taking this Liberty to Canvas and dispute the King's Power and Authority, and to Censure his Actions, possess the People with strange Opinions, and raises Discontents and Jealousies, as if the free Course of Law were restrained, and Arbitrary Will and Pleasure set up instead of it?

My Lord, there is one thing that appears upon the Face of the Information, which shews this not to be the right Course, and if my Lords the Bishops had given themselves the opportunity of reading the Declaration seriously, they would have found in the end of the Declaration, that the King was resolved to call a Parliament in November; might not my Lords the Bishops have acquiesced under their Passive Obedience till the Parliament met? But nothing would serve them, but this, and this must be done out of Parliament, for which there is no President can be shewn, and this must be done in such a manner, as your Lordship sees the Consequence of, by your Trouble of this Day.

There is one thing I forgot to speak to, they tell us, that it is laid malicious and seditious, and there is no Malice or Sedition found, we know very well, that that follows the Fact, those things arise by Construction of Law out of the Fact. If the thing be illegal, the Law says it is Seditious, a Man shall not come and say, he meant no harm in it: That was the Case of Williams in his treasonable Book, (says he) I only intended to warn the King of the Danger approaching, and concludes his Book with God save the King, but no Man will say, that a good Preface at the beginning, or a good Prayer at the end, should excuse Treason, or Sedition in the Body of a Book; if I meet another Man in the Street and kill him, though I never saw him in my Life, the Indictment is, that it was ex Malitia Præcogitata, as it often happens, that a Person kills one he never had acquaintance with before, and in favorem vite, if the Nature of the Fact be so, the Jury are permitted to find according to the Nature of the Case, but in Strictness of Law, there is Malice imply'd: But, my Lord, I think these Matters are so common, and that is a Point that has been so often settled, that the form of the Indictment and Information must follow the Nature of the Fact, that I need not insist upon it, if the Act be unlawful, the Law supplies the Malice, and evil Intentions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council in this Case for the King, and I shall take leave to proceed in this Method; First, I shall put the Case of my Lords the Bishops, and then consider the Arguments that have been used in their Defence, and answer them as much as is material to be answered; and then leave it to your Lordship and the Juries Consideration, whether what has been said by these Gentlemen, weigh any thing in this Case?

First, my Lord, I take it for granted, and I think the Matter is pretty plain by this time, by my Lord President's Evidence, and their own Confession; that it is not to be disputed, but that this Paper was presented by these Lords to the King, I think there is no great difficulty in that Matter at all, but I just touch upon it, because I would follow them in their own Method.

Then my Lord; let us take this Case as it is, upon the Nature of the Petition, and the Evidence that they have given, and then let us see, whether that will justify the thing that is done: For the business of Petitioning, I would distinguish and enquire, Whether my Lords the Bishops out of Parliament, can present any Petition to the King: I do agree, that in Parliament the Lords and Commons may make Addresses to the King, and signify their Desires, and make known their Grievances there, and there is no doubt, but that is a natural and proper way of Application. For in the beginning of the Parliament, there are Receivers of Petitions appointed, and upon Debates, there are Committees appointed, to draw up Petitions and Addresses, but to come and deduce an Argument; that because the Lords in Parliament have done thus, (there being such Methods of Proceedings usual in Parliaments) therefore my Lords the Bishops may do it out of Parliament, that is certainly a Non sequitur, no such Conclusion can be drawn from those Premises.

My Lord, I shall endeavour to lay the Fact before you, as it really is, and then Consider, what is proper for the Court to take notice of, as legal Proof or Evidence: And I take it, all those Presidents that they have produced, of what the Lords did, and what the Commons did, in Parliament, is no Warrant for them to shelter themselves under, against the Information here in Question.

Here Mr. Justice Powell spake aside to the Lord Chief Justice, thus:

Mr. Just. Powel. My Lord, this is strange Doctrine; shall not the Subject have Liberty to Petition the King, but in Parliament? If that be Law, the Subject is in a miserable Case.

L.C.J. Brother, let him go on, we will hear him out, tho' I approve not of his Position.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Lords may Address to the King in Parliament, and the Commons may do it, but therefore, that the Bishops may do it out of Parliament, does not follow. I heard nothing said, that could have given Colour to such a thing, but the Curse that has been read in 1 Eliz.

But pray, my Lord, let us consider that Evidence they have given, they have begun with that Record in Richard the Second's time, and what is that? That the King may dispense with the Statute of Provisors, till the meeting of the next Parliament, and a Protestation of the Commons at the end of it, whether that be an Act of Parliament, that is Declaratory of the Common Law, or Introductory of a new Law, Non constat; and for ought appears, it might be a Declaratory Act: And if so, it is a Proof of the King's Prerogative of Dispensing. It might be an Act in Affirmance of the King's Prerogative, as there are a great many such, we very well know; and generally most of the Laws in that kind, are in Affirmance of the King's Power, so that the Law turns as an Argument for the King's Prerogative, and they have given him that, which will turn upon themselves, so it stood in Richard the Second's time, but whether that be an Argument one way or other Conclusive, is left to your Lordship, and the Jury.

Ay, but say they, there is no Execution of such a Power, till very lately, and the first Instance that they produce is, that in the Year 1662. But your Lordship knows, that before the Reign of Henry the Fourth, there was great Jurisdiction assumed by the Lords in original Causes, then comes the Statute of Appeals, 1 Hen. 4. which takes notice, that before that time, the Lordshad assumed an original Jurisdiction in all Causes, and would proceed, and determine them in Parliament, and out of Parliament, and it fell out to be so great a Grievance, that it was thought necessary to make a Law against it, that Appeals in Parliament should be abolished and destroyed; and then comes that Law in favour of the Subject of England, and that settles the bounds between the King and the Lords in a great measure; before that time, the Lords were grown very powerful, and where there is a Power, there always will be Applications, and what is the effect of that Statute 1 Hen. 4. for all that we endeavour is, to make things as plain as can be, that no further Applications, no Accusations, no Proceedings in any Case whatsoever be before the Lords in Parliament, unless it be by Impeachment of the Commons; so that there is the Salvo; and the use that I make of it, is this, The Commons by that very Statute did abolish the Power that the Lords had arrogated to themselves, and ordered, that they should not meddle with any Cause, but upon the Impeachment of the House of Commons, and establish the Impeachment of the Commons, which is as ancient as the Parliament, for that was never yet spoken against; the Power of the Commons impeaching any Person under the degree of the Prince, and that is the regular legal way, and so the Commons asserted their ancient Right, and whatsoever the Lords took notice of, must come by Application of the Commons, then Conferences were to pass between the Houses, and both Houses by Address apply to the King, this is the proper way and course of Parliament; of which my Lord Cook says, It is known to few, and practised by fewer, but it is a venerable honourable way, and this is the Course that should have been taken by my Lords here, and they should have stayed till the Complaint had come from the Commons in Parliament, and then it had been regular for them to Address to the King; but they were too Quick, too Nimble.

And whereas the Statute of Hen. 4. says, That no Lord whatsoever shall intermeddle with any Cause, but by the Impeachment of the Commons, they interpose and give their advice before their time; if there be any Irregularity in Parliament, or out of Parliament, the Commons are to make their Complaint of it, and a Man must not be his own Judge, nor his own Carver, nor must every Man create Difficulties of his own, nor set upon petitioning in this sort: But there I lay my Foundation, That in such a matter as this, there ought to have been the Impeachment of the Commons in Parliament before these Lords could do any thing; and I know nothing can be said for the Bishops more than this, That they were under an Anathema, under the Curse that Sir Robert Sawyer speaks of, and for fear of that they took this Irregular Course: But some would say, Better fall into the hands of God than of Men; some would say so, (I say) I know not what they would say; but these being the Methods that these these Lords should have taken, they should have pursued that Method, the Law should have carved out their Relief and Remedy for them, but they were for going by a new Fancy of their own.

My Lord, the Law continued thus, and was practised so till the 3 Hen. 7. where the Grievance was found, that Offences in the Intervals of Parliament could not be well punished, and then comes the Statute that sets up the Court of Star-Chamber, and there Men were often brought to Judgment and Punishment for their Sins; and though very great Power was given them, yet they arrogated to themselves a greater; and therefore that Court is abolished by the Statute of the 15th Car. 1. and what is the reason of abolishing that Statute? Because the Star-Chamber did not keep within their Bounds that the Law set them, but assumed to themselves a larger Power than the Law would allow; and grew very Exorbitant and very grievous to the Subject: And another reason was, which the Statute of 15 Car. 1. founded it self upon, because there was nothing that was brought in Judgment before that Court, but might be relieved and remedied in the ordinary methods of Justice in the Courts of Westminster-Hall: So that upon those two Considerations, because that Course was exorbitant, and because all the Sins and Misdemeanours that were punished there, might be punished in an ordinary way of Law in another Court; and therefore there was no need of that Court, and so it was abolished, and the Subject was pretty safe; If there was a Crime committed here, a Man might come properly before your Lordship into this Court, and have it punished.

My Lord, they find fault with the Words in the Information, and they say, Why are these Words put in, seditious, malicious? If the matter be libellous and seditious we may lawfully say, and it is no more than the Law speaks, it results out of the Matter it self; and, if it be a libellous Paper, the Law says, it is maliciously and seditiously done, and these Gentlemen need not quarrel with us for so are all the Informations in all times past, and 'tis no more than the Vi & Armis, which is Common Form. It may be said, How can the publishing of a Libel be said to be done Vi & Armis? That is only a Supposition of Law; and they may as well object to the Conclusion of the Information, that it was Contra Coronam & Dignitatem Domini Regis; if it be an illegal thing, or a Libel, these are necessary Consequences, it is no more than the speaking of the Law upon the Fact.

But, my Lord, let us a little consider, whether this Matter were warrantable, and whether they had any Warrant to do what was done; they pretend it was done upon this account, That the King had set forth a Declaration, and had ordered them to read it; which to excuse themselves from, they make this Petition, or this Libel, (call it what you will) and they use this as the main Argument, That they say the King has done illegally, and they tell the King plainly so, that it is illegal; for they take notice of this Declaration, and say, it is illegal; because it is contrary to the Declarations of Parliament in 1662, 1672, and 1685.

Pray, my Lord, let us consider a little, whether there be any Declaration in Parliament that they have given Evidence of; Have they read any Declaration of the Parliament in 1662? What is a Declaration in Parliament, but a Bill that is passed by the King, Lords and Commons? That we know to be the meaning, and no other; if it pass the Commons it is no Declaration in Parliament; nay, if it pass the Lords and Commons, it is not a Declaration in Parliament, except it also pass the King; all these things are Nullities, and the Law takes no notice of them; we have it in our Books over and over, and no Court ought to suffer such Evidence to be given. I know these Gentlemen are very well acquainted with the Authority in Fitz-Herbert's, Title, Parliament, there was such an Act that was said to be by the King and the Lords, but because the Commons did not agree to it, it is declared and adjudged to be a Nullity, and the Court would take no notice of it; and how can any Man call that a Declaration in Parliament, which is only a Vote of the House of Commons, or of the Lords? No sure; that is one of the Heads I go upon, it's not a Declaration in Parliament, unless it be by an Act of Parliament.

Indeed my Lord, there is another sort of a Declaration in Parliament before the Lords, as they are a Court of Judicature, and that is a fair Declaration too; for if any thing comes judicially before the Lords, either by Writ of Error, or by natural Appeal from any of the other Courts, or by Adjournment, and there be any Judgment given, That is a Declaration in Parliament, and may be fairly so called. So likewise there is another judicial Declaration, which is, when any thing comes before the Lords judicially, upon an Impeachment of the Commons, and they give Judgment upon that Impeachment, That is a Declaration in Parliament: But to say, that there is any other Declaration in Parliament, is to say more than these Gentlemen can make out; if they will shew me any such I will submit to them, and not speak a Word against my Lords the Bishops, but, if these Learned Gentlemen cannot shew me any such, then they have not said that was true in this Petition, that it was so and so declared in Parliament.

For let us consider what there is in this Case upon this Evidence, for that in 1662. is only a Vote and Opinion of the House of Commons; and I always understood, and have been told so by some of the Gentlemen of the other side, that such a Vote signifies nothing: But besides, it seems to be a mistaken Address; for they say in it, That the Declaration in 1662. which they Address against, was the first Declaration of that sort, to suspend Laws without Act of Parliament; and yet, in the same Breath, they do take notice of the King's Declaration from Breda. But here is a mighty Argument used from the King's Speech, That because he wished he had such a Power, this must be declared in Parliament that he had no such Power: Is the Speech of the Prince a Declaration in Parliament? All the Speeches that were made upon the opening of the Parliament, will you say, they are Declarations in Parliament? Then the Chancellor, or the Keeper's Speech, or the Lord Privy Seals, must be a Declaration in Parliament. Whoever speaks the Sense of the King, if he does not speak that which is Law and Right, is questionable for it, and several have been impeached for so doing; for they look not upon it as the King's Speech, except it be according to Law: Nothing can turn upon the Prince but what is Legal; if it be otherwise, it turns upon him that speaks it. I never did hear that a Speech made by the Chancellor (and I will appeal to all the Lords that hear me in it) was a Declaration in Parliament.

Then my Lord, we come to the business in 1672. which with that in 1662. and that in Breda, shews, That this of the King's is not such a Novelty, but has been done often before. In 1672. the King was in Distress for Money, being intangled in a Dutch War, and wanted Supply; He Capitulates with his Commons, you have heard it read, and, upon the Commons Address, he asserts it to be his Right, and makes his Complaint to the Lords how the Commons had used him; for when he gives them a fair Answer, they Replied, and there are Conferences with the Lords about it; but at length it all ends in a Speech by the King, who comes and tells them of his present Necessities, and so he was minded to remit a little at the Instigation of the Commons, and he has a good Lump of Money for it. Would this amount to a Declaration in Parliament? Can my Lords the Bishops fancy or imagine that this is to be imposed upon the King, or upon the Court, for a Declaration in Parliament?

* Here Mr. Justice Powel speaking to the Lord Chief Justice,

Mr. J. Powel. My Lord, this is wide, Mr. Solicitor would impose upon us; let him make it out if he can, that the King has such a Power, and answer the Objections made by the Defendants Council.

L. C. J. Brother, impose upon us? he shall not impose upon me, I know not be what he may upon you; for my part, I do not believe one word he says.

known by the Case of Goddard and Hales, the Judgment of this Court was against the Opinion of that Address.

But what sort of Evidence is all this? Would you allow all the Addresses of the House of Commons to be Evidence? Give me leave to say it, my Lord, If you suffer these Votes, these Copies of imperfect Bills, these Addresses, and Applications of one or both Houses to the King, to be Evidence and Declarations in Parliament, then what will become of the Bill of Exclusion? Shall any Body mention that Bill of Exclusion to be a Declaration in Parliament? If so, then there is Declaration against Declaration, the Declaration of the Commons against the Declaration of the Lords. I know not what Judgment my Lords the Bishops may be of now, concerning those things of Votes and Addresses being Declarations in Parliament, but I am sure they have spoken against it heretofore; nay, I am sure, some of them have preached against it.

* Here there was a great Hissing.

And if my Lords the Bishops have said, These are Declarations in Parliament, and they are not Declarations in Parliament; and if they accuse the King of having done an illegal thing, because he has done that which has been declared in Parliament to be illegal, when it was never so declared, then the Consequence is very plain, That they are Mistaken sometimes; and I suppose by this time they believe it.

I dare say, it will not be denied me, That the King may, by his Prerogative Royal, issue forth his Proclamation; it is as essential a Prerogative, as it is to give his assent to an Act of Parliament to make it a Law. And it is another Principle, which I think cannot be denied, That the King may make Constitutions and Orders in Matters Ecclesiastical; and that these he may make out of a Parliament, and without the Parliament. If the King may do so, and these are his Prerogatives, then suppose the King does issue forth his Royal Proclamation (and such in effect is this Declaration under the Great Seal) in a Matter Ecclesiastical, by Virtue of his Prerogative Royal, and this Declaration is read in the Council, and published to the World, and then the Bishops come and tell the King, Sir, you have issued out an illegal Declaration, being contrary to what has been declared in Parliament; when there is no Declaration in Parliament: Is not this a diminishing the King's Power and Prerogative in issuing forth his Declaration? And making Constitutions in Matters Ecclesiastical? Is not this a questioning of his Prerogative? Do not my Lords the Bishops in this Case raise a Question between the King and the People? Do not they (as much as in them lyes) stir up the People to Sedition? For who shall be Judge between the King and the Bishops? (Says the King) I have such a Power and Prerogative to issue forth my Royal Proclamation, and to make Orders and Constitutions in Matters Ecclesiastical, and that without the Parliament, and out of Parliament: Say my Lords the Bishops, You have done so, but you have no Warrant for it. Says the King, Every Prince has done it, and I have done no more than what is my Prerogative to do: But this, say the Bishops, is against Law. How shall this be tried? Should not the Bishops have had the Patience to have waited till a Parliament came? When the King himself tells them, he would have a Parliament in November at furthest.

L. C. Just. Pray, Mr. Solicitor, come close to the business, for it is very late.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I beg your Patience; you have had a great deal of Patience with them, pray spare me a little. I am saying, when the King himself tells them, that he would have a Parliament in November at furthest, yet they have no Patience to stay till November, but made this Application to him. Is not this raising a Question upon the King's Prerogative in issuing forth Declarations? and upon the King's Power and Right in Matters Ecclesiastical? And when I have said this, that my Lords the Bishops have so done; If they have raised a Question upon the Right of the King, and the Power of the King in Matters Ecclesiastical, then they have stirred up Sedition. That they have so done is pretty plain; and for the Consequence of it, I shall appeal to the Case in the 2 Cro. 2. Jac. 1. That is a plain direct Authority for me.

Mr. Just. Powel. Nay, Mr. Solicitor, we all very well know, to deny the King's Authority in Temporals and Spirituals, as by Act of Parliament, is High Treason.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I carry it not so far, Sir; we have a Gracious Prince, and my Lords the Bishops find it so by this Prosecution: But what says that Case? It is Printed in Three Books, in Noy 100. in Moor 375. and in Mr. Just. Cre. 374. Says that Case, The King may make Orders and Constitutions in Matters Ecclesiastical.

Mr. Just. Powel. But how will you apply that Case to this in hand, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will apply it by and by, Sir. I would first shew what it is; there is a Convention of the greatest Men in the Kingdom.

Mr. Just. Powel. Indeed, Mr. Solicitor, you shoot at Rovers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is the Lord Privy Seal, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and a great many others; it is the greatest Assembly we meet with in our Books, and all of them are of this Opinion, That the King may make Orders and Constitutions in Matters Ecclesiastical.

My Lord, there is another Authority, and that is, from the Statute 1 Eliz. which erected the High Commission Court, and that Statute was not Introductory of a New Law, but Declaratory of the Old Law; The King by his Proclamation declares his Sense to do such and such a thing; the Court, and all Persons there, give their Judgment and Opinion upon that Statute, That they looked upon it as the grossest thing, and the foulest affront to the Prince, for any Man to bring into Question that Power of the King in Matters Ecclesiastical; 'tis said to be a very High Crime. Why then, my Lord, what is done in this Case?

Mr. Just. Powel. Mr. Solicitor, Pray, when you are applying, apply that other part of the Case too, which says, that it was a heinous Offence, to raise a Rumor that the King did intend to grant a general Toleration; and is there any Law since that has changed it, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. In the main, Judgment goes another way; as for that part, it was personal to the Prince that then was, of whom they had Scandalously reported, that he intended to do such a thing; they look'd upon it as a Scandal to King James, that it was a sowing Sedition, and stirring up People against the Government, and that will come up to our Case; for as some Men do it on the right side, others do it on the left; and whoever he be that endeavours to bring a dislike of the King in the People, that is moving Sedition against the Prince, but that is personal to the Prince himself, and does not go to his Successors.

Now, my Lord, I come to that which is very plain from the Case of De Libellis Famosis; If any Person, in any Paper, have Slandered the Government, you are not to Examine who is in the Right, and who is in the Wrong, whether what they said to be done by the Government be Legal or no; but whether the party have done such an Act. If the King have a Power (for still I keep to that) to Issue forth Proclamations to his Subjects, and to make Orders and Constitutions in matters Ecclesiastical, if he do Issue forth his Proclamation, and make an Order upon the matters within his Power and Prerogative; and if any one would come and bring that Power in Question, I say, that is Sedition, and you are not to Examine the Legality, or Illegality of the Order or Proclamation; and, that I think is very plain upon that Case, in the Fifth Report, for it says, If a Person does a thing, that is Libellous, you shall not Examine the Fact, but the Consequence; whether it tended to stir up Sedition against the Publick or to stir up Strife between Man and Man; in the Case of private Persons, as if a Man should say of a Judge, He has taken a Bribe, and I will prove it; this is not to be sent in a Letter, but they must take a regular way to Prosecute it according to Law.

If it be so in the Case of an Inferior Magistrate, what must it be in the Case of a King, to come to the Kings Face, and tell him (as they do here) that he has Acted Illegally, doth certainly, sufficiently prove the matter to be Libellous. What do they say to the King, they say, and admit, that they have an averness for the Declaration, and they tell him from whence that averness doth proceed; and yet they insinuate, that they had an inclination to Gratify the Kings, and Embrace the Dissenters, that were as averse to them, as could be, with due tenderness, when it should be settled by Parliament and Convocation. Pray, what hath their Convocation to do in this matter?

L. C. J. Mr. Solicitor General, I will not interrupt you; but, pray, come to the Business before us; Shew us that this is in diminution of the Kings Prerogative, or that the King ever had such a Prerogative.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will, my Lord; I am observing what it is they say in this Petition—They tell the King it is inconsistent with their Honor, Prudence, and Conscience, to do what he would have them to do; and if these things be not reflective upon the King and Government, I know not what is; this is not in a way of Judicature, possibly it might have been allowable to Petition the King to put it into a course of Justice, whereby it may be Tried; but, alas, there is no such thing in this matter.

It is not their desire to put it into any Method for Tryal, and so it comes in the Case De Libellis Famosis; for by this way, they make themselves Judges, which no man by Law is permitted to do. My Lords, the Bishops have gone out of the way, and all that they have offered does not come home to justify them; and therefore I take it under Favour, that we have made it a good Case for the King, we have proved what they have done, and whether this be Warrantable or not, is the Question, Gentlemen, that you are to try. The whole Case appears upon Record; the Declaration, and Petition are set forth, and the Order of the King and Council. When the Verdict is brought in, they may move any thing what they please in arrest of Judgment: They have had a great deal of Latitude, and taken a great deal of Liberty; But truly, I apprehend, not so very pertinently. But, I hope, we have made a good Case of it for the King, and that you, Gentlemen, will give us a Verdict.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Mr. Solicitor, there is one thing I would feign be satisfied in; you say the Bishops have no Power to Petition the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Not out of Parliament, Sir.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Pray give me leave, Sir; Then the King having made such a Declaration of a General Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, and afterwards he comes and requires the Bishops to disperse this Declaration; this they say, out of a tenderness of Conscience, they cannot do, because they apprehend it contrary trary to Law, and contrary to their Function : What can they do, if they may not Petition ?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I'll tell you what they should have done, Sir. If they were commanded to do any thing against their Consciences, they should have acquiesced till the Meeting of the Parliament.

[At which some People in the Court hissed.]

Mr. Att. Gen. This is very fine indeed ; I hope the Court and the Jury will take notice of this Carriage.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, it is one thing for a Man to submit to his Prince, if the King lay a Command upon him that he cannot obey, and another thing to Affront him. If the King will impose upon a Man what he cannot do, he must acquiesce ; but shall he come and fly in the Face of his Prince ? Shall he say it is illegal ? And that the Prince acts against Prudence, Honour or Conscience ? And throw Dirt in the King's Face. Sure that is not to be permitted ; that is libelling with a Witness.

L. C. J. Truly, Mr. Solicitor, I am of Opinion that the Bishops might Petition the King, but this is not the right way of bringing it ; I am not of that Mind, that they cannot Petition the King out of Parliament, but if they may Petition, yet they ought to have done it after another Manner : For if they may in this reflective way petition the King, I am sure, it will make the Government very precarious.

Mr. J. Powel. Mr. Solicitor, it would have been too late to stay for a Parliament, for it was to have been distributed by such a time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They might have lain under it, and submitted.

Mr. J. Powel. No, they would have run into Contempt of the King's Command, without petitioning the King not to insist upon it ; and if they had petitioned, and not have shewn the Reason why they could not obey, it would have been looked upon as a piece of Sullenness, and that they would have been blamed for, as much on the other side.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. After so long a Debate I shall not trouble you long, most things that are to be said have been said, but I shall only say this in short ; I cannot deny, nor shall not, but that the Subject has a right to Petition, but I shall affirm it also, he has a Duty to obey ; and, that in this Case, the Power of the King to dispense with Penal Laws in Matters Ecclesiastical is not a thing that is now in Question, nor need we here have had these long Debates on both sides : It may be perceived plainly, by the Proofs that have been read, that the Kings and Princes have thought themselves that they had such a Power, though it may be, the Parliament thought they had not ; and therefore the Declarations of the one, or the other, I shall not meddle with in this Case. That Power it self which the King has, as King of this Realm, in Matters rather Ecclesiastical and Criminal than Matters of Property, may somewhat appear by what has been read before your Lordship ; but all this will be nothing in our Case, neither has His Majesty now depended so much upon this thing ; the Declaration has been read to you ; and what's there said ? The King there says, That for those Reasons he was ready to suspend those Laws ; and be they suspended ? Yet, my Lord, with this too, That he refers it to, and hopes to make it secure by a Parliament :

So that there being this, it has not gone, I think very far ; and, it not having been touch'd here, it is not a point of Duty in my Lords the Bishops, as Bishops, that's here inquired into ; Whether they should have meddled with this or no, in this manner, is the Question. That the King is Supream over all of us, and has a particular Supremacy over them, as Supream Ordinary and Governor, and Moderator of the Church, is very plain ; and my Lord, it is as plain that in such things as concern the Church, he has a particular Power to Command them ; this is not unknown, but very frequent and common in Matters Ecclesiastical, and Matters of State ; It is not here a Question now, whether these Declarations which they were Commanded to take Care of getting read, were legal or not legal ; what Prudence there was, what Honour there was, what Conscience there was, for their not reading it, is not the Question neither : But the point was, the King as Supream Ordinary of his Kingdom, to whom the Bishops are Subject, does in Council Order ; and what is it he Orders ? Their sending out and distributing his Declaration ; they were concerned in no more than that, and it had been a very petty thing, a small thing, to send out the King's Declaration to be read by the Clergy : All the Clergy were ordered to read it, but my Lords the Bishops were only commanded to distribute it ; this he might do by Virtue of his Power Ecclesiastical. And if this be not an Evil in it self, and if it be not against the Word of God, certainly Obedience was due from my Lords the Bishops ; active Obedience was due from them to do so much as this ; it was no Consent of theirs, it was no Approbation of theirs, of what they read, that was required. So that if they had read it, or another had read it, by the King's Order, especially if that Order be legal, they are bound to do it by Virtue of their Obedience, and not to Examine more.

And my Lord, in this Petition, here they come to relieve, not only themselves that were present, (for I speak to the Preamble, as others before me have spoke to the Conclusion) but they do involve the rest of the Bishops that were absent ; for it is in behalf of themselves, and their Brethren, and all the Clergy of that Province. Now that all these should joyn in the Petition, is a thing very uncertain ; how does it construe here, whether they were altogether, and consented to it, or how all their Minds could be so fully known, that they would be all involved in the Disobedience to this Order of the King. Then, my Lord, What is the thing they are greatly averse to ? There are two things required in the Order, The Bishops required to distribute the Declaration to the inferior Clergy ; and the inferior Clergy are required to read it. Then their Averseness must be to distribute it, and the others to read it, and so they will be involved ; none of whom did ever appear to have joyned in it. And then they give Reasons for their Averseness ; and it is true, Reasons might have been given, and good Reasons should be given, why they should not do this in Duty to His Majesty ; more gentle Reasons, and other kind of Reasons, than those that they have given.

L. C. J. Pray Brother, will you come to the Matter before us.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. I have almost done, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Powell. The Information is not for Disobedience, Brother, but for a Libel.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. No, Sir, it is not for Disobedience, but it is for giving Reasons for the Disobedience in a libellous Petition; and I am going on to that. The Declaration is said in the Petition to be illegal, which is a Charge upon the King, That he has done an illegal Act. They say, they cannot in Honour, Conscience or Prudence do it; which is a Reflection upon the Prudence, Justice, and Honour of the King in Commanding them to do such a thing: And this appearing to have been delivered to the King by my Lords the Bishops; Persons, to whom certainly we all owe a Deference, as our Spiritual Masters, to believe what things they say, as most likely to be true; and therefore it having an Universal Influence upon all the People, I shall leave it here to your Lordship, and the Jury, whether they ought not to Answer for it.

Mr. Recorder. Will your Lordship please to spare me one Word?

L. C. J. I hope, we shall have done by and by.

Mr. Recorder. If your Lordship don't think fit, I can sit down.

L. C. J. No, no, go on, Sir Bartholomew Shower, you'll say I have spoiled a good Speech.

Mr. Recorder. I have no good one to make, my Lord, I have but a very few Words to say.

L. C. J. Well, go on, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. That which I would urge, my Lord, is only this; I think my Lord, we have proved our Information, and that they have made no Answer to it; for the Answer they have made, is but Argumentative, and taken either from the Persons of the Defendants, as Peers, or from the Form of its being a Petition: As Peers, it is said, they have a right to Petition to, and advise the King; but that is no Excuse at all, for if it contains Matter reproachful or scandalous, it is a Libel in Them, as well as in any other Subject; and they have no more Right to Libel the King than His Majesties other Subjects have; nor will the Privilege of their Peerage exempt them from being punished. And for the Form of this Paper, as being a Petition, there is no more Excuse in that neither. For every Man has as much Right to publish a Book, or Pamphlet, as they had to present their Petition. And as it would be punishable in that Man to write a scandalous Book, so it would be punishable in them to make a scandalous, and a libellous Petition. And the Author of Julian the Apostate, because he was a Clergy Man, and a Learned Man too, had as much right to publish his Book, as my Lords the Bishops had to deliver this Libel to the King. And if the City of London were so severely punished, as to lose their Charter, for petitioning for the Sitting of a Parliament, in which there were reflecting Words, but more soft.—

Mr. Just. Holloway. Pray, good Mr. Recorder, don't compare the Writing of a Book to the Making of a Petition; for it's the Birth-right of the Subject to Petition.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, it was as lawful for the City of London to petition for the sitting of a Parliament, as it was for my Lords the Bishops to give Reasons for their Disobedience to the King's Command: And if the Matter of the City of London's Petition was reckoned to be libellous, in saying that what the King had done in dissolving the Parliament, was an Obstruction of Justice, what other Construction can be made of my Lords the Bishops saying that the King's Declaration is illegal? And if the Matter of this Petition be of the same Nature with that of the City of London, your Lordship can make no other Judgment of it; but that it ought to have the same Condemnation.

Mr. Just. Powell. Mr. Recorder, you will as soon bring the two Poles together, as make this Petition to agree with Johnson's Book; they are no more alike, than the most different things you can name.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, I have but one Word.

L. C. J. How unreasonable is this now, that we must have so many Speeches at this time of Day? But we must hear it; go on Brother.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, if your Lordship pleases, That which they seem most to insist upon on the other side, and which has not been much spoken to on our side, is, That this Power which His Majesty has Exerted, in setting forth His Declaration, was illegal, and their Arguments were Hypothetical; if it were illegal, they had not offended; and they offered at some Arguments to prove it illegal: But as to that, my Lord, we need not go much further, than a Case that is very well known here, which I crave leave to mention, only because the Jury perhaps, have not heard of it; and that was the Case of Sir Edward Hales, where after a long Debate, it was resolved, That the King had a Power to dispense with Penal Laws.

But my Lord, if I should go higher into our Books of Law, that which they seem to make so strange of, might easily be made appear, to have been a frequent and constant practice.—

L. C. J. That is quite out of the Case, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. I beg your Lordships Favour, for a Word or two; if your Lordship please to consider the Power the King has, as supream Ordinary, we say, he has a Power to dispense with these Statutes, as he is King, and to give Ease to his Subjects, as supream Ordinary of the whole Kingdom, and as having supream Ecclesiastical Authority throughout the Kingdom. There might be abundance of Cases cited for this, if there were need; the Statute of primo Eliz. doubtless is in force at this time, and a great many of the Statutes that have been made since that time, have express Savings of the King's Supremacy; so that the King's Power is unquestionable: And if they have come and questioned this Power in this manner, by referring themselves to the Declarations in Parliament, they have done that, which of late days has been always look'd upon as an ill thing, as if the King's Authority was under the Suffrages of a Parliament. But when they come to make out their Parliament Declarations, there was never a one, unless it be first in Richard the Second's time, that can properly be called a Parliament Declaration; so that that of the several Parliaments is a Matter perfectly mistaken; and if they have mistaken it, it is in the Nature of false News, which is a Crime, for which the Law will punish them. More things might be added, but I consider your Lordship has had a great deal of Patience already, and much time has been spent, and, therefore I shall conclude, begging your Lordships Pardon for what I have said.

M m m m m

L. C. Just. I do assure you, if it had not been a Case of great Concern, I would not have heard you so long: It is a Case of very great Concern to the King, and the Government, on the one side, and to my Lords the Bishops on the other; and I have taken all the Care I can to observe what has been said on both sides. 'Tis not to be expected that I should repeat all the Speeches, or the particular Facts, but I will put the Jury in mind of the most Material things, as well as my Memory will give me leave; but I have been interrupted by so many Long, and Learned Speeches, and by the length of the Evidence which has been brought in, in a very broken, unmethodical way, that I shall not be able to do so well as I would.

Gentlemen, thus stands the Case; It is an Information against my Lords the Bishops, his Grace my Lord of Canterbury, and the other Six Noble Lords; and it is for Preferring, Composing, Making, and Publishing, and Causing to be Published, a Seditious Libel; the way that the Information goes is special, and it sets forth, That the King was Graciously pleased, by his Royal Power and Prerogative, to set forth, a Declaration of Indulgence for Liberty of Conscience, in the Third Year of his Reign; and afterwards upon the 27. of April, in the Fourth Year, he comes and makes another Declaration; and afterwards, in May, orders in Council that this Declaration should be Published by my Lords the Bishops in their several Diocesses; and after this was done, my Lords the Bishops come and present a Petition to the King, in which were contained the Words which you have seen.

Now, Gentlemen, the Proofs that have been upon this, you'll see what they are; the two Declarations are proved by the Clerks of the Council, and they are brought here under the Great Seal; a Question did arise, whether the Prints were the same with the Original Declarations, and that is proved by Hills, or his Man, that they were Examined, and are the same; then the Order of the Council was produced by Sir John Nicholas, and has likewise been read to you; then they come to prove the Fact against the Bishops, and first they fall to proving their Hands; they begun indeed a great way off, and did not come so close to it as they afterwards did; for some of their Hands they could hardly prove, but my Lord Archbishop's Hand was only proved, and some others, but there might have been some Question about that Proof; but afterwards it came to be proved, that my Lords the Bishops owned their Hands, which, if they had produced at first, would have made the Cause something shorter than it was.

The next Question that did arise, was about the Publishing of it, whether my Lords the Bishops had Published it, and it was insisted upon, That no body could prove the Delivery of it to the King; it was proved, the King gave it to the Council, and my Lords the Bishops were called in, and there they acknowledged their Hands; but no body could prove how it came to the King's Hands. Upon which, we were all of Opinion, That it was not such a Publishing, as was within the Information; and I was going to have directed you to find my Lords the Bishops Not Guilty: But it hapned, that being Interrupted in my Directions, by an Honest, Worthly, Learned Gentleman, the Kings Council took the Advantage, and informing the Court that they had further Evidence for the King, we staid till my Lord President came, who told us how the Bishops came to him to his Office at White-hall, and after they had told him their Design, That they had a mind to Petition the King, they asked him the Method they were to take for it, and desired him to help them to the Speech of the King: And he tells them he will acquaint the King with their Desire, which he does; and the King giving leave, he comes down and tells the Bishops, that they might go and speak with the King when they would; and (says he) I have given Direction that the Door shall be opened for you, as soon as you come. With that the Two Bishops went away, and said, they would go and fetch their other Brethren, and they did bring the other Four, but my Lord Archbishop was not there; and immediately when they came back, they went up into the Chamber, and there a Petition was Delivered to the King. He cannot speak to that particular Petition, because he did not read it, and that is all that he knew of the Matter; only it was all done the same Day, and that was before my Lords the Bishops appeared at the Council.

Gentlemen, after this was proved, then the Defendants came to their Part; and these Gentlemen that were of Council for my Lords let themselves into their Defence, by notable Learned Speeches, by telling you that my Lords the Bishops are Guardians to the Church, and great Peers of the Realm, and were bound in Conscience to take care of the Church. They have Read you a Clause of a Statute, made in Queen Eliz. time, by which they say, my Lords the Bishops were under a Curse, if they did not take care of that Law. Then they shew you some Records; One in Richard the Seconds time, which they could make little of, by reason their Witness could not Read it; but it was in short, a Liberty given to the King, to Dispense with the Statute of Provisors. Then they shew you some Journals of Parliament; First in the Year 1662. where the King had Granted an Indulgence and the House of Commons Declared it was not fit to be done, unless it were by Act of Parliament. And they Read the King's Speech, wherein he says, he wish'd he had such a Power, and so likewise that in 1672. which is all nothing, but Addresses and Votes, or Orders of the House, or Discourses, either the King's Speech, or the Subjects Addresses; but these are not Declarations in Parliament, that is insisted upon by the Council for the King, That what is a Declaration in Parliament is a Law, and that must be by the King, Lords, and Commons; the other is but common Discourse, but a Vote of the House, or a Signification of their Opinion, and cannot be said to be a Declaration in Parliament: Then they come to that in 1685. where the Commons take notice of something about the Soldiers in the Army that had not taken the Test, and make an Address to the King about it; but in all these things (as far as I can observe) nothing can be gathered out of them, one way or other, it is nothing but Discourses. Sometimes this Dispensing Power has been allowed, as in Ric. 2. time; and sometimes it has been denied, and the the King did once waive it; Mr. Solicitor tells you the Reason, There was a Lump of Money in the Case: But I wonder indeed to hear it come from him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I never gave my Vote for Money, I assure you.

L. C. Just. But those Concessions which the King sometimes makes for the Good of the People, and sometimes for the Profit of the Prince himself; (but I would not be thought to distinguish between the Profit of the Prince, and the Good of the People; for they are both one; and what is the Profit of the Prince is always for the Good of the People;) but I say, those Concessions must not be made Law, for that is reserved in the King's Breast, to do what he pleases in it at any time.

The truth of it is, the Dispensing Power is out of the Case, it is only a Word used in the Petition; but truly I will not take upon me to give my Opinion in the Question, to determine that now, for it is not before me: The only Question before me is, and so it is before you, Gentlemen, it being a Question of Fact, Whether here be a certain Proof of a Publication? And then the next Question is a Question of Law indeed, Whether if there be a Publication proved, it be a Libel?

Gentlemen, upon the point of the Publication, I have summed up all the Evidence to you; and if you believe, that the Petition which these Lords presented to the King was this Petition, truly, I think, that is a Publication sufficient; if you do not believe it was this Petition, then my Lords the Bishops are not Guilty of what is laid to their Charge in this Information, and consequently there needs no Inquiry whether they are Guilty of a Libel: But if you do believe, that this was the Petition they presented to the King, then we must come to Inquire whether this be a Libel.

Now, Gentlemen, any thing that shall disturb the Government, or make Mischief and a Stir among the People, is certainly within the Case of Libellis Famosis; and I must in short give you my Opinion, I do take it to be a Libel. Now, this being a point of Law, if my Brothers have any thing to say to it, I suppose they will deliver their Opinions.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Look you, Gentlemen, it is not usual for any Person to say any thing after the Chief Justice has summed up the Evidence, it is not according to the Course of the Court; but this is a Case of an Extraordinary Nature, and there being a point of Law in it, it is fit every body should deliver their own Opinion: The Question is, whether this Petition of my Lords the Bishops be a Libel, or no; Gentlemen, the End and Intention of every Action is to be Considered, and likewise, in this Case, we are to Consider the Nature of the Offence that these Noble Persons are Charged with; it is for delivering a Petition, which, according as they have made their Defence, was with all the Humility and Decency that could be: So that if there was no ill Intent, and they were not (as it is nor can be pretended they were) Men of Evil Lives, or the like, to deliver a Petition cannot be a Fault, it being the Right of every Subject to Petition: If you are satisfied there was an ill Intention of Sedition, or the like, you ought to find them Guilty; but if there be nothing in the Case that you find, but only that they did deliver a Petition to save themselves harmless, and to free themselves from blame, by shewing the Reason of their Disobedience to the King's Command, which they apprehended to be a Grievance to them, and which they could not in Conscience give Obedience to; I cannot think it is a Libel: It is left to you, Gentlemen, but that is my Opinion.

L. C. J. Look you, by the way, Brother, I did not ask you to sum up the Evidence, (for that is not usual) but only to deliver your Opinion, whether it be a Libel, or no.

Mr. Just. Powel. Truly, I cannot see, for my part, any thing of Sedition, or any other Crime, fixed upon these Reverend Fathers, my Lords the Bishops.

For, Gentlemen, to make it a Libel it must be false, it must be malicious, and it must tend to Sedition; as to the Falshood, I see nothing that is offered by the King's Council, nor any thing as to the Malice: It was preferred with all the Humility and Decency that became the King's Subjects to approach their Prince with.

Now, Gentlemen, the Matter of it is before you; you are to consider of it, and it is worth your Consideration, they tell His Majesty, It is not out of averfeness to pay all due Obedience to the King, nor out of a want of Tenderfness to their dissenting Fellow Subjects, that made them not perform the Command imposed upon them; but they say, That because they do conceive, that the thing that was commanded them was against the Law of the Land; therefore they do desire His Majesty, that he would be pleased to forbear to insist upon it, that they should perform that Command which they take to be illegal.

Gentlemen, we must consider what they say is illegal in it; they say, they apprehend the Declaration is illegal, because it is founded upon a dispensing Power, which the King claims, to dispense with the Laws concerning Ecclesiastical Affairs.

Gentlemen, I do not remember in any Case in all our Law, and I have taken some Pains upon this Occasion to look into it, that there is any such Power in the King, and the Case must turn upon that, in short; If there be no such dispensing Power in the King, then that can be no Libel which they presented to the King, which says, that the Declaration, being founded upon such a pretended Power, is illegal.

Now Gentlemen, this is a Dispensation with a Witness, it amounts to an Abrogation and utter Repeal of all the Laws; for I can see no Difference, nor know of none in Law, between the King's Power to dispense with Laws Ecclesiastical, and his Power to dispense with any other Laws whatsoever: If this be once allowed of, there will need no Parliament, all the Legislature will be in the King, which is a thing worth considering, and I leave the issue to God and your Consciences.

Mr. Just. Allybone. The single Question that falls to my share, is, to give my Sense of this Petition, whether it shall be in Construction of Law a Libel in it self, or a thing of great Innocence; I shall endeavour to express my self in as plain Terms as I can, and as much as I can, by way of Proposition.

And I think, in the first place, That no Man can take upon him to write against the actual Exercise of the Government, unless he have leave from the Government, but he makes a Libel, be what he writes true or false; for if once we come to impeach the Government by way of Argument, 'tis the Argument that makes it the Government, or not the Government: So that I lay down that in the first place, That the Government ought not to be impeached by Argument, nor the Exercise of the Government shaken by Argument; because I can manage a Proposition in it self doubtful, with a better Pen than another Man: This say I, is a Libel.

Then I lay down this for my next Position, That no private Man can take upon him to write concerning the Government at all; for what has any private Man to do with the Government, if his Interest be not stirred or shaken? It is the business of the Government to manage Matters relating to the Government; it is the business of Subjects to mind only their own Properties and Interest: If my Interest is not shaken, what have I to do with Matters of Government? They are not within my Sphere: If the Government does come to shake my particular Interest, the Law is open for me, and I may redress myself by Law: And when I intrude myself into other Mens business, that does not concern my particular Interest, I am a Libeller.

These I have laid down for plain Propositions; now then let us consider further, Whether if I will take upon me to contradict the Government, any specious Pretence that I shall put upon it shall dress it up into another Form, and give it a better Denomination; and truly I think 'tis the worse, because it comes in a better Dress; for by that Rule, every Man that can put on a good Vizard, may be as mischievous as he will to the Government at the bottom; so that whether it be in the form of a Supplication, or an Address, or a Petition, if it be what it ought not to be, let us call it by its true Name, and give it its right Denomination, It is a Libel.

Then, Gentlemen, consider what this Petition is; This is a Petition relating to something that was done and ordered by the Government. Whether the Reasons of the Petition be true or false, I will not examine that now, nor will I examine the Prerogative of the Crown, but only take notice that this relates to the Act of the Government: The Government here has published such a Declaration as this, that has been read, relating to Matters of Government; and shall, or ought, any body to come and impeach that as illegal, which the Government has done? Truly in my Opinion, I do not think he should or ought; for by this Rule may every Act of the Government be shaken, when there is not a Parliament de Facto sitting.

I do agree, That every Man may Petition the Government, or the King, in a matter that relates to his own private Interest; but to meddle with a matter that relates to the Government, I do not think my Lords the Bishops had any Power to do more than any others: When the House of Lords and Commons are in Being, it is a proper way of applying to the King, there is all the openness in the World, for those that are Members of Parliament, to make what Addresses they please to the Government, for the rectifying, altering, regulating, and making of what Law they please; but if every private Man shall come and interpose his Advice, I think, there can never be an End of advising the Government; I think, there was an instance of this in King

James's Time, when by a solemn Resolution it was declared to be High Misdemeanour, and next to Treason, to petition the King to put the Penal Laws in Execution.

Mr. J. Powell. Brother, I think, you do mistake a little.

Mr. J. Allybone. Brother, I dare rely upon it, that I am Right; it was so declared, by all the Judges.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Puritans presented a Petition to that purpose, and in it they said, if it would not be granted, they would come with a great number.

Mr. J. Powell. Ay, there it is.

Mr. J. Allybone. I tell you, Mr. Solicitor, the Resolution of the Judges is, That such a Petition is next Door to Treason, a very great Misdemeanour.

Mr. J. Powell. They accompanying it with Threats of the Peoples being Discontented.

Mr. J. Allybone. As I remember, it is in the Second Part of the Folio 35, or 37, where the Resolution of the Judges is, That to frame a Petition to the King, to put the Penal Laws in Execution, is next Door to Treason; for (say they) no Man ought to intermeddle with Matters of Government without leave of the Government.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. That was a Petition against the Penal Laws.

Mr. J. Allybone. Then I am quite mistaken indeed, in case it be so.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. That is not material at all, which it was.

Mr. Pollixfen. They there threatned, unless their Request were granted, several Thousands of the King's Subjects would be discontented.

Mr. J. Powell. That is the Reason of that Judgment, I affirm it.

Mr. J. Allybone. But then I'll tell you, Brother, again, what is said in that Case that you hinted at, and put Mr. Solicitor in mind of; For any Man to raise a Report that the King will, or will not, permit a Toleration, if either of these be disagreeable to the People, whether he may, or may not, It is against Law; for we are not to measure things from any Truth they have in themselves, but from that Aspect they have upon the Government; for there may be every tittle of a Libel true, and yet it may be a Libel still: So that I put no great stress upon that Objection, That the Matter of it is not false; and, for Sedition, it is that which every Libel carries in it self; and as every Trespass implies Vi & Armis, so every Libel against the Government carries in it Sedition, and all the other Epithets that are in the Information; This is my Opinion as to the Law in general.

I will not Debate the Prerogatives of the King, nor the Privileges of the Subject; but as this Fact is, I think, these venerable Bishops did meddle with that which did not belong to them; they took upon them, in a petitionary way, to contradict the actual Exercise of the Government, which I think no particular Persons, or single Body may do.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, Have you a Mind to drink before you go?

Jury. Yes, my Lord, if you please.

[Wine was sent for, for the Jury.]

Juryman. My Lord, we humbly pray, that your Lordship will be pleased to let us have the Papers that have been given in Evidence.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What is that you would have, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. He desires this, my Lord, That you would be pleased to direct that the Jury may have the use of such Writings and Statute-Books, as may be necessary for them: to make use of.

L. C. J. The Statute Book they shall have.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But they can have no Papers, but what are under Seal.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. They may have them by Consent, and they may have a Copy of the Information.

L. C. J. They shall have a Copy of the Information, and the Declarations under Seal.

Mr. Pollixfen. If they have those, and the Libel, (as they call it) they will not need a Copy of the Information.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we pray that your Lordship would be pleased to ascertain what it is they shall have.

L. C. J. They shall have a Copy of the Information, the Libel, and the Declarations under the Great Seal.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But not the Votes of the House of Commons, nor the Journals, for they are not Evidence.

L. C. J. No, I don't intend they shall.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we pray they may have the whole Petition.

Mr. J. Holloway. That is, with the Direction, and Prayer, you mean.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, with all our Hearts.

[Then the Court arose, and the Jury went together to consider of their Verdict, and stayed together all Night, without Fire or Candle.

On Saturday the 30th day of June, Anno Dom. 1688. about Ten of the Clock in the Morning, the Archbishop, and the rest of the Bishops, came again into the Court, and immediately after the Jury were brought to the Bar.

Sir Sam. Asty. Cryer, Take the Appearance of the Jury. Sir Roger Langley.

Sir Roger Langley. Here.

Cryer. Vous avez, &c.

[And so all the rest were called, and answered.]
Then Proclamation for Silence was made.

Sir Sam. Asty. Gentlemen, are you agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Sir Sam. Asty. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Foreman.

Sir Sam. Asty. Do you find the Defendants, or any of them, guilty of the Misdemeanour whereof they are Impeached, or not guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Sir Sam. Asty. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath Recorded it—

You say, the Defendants, and every of them, are Not Guilty of the Misdemeanour whereof they are Impeached; and so you say all?

Jury. Yes.

[At which there were several great Shouts in the Court, and throughout the Hall.]

Mr. Solicitor General, taking Notice of some Persons in Court that Shouted, moved very earnestly that they might be committed; whereupon a Gentleman of Grays-Inn was laid hold on, but was soon after discharged. And after the Shouting was over, the Lord Chief Justice reproving the Gentleman, said,

L. C. J. Sir, I am as glad as you can be, that my Lords the Bishops are acquitted; but your manner of rejoicing here in Court is Indecent, you might rejoice in your Chamber, or elsewhere, and not here.

[Then speaking to Mr. Attorney, he said,]

Have you any thing more to say to my Lords the Bishops, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

[Then the Court arose, and the Bishops went away.]

The Tryal of Philip Standsfield, Son to Sir James Standsfield of New-Milns, for the Murder of His Father, and other Crimes Libel'd against Him.

Curia Justiciaria S. D. N. Regis, tenta in pratorio Burgi de Edinburgh, Sexto die Mensis Februarii 1688. per Nobilem & Potentem Comitem Georgium Comitem de Linlithgow, Dominum Livingstoun, &c. Justiciarium Generalem totius Regni Scotiae, & honorabiles viros Dominos Joannem Lockhart de Castle-hill, Davidem Balfour, de Forret, Rogerum Hodge de Harcase, & Johannem Muray de Drumcain, Commissionarios Justiciariae dicti S. D. N. Regis. Curia Legitime affirmata.

I N T R A N.

Philip Standsfield, Eldest lawful Son to Umquibile Sir James Standsfield of New-Milns, Prisoner within the Tolbooth of Edinburgh.

Ndyted and Accused at the Instance of Sir John Dalrymple Younger of Stair, His Majesties Advocate for His Highness's Interest: That where notwithstanding by the Law of God, the Common Law.

Law of Nations, Laws and Acts of Parliament of this Kingdom, and constant Practice thereof, the expressing of malicious and seditious Words to the disdain of His Sacred Majesties Person, and contempt of His Royal Government, such as drinking or wishing Confusion to His Majesty, is High-Treason, particularly by the 2d Act. 2d Sess. Par. 1st King Charles II. of ever glorious Memory: The Plotting, Contriving or Intending Death or Destruction to the King's Majesty, or any bodily harm, tending to Death or Destruction, or who shall by Writing, Printing, or other malicious Plotting, and advised Speaking, expresse and declare such their Treasonable Intentions, after such persons, being legally Convicted thereof, they shall be deemed, declared and adjudg'd Traytors: And the Cursing, Beating, Invading, or Assassinating of a Parent by a Child, above the Age of sixteen Years, who is not Mad and Furious, is punishable by Death, and Confiscation of Moveables: And of all other Murders, Parricide is the most atrocious and unnatural; and Murder under Truſt, is punishable as Treason with forfeiture of Life, Land and Goods, and particularly by the 20 Act. 11th Sess. 2^d Par. K. Ch. 2^d. The King's Majesty and Estates of Parliament, considering how great and atrocious a Crime it is for Children to Beat or Curse their Parents, and how the Law of God hath pronounced just Sentence of Death against such as shall either of these ways injure either of their Parents; therefore the King and Estates of Parliament did Statute and Ordain, That whosoever Son or Daughter, above the Age of Sixteen Years, not being Distracted, shall Beat or Curse either their Father or their Mother, shall be put to Death without Mercy. And likewise by the 51 Act, 11th Par. K. Ja. 6th. It is Statuted and Ordained, That the Murder or Slaughtering of whatsoever of the Leidges, where the Party slain is under the trust, credit, assurance, and power of the Slayer, all such Murder or Slaughtering to be committed in time coming, the same being lawfully tryed, and the Person dilated found guilty by an Assize thereof, shall be Treason, and the Person found culpable shall forfeit Life and Goods; as in the said Laws and Acts of Parliament at more length is contained. Nevertheless it is of Verity, that the said Philip Standsfield shaking off all Fear of God, the Bonds and Ties of Nature and Christianity, Regard and Obedience to the said Laws and Acts of Parliament, did dare and presume to commit the said horrid and detestable Crimes, in swa far as, upon the first, second, third, or one or other of the Days of the Months of June, July, August, or September last, by past, one or other of them, he did, within the House and Kirchin of New milns, call for Ale to Drink some Healths, and in the presence of John Robison, then his Fathers Servant, Agnes Bruce, likewise his Fathers Servitrix, and several others, he did, as a most villanous and avowed Traitor, presume and dare to begin a Health to the Confusion of his Sacred Majesty, his native Sovereign, and did drink off the same, and caused others in his Company to do the like. And likewise Sir James Standsfield of New-milns his Father, having caused Educate and bring him up Decentlie, and in plenty conform to his Rank and Quality, and having left no means unessayed for his Literature, Education and Subsistence; yet he being a profligate and debauched Person, did commit, and was accessory to several notorious Villanies, for which, both at home and abroad, he was apprehended and detained Prisoner, as in the Marshal-Sea-Prison in Southwark, in the publick Prisons of Antwerp and Orleanse, and several other places; and tho' his Father out of his natural compassion to him, did cause release him out of these Prisons, in which he was so justly confined, he no sooner had his Liberty, than he of new invented and went about his villanous Practices and Debauches: And his Father at last perceiving that nothing could reclaim him from these and the like proceedings, having signified his inclinations to Disherish him, and in order thereto having disposed his Estate in Favours of John Standsfield his second Son; the said Philip did thereupon conceive, harbour and entertain ane Hellish Malice and Prejudice against the said Sir John Standsfield his Father, and most barbarously did declare, threaten and vow at several times, that he would cut his Throat. And particularly upon the first, second, or third, or remanent days of the Months of the Year 1680, within the House of James Smith in Nungate or Haddingtoun: and upon the first, second, or third, or one or other of the days of the Months of January, February, March, and remnant Months of the Year 1687, within the House of James Baikbie Fermorer in New-Milns; and within his Father's own House of New Milns, and in the House of William Scott there; and upon the first, second, third, or one or other of the days of the Months of January, February, March, and remnant Months of the Year of God 1682, 1684, and 1685 Years, when he was both in Brussels and Breda, and several other places, both in Holland and Flanders, and in Prisons within which he was detained in the City of London and Southwark, or upon one or other of the days, of one or other of the Months of the saids Years, or either of them most wickedly, unnaturally, and bitterly Rail upon, abuse and Curse the said Sir James Standsfield, his natural and kindly Parent. And being transported with rage and malice, he did, contrary to the light and eyes of Nature, nor once, but often, and frequently curse his Father, by bidding, and praying the Devil to take him, and the Devil rive him. God damm him, and swear, if he had a Sword, he would run it through him, and if ever he came to Scotland, he would be avenged upon him. And particularly upon the day of November last, which was the last time his Father went to Edinburgh; he did most impiously, and unnaturally imprecate, God let him never return, and God let him never see his Face. And frequently when he saw his Fathers diet taken to him; he used to say, God grant he may choak upon it; and at other occasions, when his Father refused to eat, he was in use to say, God let never more be in his Stomach than was in it then. And upon the first, second, or third, or one, or other of the days of the Months of September, October, or November, last by past, or one or other of them, His Mother being recovered out of a Swond, and having said to him, Philip, ye will shortly want your Mother, which will be a gentle Visitation to Sir James your Father. To which he did Answer: By my Soul, my Father shall be dead before you, Mother; and about eight days after, he upon the like occasion did renew the same Words: As also he was in use to declare, that though at present he had neither Cloaths nor Money, yet shortly (and no body did think how soon) he would be Laird of all, and then would use other Persons as they did him now: And at other times declared, that before Christmas he would be Laird of all; which Curses and Imprecations, he the said Philip Standsfield, by a continual Habit, used, and repeated these several Years by past; and lately some few Months or Weeks, before his Fathers Murder. And not satisfied therewith, the said Philip did proceed to that degree of unnatural Cruelty, and malicious Spite and Enmity against his Father; that upon the first, second, third, or one or other of the days of the Months of January, February, March, and remanent Months of the years of God, 1680, 1681, 1682, 1683, and 1684 years, or one or other other of the Days, of one or other of the Months, of one or other of the saids Years; he did attempt to assassinate, and offered Violence to his Fathers Person, and did chase and pursue him upon the King's High-way at Lothian burn, and did fire Pistols upon his Father. And likeways upon one or other of the Days of one or other of the Months, of one or other of the Years of God above specified, he did attempt to assassinate his Father for his Life, at Culterallors; and did fire Pistols upon him: And his Father being afraid of his Life, and under the apprehension of Violence, from the cruel and bloody Hands of the said Philip, his unnatural Son, He did to several Persons both of Quality, and intire Reputation, declare that the said Philip his Son, had both attempted to assassinate, and offered Violence to his Person, and that he was devising, and contriving his Death. And the said Sir James Standfield his Father, having upon the day of November last, gone from the City of Edinburgh, to his own House of New milns, and about Ten a Clock at Night, or thereby having gone to his own Chamber, in order to his rest, and being alone in the Room, under the Credit, Trust, and Assurance of the said Philip his Son, and his own Servants within his own Family; The said Philip did consult, and advise, and correspond with some other Persones, within and about the House for the time, to assassinate and cruelly murder his said Father, and particularly with George Thomson in New-Milns, and Helen Dickson his Spouse, and Fanet Johnston Spouse to John Nicols, there, in the House of the said George Thomson many times, particularly the Saturdays Night, immediately preceeding the Murder, where he cursed his Father, and said he should shortly make an end of him, and be Master of all: And accordingly he and they did Murder and Strangle him in his Bed-Chamber, and in the dead time of the night, did carry and transport him from the said Room, to the Water, near by the House, and laid his Body down upon the Water-side, and tyed a Stone about his Neck, to make him sink in the Water; and before he was thrown therein, he went back with his Accomplices to a little Kiln near by, and consulted and advised, whether it was more fit to throw him in the Water, with the Stone about his Neck, to make him sink, or to take away the Stone, least when he should be found, it might thereby appear that the Stone had been tyed by some other hand than his own; and at last resolved to take away the Stone, and throw his Body in the Water, which they returning, did accordingly: And some Persons being accidentally lying in the House at the time, they did hear a Noise of many Tongues and Voices, to their great Terror and Amazement; And the next Morning very early, some of the Servants in the House, having come to the Room, where his said Father did lye, and having missed him out of the Room, gave notice thereof, to some others of the Servants. He declared that he had been seeking him about the Water-pools; and a Noise and Cry having arisen, Search and Inquiry was made for his said Father: (and by him seemingly amongst the rest) And after some time his Body was found in the Water hard by his own House, and being dead, and his Neck broken before he was thrown in the Water; his Body did neither sink to the ground, nor receive Water, (as all drowned Bodies are in use to do) and he knowing where his Fathers Body had been put, went on the Sabbath Morning directly to the place where his Body was in the Water, and stood a considerable space on the Water-side, directly opposite to the Body, with his Eyes fixed on the same, before his Body was found or known to any others than the Murtherers; and when John Topping (a stranger) passing that way, and ignorant of the whole Matter, or that Sir James was amissing, called to him, and asked, who that was in the Water: He made no answer, but went away from that place straight to New-Milns, and gave no intimation to him, or any other Person what he had seen in the Water, but appeared surprized when his Body was found there, by other Persons; and his Fathers Body being taken out of the Water, the same was by his order, carried to a dark Out-house; and though he was desired by the Friends and Servants present, to suffer his Fathers dead Body to be carried to his own House, and kept therein, and not to be buried till his Friends in Edinburgh and elsewhere, and Physicians in Haddingtoun, or near by, might see the same. Yet he refused so to do, and caused bury the dead Body of his Father privately, and in haste. And the Noise having spread abroad, that his Father had been barbarously Murdered by him, and his Accomplices: Order was given by these in Authority, to cause open the Grave that Physicians and expert Chirurgians might inspect his Body, and make Report anent the Truth of the Matter: And accordingly, by the Report of the saids Chirurgians who inspected the Body, it did appear, that his said Father was cruelly strangled and murdered, and not drowned, and that he had been cast in the water of purpose to conceal the same: And when his Fathers dead body was sighted and inspected by Chirurgians, and the clear and evident signs of the Murder had appeared, the Body was sewed up, and most carefully cleaned, and his nearest Relations and Friends were desired to lift up his Body to the Coffin: And accordingly James Row, Merchand, (who was in Edinburgh in the time of the Murder) having lifted the Left side of Sir James his Head and Shoulder, and the said Philip the Right side, his Fathers Body, though carefully cleaned, as said is, so as the least Blood was not on it, did (according to Gods usual Method of discovering Murders) blood afresh upon him, and defiled all his hands, which struck him with such a terror, that he immediately let his Fathers Head and Body fall with Violence, and fled from the Body, and in consternation and confusion, cried, Lord, have Mercy upon me, and bowed himself down over a Seat in the Church (where the Corps were inspected) wiping his Fathers innocent blood off his own murdering Hands upon his Cloaths. By all which it is manifest, that he did most traiterously express his hatred and malice to his Majesties Sacred Person, by wishing and drinking to his confusion, and causing others to do the same. And likewise, that he did not only unnaturally curse, invade, attempt to assassinate or beat his said Father, but under trust and assurance, barbarously and treasonable did strangle, kill, and murder him in manner forsaid, and is actor, art and part of the forsaids Crimes, or one or other of them, which being found by an Assize, he ought to be punished for the treasonable Crimes above specified, with forfeiture of Life, Land and Goods, and for the other Crimes above-mentioned, Capitally, and with the pains of Death and Confiscation of Moveables, to the Terror and Example of others to commit the like hereafter.

Pursuers.

Sir John Dalrymple, younger of Stair, His Majesty's Advocate.

Sir George Mackenzie, Advocate.

Procurators in Defence.

Sir David Thoers.

Sir Patrick Hume.

Mr. William Moniepenney.

Mr. William Dundas.

The Pannal's Procurators produced two Warrants of Privy Council, Commanding them to compeer and plead the Pannal's Defence.

Sir Patrick Hume for the Pannal (always denying the Inditement, and whole members and qualifications thereof) alleadges, That as to the first part of the Inditement, in relation to the drinking an Health to the Confusion of his Sacred Majesty, as it is most calumnious, so it is not to be supposed, that any man in his right wits would have been guilty of such a thing; And it is positively offered to be proven, that at or about the time libel'd, and several times before and after, the Defender did most heartily and chearfully in several Companies drink the King's Health, and upon all occasions he was ready to testify his Loyalty to the King, and particularly the time of the Invasion by the late Duke of Monmouth in England, where he did enter himself voluntarily a Souldier in the Earl of Dumbarton's Regiment, and continued in the King's Army till the Rebels were defeat, and the Voluntiers dismissed.

As to the second part of the Libel, in relation to the Pannal, his alleadged committing and being guilty of, and accessory to many notour Crimes abroad, and being detained Prisoner in London, Antwerp, Orleans, &c. and that he vented and entertained malice against his Father, and that he declared many times that he would cut his Throat, and that he did rail against and curse his Father, by many Imprecations.

It is answered, primo, That it is absolutely deny'd, that the Pannal was guilty of, or accessory to any notorious Crime abroad, or put in Prison upon that account, nor is there so much as any Crime condescended upon.

2. The Defender could not conceive any prejudice against his Father, upon the account of Disposing his Estate to his second Son; for he knew nothing thereof till after his Father's decease, that one Alexander Airsle told him that his Father had made such a Disposition.

3. As to the pretended Expressions, that the Defender should have had of Railing, Cursing, and using Imprecations against his Father, in so far as the samen are libel'd to have been done abroad, in England, Holland, or other places, he cannot be lyable to the Punishment inflicted by the Law of this Kingdom, because when a party commits a Crime in another Nation, he is only to be punished according to the Law of the place where the Crime was committed, and not according to the Law of the Nation where he is a Subject, or has his Dwelling: As is clear by the Common Law, Authentick Cod: ubi de criminibus agi oportet. Qua in provincia quis delinquit, aut in qua pecuniarum aut criminum reus sit, sive de terra, sive de terminis, sive de possessione, sive de proprietate, sive de hypotheca, aut de alia qualibet occasione, vel de qualibet re fuerit reus, illic jure subjaceat, quod jus est perpetuum. In that Nation where any Person commits a Crime, or is lyable to answer upon any account whatsoever, he is to be judged by the Law of that place, which is established as a perpetual Law, and Mattheus de Criminibus. in his Title, de penis, is express of the same Opinion.

4. As to all those pretended Expressions of railing, cursing, and threatning, lybel'd, that were before March, 1685. The Defender is secured by the Act of Indemnity, by which all Crimes are indemnified, preceeding that time, against the Government and Laws.

5. As to any pretended Expressions, of railing and cursing, since that time, they being but Injuries alledged done to the Father, he might and did remit the samen, in so far he did not challenge and pursue the same in his own time, and this is clear from the Common Law, Carpzov. Part 2. Quest. 65. Actio autem injuriarum nec active nec passive in Hæredes transit, etiamsi mortuus illatas injurias ignoraverit. Institut. lib. 4. tit. 12. par. 1. de perpetuis temporalibus action. Leg. 10. par. 2. ff. si quis cautionibus in judicio sisten. And leg. 13. ff. de injuriis, injuriarum actio neque hæredi neque in hæredem datur; As also it is a Principle in Law, that diffimulatio tollitur injuria; and if it could be made appear, that the Pannal had any such Expressions, the Father did diffimulat and pass from the same, in so far as by a Letter, dated in June last, written by the Father to the Pannal, he orders him to take in his Chamberlain Accompts of the Rents of his Lands, and of any Money he had received from the Tenements, or for the Corns sold, and that he expects he will do the same exactly, and recommends to him, to be careful of all his Affairs, and subscribes himself to be his Loving Father; By which it is evident, that all former Differences (if any were) betwixt them were then taken away.

As to the third part of the Inditement, in relation to the several Acts and Qualifications insisted upon: To infer, that the Defender had Accession to his Father's death. It is answered, (primo) That the Inditement, in so far as it is founded upon the 51. Act Par. K. Ja. 6. in relation to the Murder under trust, which is declared to be punishable as Treason, is not relevant: Because the Father cannot in Law be said to be under trust and assurance of the Son, and that Act of Parliament takes only place in Cases where a Man is invited to his Neighbours House, or of an Traveller being in an Inn, and that he be murdered under that trust, and the same Act of Parliament being founded on in the Case of Swinton, who killed his Wife, in the year 1666. the Inditement was restricted to simple Slaughter. And in the Case of Master James Oliphant, in the year 1665, The Lords of the Session found, that a Son's killing his Mother, was not Murder under trust, and so he was not punishable by that Act of Parliament, as guilty of the Crime of Treason.

2. The Acts and Qualifications condescended on to infer the Defenders Accession to his Father's death, are but very remote and uncertain, for as to that Expression, That the Defender is alleadged to have threatned his Fathers death, It is the Opinion of all Lawyers, who have written upon the Subject, that that is but a very remote Presumption. And as Carpzovius expresses it, Part. 2. Quest. 121. Numb. 51. quod est indicium admodum periculosum, quippe cum homines sæpe nil minus faciant quam quod minas exequantur & ira iracundia agitated minas de crimine perpetrando sepe jactet, ipso tamen animo fervore paulo post discusso, cohibeat manus, & abstineat a facinore illo quod forsant ab alio postea committitur. And Paris de puto gives an instance in his Tractat de syndicatu upon the word Tortura; and Boverius, That a Woman seeing a Person going by her Window, against whom she had a Prejudice, and that another having a hatred against her, and hearing that she had threatned to cut off that Persons Leggs, the party that did hear the Woman use the threatening, did the thing, upon which the Woman that did threaten, being challenged, and put to the Torture, did confess; Yet thereafter it was found, that she was altogether innocent, and that another had done it.

3. As to the pretended Acts of the Defender's alledged pursuing, and invading his Father, and firing Pistols at him, at Lothian burn and Culterallors in Annis 1683; and 1684. As it is most groundless, so if need were it could be made appear by the Persons who were in company with him at that time, That the Defender, and his Father, were then in intire Friendship all alongst the Journey, and he was so far from making any such Attempt, That it can be made appear, that the Defender did behave himself towards his Father, with all the Submission and Respect that became a Son to have to his Father; But as to these and all other Acts preceeding March, 1685. the Defender is secured by the Act of Indemnity, and as the Defender cannot be pursued for any Crime preceeding that time; neither in Judgment nor out with the same, they in effect being no Crimes, being taken away by the Act of Indemnity, they cannot be so much as made use of as Qualifications or Aggravations to infer another Crime posterior thereto.

4. As to that pretended Qualification, that when the Defender did touch his Fathers dead body after it was taken out of the Grave, the Corps did bleed.

It is answered, That this is but a superstitious Observation without any ground either in Law or Reason. And Carpzovius relates, Part 3. Quest. 122. Numb. 31. That several Persons upon that ground had been unjustly challenged, and that he in his own Experience, had seen a dead body bleed in presence of the Person who was not guilty, as also that he has seen the body not bleed in presence of the Person that was guilty. And Mattheus de Criminibus, is of the same Opinion, Tit. 16. de Quæstionibus, Numb. 12. de Sanguine porro de Cadavere profluente quod dicitur id de plurimis experimentis comprobetur, tamen cum experimenta falsa sint; ratio vero idonea nulla reddi possit, non putaverim indicium ad torturam sufficiens esse; non enim sapientis Judicis est incerto experimento credere quod certa ratione dirimendum est. And the truth is, the occasion of the dead bodies bleeding, was that the Chirurgions that came out to visit the body, did make an Incision about the neck, which might be the occasion of the bleeding, and also the very moving of the dead body when it was taken out of the Grave, and out of the Coffin might occasion the bleeding; especially seeing the body did not bleed for some time after, which certainly was made by the Motion, and by the Incision: As also as a further Evidence, that it could not be the Defenders touching the body, the Chirurgions did likewise touch the body as well as he, and several others present, so that the bleeding could no more be ascribed to his touching, than the touching of the other persons present.

5. As to the other Articles lybel'd, relating to the pretended Murder, They are but meer Stories; and the Truth is, and it is offered to be proven, That the Defender having gone to his Chamber and Bed the night before his Father's death, he did not stir out of his Bed, nor out of the Room, till the next morning, that John Robertson his Fathers Servant came to his Chamber, where he was in Bed, and told him that he had been in his Master's Room, and that he could not find him; Upon which the Defender immediately arose, and put on his Cloaths, and went out to see where his Father was. And shortly after word being brought him, by some Persons in the Town, that they did see his Father's Body lying in the Water, and it being generally concluded by all, that he had thrown himself in the Water, and the body being taken out, and laid in a Low-Room; it was thought fit by all the Neighbours about, that he should be buried the next day.

6. The particulars lybel'd, to infer the Defender's Accession to his Fathers death, being but remote and uncertain Conjectures, it is a certain principle in Law, that ex præsumptionibus & conjecturis nemo criminaliter condemnari potest, especially as to a Capital Punishment: As is clear from the common Law, Leg. 5. digest de pænis, sed nec de supplicationibus debere aliquem damnari, satius enim est Impunitum relinqui facinus nocentis quam Innocentem damnari. And which is the Opinion of all Lawers, writing upon the Subject; As Bartol, upon the foresaid Law, and Farin. part. 3. oper: Crim. Quæst. 86. and the Lawers by him there cited. And Muscard de prob: Conclus. 223. layes it down as a certain conclusion, quod Argumenta quantumcunque urgentissima, etiamsi essent talia quæ mentem indicantis adeo coactarent quod aliud credere non possit, non tamen sufficerent ad condemnationem pænæ corporalis sed duntaxat pecuniariæ.

7. The Presumptions and Qualifications lybel'd, cannot be sustained even to infer an Arbitrary Punishment: Because they may and are taken off by other Presumptions, That either the Father was not murdered, but that in a Frainzie or melancholy fit he had thrown himself in the Water: Or at least if he was murdered, that the Defender had no Accession thereto, and the Presumptions condescended upon in behalf of the Defender, eleid the Presumptions contained in the Inditement, are these. That it is notourlie known, That his Father was subject to melancholly Fits, and that in the Year 1679, the time of Bothwell-bridge, It is offered to be proven, that he was in a fit of Distraction; and at another time in his House at the Netherbow, he was going to throw himself out over the Window, if one Thomas Lindall had not come in at the time and pulled him back by the Leggs, when his body was half out at the Window: And some few days before he went out of Edinburgh last, he came to George Sterling, Chirurgeon, and desired him to draw blood of him, for a Distemper in his Head, which he refused, unless he had advice from a Physician. As also a day or two before he went out of the Town, he was seen reading upon the Book of Burtouns Melancholly. And that day when he went out of the Town in company of Mr. Bell the Minister, and Aiton Merchant in Haddingtown, they observed him to be melancholy, disordered, and more troubled than ordinary; or if it could be made appear, that the Father was murdered, yet it cannot be presumed that the Defender had any Accession thereto, or that he would have committed such an Act against the very Ties and light of Nature: As also it appears by the foresaid letter, written to the Defender by his Father, that they were in intire Friendship; as also when the surmise went abroad, that his Father had been murdered, if he had been conscious to himself that he had any Accession thereto, he would have certainly fled the Country, and gone away: But he was so far from that, that upon the first Rumor of it he came presently in to Edinburgh, and several days thereafter, it being told him, that he was suspected to have Accession to his Fathers Death, he came voluntarily and entered himself in Prison, that he might undergo the strictest and severest Tryal. Which alone is sufficient, if it were no more to take off all the Presumptions lybell'd, and to convince the World of the Defender's innocence; and it being a principle in Law, That una præsumptio tollit aliam, The Presumptions adduced for the Defender ought to be preponderat, Mascard. Conclus. 1205. is positive, That præsumptiones quæ stant pro reis prævalent. As also that Præsumptio affectionis naturalis prævalet contrariis præsumptionibus. So that upon both these Considerations, the Presumptions alledged for the Defender ought to be sustained, to take away the Presumptions lybell'd, and to free him from the Crime.

His Majesties Advocate answers, That the Libel consists of three Articles, (Primo) Treason by the Pannal's drinking the King's Confusion, and by the Murder under Trust. 20. The Cursing of a Parent. 30. The Qualifications inferring the Pannal's Accession to the Murder of his Father.

As to the first, it cannot be denied, but that the drinking or wishing Confusion to His Majesty, is the highest Act of Contempt, Malice, and Disdain to his Royal Person; and as the Relevancy of this Article is not expressly contraverted, so the atrocity of the Act, and the forcing others to do the same upon the common grounds of Law, does clearly infer Treason, and it cannot be expected, that such extravagant Words should either be express, or particularly provided against by any Law in express Terms; but the nature of the words in express Terms of our Law discharging all Speeches to the disdain of his Majesty, the Contempt of his Authority, do clearly and naturally comprehend the words libelled, and by the common Law, Ad leg: jul. Maj. crimen læsæ Majestatis ad exemplum legis scriptæ est vindicandum.

And whereas it is pretended, that these words were inadvertantly said, and that it appears by the Tract of the Pannal's Life, and his Readiness to engage in His Majesties Service, that the words could not be deliberate and malicious. It is replied, That it is offered to be proven, that the drinking Confusion to the King, was openly and plainly proposed; and that the Pannal did deliberately send out for Ale to drink certain Healths, and that this Health to the King's Confusion was the first or second, and that it was no lapse or mistake in the Expression; but that he forced others to pledge and drink that same Health: And the malice and disloyalty is evident by the Healths subsequent, viz. Antichrist's, &c. and it is not at all relevant, (after the reiterate and deliberat expressing of these words) that he had retracted or drank the King's Health; for a Crime once committed, is not retracted or taken off by such inconsistent and unsequential Speeches; but to shew the sence the Pannal had of the importance of his own Words, the Pannal being informed, that some of the Persons present had divulged his having drunk the King's Confusion, the Pannal did conjure them to Secrecy, and did menace the Witneses with a great Kane, that he would beat and brain them if ever they told it.

Whereas it is answered in general, as to all Crimes committed without the Kingdom, that they cannot be cognosced or punished here. It is replied, That as to all Crimes against Nature or the Law of Nations, as every party is competent to be an Accuser, so every Judicature is competent, and therefore as to the Crimes of Treason, or cursing of Parents, wherever committed, they are punishable by the Justices: But because in relation to the Crimes committed abroad, there is not positive Probation, but Declarations and Testimonies; Therefore as to these Crimes, His Majesties Advocate does not insist on them as distinct Crimes per se, but as Qualifications, Documents and Evidences of the habitual Debauchery, and unnatural Malice exprest by the Pannal against his Father for a Tract of many Years.

Whereas it is answered, That as to all Crimes preceeding 1685, they are taken off by the Indemnity. It is replied, The Indemnity 1685, is no general Indemnity, neither as to Persons nor Crimes, but particular Crimes are remitted, and particularly enumerat without any general Clause: And as cursing of Parents is not particularly enumerat, so by the Nature of that Crime, it cannot be included or comprehended in any general Indemnity: And the words of the Act of Parliament, 20. Act. 1. Par. K. Ch. 2d. bears expressly, That the Cursers of Parents shall be put to death without Mercy. So that a general Act of Indemnity or Mercy without a special Remission, could not include this Crime, which as the Act of Parliament bears, is expressly against Nature and the Law of God: And by the Opinion of all Lawers, general Indemnities do not extend to all Crimes; but these Crimes which are called in Law Crimina excepta, are never intended to be Indemnified, nor such Crimes, where the Interest of Parties is more than the Interest of publick Justice, and in all former and general Indemnities, Murther and other Crimes are particularly excepted with a general Clause, excepting all such Crimes as use not to be comprehended in general Acts of Indemnity; So that this so horrid a Crime, wherein the Parent was more interested than the Publick, neither was nor could be comprehended under a general Indemnity: As also that restricted, limited Indemnity, bears expressly an Exoneration for all persons below the degree and quality of an Heretor, Wodsetter or Burgeses; and whether the Pannal were an Heretor or not, yet it cannot be said, that he is below the degree and quality of a Wodsetter or Burgeses; and therefore the Act of Indemnity is of no use to him.

Whereas

Whereas it is answered, That Sir James was reconciled with the Pannal, and wrote kind Letters to him, whereby, dissimulando former Injuries were taken off. It is replied, That Injuries are only taken off dissimulando, which are not atrocious, but never specifick Crimes; wherein the discharge or exprels Renunciation of the Party injured cannot liberat a vindicta publica, the Punishment of Crimes, especially in Capital Punishments, belonging to the Magistrat, and the privat Party has not the sole Interest, nor can dispense with Capital Punishments: But the Letter founded upon, does not in the least infer the Parties Forgiveness or Dissimulation of the Injury: And a Father ordering his Son to call in for Chamberlain Accompts, without empowering him to discharge the same, is not the least evidence of Confidence in his Son, much less a remitting of his Crime.

As to the second Article in relation to the Cursing, it is positively offered to be proven, not in single Acts, but by a tract and habit of cursing his Father in the most abominable termes imaginable.

As to the third Article in Relation to the Murder, that this matter may be clear, Et ut confet de corpore delicti, these undoubted Qualifications are offered to instruct, that Sir James Standfield was murdered and strangled, and that he did not drown himself. 1. It is offered to be proven by the Minister, that was that night in the House, that long after ten a Clock at night, and that Sir James had retired to the Chamber, where he lay alone, the Minister heard the confused Whispers, Murmurs, and Noise of several Persons, both Men and Women, which affrighted him, and that he heard the noise go away by the back-side of the House, which leads directly to that Pool where Sir James his Body was thrown in the Water.

2. Sir James's Body was found swimming above the Water, and albeit it appeared by the Ice upon the top of his Cloaths, that he had been several hours in the Water, yet there had no Water entred into his Body, which is a Demonstration, that he was dead before he was thrown in the Water; for a person thrown alive into Water drawing in of Air and Respiration; being in the Water, he must draw in Water, and if the person drawes in as much Water as fills his concavities, he becomes heavy, having so much more weight of Water, and therefore he sinks; But if a Person be thrown dead into the Water, when the Clap of his Throat is shut, the Water cannot enter, and there being so much Emptiness, the Body is light and supported by more parts of Water, than the gravity of the Body can depress. 3. There being several Chyrurgions and others sent out by order from Authority to take up and inspect the Body; to see whether there was any evidence of Strangling, or other Symptoms of Murder upon the Body: It did appear to all these Persons who did depone before a Committee of the Privy-Council; That from the one Jugular Vein to the other round the Neck, there was a tumour of congealed black bruised Blood, three inches broad, and that there was congealed Blood in the Throat, upon which matter of Fact, the Colledge of Physicians have given an unanimous Testimony in writing, that Sir James Standfield was Strangled and not drowned: And the Deaconry of the Chirurgions being convened, have emitted a Declaration in Writing, concurring and agreeing with the Report of the Physicians; So that it is, as clear as the light of Day, that Sir James Standfield was murdered.

2. For the Qualifications that the Pannal was the Murderer, or accessory to the Murder of his Father, these clear Evidences are offered; which makes his Crime without possibility to be palliat or denyed. 1. It is notorious that the Pannal is a most debauched, vicious, pernicious Person, and has been Prisoner or condemned to dy in all the Places or Societies he ever haunted; He entred a Souldier in the Scots Regiment where he was condemned to die at Treves, but made his escape, and his being in Prison, in the Marshal-Sea-Prisons, Orleance, and Brussels, (which makes the Circuit of his Travels) are not denyed; and his profligat life and constant Drunkenness, since he came to the Prison, is offered to be proven by the Keepers: and as it is unnecessar to trace all his Debauches; so there is one material point offered to be proven, That upon the least Provocation either by Man or Woman, the Pannal used to swear by horrid Oaths, that he would take their lives, though he should die in the Grass-mercat for it.

3. Sir James Standfield for these Debaucheries having disherished the Pannal, and disposed his Estate to his second Son: It is positively offered to be proven, That in the Nun gate of Haddington, in James Smith's House, the Pannal being told, that his Father would disherish him, he with horrible Oaths vowed to cut his Fathers Throat.

And whereas it is answered to this Qualification, That the saying that a Son would cut a Father's Throat, is but a remot circumstance. It is replied, That the Law, and all Lawyers do agree, That Minæ precedentes & damnum sequuntur, is a most pregnant Qualification of that Party's Crime, especially where the Threats were to cut a Father's Throat, which of it self was so horrid and unnatural a Villany, that it cannot be doubted he who durst vow it, wanted but an occasion to act it. And it is acknowledged, that though this be the clearest Presumption, yet per se, it is not full Probation: For though the Son had both vowed, and resolved, yet by an accident he might have been prevented; but the Presumption at least lays the Burden, that except the Pannal could condescend, and document, that some other Person killed his Father, he must be reputed the Murderer.

2. It is offered to be proven, That Sir James Standfield who was a Person of eminent Sobriety and Veracity, did declare to several Persons, that his unnatural Son had attempted his Life, and offered violence to his Person, and particularly, that he had pursued him on Horseback, and fired Pistols on him; and that same Friday before Sir James was Murdered, he did declare that it was not his Debts, or any thing under Heaven that troubled him, but that his Son and Family were plotting and contriving his Destruction, and the next night he was murdered.

3. It is offered to be proven, That the Pannal's Mother declared, That her Son had vowed to be his Fathers death, and that he was a vindictive Person, and that she did apprehend he had murdered him. So as to this Article, there is a concurrence of the Pannals own Oaths, to murder his Father, and of his Father and Mother's Declarations, that he had attempted, and was still plotting the same.

The second Qualification is, that, that Saturday-night, Sir James Standsfield came home: The Pannal would not come where his Father was, either to Supper, or Prayer, and being expressly desired by several Persons, to go to his Father, and speak with him: He declared, (that same night he was murdered) he could not endure to see, or look upon his Father; and he had been all that day, clos'd with Thompson and his Wife, and Fanet Johnston. So after ten hours at even, after the Family was gone to Bed, he came out to Thomson's House, which is hard by the Gate, and there in presence of Thomson, his Wife, and Fanet Johnston, he declared that his Father would neither give him Money, nor Cloaths, and curst his Father, and declared that he would shortly make ridd of him, which agrees with what he had several times said in other Companies, that he was to be Laird before Christmas; and that he was shortly to be Master of all, and none could think how soon. As also shortly before Sir James's Death, the Pannal's Mother falling in Swound, it was said to him, Philip, ye will shortly want your Mother; to which he answered, by God his Father should be dead before her: And eight days after, his Mother falling again Sick, he repeated the same words, whereby it is evident the Murder was deliberate and determined.

3. On the Sunday Morning, before Sir James's Body was found, Philip came to the Minister's Chamber, and told him that his Father was gone out in the night, and that he had been searching for him about the Pools, and water side; and when the Minister reprov'd him for making such Insinuations against his Father, he laugh'd at him, and went away to the Pool, and stood looking upon his Father in the water, but made no Discovery; and thereafter a Stranger coming by upon the Highway likewise, seeing Sir James's body in the water, he came back and discovered the matter; at which Philip seem'd surpris'd, and told that he had seen his Father's Body in the Water before, but he did not think fit to be the first Discoverer, which shews, that he was conscious of his own guilt; otherways upon the first sight of his Father in the Water, he would have gone to him, but on the contrary, he never laid a hand upon his Father's Body, either to pull him out of the water, or to carry him into the House, for the dread of some extraordinary discovery, and did not allow the Corps to be brought within his Father's Gates, but caus'd carry the Corps to the Wake-miln, where to cover the Appearance of Strangling upon his Body, he entrusted Fanet Johnston with the care of wounding him, who was known to be a Person so odious to Sir James, that he could not see her for her baseness with the Pannal, and she did acknowledge, that she had not been for three quarters of a Year within the House before; and yet this infamous Strumpet, who has been Tortured by order of the Privy Council, as Accessory to the Murder, chiefly intrusted to see the naked body, and the Cloaths put on.

4. The Pannal did refuse to send for a Chyrurgion, and to let his Father's Body be sighted, though the Minister, and others did expressly demand it; and the Englishmen in the Manufactory, who were acquainted with the Crowner-Laws, they made a mutiny anent the Burial, till the Corps were sighted; yet the Pannal caus'd bury the Corps that same night without shewing them.

The Corps being rais'd by order, and incision being made, whereby the Strangling did clearly appear, and the Corps being dress'd clean, and Linnen put on, there did appear no blood; but to take off Suspicion, the Corps were list'd up, and the Night-Cap being wrong put on, it was altered and changed, and thereafter the Corps were laid down without any Blood upon the Linnen; and the Pannal (who to this time had never touch'd his Father's Corps) being required to assist to lift the Body into the Coffin, having taken his Father by the right side of the Head with his left hand, James Row bearing the left, the Pannal's hand was altogether bloody, as if his Hand had been put in a Vessel of Blood, which notwithstanding of all his Impudent resolution to the contrary, had that horrible Impression, and Conviction upon him, that he let his Father's Head fall to the ground, and cry'd out, O God, and run away and went to a Desk in the Church, where he lay groaning and in Confusion, but durst never return to touch the Corps, and as there can no natural reason be given, but an ordinar and wonderful Providence of God, in this kind of discoveries of Murder: So the Fact was never more evident, and sure, though half a dozen of Persons were bearing the Corps, no Mans hands were bloody but the Pannals, and the Corps being two intire days in the Grave, in that Weather and Season, the Blood by the course of nature was become stagnat and congeal'd, so that the former tossing, and list'ing of the Corps, and even the Incision it self had occasioned no such Effusion, but only some water or gore; but upon the first touch of the Pannal the Murderer, there appeared abundance of liquid florid Blood, and though this per se might not be sufficient, and as Mattheus is cited, it should not infer Torture, yet Mattheus acknowledges that most part do sustain this, as a violent presumption oft times experimented, yet in his Opinion it is not sufficient for Torture, because Torture being in it self a Punishment, it cannot be used, except where there is semplena probatio, or where the Conscience of the Judge is satisfied, as to the truth of the Crime, and therefore uses an extraordinary course, to extort a Confession, which proves that this presumption is semplena probatio per se according to their own grounds.

And whereas it is alledged, that Capital Punishment cannot be infer'd from Conjectures, but from clear and positive Testimonies. It is answered, that the Lex ult. Cod. de probationibus, clearly states that probation is either, Testibus, tabulis instrumentis documentis & indiciiis. And Mattheus states a particular title upon this single Question, Cap. 6. Titulo 15. de probationibus, and does most positively determin that Crimes are to be proven Documentis, Argumentis & Indiciis. And it is most evident, that the probation which arises from the nature of the thing, which is incapable to be sophisticate, or impos'd upon, as Witnesses may be, that kind of probation is the surest, because it is always the same, and admits no variation: It's true, and it is acknowledged that Argumenta & Indicia must be clara & evidentiis, and probation being Quod facit fidem Judici, Jadici, every Man's Experience tells him, that the complication and conjunction of so many evident Qualifications, though none of them per se were sufficient, yet being all of them joyned, it induces a greater certainty, than two Witnesses positively deponing upon the Fact. And therefore the evidence of the probation belongs to the Inquest, and the relevancy that these Articles conjoyn'd, or any part of them are sufficient to infer the Crime, belongs to the Judge.

As to the Presumptions offered for the exculpation of the Pannal, they are not at all relevant; for though so horrid a Murder is not to be presumed against Nature, yet being proved, or so strongly evinced, it does but conclude the Pannal's greater Guilt; and suppose that Sir James Standsfield was formerly Melancholy, and had been Frantick in the Year 1679, yet it is known he recovered his Health, and was of a compos'd, sedat temper of mind for many Years thereafter, and was capable and diligent about his Affairs, these many Years, as he had been formerly, and was so considered and employed by the wisest Men in the Kingdom; and at the time of his Death there was no Sickness, or returning of Frenzie upon him, but all that Week he had composedly done his Affairs; and did upon the Saturday, when he went Home, discourse rationally upon all the Subjects that occurred: But it being so clearly documented and proven that he was Strangled, it is a ridiculous conceit, and there remains no possibility that after he was Strangled, he walked out and drowned himself. And as to that Presumption, that the Pannal rendered himself Prisoner, it was indeed suitable to the rest of his Impudence, and he did not render himself till after the Order to apprehend him was intimate to him; when he could not Escape, and when he was under Observation, and there did not want Project in fixing upon this Impudence when he could not Escape, as an Qualification of Innocence, that he would render.

Sir David Thoires without repetition of the Replies made by His Majesties Advocat, doth make his Duply to the foresajds Replies, and every Member thereof, in order as follows, viz.

TO the first, Anent the Treasonable Words, the Pannals Procurators oppon their former Answers, and the Act of Parliament whereupon that part of the Ditty is founded, being only in order to such Treasonable Speeches advisedly spoken. The constant tract of the Pannal's Life, in drinking his Majesties good Health at all occasions, and offering to adventure his Life in his Service in the last Rebellion, sufficiently demonstrats, that if any such Expresssion did escape the Pannel, as it is denyed, the same was only rash and unadvised, and not deliberate and advised, as is required by the Act of Parliament, to infer the pains libelled; and the Qualifications added by my Lord Advocat, bearing, that the Pannal did conjure the Persons then present to Secrecy, demonstrats that the Pannal was ex incontinenti heartily sorrowful and penitent for the same. And it's clear by that excellent Law of the Cod, the words whereof are, Si quis Imperatori maledixerit, si ex insania miserando, si ex temeritate, & petulantia remnenda, si ex animo injuriandi ad principem remittendum, which demonstrats, that by the Common Law, such an rash and unadvised Expresssion was never to be laid hold on to infer a capital Punishment, where the Person alledged, expresse thereof, was not otherways suspect of Disloyalty.

2. Repeats the Defence as to Crimes alledged committed abroad, and it were against reason and equity, that Persons for one and the self same Crime, should be subject to the Punishments of several Jurisdictions, where the Punishment of the saids Crimes are different: But seeing my Lord Advocat declares he hath no Probation for these alledged Crimes, but Certificats and Affidavits, they cannot be obruded as a part of the Libel, because the saids pretended Certificats and Affidavits, are neither insert in the Libel, or given out to the Pannal, and all Crimes are to be proven testibus, non testimoniis; and if the custom of Affidavits should be introduced in this Court, all Pannals (how innocent soever) might be murdered, by being deprived of their unanswerable Objections against the Granters of these Affidavits, &c. and therefore they cannot be sustained as a Qualification to load the Pannal, or make the Inquest have a prejudicat opinion of him.

3. As to my Lord Advocat's Reply anent the Act of Indemnity, the former Defence and Act of Indemnity is opposed, and bears expressly Murders, Robberies, Slaughters, and all other Crimes committed against His Majesty, and Laws of the Kingdom, either by Word, Writ, or Deed, which undoubtedly excludes all alledged Crimes, said, done, or committed by the Pannal before that time, and this favour & gratia principis, is to be ampliāt and extended, and not restricted, and all His Majesties Judges and Officers of State are commanded to sustain the same, according to the most ample Interpretations for the Pannal, that the Words will allow.

4. The pretence that the Pannal was of the quality of a Burger, or a Barron, is most irrelevant, the Pannal having no visible Fortune at the same time, and as my Lord Advocat himself acknowledgeth, no Expectation of any Fortune whatsoever, so that if Barons, Burgars, Liferenters, Woodsetters, and likewise these who have nothing in possession at the time, shall be seclused from the benefit of that Indemnity, it is scarce intelligible, to whom, and for what cause the same was granted. 5. And as to that part of the Reply, bearing, that this was a privat Injury, and so not comprehended within the Act of Indemnity, the former Defence is opposed, and all pretence of privat Injury was taken away by Dissimulation or Death.

As to the pretence that the Reconciliation can be no defence against the Libel, as to vindicta publica, and that the Letter whereupon the Defence is founded doth not import a Dissimulation. It is Duplyed, That the Act of Parliament being an Comminatory Law, and principally intended in favours of Parents, the same was never yet made use of, and it were very hard to make use of the same to deprive a Parent of his Child, for any rash or passionate Expresssion, especially where upon Repentance the Father had remitted the Injury; but the Father being in effect Judge of the Injury, his remitting the same ought at least to Assailzie the Child, from any capital Conclusion. And as to the alledged habitual Cursing, the same is denyed, and the former former Defence founded upon the Act of Indemnity is repeated and opposed, and the Libel is opposed, which doth not bear habitual Cursing, but particular Acts at particular Times.

And as to the Qualifications alledged by my Lord Advocat, for clearing that the Defunct Sir James Standfield was murdered, the Pannal is truly sorry, that for his own Defence, and for clearing of his own Innocence, his Lawers should be necessitated to plead any thing relating to his Fathers Infirmities, or way and manner of his Death. But it is duplyed, That the whole Presumptions adduced by my Lord Advocat are allanerly fallacious Conjectures, and can neither be separatim, or complexly relevant to infer any such thing, because, 1. That the Minister did hear a whispering noise, and was thereby terrified, his Terror and Consternation having (as he himself pretends) put him in a Disorder and Confusion, he was thereby rendered incapable to observe or judge of any thing that happened. 2. That the Body was swimming above Water, imports nothing, the Defunct having a great Coat of thick Cloth about him, which was sufficient to keep him floating above. 3. The pretence that there was no Water in the Defunct's Body when the Chirurgions visited the same, imports nothing, because the Defunct's Body having been several times stirred before that time, by which the Water might have run out, as it actually did (in Case there was any water within it).

4. Albeit where a Man is drowned unwillingly, and endeavours to breathe, so long as he can, his breathing may suck in the Water; Yet if a Man intend to drown himself, he will certainly endeavour all means for quick dispatch of himself, and thereby keep in his Breath, and the keeping in of the Breath after that manner was sufficient, both to keep the Body floating, and the water from coming in.

5. To put the matter beyond all question, the Defunct was laying in the water a considerable space from the Bank; And albeit the Ice was not so strong as to have carried a Child, yet the Ice was whole and entire betwixt the Defunct and the Bank, which demonstrates, that the Defunct had jumped in from the Bank, to that place where he was lying. 6. As to that pretence, that there was Blood about the Defunct's Neck, all lapper'd and bruised before incision was made, the Defunct being pulled out of the water, by an great Cleik, the touching of the Neck with the Cleik, when his breath was just gone out, was sufficient to have made the Blood where that part was to lapper and congeal. 7. As to the Declarations of the Physicians, and Chirurgions, they are only Declarations ex auditu, and upon Report of one or two Chirurgions, and hath no Foundation, but the ignorance or knowledge of the saids two Reporters; neither can any such Declarations be obtruded against the Pannal, because not given out with the Libel; But whatever may be inferred from these Presumptions, whether the Defunct was Murdered or not, the same does not concern the Pannal, unless his accession to the Murder were instructed, as is impossible it can be.

As to the Qualifications alledged by my Lord Advocat, for fixing the Murder, or accession thereto upon the Pannal; It is duplyed to the first, That the Pannal's alledged vicious Life, and the Story at Treves, his being Drunk in Prison, and Threating to cut Throats upon small Provocations, the same are extrinsick to the Lybel, and cannot be respected. 2. As to the alledged threatening used in James Smith's House, the Lybel is opposed, bearing these Expressions, to have been used in the Year 1684, or some Year preceeding; And therefore the former defence founded upon the Indemnity, is repeated, and opposed. And whereas my Lord Advocat pretends, that minæ præcedentes cum damno sequuto, is sufficient either to fix the guilt upon the Person who used the Threats, or at least to burden him with the probation, that another committed the Crime. It is Duplyed, 1. That my Lord Advocat's Position is absolutely denyed, unless he can instruct some other positive Accession against the Pannal, and these pretended Threats being taken away, not only by the Act of Indemnity, but likeways by Dissimulation, which is not only offered to be inferred from the Letter made mention of in the Defence, but likeways by the Defunct's owning, receiving, intertaining, furnishing, and providing for the Pannal, in every thing suitable as his eldest Son, the same doth undoubtedly take away all pretence that can be founded upon threatening, so many Years preceeding; and by no Law can the Pannal be burdened to prove who were either Actors, or in Accession to his Fathers Murder.

As to the second Qualification bearing, that the Defunct said to several Persons, that the Pannal offered to invade him (denying the same) the Father's Assertion could not infer a Crime against the Pannal, unless the Crime it self were otherways proven by Witnesses, and the same is Libeled to have been said by Sir James before the Act of Indemnity. And Sir James's other Assertion, that he was in trouble, for fear of Prejudice from his Family, cannot infer a Crime, especially against the Pannal; and far less can it be proven by the Relict and the other Son, who in Sir James's apprehension were designing mischief against him, and for their own Vindication, they would certainly depone partially against the Pannal. And the same is repeated against the other Expressions alledged spoken by the Mother; And Witnesses cannot be received to prove what another Witness said.

As to the Pretence, that the Pannal refused to sup with his Father the night before his Death. It is Duplyed, the Pannal was not at all in use to sup, except on Sundays night. And the Pannal had no Kindness for the Minister, Because he and others of his Gang had endeavoured to keep up discord betwixt him and his Father.

As to the alledged Bleeding of the Corps, the former Defences are opposed; And albeit the Pannal did help to lift his Fathers Corps before the incision, yet no Blood did appear till long thereafter that the incision was made, and the Pannal did fall to grip that part of his Father's Head where the Incision was. So that the Blood falling from the wound, can neither be a Ground nor Presumption for guilt; And though the Pannal was surprised to see his Father's Blood, Yet the same did only proceed from natural Duty and Affection, and not from any apprehension of Guilt. And these qualifications being all Libel'd and Debated upon, It is humbly desired for the Pannal, that the the Lords of Justiciary would give a separat Interloquitor upon every particular qualification.

Sir Patrick Hume for the Pannal adds, That as to the point of Treason, It is offered to be proven, that it was when he was Drunk, and after Cups, and is so presumed, especially it being, as it is acknowledged by the Libel, in a Drunken company.

2. As to the Act of Indemnity, It is extended to all Crimes except the Arch-bishop's Murder, and exceptio firmat regulat, &c. And the Act bears not that Clause excepting other Crimes, which uses to be excepted.

3. As to the qualifications condescended on in my Lord Advocate's answer, either they are Libel'd, and so opposes the former answer; And if they be not Libel'd, they cannot be considered as qualifications.

4. Whereas it is alledged, That the Pannal was in use to threaten to cut Throats, when in passion; the Argument is retorted, For though he threatned, nothing followed; And so his Threatnings were but verba jactantia.

5. As to the citation out of Mattheus, that parties may be punished upon presumptions. It is answered, That the Case there stated is where the Person who committed the Slaughter, was apprehended in the place where it was committed, That he was all bloody and with a bloody Sword, answerable to the Wound, and that he became pale when he was apprehended, and that he had made no answer, but in terrour fled away, which are such Acts as do evidently make appear the Slaughter, and could admit of no other construction, but that cannot be pretended in this Case, where all the Presumptions are remote and extrinick, and even in the Case instanced by Mattheus, and others of that Nature, they are only to take effect in order to an Arbitrary, but not a capital Punishment, which is the opinion of all Lawyers, who ever wrote upon the subject, and particularly Muscarrd, de prob: conclus. 123. Numb. 20. and 31. where the question is stated, an plures presumptiones conjunguntur, in order to infer a capital punishment? And he concludes in the negative as a general conclusion by all Lawyers, but only to infer an arbitrary Punishment.

As to the bleeding of the Body, It is offered to be proven, that the Pannal touched his Father's Body before the Incision, and it did not bleed.

THe Lords, Justice General, and Commissioners of Justiciary, Having considered the Libel, pursued by His Majesty's Advocate against Philip Standsfield the Pannal: And the first part thereof, anent the Treason libel'd, they find the famen as it is lybel'd, relevant to infer the pain of Treason.

And as to the Pannal's cursing of his Father, mentioned in the Inditement; They find these Expressions, or either of them, viz. the Devil take him, the Devil rive him, God damn him, relevant to infer the pain of Death: And repels the Defence founded upon the Act of Indemnity, and finds the Pannal is not under or below the quality therein specified.

As to the Pannal's murdering of his Father mentioned in the Inditement, they found the Libel as it is lybelled and qualified relevant to infer the pain of Death, and remits the same with the qualifications lybel'd to the knowledge of the Assise, and allows Witneses to be led for the Pannal's proving his Father to have been Melancholy the day before the committing of the Murder, and remits to the Assise to consider the Import thereof, if it be proven, and repels the whole other Defences proponed for the Pannal.

The Lords continues the Dyet against the said Philip Standsfield, till to Morrow at two of the Clock in the Afternoon: And ordains him to be carried back to Prison, and the Witneses and Assises to attend, ilk Person under the pain of 200 Merks.

Edinburgh the seventh of February, 1688.

Philip Standsfield Prisoner, being this day entered on Pannal, dilated, indyted and accused for the Treasonable drinking of the King's Confusion, cursing his Father, and for the cruel and unnatural murdering of him in manner mentioned in this Ditty.

His Majesties Advocate for Probation adduced the Witneses deponing, viz.

John Robertson late Servitor to Sir James Standsfield of New-Milns, aged twenty four Years, unmarried, purged of malice, prejudice, hatred, ill will, and partial Counsel, and solemnly sworn, Depones, a little time before harvest last, the Pannal being in the Kitchen of New-Milns, in the deceast Sir James Standsfield's House, where the Deponent was likewise present, he saw the Pannal Philip Standsfield take a Cup of Ale, and heard him say: There is the Pope's Confusion, the Antichrists, the Chancelours, and the King's Confusion, and put the Cup to his Head, and drink a little, and then gave it to Samuel Spofforth, and commanded him to drink it on his Knees; depones, that there were likewise besides Samuel Spofforth, Jeremy Smith, Agnes Bruce and Elspeth Jameson; and depones, that Philip Standsfield the Pannal was not drunk at the time; Depones, That at the naming of the several Confusions above-mentioned, he still drank a little of the Cup; And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God: The Deponent further depones, that he said to the Pannal, after the drinking of the saids Confusions, that it was Treason, and he answered, Ye Dog what are you concerned; ye do not understand to whom ye speak. Sic Scribitur, John Robertson.

Agnes Bruce, Servant to the deceast Sir James Standsfield, aged twenty four years, unmarried, purged purged and sworn, Depones, That a little before Harvest last, she being in the Kitchen of New milns with Philip Standsfield the Pannal, she saw him take a Cup of Ale, and drink the confusion of the Pope, and the King, and heard him bid Samuel Spofforth sit down on his Knees and drink the same, which accordingly he did, after this the Deponent went up Stairs, and knows no more what past at that time, but heard they drank more confusions; Depones, that about a week after it being talked in the house, that he had drank the confusions afore-said, he said to the Deponent, God damn him, if he knew who divulged it, he would be their Death: And this is the Truth as she shall answer to God, depones she cannot write. Sic subscribitur, Linlithgow.

Samuel Spofforth, late Servitor to Sir James Standsfield of New milns, aged 19 years, unmarried, purged and sworn, Depones, that a little before Harvest last, the Deponent was in the Kitchen of New milns with Philip Standsfield the Pannal, where he heard him drink a confusion to the Pope, Antichrist, and the King, and to the Devil, and the Pannal prest the Deponent to drinke the same confusions upon his knees; Depones, John Robertson, Agnes Bruce, Jeremy Smith and Elspeth Jameson were all likewise present at that time, and that these confusions were drunk severally: And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur, Samuel Spofforth.

John Robertson above design'd being Re-examined, purged and sworn, Depones, That the Deponent being at Morum Castle after Harvest last, in order to give a call to a Minister, the Deponent having met with Philip Standsfield the Pannal, he said to him, Ye are a wise lad, if ye have subscribed that Bond, the Devil take him, and particularly, the Devil take his Father, and named his Father; depon'd, that at another time in the midst of Harvest last, the Deponent and Sir James Standsfield the Pannal's Father being going to Smeitoun with a Minister, the Pannal asked him, Where he and his Father was going, and the Deponent answered, that he was going to Smeitoun with his Father; And the Pannal Philip Standsfield said, Devil, let never one of them come back again, Horse nor Man: Depones further, That several times, and frequently, when the Deponent has been seeking the Pannal to come to Dinner with his Father, the Pannal's ordinar Answer was, the Devil dame him, and you both, and Devil rive him, for I will not go to him, and if he had a sixpence a day, he would not go near him, for his Father girned upon him like a Sheeps-head in a tongs, and that he has heard him say sometimes, God damn his Father: And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur, John Robertson.

William Scot Clothier in New-miln, Aged 30 years, Married, Purged and Sworn, Depones, That betwixt Michaelmas and Martimas last, the Pannal Philip Standsfield having come to the Deponent's Shop, and asked for some Tobacco, the Deponent said to Philip, his Father would not let him want for Money to buy Tobacco; and the Pannal Philip said, the Devil take him and his Father both, for there never came an honest man out of York-shire: Depones, his Wife was present with him, when that Discourse past: Depones, he cannot write. And this is the truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur, Linlithgow.

Agnes Bruce above-designed being Re-examined, Purged and Sworn, Depones, That she did hear the Pannal usually vow and swear he would kill any person that offended him; and that the Pannal did haunt much with Janet Johnston, George Thomson and his Wife, and that he went frequently out of his Fathers House after Supper to these persons; and further Depones, that she has heard the Pannal frequently curse his father, and bid the Devil damn him, and rive him, and twell him; and that she has frequently heard him express his hatred and abhorrence of his Father, and that he could not abide to see his Father: further Depones, that the Munday at Night before Sir James came to Edinburgh, the last time he was in it, being about a Fourtnight before his Death, the Deponent was ordered to call the Pannal to his Mother after he was gone to his Chamber, and that accordingly she did it, and when the Pannal came down, the Deponent left him with his Mother alone, and when she was without the Door, she heard him say to his Mother several times, God damn him if he did it not; and desired his Mother to take a good Heart, for as long as he had, she should not want: Depones, she knows not what he meant by these words, but knows there had been a little quarrel betwixt Sir James and his Lady that same Night: Further Depones, that on Tuesday thereafter, when Sir James Standsfield was going in to Edinburgh, she did hear Philip Standsfield the Pannal say in his Mothers Chamber (his Father not being present,) God let him never return, God let him never see his Fathers face again, the Devil go with him, the Devil rive him, and take him away: and that there was no body in the Room at the time but the Pannal and his Mother, and the Deponent was at the Door: Further Depones, that about a month before, Sir James having reproved the Pannal, upon the occasion of an Accompt given in by William Anderson Brewer, she did hear the Pannal say in his Mothers Chamber (Sir James not being present,) God damn him if he should not do ten times worse, and that he could not endure to see his Fathers face, and that he had hated his Father these six or seven years: Further Depones, that about a Fourth-night or twenty days before Sir James his death, it being said that Philip was to go to Town with his Father, she heard him say, he would be hang'd ere he went with him, let him go, the Devil go with him, and let him never return, and this likewise in his Mothers Chamber, and in her presence: Depones, the Pannal did ordinarily shift occasions of being in his Fathers company: Depones, that the Friday before Sir James his death, she knows the Pannal and Janet Johnston were a considerable time together in the Pannal's Chamber, where the Deponent heard Janet Johnston's tongue; but doth not know if George Thomson and his Wife were with them, Depones, that on the Wednesday before Sir James his death, Philip having cursed some of the Servants, the Deponent said to him, God be thanked, he was not their Master; and that he answered her with an Oath, she knew not how soon he might be their Master: and Further Depones, that she thought Sir James not so merry as his ordinar the night before his death, but that he conveyed Mr. Bell to his Chamber, and thereafter came down to his own; and the Deponent having desired to speak with with Sir James, his Servant John Robertson told her she could not, because his Chamber-door was shut, and he was gone to Bed; and that she did then see light in his Room, and when she was going away, found the Hall-door which was without his Chamber-door shut, and that the Hall-door was not usually closed in the night time except Sir James had done it himself, and which he did but once in two or three Nights: Depones, that on the Saturday's night when Sir James came home, he did go to his Ladies Chamber, where he stayed not a quarter of an hour, and that his Lady fell a quarreling of him for going to another House before he came there, and that the Deponent came out of the Chamber, and knows not what more past there: Depones, the next morning, when Sir James was mist, the Deponent went in to his Room to put on a Fire, and found the Bed better spread up than it used to be, and the Curtains more drawn about it, and the Candle which usually was at the Bed-head, she found it standing on a Chair at the Bed-foot. And further Depones, that when the Defunct's body was bringing up to the House, the Deponent would have had him brought to his own Chamber, but Philip swore that the Body should not enter there, for he had not died like a Man, but like a Beast: Depones, that the Body was then put in the Walk miln (but knows not if Philip caused do it,) and that the Body from that was brought to a Cellar within the Clofs where there was very little light: Depones, that she did not see any water come out of his mouth, and that when the Deponent lifted up the Linen-sheet, which was over him in the Cellar, some of them caused let it down again, for it was not fit to let the Body be seen. Depones, that Janet Johnston was present with the Body in the Cellar with the rest, and though it was known that neither Sir James nor his Lady would look upon her for a good time before, nor was she openly seen about the House, yet that morning she went to the Ladies Chamber, as soon as the Body was taken out, and the Deponent was present and saw her come in, and well enough taken with: Depones, she heard Philip after his Father's death, Greet and Cry, but saw no Tears: Depones, immediately after his Fathers body was found, he would have forced his Fathers Chamber-door it being shut, but the Key being gotten, it was opened and he entred in, and first took his Fathers Gold and Money out of his pocket, and then got the Keys, and searched the Cabinet, and that within an hour after his Father was brought from the Water, he got the Buckles of his Father's shoes, and put them in his: Depones, that on the Munday after Sir James's death, the Lady and Janet Johnston having quarrelled together about some remains of the Holland of the Woonding-sheet, Philip came down out of his own Chamber, and the Deponent heard him say to Janet Johnston, hold your peace when I command you, for he would reward her well for the kindness she had done to him at that time: Depones, that when the order came from Edinburgh to raise the Corps again, the Deponent did meet George Thomson the Taylor, and perceived him shaking and trembling, and asked him what troubled him? and that his answer was, he heard the blackest News that ever he heard in his life, for Sir James's body was to be raised again, and said he would sew no more in the House of New-milns for the World, and carried the Mournings to his own House: Depones, she knows nothing of false Keys made use of about the House, only she heard the Lady say, that there were: Depones, Philip had no lock-fast place in the House, except a little Coffer, and that it once being opened, the Deponent did see several Keys within it, and that he offered once the Key of one of the Rooms to the Deponent, but the Deponent took it not, because she had the ordinar Key of the Room: Depones, that Philip was in use to ly alone, but that after his Fathers death, he would not ly in a Room alone, at New-milns, and that he declared to the Deponent that he was afraid to be alone in a Room, either night or day, and that he slept not the night after his Father died, and that he should not go into the Room where his Father lay, if once he had the Cabinet out of it: Depones, that a short time before Sir James died, the Lady having fallen in a Swond, and the Deponent having told Philip of it, Philip came to his Mothers Chamber, and that his Mother told him then, that he was like in a short time to lose his Mother; and that he answered in the Deponents hearing, that his Father should be dead first: And depones, that some few days thereafter, in his Mothers Chamber again, and in the Deponents hearing, he renewed the same Words with an Oath: Further depones, that two Nights after Sir James's Death, the Lady told to the Deponent, that something then came in her Mind which she had heard, to wit, that Philip, before he went to London, when he was in his Pomp, having heard that Sir James was to give his Estate to his second Son, in the House of James Smith in the Nungate, had vowed to kill his Brother, and the like, or little less to his Father; and that thereafter, when they were coming into Edinburgh, the Lady renewed again to the Deponent the same Words, and added, what if they should put her Bairn in Prison. And this is the Truth, as she shall answer to God. Depones she cannot write,

John Shand, sometimes Servitor to Sir James Standsfield, Aged 43 Years, unmarried, purged and sworn, depones, that a little after Philip Standsfield, the Pannals Marriage, the Pannal and the Deponent being in James Smith's House, in Nungate, of Haddingtoun, the Pannal did expostulat with the Deponent, that his Father dealt too narrowly with him, he being then married; and the Deponent told the Pannal that his Father was in straits, and exhorted him to be dutiful to his Father; thereafter the Pannal said, if I knew my Father would give his Estate to my Brother John, I would cut his Throat, and the Land-lord of the House being by, and present, and surprized, cryed out, God preserve me, what means the Man; the Land lord understanding by the Word, His, his Father: And though the Deponent took the Expression in the same sense, as James Smith did; yet the Deponent endeavoured to excuse it, by saying it was not his Father that he meant, but his Brother, or his man Donald; and the Pannal being present, said nothing for clearing of the Expression; whereupon the Deponent went away, and left the Pannal, and could not endure to stay longer in his Company: Depones, the night before Sir James's Death, being the Friday, the Deponent was with Sir James in his Chamber, in Edinburgh, where the Defunct was reading a Sermon-book, and appeared to be sad, and said to the Deponent, I have no Comfort in my Wife and Family. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God, Sic subscribitur. John Shand.

Mr. Roderick Mckenzie Advocate, Being solemnly Sworn, and Purged, depones, that about eight dayes before Sir James Standsfield's Death; the Deponent and he having met in the Parliament Cloffs, the Defunct invited him to take his morning Draught. And when they were gone to Mr. Sheil's House, the Deponent perceiving him to be in some concern, the Deponent asked him, what troubled him? The Defunct answered, that he had no satisfaction at Home; whereupon the Deponent said, that People reported that he was partly the occasion of it, having disherished his Son the Pannal, and acquainted him therewith: And the Defunct answered, ye do not know my Son, for he is the greatest Debauch in the Earth: And that which troubles me most is, that he twice attempted my own Person: And this is the truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur. *Rod. Archibald Dunbar Merchant in Edinburgh, aged 26 Years, Married, purged, and Sworn, Depones, that the Deponent having met with the deceased Sir James Standsfield at Culter: But he does not remember positively the time, but it was either in the year of this King's Parliament, or the Harvest before, and Sir James and the Deponent, and some other company being in an Room: Sir James was discoursing of his Sons undutifulness, and within a little while having heard a shot at the utter-door of the house, and the Deponent, and others offering to go out to see what the matter was. Sir James was unwilling to let them, lest they should come to hazard. And thereafter having heard another Shot, they did offer to go down again, and Sir James still dissuaded them, and said, that it might be his distracted Son Philip. And they having enquired, if he was in the Country, and how he came to fear any harm from him, Sir James said, he believed he was in the Country, and that in his going South, he had followed him to Lothianburn, and shot two Pistols, first one, and then another at him, and if it had not been that Sir James was well horsed, and his Son Philip upon a work-Horse, he had killed him. And Samuel Menzies having said he was sure there could not be Ball in them. Sir James said, he had gotten too many proofs of his Son's unnaturality to him, that he had no will to be in his reverence. Depones that Sir James all that night went not to Bed, and the Deponent sat up with him, and conveyed him into Edinburgh. And this is the truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur. Archibald Dunbar.

Mr. William Clerk Advocat, purged, and sworn, Depones, that having frequent occasions to be with Sir James Standsfield, and he having desired him to draw a disposition of his Estate to his Son John. Sir James did complain of his Son Philip's undutifulness to him. And the Deponent having dissuaded him to do it, since his Son Philip might be reclaimed: Sir James said, no, for he had no expectation of it; for when he was at the Lead-hills, there was some Pistol shot at him, which he was sure came from his Son Philip. And this is the truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur. William Clerk.

Mr. John Bell Minister of the Gospel, aged

40 years, Solutus, purged and sworn, produces a written Declaration signed under his hand, upon what he knows relating to the Murder. And Depones the same is truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur. John Bell.

Follows the tenor of the said Declaration.

The declaration of Mr. John Bell, in answer to several interrogatores proposed by his Majesties Advocat before the Lords of the Committee of the Council.

Imprimis, I declare, that at Sir James Standsfield's earnest desire, I went from this Town with him to New-milns. And that by the way I discerned nothing but sound Judgment, and reason in Sir James, for his discourse was both rational and pertinent, and that both at Supper that night, and after Supper his discourse he was rational, and his carriage most civil, and was pleased to accompany me to my Chamber, and sat with me there (as I supposed) until it was about ten a Clock at night, discoursing pertinently, and to good purpose.

2. I declare, that having slept but little I was awakened in Fear by a Cry (as I supposed) and being waking I heard for a time a great Dinn, and confused noise of several voices, and Persons sometimes walking, which affrighted me (supposing them to be evil wicked Spirits) And I apprehended the Voices to be near the Chamber door sometimes, or in the Transe, or Stairs, and sometimes below, which put me to arise in the night and bolt the Chamber door further, and to recommend my self by Prayer, for Protection and preservation to the Majestie of God: and having gone again to Bed, I heard these voices continue, but more laigh till within a little time, they came about to the Chamber Window; and then I heard the voice as high as before, which encreased my fear, and made me rise again to look over the Window, to see whether they were men or women; but the window would not come up for me, which window looked to the Garden, and Water, whither the voices went on till I heard them no more, only towards the morning I heard walking on the Stairs, and in the Transe above that Chamber where I was lying.

3. I declare that I told the Women who put on my fire in my Chamber that Sabbath morning, that I had rested little that night through dinn I heard, and that I was sure there were evil Spirits about that house that night.

4. I declare that about an hour after day, Philip came to my Chamber, and asked if Sir James came to that Chamber this morning, and told me that he had been seeking him upon the bank of the Water; unto which I replied, I have not seen your Father, but what mean ye by the Banks of the Water? whereupon Philip without answering went down Stairs immediately, and within a little time, I followed to see what he meant, and having gone without the Gate, and up the Cawsey that leads to the Manufactory; One came running, and said, they had found Sir James lying in the Water, whereupon I was stricken with such astonishment, fear, and trembling, that I could go no further, but returned trembling to the Chamber, and having sitten down on the bed side, I said to an honest man who accompanied me, this is the saddest day that ever I saw; my affrightment in the night was terrifying to me, but this is more grievous; and having gone to an honest mans house, house, where I took horse that morning, I said, if the Majestie of God did ever permit the devil, and his instruments, to do a honest man wrong, then Sir James Standsfield has received wrong this last night, which the Lord will discover in his good time.

5. I declare that after my return from Morum, that Sabbath evening, Philip told me that he had advertised several Freinds at Edinburgh, and that he was expecting the Commissary amongst others that night, whereupon I commended what he had done, in sending for such intelligent Persons, and that for two reasons (1) because it was necessary his Fathers body should be sighted, (2) Because they could advise him about his Burial. Philip answered that he was seen by these that took him out of the Water. But I replied that was not enough, for the Murder committed was either a violent Murder, or a distracted Murder; and having described what a distracted Murder was (upon Philip's relating some distemper his Father had been in some years formerly) I said, That I conceived no Person could come to such a high Act of frenzie, to do such a thing, but it would be known on him many hours, yea some days before; But I could testify, that Sir James was in his right reason at ten a clock, wherefore I inclin'd to think it was a violent Murder committed by wicked Spirits; And so advised that the Corps might be sighted by the nearest Physicians, and Friends, and the honest men living in that Town; nevertheless they went and buried Sir James that night, without either acquainting me, or several honest Persons who lived in the place. Mr. John Bell depones his above written declaration is truth, as he shall answer to God, Sic subscribitur.

Sir Robert Sinclair of Steinstoun, purged and sworn, Depones, Sir James Standsfield being at the Deponent's House, told the Deponent, that he regrated that his Son Philip had mispent his Time and Money, and when he came Home from London, he was ashamed to tell how he came on him in his Chamber, at London; And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God.

James Murehead Chirurgeon, aged 32 years, married, purged and sworn, Depones, that after the Deponent and James Craufurd Chirurgeon had opened the Corps, about the Neck, and sewed it up again, and removed the foul Linen, and put on again the clean Linens, in doing whereof they were obliged to shake the Body to and fro, and move the head back and forward: The Deponent desired that the Friends might lift the Body, and put it in the Coffin, and that the Pannal having come and lift up the Head, he did let it fall upon the Table suddenly, and that it made a considerable noise at the falling, and that the Pannal retired back quickly rubbing his Hands on his Breast, and crying, O God! O God! and some such other Words, and that the Deponent being astonished thereat, looked to the Corps, and as the Pannal did take away his hand from it, did see it darting out Blood through the Linnen, from the left side of the Neck which the Pannal touched, and that the Deponent was amazed at the sight, partly through the darting out of the Blood, and partly through the apprehension he had of the Murder. Depones he saw no Body touch the left-side of the Defunct's Head, the time it bled, but the Pannal: Depones, that as soon as the Deponent recovered out of his amazement, he cryed to the Boy to give the Pannal some Triacle-water, which he did: but Depones he did not see Philip the Pannal return again to the Body of his Father: Depones when the Deponent and the other Chirurgion were putting on the clean Linens, and stirring and moving the Head and Craig, he saw no Blood at all. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God.

James Murehead, and James Craufurd Chirurgions give in their Report and Declaration in Write, anent the Murder of Umquhile Sir James Standsfield, which they renewed upon Oath, in presence of the Justices and Assisers, and whereof the Tenor follows:

Edinburgh, December 1. 1687.

November 30. 1687. We viewed the Corps in Morum Church.

We under Subscribers James Craufurd and James Murehead Chirurgions in Edinburgh, having order from Sir John Dalrymple his Majesties Advocat to go to Morum, and there to take up the Corps of Sir James Standsfield, and to sight and view the same exactly, and if need were to open up the Body, and to consider, whether there appeared any evidence of Wounds, Bruises, or Strangling upon the Corps, besides what might have happened by his falling or drowning in the water, &c. In obedience thereto, we caused take up the said Corps, and in presence of Philip Standsfield, Mr. Andrew Melvil Minister of Morum, James Hamilton Writer to the Signer, James Row and Alexander Campbell Merchands in Edinburgh, Umphray Spurway, James Dick, James Mitchell, and John Robertson Indwellers in New-Milns, and some others having with all possible exactness viewed the Corps; We observed the Face a little swelled and inclining to a dark reddish colour, some fulness of some capillarie Veins in the Pallat of the Mouth towards the Uvula, as also a large and conspicuous swelling about three inches broad of a dark red or blae colour, from one side of the Larinx round backwards to the other side thereof, we observed the Jugular Veins on both sides the Neck very large and distended and full of Blood; There was a large swelling under and betwixt the Chin and the Cartilago Scutiformis, there was also a little scratch below the left Mandibula, which had rankled the Cuticula, and made some little Impression on the Cutis, having made Incision from the Chin down about the Larinx, and cross upon the swelling of the Neck: We found a greater laxness and distance (as we think) than ordinary betwixt the Cartilago Scutiformis and Os hyoides; we found the Tumour on the Neck, containing bruised like dark or blackish Blood; the Jugulars, when cut, bled considerably, especially that on the left-side.

Having opened his Breast, we found the Lungs distended to the filling up their Capacities, but free of Water, his Stomach, Liver, &c. were all in good condition, we found no water within the Corps, the Corps had no smell at all; The Breast, Belly, Privy Parts, &c. were all well coloured, there was no swelling in his Belly, nor any thing by ordinary to be seen on his Head; This we attest and subscribe with our Hands;

James Craufurd, James Murehead. Linlithgow.

Follows the Chirurgions of Edinburgh their opinion anent the said Murder.

WE undersubscribers, Chirurgions in Edinburgh, having fully considered the Report made by James Craufurd, and James Murehead, concerning the condition of the Corps of Sir James Standsfield, and though it be not usual to declare more than matter of Fact, yet in obedience to your Lordships commands, where ye desire to be informed, if these Symptoms, found upon the Body, do import, Drowning, or Strangling. We humbly offer our opinion, so far as our Art or Experience will allow. And whereas the report informs us, that there was found a swelling, and preternatural redness in the Face, a large conspicuous Tumour, about three Inches broad, of a dark red, or black colour, from the one side of the Larinx, round backwards to the other side thereof, a large swelling betwixt the Chin and the Cartilago Scutiformis, the Jugular Veines, on both sides very large, and distended, and when Incision was made downwards, betwixt the Os hyoid and Larinx was observed a laxnes, and distance between the Os hyoid and the Cartilago Scutiformis, Incision was made cross alongst the Tumor, it was found full of bruised Blood; The Jugulars likewise when opened yielding a considerable quantity of Blood, especially on the left side, no smell, or corruption appearing in any part of the Body. It is very probable these parts have suffered some external violence, which hath made them appear so far different from their natural figure and colour, and could not be caused by Drowning simply. As to the other part of the report, the Breast, and Belly, being opened, the Lungs found distended, the Bronchi full of Air, without any Water, nor any Water found in the Stomach, or Intestines, a Body when drowned, being generally found to have much Water in it, with other circumstances of the Report considered, gives just ground to think he was not drowned. This we subscribe at Edinburgh, the 3 day of February, 1688. Sic subscribitur,

Edinburgh 6 February 1688.

THE Colledge of Physicians, being assembled at the desire of His Majesties Advocat: To consider a Report made by some Chirurgions, concerning the Body of the late Sir James Standsfield, and to give their Opinion, whether by the said Report, there is any just ground to believe, that the said Sir James Standsfield was Strangled, or Drowned? And they have accordingly considered the said Report. They are of Opinion, supposing the verity of the said Report or Declaration, that there is sufficient ground to believe, that the said Sir James Standsfield was Strangled, and not Drowned, in testimony whereof their Presents are subscribed by Sir Andrew Balfour, President of the said Colledge.

Follows the Declaration of Umphray Spurway, Englishman.

I Umphray Spurway of New Milns, Clothier, being summoned to appear before the Lords of his Majesties Privy Council in Edinburghe, the 6 of December, 1687. To declare my Knowledge of what I had seen, and heard, relating to the death of Sir James Standsfield of New Milns, Did then and there declare before the saids Lords, as hereafter followeth. And after declaring what I had to say, was commanded to commit to writing my said Declaration, under my own hand, which I the aforesaid Umphray Spurway do hereby humbly offer to the above said Lords of His Majesties Council, subscribing the same with my own hand.

About six Weeks before the death of Sir James Standsfield, after Night I went to pay my Respects to Sir James, as I usually did when he was at New Milns, at which time I found him not so free for Discourse, nor so pleasant as at other times: In so much that I used that freedom with him, to Quere the reason why his Honour was so Melancholy? who with a great Sigh, wringing his hands together, with Tears trickling down his Cheeks; said, Mr. Spurway, I have great cause for it; I have born my own burden, without complaining to others, but I have a very wicked Family, and it's very sad that a Man should be destroyed by his own Bowels; But let me be never so sparing in my Expence, both at home and abroad, yet they at home of my Family consume me; condescending on some particulars, of some extravagant Sums of Money, monethly brought into him, that his Family had expended besides what he allowed for them, which was very sufficient. But that which grieved him most was, that his youngest Son, whom he had some comfortable hopes of, and upon whom he had settled his Estate upon, his just Debts being first payed; and that to the knowledge of his Son; But now he he was frustrated of his hopes of that his Son too: For his eldest Son had debauched his youngest Son, who had several times of late come in Drunk, as the other; This he declared to me with very great Grief of Heart: But the Saturday's-night after Sir James, and a Minister, one Mr. Bell, came to New Milns from Edinburgh, I came in at the House of one James Marr, where I saw Sir James, and Mr. Bell sitting by the Fire, before he had been at his own House, which I wondred at, having never known the like done by him before; but since, I have had my Thoughts, that he had a fear upon him, (good Gentleman) of going to his own House, but having sat some time with him, he desired Mr. Marr to send one of his People at his House, to know, if they had kindled a Fire for him; and upon the return the Messenger gave this answer: May it please your Honour, your Fire is kindled for you; upon which Sir James, and the Minister arose, and took their leave of Mr. Marr; And I also accompanied Sir James and the Minister half the way toward his home, and so took my leave of him, wishing his Honour a good Night: But the next Morning being Sabbath-day after the light well appeared, one Agnes Bruce came at my Chamber-door, and knocked. I went and opened the Door, says she, Sir, Sir James is gone out of his Lodging Room this Morning, and we have sought all the Rooms of the House for him, but cannot find him; she goes off, I immediately followed her, and when I came out of my door, I met with Master Philip Standsfield, and James Dick, Mr. Standsfield declares to me, Lord, Master Spurway, what should be the cause of this Man's discontent, that he should thus leave his Lodgings, and walk out? To which I replied, Sir, do you wonder the cause of his discontent, who never gave him content, but had been the cause of grieving him, from one to the other of them, ever since I knew the Family: But he turned his back upon me, and made no reply at all; however I went at Sir James's House, but could not procure the Keys of neither of the Gardens, and I sent abroad of Sir James's Servants, and of my own, some on Horse back, and some on foot, to inquire after him: At last a Servant of mine, one William Bowman found him in the River, a little be west the Town; I went at the place, and saw him lying about two Yeards, or eight Foot from the Brink of the River, lying upon his Belly, just at the top of the Water, as it were floating, only his Coat and Westcoat loose about him, and a Shirt on him that I saw. I saw the place at the Brink of the River, where some one had stood all beaten to mash with Feet, and the ground very open and mellow, although a very hard frosty Morning; So I gave order to some to get a Ladder, and to set one end into the River, as near the hinder part of Sir James as they could, and the other end of the Ladder to fall at the top of the Brae, which was very steep, and so they might get him out easily; So I came away from the place, and desired Mr. Marr to see the Body landed, declaring that I would go home, and write to Mr. George Hume Merchand in Edinburgh of the sad sight which I had seen, desiring him to communicat the same to my Lord Advocat, with desire to know by the Messenger his Lordship's Pleasure, what of advice or direction he would be pleased to give concerning it, and it should be followed; But the Messenger that I sent, after he had delivered my Letter to Mr. Hume, and Order given by Commissary Dalrymple, how to proceed further with the Body of Sir James, which Order was directed to my self by a Letter, which when I read the Letter, the Contents was: That I should endeavour to procure two or three discreet Persons of New Milns to my self, and we together view the Body of Sir James; and if we found no grounds to believe that his Person had been wronged by others, that then with all speed he should be Buried, and that as privatly, and with as little noise as could be; But this Letter, which was the Commissary's Order to me, was sent by the hand of one James Mitchel, Kinsman to Sir James; For that Horse that the Express rode on to Edinburgh, was taken out of the Stable, where he was set up: And one Mr. Patrick Smith, the Brother-in-Law of Sir James Standsfield, mounted on him to come for New Milns: So that my Express was thereby disabled, to bring me the answer of my Letter; and the said James Mitchel, who brought my Letter, came home at the place by Nine of the Clock, that Sabbath day at Nighr, and gave an account of the Letter that he had for me; but they diswaded him from bringing it me, so that I had it not till three Hours after Sir James was buried. But upon Monday Morning, I arose about three or four of the Clock; and coming out of my House, I saw great Lights at Sir James's Gate, which occasioned my going down, to see what the matter was; and as I went, I met with one William Robinson, coming up of Home, I asked what the meaning was of these Lights, and of the Horses that I then saw at Sir James's Gate? who answered me, that Sir James's Corps were brought out at the Gate, and that they were carrying it at Morum to be buried, having received orders from my Lord Advocat for that purpose: At which I returned to my House, thinking it very strange thus to proceed without having had the Corps viewed by some Person, as I well knew was customary in England in such Cases. The next step to my Remembrance, was, That upon the Tuesday night following, after I was in Bed, one Mr. Alexander Campbell in Edinburgh, with one Mr. James Row, and an Gentleman, one Mr. Hamilton, with two Chirurgions, came at my House, and caused me to rise out of my Bed, showing me an Order, which they had from my Lord Advocat, for the taking up again the Body of Sir James Standsfield; and commanded me to make ready to go with them, and having seen the Order, readily submitted thereunto, and when coming upon the place at Morum, caused the said Grave to be opened, and the Coffin taken up. It was carried into the Church, and there opened; and as soon as Sir James's Grave-Cloaths were taken off him, and all his upper parts uncovered home to his privyparts, methought his Face looked not as I expected, nor as others had insinuated, that were at the dressing of him at first; for they said that his Body and Face was very fair and fresh; but I found his Face at first view of another Complexion, being blackish with some strakes of red like standing, or rather strangled Blood; and under his left Ear I saw a swelling home to his Throat, of a blackish red Colour: After this I saw the Chirurgions opening his Body, beginning at the top of his Chin, and so down to the Pit of his Stomach, and then cut his Skin on both sides his his Throat, towards each Ear, and coming at the place near his left Ear, that I saw swoln, I there saw of corroded, or congeal'd Blood, lying a lump of a great thickness, and two or three inches long, which proved to me he had been Strangled: And one thing more I observed, that when Mr. Murehead put off his Cap at first from his Head, in slipping it back, Sir James's Eye-lids opened, and his Eyes appeared, but his Eye-lids much swoln, and very red, which did also prove to me a Symptom of Strangling.

This being done, and his Breast opened, so that his Intrals appeared, and to me seemed in good order, and no appearance of water in his Body; neither then, nor when first he was taken out of the River; the like I think, has not been ever known by any Man that cast himself, or that has been cast into a River alive, and not to have his Body full of water; nor that ever a dead Man should ly at the top of the water, where no running Stream is, but a still Water, of about 5 foot deep: But to me in this it shoves, that as God is a Wonder-working God, so he has in this shoven no less, to convince Men, that this worthy Gentleman murdered not himself, but was murdered.

But my last Observation was of a wonder more, that the Lord did show, when the Chirurgions had caused the Body of Sir James to be by their Servants sewen up again, and his Grave-Cloathes put on. A Speech was made to this purpose, It is requisit now, that those of Sir James Standsfield's Relations, and nearest Friends should take him off from the place where now he lyes, and lift him into his Coffin. So I saw Mr. James Row at the left-side of Sir James's Head and Shoulder, and Mr. Philip Standsfield at the right-side of his Head and Shoulder, and going to lift off the Body, I saw Mr. Philip drop the Head of his Father upon the Furr, and much Blood in his Hand, and himself flying off from the Body, crying, Lord, have Mercy upon me, or upon us; wipeing off the Blood on his Cloaths, and so lay himself over a Seat in the Church, some supposing that he would swarff or swoun away, called for a Bottle of Water for him. After this we went for Morum Castle, where Mr. Philip Standsfield, my self, and several others stayed until it was day: In which time I challenged Mr. Philip for his unkindness to me, by his not inviting me to accompany the Corps of his Father, when first buried, knowing the Intimacy that there was betwixt his Father and my self; and that of all the People in or about the Town, his Father delighted in no ones Company, as in mine; and that he did not give me notice of his Burial, that I might do my last Office of Love and Service to him by accompanying his Body to his Burial place; I took it very ill from him: So then Mr. Philip swore that he had sent two of his Servants to invite me, but if those damn'd Rogues would not do it, what could he help it; and yet did declare, as is proved, and as himself since confest before my Lord Advocat, that he would not invite me, assigning this as his Reason, supposing that my self, and James Marr had been Instruments of setting his Father against him, which was a false suggestion: All which particulars I have before the Lords of His Majesties Honourable Privy Council declared: So by their Command I have in this Sheet of Paper written it over with my own Hand, and do hereby subscribe my Name, the sixth of December, 1687. Sic subscribitur, per me Umphray Spurway. Edinburgh, the 7th of February, 1688.

James Mitchel, Nephew to the deceased Sir James Standsfield, aged 20 Years, unmarried, purged and sworn, Depones, that about twenty dayes before Sir James Standsfield's Death, being in company with Philip the Pannal, he heard the Pannal say, That if his Father did dispoise his Estate by him, he would kill him, though he should die in the Grass Mercat for it: Depones that several times about a Month before Sir James's Death, he heard the Pannal say, that little thought the People had how soon the Pannal would be Laird, and when he was, he would then ride in their Skirts that had been ill to him. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur, James Mitchel.

John Topping in Monkrig, aged 25 Years, married, purged and sworn, Depones that upon the Sabbath-morning, after Sir James Standsfield's Death, the Deponent coming from Monkrig to New-Milns, by the side of the Water, he discovered a Body Floating, and saw Philip Standsfield looking to that place of the Water where the Body was, and the Deponent asked the Pannal, whose Body that was in the Water, and the Pannal made no answer; and when he came to New Milns, he heard that Sir James's Body was found in the water; Depones he saw the Body taken out of the Water, and went alongst with it, near to the Walk-Miln, but observed no Water come from the Body. This is the Truth, as he shall answer to God. Depones he cannot write. Sic subscribitur, Linlithgow.

James Dick in New Milns, aged fourty seven Years, married, purged and sworn; Depones that the Pannal Philip Standsfield and the Deponent being at Morum after taking up of the Corps, and discoursing about the finding of the Body in the water, the Deponent said to the Pannal, that he saw something in the water, when they were searching after Sir James, but he did not suppose it to be Sir James's Body, and the Pannal said, I saw him before any of you: Depones that he saw the Body after it was taken out of the Water at the Brink of the Brae, and went alongst with the Body a piece of the way, and observed no water come from the Mouth. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur, James Dick.

His Majesties Advocat desired that James Thompson, Son to George Thompson in New Milns, and Anna Mark, Daughter to Janet Johnstoun, Spouse to the said James Thompson, might be examined as Witnesses against the Pannal, for proving his Accession to his Father's Murder. And the Procurators for the Pannal having alledged, that the foresaids Persons were but Children, and so not by Law capable to be Witnesses, the Boy not being above thirteen years of Age, and the Girl not above ten years.

The Lords, Justice General, and Commissioners of Justiciary, refused to receive them as Witnesses, but in regard the Persons on the Inquest earnestly desired the said James Thompson and Anna Mark might be examined, anent their knowledge of the Pannal's Accession to the for-said Murder, they allowed the forenamed persons their Declarations to be taken for clearing of the Affise. And accordingly the said James Thomson being examined in presence of the Justices and Inquest, declared as after follows; That Janet Johnston came to George Thomson's House betwixt nine and ten at Night, and Philip Standsfield the Pannal came there shortly thereafter, and the House being dark, the said Philip gave the Declarant a turnor to buy a Candle, which he did in the neighbouring House, and after the Declarant return'd with the Candle, his Mother ordered him to go to his Bed, which was in the same Room, and beat him because he did not presently obey. Declares he heard one come to the Door, and inquire for Janet Johnston, and desire her to come home, and give her Child suck: Declares he knew by the Voice that the Person who came was Agnes Mark the said Janet's Daughter, and that Janet ordered her to go away, and she should follow her; declares she stayed a considerable time thereafter, and the said Thomson's Wife was desired to go for a pint of Ale, and Philip took out a handful of Money to see if he had any small Money, and finding he had none, the Ale was taken on upon trust; Furder declares, that the said George Thomson and his Wife, and Janet Johnston did stay together, and whisper softly a considerable time; declares he heard Philip Standsfield complain that his Father would not give him Money, and pray the Devil take his Father, and God damn his own Soul if he should not make an end of his Father, and then all would be his, and then he would be kind to them; declares Philip Standsfield and Janet Johnston went away about eleven, and shortly after his Father and Mother came to the Bed where the Declarant was lying cross the Bedfoot; and the Declarant in the night time perceived his Father and Mother rising out of the Bed, and going out of the House, and that they stayed a considerable time away, about an hour and an half, or two hours, and that the Declarant was perfectly awake, when they went and were away, and he wondred what they were going about: declares his Mother came in first, and came softly to Bed, and within some time after his Father came in, and put a Stool to the back of the door, without locking it, for the Lock made always a great noise when they locked the door, and the Declarant's Father called to him whenever he came in, but the Declarant made no answer, that it might be thought he was sleeping, and his Mother asked, what had stayed his Father; and thereupon his Father and Mother did fall a discoursing of several things, and particularly his Father said, that the Deed was done, and that Philip Standsfield guarded the Chamber-door, with a drawn Sword and a bendet Pistol, and that he never thought a Man would have died so soon, and that they carried him out towards the water-side, and they tyed a Stone about his Neck, and leaving him there came back to the little Kiln, and reckoned whether they should cast him in the water with the Stone about his Neck or not, and whether they should cast him in far in or near the side, and at length they returned and took away the Stone from about his Neck, and threw him in the water; declares his Father said, that yet he was afraid for all that, that the Murder would come out, and his Mother answered, Hout

Fool, there is no fear of that, it will be thought he has drowned himself, because he will be found in the Water; declares when Sir James was missed in the Morning, the Declarant's Mother said to his Father, rise quickly, for if ye be found in your Bed, they will say that ye have a hand in the Murder; declares the Coat and Wastecoa which were upon Sir James, when he was found in the water, were sent to Thomson's House, and Thomson's Wife said to her Husband and Janet Johnston in presence of the Declarant, that she was affrighted to see the said Coat and Wastecoa, for she thought that some evil Splrit was in it, and desired her Husband to send it away, which he would not; And further that his Mother said to her Husband in the Declarant's hearing, that she was affrighted to be in the House alone after night fell, and accordingly when ever her Husband went out, she went out with him, which was not her ordinary; declares the said George Thomson did go into Edinburgh several days before the Declarant's Mother was brought in, and she did immediatly after he came into Edinburgh send away Sir James's Coat and Wastecoa, and that she was never in her own House after night, since her Husband came in, but did lie in Janet Johnston's House.

Anna Mark Daughter to Janet Johnston declares that on the said Saturdays-night Philip came up to her Mother's House, and sent for George Thomson and his Wife, and thereafter he sent her to see if Sir James was come home; declares that she saw Philip with his Hat off give a low Salutation to George Thomson when he came up to him, and when she returned and told that Sir James was come, Philip did take a drink, and runs down to New Milns, that about eleven a Clock that night, her Good-father sent her to seek her Mother, and that she found her Mother with Philip in George Thomson's House, and that her Mother bad her go home, and she would come after her, and that her Good-father thereafter finding her Mother did not come, sent her for Margaret Isles to give suck to the Child, and went home again; but that her Mother did not come long after that, as she thinks about two in the Morning, and that she heard her Good-father say, Bitch and Whore, where have ye been so long? And she answered, wherever I have been, the Deed is done, and then went to Bed, and that after that, she heard them speak together, but could not know what they said; she declares also, that her Mother said, she was still feared, and would not abide alone, nor lie alone in the Bed; but said, she was afraid.

Edinburgh, February 7th 1688. The said Anna Mark being Examined in presence of the Atliſe and Justices, declares affirmative, conform to the above written Declaration in all points.

Sir George M'kenzie's Speech to the Inquest.

Gentlemen of the Inquest,

I Am glad to see so strong, and universal a propensity for Justice in my native Country, that every Man upon first hearing this Death, concluded it a Murder, and trembled least it should not have been discovered; every Man became Sollicitor in it, wished to be of the Inquest; quest; and ardent Prayers were generally put up to Almighty God for this end, with as much earnestness as uses to be for removing general Plagues: And the Almighty in return of those, did first make so clear Impressions on all Mens Spirits, of Philip's being the Murderer, that he had fallen by these; but his Divine Majesty, who loves to see just things done in a legal way, furnished thereafter a full probation in an extraordinary manner, whereby we might not only convince our selves, but all such as are not wicked enough to have been the Authors. You will discern the Finger of God in all the Steps of this Probation, as evidently as Philip's Guilt; and this extraordinary Discovery has been made, as well to convince this wicked Age, that the World is govern'd by Divine Providence, as that he is guilty of this Murder. He is accused before you for three Crimes, Treason, the Cursing of his Father, and the Murdering him: Crimes in great Affinity, and naturally subservient to one another; for to pray Confusion to the King, who is Pater patriæ, is a Cursing our great Parent; And what can prove better a design to Murder his Parent, than the malicious hatred that prevails over a Son to Curse him? What restrains virious Men from Murdering those, by whose Death they may expect licentious Liberty, and an opulent Succession, save the fear of the Laws of the Land, or at least an innate awe of the Law of Nature? But here you see in the Treason a Contempt of the Laws of the Land, and in the Cursing an abhorrence of the Laws of Nature.

There is no Reason to suspect our Zeal in this Case from any State Design; for we took pains to shun a Probation of the Treason: It was forced upon us, and not sought by us, so violent were, and are we in the search of the Murder, that even Treason was not able to divert us. Nor press I it at this time; but to let you see there is nothing so wicked or dangerous, which this Pannal durst not attempt. He not only wishes the King's Confusion, but drinks it openly; and not only drinks the King's Confusion himself, but he forces others to do so; nor needed he to be drunk, to be guilty, for this was the first Step of his drinking; and to convince you that he knew it was a Crime, it is proved that he took his Complices sworn, never to detect it, the fatal Encouragement which always tempt him to commit his Villanies. The Cursing his Father is not from meer humour or dissoluteness, but it becomes yet probable by a previous design to have his Estate, and from the restraint he found from him, of being debarred from the ravishing hopes of a boundless Liberty: The Expressions are various and execrable, such as, Devil take him, drown him, rive him, let him never come back, let him never eat more, &c. and these Expressions, which should never have been once spoke, were frequently repeated, and are proved, not by suspected Persons, or Strangers, but by his Father's, and his own Servants, and such of them too as were Philip's own Favourites, and who think themselves very unhappy in being obliged to Depone against him.

You are then, Gentlemen, in the third place to judge, how far this Murder and Parricide are prov'd, in which you need to be the less scrupulous, that the Son, who is accused of it, is to die however; for either of the two former Crimes are so far prov'd beyond all doubt, that though he should escape this, he cannot these. And as to the Probation of this Crime, I must first represent to you, that in occult or atrocious Crimes, the Law has relaxed, and remitted much of its scrupulousness in Probation, because in these the ordinary Probation cannot be had, and to admit none but such, were to reject all: And therefore in Hamesucken, which is the Beating a Man in his own House, but much more the Murdering a Man by way of Hamesucken in his own House, wherein all means are used to cover, and few can be got for discovering; you must not expect two Witnesses who saw the Murder committed, but only such Probation as can before God convince you, that this Murder was committed by that Man; no Inquest ever failed to find the Murder of Children to be clearly prov'd, though there were no Witnesses that saw it committed, and the Murdering Parents is a more atrocious Crime, because we owe more Duty to our Parents, than any Parent does to a Child, and never Son ow'd more than this did, nor can be more believ'd to have killed a Parent. For clearing whereof you are to consider first, that he did not Drown himself, as was pretended, but was Murdered by some Persons; and as the Law violently presumes, that no Man would Murder himself, so without the help of this Presumption, it is prov'd most convincingly by ocular Inspection, that he was Strangled, the marks of Strangling, viz. the congeal'd Blood, the Dislocation of one of the Vertebrae in his Neck, &c. being visible Signs prov'd in the ordinary way, and we have added to this the Opinion both of the Chirurgions and Physicians, who at once declared, that he was not Drown'd, and that he was Strangled; the outward marks likewise of his not being Drown'd, appearing as visibly as that he was Strangled; so you must conclude that he was Strangled; except you can think, that after he had Strangled himself, and broke his own Neck, he drown'd himself.

In the next place, who could have Murdered this innocent and obliging Gentleman, except some Person who had access to his House, wherein he was Murdered, and had Malice against himself? And these two can meet in no Person, but this unnatural barbarous Son; for one of the things that heightens his Guilt is, that he should abhorre a Father, who engaged meer Strangers to love him as a Friend: and we have prov'd that he not only hated his Father, and that he had done so for many years, but that he vowed he would take away his Life before Christmas next, and that in many various, but clear expressions, and at many several times; for sometimes he swore, if he made a Disposition to his second Son, he should take his Life; sometimes, that he should be Master of all before Christmas, and he should use the Servants as they used him; that though his Mother was like to die, that his Father should die before her: and he scarce ever spoke of his Father, without swearing he would strike a Sword to his Heart; nor would his Passion so much as suffer him to dissemble this even to his Mother; and he who durst own it to her, durst certainly do it whenever he had occasion.

I proceed now to you clear to, that I have prov'd, that he not only design'd and vow'd in Passion, that he would Murder his Father, but that he actually attempted to Murder him, and for this I have led these Witnesses, who prove, that when his Father came from the Leaden-Mines, he fled into Culter, as a trembling Partridge pursued by a Hawk, telling some Gentlemen, that he had been pursued seven Miles by his unnatural Son, who accordingly came to the House, and shot several Pistols in at the Windows, whereupon the Gentlemen, who now Depone, were forc'd to watch with his Father all the night, and were forc'd to Convoy him the next day near to Edinburgh. We have also produc'd other Gentlemen, to whom his Father declared, that he attempted against his Life: and who will not believe the best of Fathers Deponing against the worst of Sons? Nor could any thing have drawn this from the Father, save the terrifying danger, to which he was hourly expos'd. All the Supream Courts of Europe have found the attempt to kill, sufficient to infer Parricide, this is a higher degree of Guilt than Cursing, and yet that infers Death; and to attempt to kill a Father is more villanous, than to kill a Stranger. What shall be said then of frequent, and deliberate attempts? And thus you have this Son again prov'd guilty of Death, and even of Paricide. That which hastened the perpetrating this Crime was, that his Father wearied out with his Villanies, was at last forc'd to dispoise his Estate to his second Son, and tho' there be nothing more ridiculous than to ask, What Reason the Son had to kill his Father, as he now does? For there can be no Reason for so barbarous an Action; yet this was a Motive to him, and may be a Proof to you; for so kind a Father, who had try'd all Means and Methods to reclaim his licentious Son, had never proceeded to this, unless he had been driven to it by those frequent Attempts made by his Son upon his Life, in hopes to enjoy his Estate by the Death that he was to give. To disappoint which hopes his Father design'd to settle the Estate on the second Brother, after which Settlement he could gain nothing but the Gallows by killing his Father. Whereupon he to prevent the delivery of the Disposition, did associat to himself Thomson, whom himself used to call the Devil's Taylor, Thomson's Wife, and Janet Johnson, who was his own Concubine, and his Father's known Enemy, whom he could never have frequented, except upon so barbarous a design. Thomson deny'd that he was in the House for eight days before; and yet it is prov'd he was in Sir James's House, the night the Murder was committed; Johnson deny'd also before the Council, that she was out of her House after nine a Clock that night, and yet it is prov'd that she stay'd abroad till after twelve, so that her Husband was forc'd to send for a Stranger, to give suck to her Infant. Why did they both deny, or she abandon her Child, at so suspect a time? And it is ridiculous to pretend as they do, that they forgot so extraordinary a circumstance in so extraordinary a night, especially being examined upon it, within two or three days thereafter. By their assistance the Murder was design'd to be upon Saturday, the day of January; but God to discover, and revenge a Murder (which he thought fit to suffer to be committed, for the punishment of so many preceeding horrid Crimes) inspir'd Sir James to bring with him that night, a devout Minister, for preparing the Father, and proving against the Son; and this pious and grave man, whose Merit may be laid in Ballance with many Witnesses, Depones, that he heard that night, the noise of many People within the House, which was inconsistent with Sir James's drowning himself without it: And Depones, that his attention followed this noise until it died out towards the River, into which he was thrown by them; and the Brink is prov'd to have been broken, and beat by many Feet, which fortifies much this Deposition. It is also prov'd, that he refused that night to come to publick Prayer with his Father, swearing that he could not look upon him, and that the next morning, when all went to find out his Father, he confess'd he had first found him; but that he came away, without discovering that he had found him, nor did he shew the least grief when he was found by others; whereas if Nature had not been quit devour'd by Vice and Guilt, he had certainly thrown himself upon his dead Father, and had lamented that fatal Death, which no man, except he, saw with dry eyes; but whilst others were mourning for his Father, this Miscreant would not suffer him to be carried in to his own House, saying that he died like a Dog. O criminal Moderation that never appeared in this passionat Creature save upon the Death of his Father. O cursed Justice, never shoven or pretended to, save in asserting, that his Father deserved no respect, because he drown'd himself. Upon this villanous pretext, he caus'd throw him into a remot House, where none were allowed to see the Body, save his own Accomplices, to prevent all Discovery by Inspection of it, and for the same reason caus'd bury him very suddenly, in spite of a Countermand from his Freinds at Edinburgh. But they fully perswaded, that Sir James was Murdered by his own Son, sent out some Chirurgions and Freinds, who having rais'd the Body, did see it bleed miraculously upon his touching it. In which God Almighty himself was pleas'd to bear a share in the testimonies which we produce; that Divine Power, which makes the Blood circulate during Life, has oft-times, in all Nations, opened a passage to it after Death, upon such occasions; but most in this case, for after all the Wounds had been sewed up, and the Body designedly shaken up and down, and which is most wonderful, after the Body had been buried for several days, which naturally occasions the Blood to congeal; upon Philip's touching it, the Blood darted and sprung out to the great astonishment of the Chirurgions themselves, who were desired to watch this Event, whereupon Philip astonished more than they, threw down the Body, crying, O God! O God! and cleansing his Hand grew so faint, that they were forc'd to give him a Cordial. But least any shadow of difficulty might remain with you, his Divine Providence, which oft-times reveals it self by the mouths of Babes and Sucklings, has brought us two little Witnesses, whom as no body could be so unworthy as to corrupt, so none can be such Infidels as not to believe, especially since they Depone against their own Parents, and have own'd firmly in their presence, what they now De-pone in yours; from them ye have an account how Philip that night came into the House of their Parents, and there swore, He would be rid of his Father that very Night; how they went out at midnight, and after their return made their reflections, how easily Sir James had died, and how briskly Philip had behaved, by guarding the door with a Pistol in his one Hand, and a Sword in the other, how they had hung a Stone about his Neck, but had thereafter taken it away, and how the Mother durst not stay in her own House, while Sir James's Coat was there, and if you had seen this little Boy upon his knees, begging his Father to confess with so much Affection, so much Judgment, so much Piety, you had needed no other Probation but himself; the Father himself before his Death was convinced, and frequently foretold, that his Son would kill him, and the Mother how soon she heard of her Husband's death, and some of the circumstances, now insisted upon, and remembred what she had heard her Son say to her self, and what he had said at Nunland, concluded he was the Murderer, in spite even of that criminal kindness which she had for him; almost the whole Nation was convinced of this before any Probation was led: and the Lords of the Privy Council, among whom many of our Judges sit, did declare, that they thought that half of the Probation which was led before them, sufficient to convince an Inquest. How then should the least scruple remain with you, before whom so full, so clear, and so legal a Probation has been led, that like a Bend, every part of it supports another, and like a Chain, every Link draws on another?

I need not fortifie so pregnant a Probation, by laying out before you how often he and his Complices have contradicted one another, and even how often he has contradicted himself, in the most obvious and material points, and how he denies every thing with Oaths, and with equal confidence, though never so clearly prov'd: Albeit such as these are the chief things that make up the Probation in other Cases, nor how he suffered the greatest Indignities imaginable from his Complices, in presence of the Privy Council, though this convinced many of their Lordships, that he was at the mercy of those Complices, who were too far upon his Secrets, not to be slavishlie submitted to. But I cannot omit, how that since he came into Prison, he has lived so Impioullie, and Atheisticallie, as shewes, that he had no awe upon his Spirit, to restrain him from committing any Crime from a love to God, or a fear to Hell, and that he constantly filled and kept himself drunk from morning till night, thereby to drown the voice of his Conscience, and to make himself insensible of the Terrors of the Almighty.

The Judges have declared what was necessary to be prov'd, and you are only to judge, if we have prov'd what they thought necessary; and therefore there is no place to doubt, if a man's life may be taken upon meer presumptions; for the Judges have eased you of that scruple, by finding the grounds in this qualified Libel relevant: and his own Advocates have acknowledged this Probation to be so strong and unanswerable, that before the half of it was led, they went away and deserted a Client, whom they found they could not defend, nor should any man doubt of a Probation, which ones own Advocats think invincible. If then such amongst you as are Fathers, would not wish to be murdered by your own Children; or such of you as are Sons, would not wish the World to believe that you are weary of your Fathers, you will all concur, to find this Miscreant guilty of a Crime that God has taken so much pains to detect, and all mankind has such reason to wish to be punished. May then the Almighty God who form'd your Hearts, convince them; and may this poor Nation Cite you, as the remarkable Curbers of Vice, to all succeeding Ages.

Thereafter His Majesties Advocat protested for an Affise of Error against the Inquest, in case they should assilzie the Pannal.

The Persons who past upon the Affise of Philip Standsfield, returned their Verdict in presence of the saids Lords, whereupon the Tenor follows.

The whole Affise called upon the Jury of Philip Standsfield, upon the three Points following, particularly lybel'd against him, to wit, the Crime of Treason, the Cursing of his Father, and accession to his Father's Murder, they unanimously in one voice by the Mouth of William Baillie of Lamingtoun their Chancellor, finds the Pannal guilty of the foresaid three Crimes. Sic subscribitur,

THE Lords, Justice General, and Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the Verdict of the Affise returned against Philip Standsfield, they by the Mouth of John Leslie Dempster of Court, decerned and adjudged the said Philip Standsfield, to be taken upon Wednesday next, being the fiftenth of February instant, to the Mercat Cross of Edinburgh, and there betwixt two and four a Clock in the Afternoon to be hanged on a Gibbet till he be dead; and his Tongue to be cut out, and burnt upon a Scaffold, and his right hand to be cut off, and affixt on the East Port of Haddingtoun, and his Body to be carried to the Gallowlie betwixt Leith and Edinburgh, and there to be hanged up in Chains, and ordains his Name, Fame, Memory, and Honours to be extinct, his Arms to be riven forth, and delet out of the Books of Arms, swa that his Posterity may never have Place, nor be able hereafter to bruik or joyse any Honours, Offices, Titles, or Dignities within this Realm in time coming, and to have forfeited, amitted and tint all and sundry his Lands, Heretages, Titles, Offices, Tacks, Stedings, Roums, Possessions, Goods and Gear whatsoever pertaining to him, to our Sovereign Lord, to remain perpetuallie with his Highness in Property; which was pronounced for Doom, whereupon His Majesties Advocat asked, and took Instruments. Sic subscribitur,

Which Doom and Sentence above-written, was accordingly put to due Execution upon the Person of the said Philip Standsfield, in manner above prescribed.

Proceedings in the House of Commons against the Earl of Castlemaine. 1 W. and M. 1689.

THE Attorney General [Sir Geo- Treby] being (on Saturday the 26th of October, 1688.) inform'd, that the Earl of Castlemaine, Sir Edward Hales, and other Prisoners of the Tower, were brought by their Habeas Corpus to the Hall to be bail'd, desir'd to know the Pleasure of the House in that Affair; who order'd that they should presently be sent for to their Bar; which was done accordingly; Only the said Earl was not there; for he remain'd still in the Tower, having (it seems) made use of no such Writ; However the House directed the Governour to bring him up (as he did) the Monday following; And then the Speaker said to this Effect.

Mr. Speaker to my Lord.

MY Lord, the House having understood, That You went Ambassador to Rome; and also took your place at the Board as a Privy Councillor without taking the Oaths (which are great Crimes, and against Law.) They have sent for you to know what you have to say for your self.

His Lordship's Answer.

IT cannot (Mr. Speaker) but put me into more than an ordinary Confusion, when I find my self in this place as a Criminal; especially, seeing (through the whole course of my Life) the Glory and Welfare of England has been my chief Aim and Endeavour. You are pleas'd Sir to lay so great a Charge upon me, that (without shuffling or impertinence) I might ask time to consider it; Yet since I well know how much you value your time, and since time also may make what I say suspected more of Artifice than Candor, I shall now (without further delay) let you and this great Assembly see (where so many of Birth and Quality are met) how far I am from deserving either censure or reproach. But (Mr. Speaker) before I go further, I must humbly beg these few Favours of you. First, that you would Pardon all Tautologies or want of Method, as beginning perchance in the middle, and ending again where I should have begun. Secondly, That you would not take any advantage at my Answers, for I shall be Ingenuous to the utmost, and hesitate at nothing you shall ask. And Lastly, if (through inadvertency or haste) I should say what might shock you, that you would not stand upon the rigor of the Words, but upon the sincerity and clearness of my Explanation.

Be pleas'd then to know, Sir, I was so far from seeking this Employment, that I did not so much as dream it was design'd me; And when I knew it, I us'd my utmost endeavour to avoid it. My ignorance of the King's Intentions appears by this, that (in the Year I went to Rome) returning out of the Country (according to my usual custom) after Michaelmas; I found a Protestant, a Person of Note at my House, who told me, that before I spoke with any Man, he was to bring me to my Lord Sunderland, and from thence I was to go to his Majesty; Nor would he (scarce) afford me time to put my self in a tolerable order to attend them. My Lord Sunderland soon hinted to me, what the King's intentions were; And when I recurr'd to his Friendship, I had this Answer, or Words to this purpose; That if Subjects should refuse their King's Service in every thing that was troublesome or Contre-Cœur, all Kings would be in an ill Condition; that my request was beyond his Power; and that he believed I should find his Majesty very positive; and so I did Mr. Speaker, I'll assure you. Nay to satisfy you yet more fully of my backwardness to this Journey; can you think, Sir, that I, that had been at Rome more than once; that had seen the Grandeur of so many Roman Embassies; and knew they exceeded in Splendor and Expence three times those to any Crown'd Head whatsoever, should not be extraordinarily concern'd at an Employment, which had for its Subsistence (as the Lords of the Treasury well know) no other Establishment than to Spain or France, which (being 100 l. a week) amounts only to 5200 Pounds per annum?

Having thus Sir, shew'd you how little fond I was of the thing, let me now (with Submission) ask you, what could I otherwise do in my Circumstances? For first I call all that's Good to witness, I never heard of Law against it, nor know of any to this very day; And yet (on the other side) I was not only Commanded by the King, but knew his Royal and Legal Power of Commanding the Service of his Subjects, and most particularly in Embassies, as appears by many old Examples; Nay, by a fatal one in this very Century; I mean the Case of Overbury, to which no body here (I'm sure) is a stranger. In the next place, Sir, what did I go to Rome for? Why only with a Letter; with a Complement from a protest and open Catholic King to his Holyness, as all Princes of that Communion do in the beginning of their Respective Reigns. Besides Mr. Speaker, as I know no Law, that forbade my Obedience, so I must needs say (and this without cramping or putting any Bounds to the Legislative Power) that no such Law can be made; For Sir, the Pope is a very considerable Temporal Prince, whose Territories border on two Great Seas, the Mediterranean and Adriatic; If then our Merchants should be by storm or other necessities, driven into his Ports; if Englishmen should be surpriz'd by any Roman Party as they travel in a Neighbouring Country, shall our Government (not to mention a hundred other greater accidents) want Power to send a Messenger to Ransom and Compound for them? What Law therefore was there ever yet fram'd, or can be enacted (let the Commerce or Inter-course between Nations be never so much broken and prohibited) but that a Commander in Chief, a General, and much more a King, may bear a Parley, dispatch a Trumpet, nay, send and receive Letters as often as occasion does require?

Now (Mr. Speaker) for Religion, I neither had any Commission concerning it, nor Transacted with his Holyness about it; And as no body ever did, or could lay any thing of that nature to my charge, so for some confirmation of it, I will appeal even to the Aqua fresca Houses of Rome, and to all the Protestant Gentlemen of our Nation there during my Embassy; for though what I tell you, Sir, be a Wonder, yet the Honourable Persons, who have resided in those parts, know it to be true, that for a Dish of Chocolate or a Dish of Limonade, one may know the measures and particulars of an Embassy in that City, as well as we do what passes within these Walls at our Coffee-houses. I am sure my under Servants have often smil'd at the Grimaces and Mysteries which my Secretaires us'd in the beginning to make before my Audiences; for they have told them (within few hours after my return) almost Word by Word what had pass'd. Give me also leave, Sir, to add one truth more, which will assure you that I had no dangerous intreague in hand; and this is, that notwithstanding his Holyness never had the least imagination or thought, but that I was as real and sincere a Catholic as any Man living; and the same thing also I can say of all the Cardinals; and in fine, of the whole Court in general; Yet none of them (and every English-man in Town knew it) but look't upon me as one, that if any Immunity of the Crown were in question, or any Temporal Concern of the Kingdom touch't, would stand as much in the Gap, and be in as Diametrical an opposition, as any Person of the Reform'd Religion whatsoever.

You see then Sir, both how, and why I went; nor have I done any thing certainly to merit any Man's unkindness or ill-will; nay to lay yet further before you the hardship I am under, I shall state you a Case, not fetch't out of old forgotten Records, or Transacted in an Age disparate from ours, but of a Man attainted in this very House, in the memory of several now sitting, and even whilst I my self had the Honour to be a Member of it. The Case Mr. Speaker is Axtels the Regicide; one whose Crime (I dare say) my greatest Enemies think I abhor in the highest manner; no do I mention the thing in favour of the Criminal, but in Honour of his grave and worthy Judges. Axtel you know (Mr. Speaker) was Indicted for the Murther of Charles the First; And to shew that he maliciously contriv'd and abetted it, the Kings Council urged his Commanding in the Hall at the Tryal; his placing the Sentinels all about; and in short, his performing there the whole Office of Captain of the Guard. The Prisoner answer'd; but pray Mr. Speaker, let me beg Pardon, if the Interval of almost Thirty Years has made me forget his Words, I am sure the sense of them I have not; I say, Sir, the Prisoner answer'd; My Lords I am under great oppression, I am hardly dealt with. Has Charles the Second been so gracious as to pass over the ordinary transgressions of his strayed Subjects, and to look upon the Obedience of Soldiers to their then Superiours, as if the Authority had been more Le- gal? And shall I now dye (who was under Military Discipline) for that, which I must have presently died for, had I not done it; to wit, had I not drawn up my Regiment, kept the Post order'd me, and perform'd the other duties, the Concourse being great and troublesome? Upon this the Judge reply'd; I confess (considering the Kings merciful Resolutions) that your Argument is strong; it has great weight in it; But Mr. Axtell, did you no more? Did you only perform the Duty of a Commanded Soldier? Who was it (I pray) that animated the Rabble? Who beat the Soldiers for not crying Justice? Who encourag'd spitting in the King's Face? And who barbarously revil'd and threatned a Noble Lady, that in the transports of her zeal (when she saw her Sovereign abus'd, when she heard such Blasphemy against him, and all this Father'd upon the Nation) made a noise or stir in the Court? These things therefore Sir, being prov'd against him; He was convicted, condemn'd, and so paid a Debt to Justice, and to the Sacred Ashes of that great and just Man.

Now Mr. Speaker to application; And first, (after a little glance on the tenderness of these Judges, when any necessity could be pretended) let me with your Pardon ask you, shall I suffer as a Transgressor of the Law, were there any, when I must have suffer'd by the Law, had I refus'd his Majesties Orders and Commands? But Sir, if you demand, did I no more than carry a Letter, or go with a Ceremonious bow d'ye from the King? I must answer yes, and a great deal more too. For my House was an Asylum, a Place of Refuge to all distressed or oppress'd Fellow Subjects. If Seamen mutiny'd or had any contest with their Captains, here a Reconciliation was made, and here they return'd to their Obedience, if the Captains themselves (fraughted for the Camera) were delay'd their Money, or misus'd by under Officers, they quickly found Redress, and often (by my interest) receiv'd more than they themselves expected; And if the question happened about quantity, or how Goods were condition'd at delivery, the Verdict I am sure went still on their side. Nor was my care confin'd to Rome only, but reach't to all the Factories of Italy: For the Consuls themselves, nay every private Person found both an easie access to me, and an indefatigable Zeal in their concerns; so that the Merchants in general that had to do in those Parts, were far from being behind hand in their thankful acknowledgments. Nay one of the greatest Companies of our Nation, I mean that for Turkey, not only return'd me their thanks very heartily by Letter, but did it again by Word of Mouth after my Arrival home.

I am sure (Mr. Speaker) if the Employment I submitted to were a fault, I have already not a little suffer'd for it; for I never put bounds (as our Travellers, as well as my own Officers, fully know) to any Expence that could be imagin'd for the Dignity of the Nation; And give me leave to tell you also Sir, that though the Name of Rome may be harsh and ungrateful to your Ears, yet what I did, was with a good intention, and like a true and faithful Englishman. For had I been sent with a Character to Constantinople, where they are Mahometans; or to China, where Gentiles; the Eclat or Figure which I should have endeavour'd to make, would never be consider'd by you as an Honour to their Religion, but our Country; therefore since it is a Disparagement and and great Reflection to a Kingdom, to come below or short of others in any thing that is public and of note, I cannot but have (at least) faint hopes, that you will have some Consideration, some Opinion of an Ambassador (though at Rome) that kept up (to his Power) the Glory and Grandeur of England.

But Mr. Speaker, not to trouble you longer on the present Head, I'll end when I have told you this; That if I have done amiss in obeying the King's Commands, no Consul that has pursued a Pirate or Bandite to Rome; no private Factor that has follow'd a Debtor thither; Nor in short any Man that has writt'n so much as one Letter to that City, though it were to demand his own, but is a far greater Criminal than my self, and lyes at the Mercy of every Enemy to be indicted as a Contemner and Breaker of the Laws.

Your second Charge, Mr. Speaker, is my being a Privy Counsellour, without taking the appointed Oaths; To which I can truly say, they were never offer'd me; though I must also confess (for I shall be sincere with you in every thing) that I believe, nay that I am certain, I should not have taken them, had they been offer'd; so that I do acknowledge the Omission a fault against Law——

Here the Speaker, thinking that his Lordship had made an End, desir'd him to withdraw; but being inform'd that he had not done; He excus'd the Interruption, and then his Lordship went on.

I say (Mr. Speaker) I acknowledge this a fault against Law, were there not several things of weight, that will (I hope) justify me to you; And here, Sir, I must entreat you, not to conceive that I come now to defend or make good the Dispensing Power, but only to shew you how necessarily I was driven and induc'd to the aforesaid Omission; for (Mr. Speaker) in Controversies and Disputes, what can one do, but recur either to his own Observation, or to the Opinion of learn'd Men, and Professors in the Science?

In the first place then, when I began to examine my self as to the Right the King claim'd and asserted; I saw Non obstantes deem'd Legal, which signified to me Dispensing; I found the Power of continuing Sheriffs own'd for many Ages to be undoubted Law, and yet I knew there was a positive Statute against it; Nay I remember'd an Act, which I my self had in this House given my Vote and Consent to, viz. That about the Regulation of Carriages and Waggon; Or if this be not the exact Title, I must beseech you to pardon my Treacherous Memory, and 'tis I'll assure you the only Traytor I ever yet succoured or supported; I say Sir, I remember'd this very Act (almost as soon as made) suspended by Charles the Second's Proclamation without the least Question or Murmur; and I took so much notice of it, as to make even then this Reflection (and I do assure you upon my Honour 'tis true) That though our Monarchs could not impose and abrogate Laws of themselves, yet they had the Power (I perceiv'd) to respire them.

In the second place (Mr. Speaker) if I went abroad; I mean if I consulted the Thoughts and Sentiments of others, I found not only Great Men of the long Robe, but the Judges also themselves declaring in favour of this Prerogative; and the Interpretation or determination of these Sages was always told me to be Law, till a new Law or a new Explanation should be enacted. What would you then (Mr. Speaker) have me to do, who was call'd to the Board by the King; who could not in Conscience take the Oaths; and yet had no reason to think I committed (in not taking them) a Crime; seeing the Law was thus openly expounded and publish'd?

And now, Sir, since I have been forc'd to mention my Religion which, I know is a legal Fault, and of a high Nature; I must not forget also to celebrate the Goodness of this House; which has pardon'd the Fault, even in the solemnest Way; and by the solemnest Act that ever pass'd since Magna Charta; to wit, The great Act of Oblivion. Give me leave, Sir, to say this too, for I can justly do it; That being so faithful and so true an Englishman, I neither should nor could (I am sure) have ever, during my Life, offended my Country, but in my Religion. Pardon also I humbly beseech you this Digression, and together with it the Incoherences and Disjunctions all along; Nor shall I any ways doubt of it, since you so well know how uneasy and troublesome a long Discourse (which my Circumstances have now required) must needs be to one, that wants both Eloquence and Practice.

But (Mr. Speaker) to return where I left, and so conclude; How, Sir, I pray you (and I demand it again of you with great respect) could I think the Omission (as I said) of the Oaths a Breach of the Laws, when our Guides, who had the Laws in their keeping, told us explicitly, and without reserve the said Oaths were not necessary? Shall I then suffer that had neither Buoy nor Mark to direct me? certainly no; for if there were a fault, 'tis not I must suffer, but the Judges, and those knowing and deputed Pilots, that hung out (it seems) the wrong Flag and Signal. I have Sir, but one Word more to trouble you with, and this I speak in behalf of all here; Nay, in behalf of all the People of England; That if I now undergo your Severity, and that single Persons (notwithstanding the Determinations and Judgments of our Courts of Justice) must be still responsible; No Man can be safe, no Man can be at rest; for no body that acts can know (as accidents will often happen) whether he be innocent or guilty.

Mr. Speaker, I am in great disorder for imposing thus on your Patience; and especially seeing I must yet presume to do it, one thing more occurring to me (as I hope) for your further Service, or at least Satisfaction; And 'tis to let you know how I came to be a Prisoner, and why I continued so thus long. Be pleas'd then, Sir, that I tell you, that as soon as the King first left White-Hall, I thought it decency to go out of Town; and therefore three days after I took Coach for Montgomeryshire, where of late I us'd to reside in the Summer time. On the Borders of that County, at a small Corporation called Osweestree, I was first stop't by the Rabble, and afterwards detain'd (with a strong Guard) at my Inn by the Major; though no body (as he confess) made any Oath against me; and tho' he had no Orders (as he said) from London for it; Nay, (after a Months restraint) he deny'd me my Liberty upon Bail, notwithstanding two Neighbouring Lawyers (whom I sent for) assur'd him he could not justify the refusal by Law. I do not Sir, complain of any Incivility, either from him or the People; for I was us'd with respect enough; But I judge it extremely fit to let you see how the Liberty of a Subject was wilfully invaded by a Magistrate, and how little conscious I was of any Guilt, since instead of flying, I went to a place where I was known by every body.

In fine, Mr. Speaker, after a confinement of Seven Weeks, I was sent for up, and brought hither by a Party of Horse; Nor was I ever question'd or examin'd by any body, but kept (upon the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act) at a Messenger's House for Three Months; And when the said Act was suspended the last time, I was Committed by my Lord Shrewsbury's Warrant to the Tower, for Suspicion of treasonable practices.

His Lordship having ended, retir'd with the Serjeant at Arms to his Room, where after a little stay, he was sent for in again; And then the Speaker told him; That since he said his Journey to Rome was with a Letter of Civility to a Temporal Prince, and not about Religion, The House (to be more fully satisfied of it) desir'd to see his Instructions. To which his Lordship thus answer'd.

I hope (Mr. Speaker) though I shall readily acknowledge my own natural Weakness, you will not yet think me so imprudent, as that (in a time of such troubles and distraction) I would keep Papers by me, and especially about Rome, to render my self lyable to every malicious Man's Extravagancy and Comment. This therefore caus'd me Sir (the Night before I went towards Wales) to burn all Papers that came to hand; and truly some among the rest, that I have since wanted; Nay this I can also justly aver, that I remember not now one Word of those Instructions, having (I'm confident) never read them twice; only this I remember, they were Things of Course; Words of Form; and needed no further consideration. Yet Sir, that you may plainly see my Sincerity, and how far I am from any design of illuding and deceiving you, I shall shew you how you may retrieve them, when I tell you, that Mr. Monfrevens brought them me, and that they were drawn (as I take it) by Mr. Bridgman; For I'm certain they came from my Lord Sunderland's Office.

But my Lord (reply'd the Speaker) had you no private Instructions? None; Answered his Lordship. What none at all, said Mr. Speaker again. None I'll assure you Sir, reply'd his Lordship; unless the Kings Orders, to demand a Cardinals Cap for Prince Reinaldo of Este, were private Instructions; Nor do I certainly know, whether those Commands were in my foremention'd Instructions, or whether I had them by Word of Mouth.

My Lord, said the Speaker, I have another question to ask you; to wit, who of the long Robe told you of the Kings Power of Dispensing, and that there was no necessity of taking the Oaths?

I am Sir (answer'd his Lordship) infinitely troubled, if I have through want of Care, or by any improper Expression given you occasion to misapprehend me; For I never askt any particular Man of that Profession about this Affair; But my meaning was (and I hope my words are not contrary to my meaning) that the said Power was manifestly and openly declar'd to be Law by Judges and Lawyers; So that I deem'd it no Solicism in Discourse to mention it as if they themselves had told it me.

Then his Lordship retir'd again, and after a long Debate, the House pass'd this Order. That the Earl of Castlemaine stand committed to the Tower by a Warrant from this House of High Treason, for endeavouring to reconcile this Kingdom to the See of Rome, and for other High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

As soon as his Lordship was inform'd of this Vote, he entreated a Member to let the House know, that he had a Word or two more to trouble them with; So that being brought in, the Speaker told him, that the House having notice (he had something further to acquaint them with) was very willing to hear him.

Mr. Speaker (reply'd his Lordship) I have nothing more to say about the former Matters; but understanding your Pleasure, I thought it my Duty to let you know, how the custom of the Tower as to Prisoners is chang'd; for in course heretofore (unless there were a particular Order of State to the contrary) they had the Liberty of the Tower; that is to say, they could walk about at seasonable hours with a Warder; But now as soon as one is committed (though it be upon bare suspicion, as I was) he is confin'd to his Lodging, and hindred from the Consolation of seeing his Friends, till (after much solicitation and trouble) leave be granted by the Secretaries. Therefore Sir, being morally certain that I shall be confin'd again as soon as I return, I humbly desire the Favour of this Freedom; It being also what I hitherto enjoy'd after I had been restrain'd for some days in the aforementioned Manner.

This said, his Lordship went out, and then was carried to the Tower, where he was made a close Prisoner, as he foretold, though what he moved, occasion'd the following Vote.

That a Committee be appointed to bring in a Bill for the better regulating the Imprisonment of the Subjects of this Kingdom, and to settle the Fees of Goalers; And it was likewise referr'd to them, to examine into the abuses of Goalers towards their Prisoners which have been heretofore Committed.

On Wednesday the 5th of the following February, His Lordship mov'd for his Habeas Corpus, and was brought by the Lord Lucas, (the present Governour of the Tower) to Westminster, on the 10th; So that appearing at the King's Bench, his Commitments were read, and Mr. Attorney having nothing to object against his being Bail'd, the Court awarded it upon the Security of Thirty Thousand Pounds; that is to say, a Recognizance of Ten Thousand for himself, and Five Thousand a piece from his four Sureties; which were, John Earl of Bath, Thomas Earl of Aylisbury, Thomas Earl of Sussex, and Charles Lord Landdown.

The Tryal of John Price, Esq; late Receiver of Ireland, and One hundred other Protestants at the Town of Wicklow in Ireland.

Uohn Price, Esq; Receiver General to the late King Charles the Second, having his Country-house in the County of Wicklow, at Ballinderry, twenty four miles from Dublin, did for the safety and preservation of himself and Family, obtain the Lord Deputy Tyrconnels Protection, (as many more of the English Protestants living in the Country at the same time did) for the late King James going away for France, and the Administration of the Government being put into the hands of his present Majesty; the Lord Tyrconnel gave out Commissions (for the raising a mighty Army) to any Irish Papist that would take one, and promise to subsist, Maintain, and Cloath their Men for three Months; most of these new Officers are men of mean Fortunes, not capable of subsisting themselves; their men live altogether on the English, coming into their Houses in the day time, and commanding from them their Meat and Drink; and often Robbing them in the night, stealing away their Cattle. Likewise the Priests of every Parish obliged all their people to furnish themselves with Half pikes and Skeanes, and bring them to Mass, or not presume to appear there, on the penalty of Excommunication, or a severe punishment; which caused all the Irish to Arm themselves with the afore said Weapons; upon which Robberies, Thefts, and other Outrages were daily committed upon the English; particularly in the County of Wicklow, where some Hundreds were got together for that purpose, who gave themselves the Name of Merry Boys, and had very great success in their theivish attempts upon their Protestant Neighbours, that lived hitherto secure in their own Houses; it is observable, what great power the Romish Clergy have over the Irish, they Arm themselves immediately at their Command, and yet to this day have neither kept them from Robbing of the English, nor restored them any thing taken away, which if they had been so minded, they might have done by the same Power; several of Mr. Price's Neighbours repaired to Ballinderry, to preserve themselves and Goods; but an order coming out soon after, for the taking away all Horses and Arms from the Protestants, both in City and Country; Colonel Toole with a Party of his Men came to demand what Arms and Horses they had at Ballinderry, Mr. Price and the rest having the aforementioned Protection, refused to obey their orders; and complaint coming to Dublin, Colonel Sheldon was immediately sent away with a Body of Horse and Foot, against Ballinderry; Mr. Price upon his Approach presently submitted to him, who thereupon was made Prisoner, and all the rest of the Men that were in the House; but the Prison of Wicklow not being able to contain them, several of them were admitted to Bayl, until the following Affizes, which began March the fifth last past, and ended the eighth.

After they were Sworn as usual, they received the following Charge:

L. C. Just. Keating's Charge to the Grand-Jury.

Gentlemen, You that are here Returned to Serve on this Grand-Jury, you have this day before your Eyes the greatest Example, and the firmest Proof that a Gracious Prince can give to the best of Subjects; you see his Sacred Majesty, King James the Second, (whom God long preserve for the Protection of all his good and dutiful Subjects, and for the subversion and irradicating of all those who desire the Subversion of his Government; either by Foreign Force, or inbred Conspiracy) notwithstanding the great Troubles on his own Person, yet he is not wanting in his care towards you; and I dare boldly say, it is the last thing he will relinquish in the World, after that of his own Conscience, the care of his Subjects: He hath sent us with his Commission to enquire into all the Maladies, Diseases, and Sores within your County. He has likewise given us Command to apply the healing Balsam of the Laws, which will preserve the Subject most entirely in his Property. And I am sorry, I must tell you, that there was never more need than now at this time: I am glad at the same time that I can say, that the Mischiefs fallen on a great part of this Kingdom, and on no part more than on this County, that is under the very Eye of the Government; I say, I am glad it can be said to have arisen, for the most part, from a Rabble of People, who have arm'd themselves without any direction from the Government, and that with unusual Weapons; I mean Half-pikes and Skeans: Gentlemen, I must tell you plainly, it looks rather like a Design to Massacre and Murder, than any else. They do not belong to the Army, neither are they any part of them; but these are the Vultures, Kites, and Ravens that follow Armies. Souldiers that have travelled abroad, say, Such are not known among them there: I am told, and very well assured, That in Foreign Parts, where these Vultures and Birds of Prey are, it is hard for an Army to lie conceal'd, without being discovered by them; for it is odds, but that a Horse or a Man drops where such multitudes of People are. I am very far from laying this to the Charge of any that are under Command; tho' it is possible, that some of them, under the scarcity they are in, do give their assistance, or at least encouragement to these Robbers; otherwise it could not be, that whole Flocks and Drovers of Cattle are daily driven away, and yet no one taken or brought to Justice for it. The King is not wanting in his Care, he has given Directions to have the Laws put in execution, that Criminals may be brought in and punished; and the Government has issued out many Proclamations; but they are grown too familiar with them. You are to enquire into this Matter, in order to bring to punishment, not only them that steal, but those that receive. I am told that open Markets are set up in this County of Wicklow: A fat Bullock for 5s. and a fat Sheep for 1s. but it will fall heavy on them at last. Divines say, That God Almighty oftentimes makes the very Crime to become their own punishment: And I verily fear, that a few Months will produce a Famine in this Kingdom: And what succeeds, a Pestilence, and the worst of all Pestilences; for it is observed, that a starved Rot is the worst of all Rots; it falls out unhappily at this Season of the Year, when the Cattle are breeding: Under the Old Law the Jews were not to seeth the Kid in the Mother's Milk; but these unmerciful Wretches go further than that, sparing none, but destroying old and young, the increase and all. Pray Gentlemen, consider of it, and search the Houses of such as you have reason to suspect, that had not any thing to eat the last Year, go now into their Houses, and you will find whole Carcasses of Beef powdered up; nay, it may be, for want of Salt, or Money to buy it, lying rotting and stinking. Let me tell you, it will be your turn next, when they have robbed and spoiled your Protestant Neighbours, they will come to you, unless you take speedy care to prevent it. The King has done what he can, and the Government what they can; in vain is the Law made, if Offenders be not brought to condign punishment. You all know there has been an Invasion in England of a Foreign Enemy, the Prince of Orange; and the same is designed on this Kingdom: The effects of an Invasion is not known: Defence is natural to all Kingdoms and States, and therefore the Government has given Directions for raising a greater Army, than at any time heretofore this Kingdom ever had: It was so among the Romans of old, who in cases of necessity did things clear contrary to the Fundamentals of their Laws. The same necessity has put the King on arming here; (in France they have their Ban, and with us our Commission of Array, from sixteen to sixty) but without any design that the effects should be to arm the Country with Half-pikes and Skeans; they are fit indeed for the Mountains, or to guard a Man's House, but not to go abroad with at Noon day. Gentlemen, you that are Justices of the Peace, and Officers of the Army, where ever you meet, you ought to secure them, and bind them over, and know by what Authority they dare go abroad with such Weapons. I need not say any thing to you in Defence of the King, for it is really and truly your own Defence; and therefore I shall proceed into the Heads which are prepared for your Enquiry at this time: our business here is like to be very great, and our time short, and therefore I shall not trouble you with small things, we have greater matters than Assaults and Batteries. We have Desolations and Ruines to shew you and set before you, and without your care we are like to fall into the Gulph of Misery and Destructions. The first thing we have to speak of, is High Treason, we have no Petty Treason in Ireland. If any shall go about to Conspire the Death of the King, Queen, or the Heir Apparent, the Prince of Wales, this is High Treason at all times, it was so at Common Law, you must look to this betimes, for if a blow be once struck here, there can be no retrieving of it. If any one should go about to Seize the Kings Person, or Imprison him, this Gentlemen is Treason, there is but few steps between the Prisons and Graves of Kings; and by all the observation that I can make out of the English or Scotch, or Irish Histories, where we have had swarms of Murdered Kings, that if once they went into Prison, they seldom ever escaped with Life. Our King has more reason than any to dread this, his Father who now is a glorious Martyr in Heaven lost his Life, and the King himself ever since his Escape with Colonel Bamfield from St. James's, has had so many miraculous Deliverances both by Sea and Land, that we may conclude he is preserved for some mighty matter, or else Providence had not done such great things for him; and 'tis but of late that he himself is escaped out of Prison. I am told by Authority, and am ordered to tell you, that he is expected in this Kingdom very suddenly, as a Place of Refuge. He is the first King I think, since Henry the Second, except Richard that has been in this Kingdom. It is a great misfortune that he should be forced to it, but we may look upon it as a great Blessing, that he should think himself safe here, when he cannot be so elsewhere.

To seize any of the King's Forts or Ships of War, for these are the Bulwarks to defend him against his Enemies, this Gentlemen is Treason.

To hold Correspondence with any of the King's Enemies, or with Rebels in actual Rebellion, or to joyn with them, this is Treason; you are not to enquire into the Punishment, but to open a Door for the Petty Jury to enquire into the matter of Fact, and what the Law is, shall by the Blessing of God be our business.

To Counterfeit the King's Coin, or Clip it, and you have very little of it at this time, therefore you had need be careful in a more especial manner, this likewise is Treason.

It is likewise Treason to counterfeit the Great Seal of the King, for 'tis the common Security, by which many hold their Estates, and some their Lives.

The killing of the Chancellor or any of the Judges or Justices of Oyer and Terminer in the doing of their Duty, this likewise is Treason, not so much with regard to their Persons, as to the work that they are about, they representing the King's Person. The meanest Constable there, if he has his Staff in his Hand, and doing his Duty, he that kills him shall dye the same death, as he that kills the best Man that wears Scarles on the Bench. Gentlemen, I must tell you another Crime, and it looks like a mark of Infamy on this Kindom. Murder in England is but Felony, but it has been thought fit to make it Treason here, and they that go out on burning and robbing Houses, they shall be indicted for Treason. And, Clerk of the Crown, if any such be here, now take notice I will have them indicted for Treason.

The next thing for your Enquiry is Felony, that concerning the Life of the Subject; for a Man to kill his Fellow Subject, this is Felony, if he does it on a sudden passion and heat, a Man may kill another in his own Defence; for 'tis natural for a Man to kill rather than be killed, and therefore he shall have his Pardon of course. But Gentlemen, this is not in favour of Duels, and only where there is a great Provocation, there is not a Man but has some passion about him, but for a Man to go to bed with Malice, and arise the next Morning and go meet his Fellow Subject and kill him, this is Murder and Treason in Ireland.

The next thing that is Felony, is concerning the Goods of the Subject, for an honest labouring Man, that by the industry of his whole Life has gotten a fair stock for the maintenance of himself, his Wife and Children, at night goes to bed, and next Morning when he arises, he is a Beggar and wants Bread. Gentlemen, it would make every honest Man's Heart bleed to hear what I have heard since I came into this County, it is ill in other parts of the Country, but here they spare not even the wearing Clothes and Habit of Women and Children, that they are forced to come abroad naked, without any thing to cover their Nakedness; so that besides the Oath you have taken, and the Obligation of Christianity that lies upon you as you are Christians, I conjure you by all that is Sacred, and as ever you expect eternal Salvation, that you make diligent Enquiry, let it never be said by any of you, that it was your Neighbour, or your Neighbour's Servant did it, and you are sorry for it, but will not trouble your selves, I tell you it is every Man's business, and I beseech you look into it.

To break into any Man's House after night fall is Felony, it is a sound sleep that the labouring Man takes, but the idle Rogue that lies lurking and sleeping all the Day, at Night he arises and seeks whom he may devour. If you were to do the most charitable Work, as building of a Bridge or Chappel, or mending a High-way; how many do you think of these Men with half Pikes and Skeines would come to your assistance? not one of them I'll engage. But if a House or Town be to be Plundered, they all run thither. All Riots and Routs are to be enquired into, numbers of People may meet for their own Defence, if they should hear or see the Country robbing and spoiling. By a riotous Multitude coming to burn and rob their Houses, in this Case they may meet and defend their Goods, and apprehend the Robbers, in order to bring them to Justice; but after all this, they are not to contest with the Government, nor do any thing to the Prejudice of that; I told you, I would not trouble you with unnecessary Matters, all are lost in the greatest of Crimes and Outrages that are committed daily in the Country round about.

If I should go through all the Heads of this Charge, it would take up more time than we have to spend here, and therefore I shall shut up all and say no more than this, that every Man do apply himself to his Husbandry and Tillage, to prevent that imminent danger of an approaching Famine, that seems to be coming upon us, and that you make it your business to search after, and bring to Judgment those Robbers that live on the Mountains, and while you continue to do your Duty, you shall have all the Protection the Government can give you. So upon complaint of any Justice of the Peace, that shall be backward or unwilling to appear against them, care shall be taken to punish such and make them Examples. Go together Gentlemen, and consider of these things.

The Prisoners brought into Court.

Clerk of the Crown. Set John Price to the Bar, Tho. King to the Bar, W. Lewis, James Beacon, William Heatly, Tho. Burroughs to the Bar, &c.

Hold up your Right Hands.

Cl. John Price, Tho. King, &c. You stand here indicted for that you on the 25th day of February, in the 5th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King James the Second, at Ballindery in the County of Wicklow, with divers others wicked Traytors and Rebels, in a warlike manner, then and there did assemble your selves, and a cruel and open War and Rebellion against our Sovereign Lord the King, and his faithful Subjects of this His Majesties Kingdom of Ireland, did raise and levy, and did intend our Sovereign Lord the King to Death and Destruction, to bring, and to depose him from his Kingly Authority and Government of this his Kingdom of Ireland, and to fulfil and accomplish this your said traitorous Intentions and Designs, you the said Persons, with others the said wicked Traytors and Rebels, the Day, Year, and Place aforesaid, did arm your selves with divers Warlike Weapons, as well offensive as defensive; and did move and excite divers others the Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, to joyn themselves wickedly and traitorously, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Duty of your Allegiance, and the Statute in that Case made and provided, &c.

Cl. How sayst thou John Price, art thou guilty of the Treason that thou standest here indicted, &c. or not guilty?

Mr. Price. Not Guilty.

Cl. Culprit, How wilt thou be tryed?

Prisoner. By God and the Country.

Cl. God send you a good Deliverance.

Note, The Prisoners were brought into Court in several Parties, to be Arraigned, as many as the Dock would hold at one time.

The second time the Dock was filled.

Cl. Cr. Set William Fulham to the Bar, &c.

Thady Brine, the High-Sheriff, stood up and said, My Lord, Fulham was cleared.

Bar. Lynch. Pray, Sir, who cleared him?

High Sheriff. The Chief Commission'd Officer that was here, Colonel Sheldon did acquit him.

Lynch. He acquit him, how could that be? If there be nothing against him, we shall acquit him.

J. Keating. Clerk of the Crown, is he indicted?

Cl. Yes, My Lord, a Bill of Indictment is found against him.

Penidergass the Sub-Sheriff. My Lord, I will tell you, Mr. Sheriff is mistaken; there was some Boys discharged, and he thinks Fulham is one of those Boys.

Lynch. Sir, you do well to reflect on your Employer.

High Sheriff to the Sub-Sheriff. You have done this to get Money for your self: My Lord, Fulham was not concern'd at all, and therefore was discharged.

Prisoner Lewis. My Lord, we are so crouded with a File of Musqueteers and a Serjeant, that they take up our Chairs, that we cannot sit down; and they come with their lighted Matches to our very Noses, and last Night a Piece went off in the Room among us, we have not the conveniency of quiet Repose, nor our Friends the liberty of seeing us. My Lord, we were not born Lawyers, therefore desire we may have our Friends come to us, and Council to advise with.

This Lewis and Lord Galmoy are Brother and Sisters Children, and was offered a Troop if he would turn Papist.

J. Keating. Mr. Lewis, you have been bred to the Law; but you shall have Council allowed you; And you, Mr. Sheriff, you are not to keep them with Fire-Arms, nor with Souldiers. I saw a Centry at this Door Yesterday, and forbad it—

I remember, that when Warren, Jephson, and Thompson were tryed in 1663. for a Design to surprize Dublin-Castle, because this was a great matter, forsooth, they must be guarded with Souldiers—— (They were tryed at the King's Bench; and several Persons desirous to see or hear, being gotten up into the Arch in the Wall next the Court of Common-Pleas,) as they were going up stairs, a Piece went off, and shot a Man through the Head. I tell you Mr. Sheriff, that Brown Bill is your Guard (pointing at one in Court) the Law knows nothing of Fire Arms; (speaking to the Prisoners) Gentlemen, I must tell you plainly, that I received Directions from my Lord Deputy (by the Attorney General) that you should have all the Justice imaginable.

Bar. Lynch. Mr. Sheriff, you must Command those Souldiers to be Civil, they are your Guards when you employ them.

Seventy Prisoners were Arraign'd and return'd back to Prison; 31 more that were indicted, and upon Bail, did not appear.

Next day——Thursday March the 7th they were again brought to Court to their Tryals; and the Jury was Impannel'd, whose Names were as followeth, Papists marked thus † viz.

Jaylor, set the Prisoners to the Bar.

Cl. Cr. You good Men that are to try the several Issues between the King and John Price, &c. and other Prisoners at the Bar, that shall be given you in Charge, &c. Jury, look at the Prisoners; Prisoners, look at the Jury, &c.

Cl. Cr. Thomas Cowdell, to the Book.

Prisoner Lewis. I challenge him.

Cl. What is your Cause of challenge?

Lewis. I challenge him peremptorily.

Deputy K's Council, Fitz-Patrick. My Lord, before they begin their Challenges; let us know whether they will all agree in their Challenges; otherwise we must be forc'd to Try them severally.

Vol. III.

It was at length agreed, That if any one made a peremptory Challenge, the other Prisoners were to be satisfied with it.

Coll. Tool on the Bench, speaking to the L. Chief J. Keating. My Lord, Mr. Lewis has been Sub-Sheriff of the County, and knows all that have Freehold.

J. Keating. It is the better for himself that he does know them.

Prisoner Lewis continued to Challenge, until they had gone through the Pannel, and only two Gentlemen that were Protestants, Mr. Cradock, and Mr. Pew, were Sworn.

Cl. Cr. Mr. Sheriff, a New Pannel — The Sheriff gave in another of Eleven in number, which were all likewise challeng'd by Mr. Lewis. — Whilst both the High and Sub-Sheriff were looking about the Court, for to make up a third Pannel. Says

L. C. J. Keating. Mr. Sheriff, How many Freeholders have you on the Grand-Jury?

Sheriff. Six or Seven, my Lord.

J. Keating. You have been sparing enough of your Freeholders. The Law requires that all the Grand-Jury should be Freeholders, and have you but six?

Sheriff. — There is but very few Freeholders in the County, My Lord.

C. Fitz-Patrick. — In Cases of necessity, my Lord.

J. Keating. You know the Law is so.

C. Fitz-Patrick. Yes, there is a Statute for it.

J. Keating. — The Prisoner for his Life may challenge Twenty peremptorily, without shewing cause; and the whole World for want of Freehold — And shall I put such a one on for his Life? Sir, I will not be hang'd for any Body.

Fitz-Patrick. Was ever a Judge hang'd?

Mr. Handcock, Council for the Prisoners. Yes, above twenty in a few Years.

J. Keating. Mr. Fitz-Patrick, I will not be hanged with Justice Belknap, nor Tressilian neither.

C. Handcock. My Lord, they were hanged at Tyburn.

J. Keating. I think they were. — The greatest part of this County is in the hands of two or three Men, my Lord Strafford and Rofs.

J. Keating. Who is here that is concern'd for my Lord Strafford, and my Lord Rofs?

Court. Here is Dr. Hall on the Bench, for the Lord Strafford, and the Sheriff is concerned for my Lord Rofs.

J. Keating. Dr. Hall, and you Mr. Sheriff, let me tell you, I do not know but that their Lordships have forfeited their Estates, for this day's work. In the Act for Plantation, there was provision made for Freeholds, and there were enough before the Wars. I fear these great Lords have swallowed up the Freeholds their Ancestors made. I only tell you this.

The Sheriff by this time had drawn up a third Pannel, being eight in number.

J. Keating. Mr. Sheriff, have you all your Freeholders here?

Sheriff. My Lord, we summon'd all here.

J. Keating. On the first Pannel you might have Return'd forty, because you do not know how far Peremptory Challenges will run; and you are oblig'd after to Return a fewer Number when

Q q q q q 2

when you enlarge your Pannel, but you can never enlarge it farther than it was at first.

Cl. Cr. Birne, to the Book.

Prif. Lewis. I Challenge him for want of Freehold.

J. Keating. Mr. Birne, have you a Freehold in this County?

Birne. My Lord, I have a Lease of Lives.

Prif. Westland. I Challenge him peremptorily.

Bar. Lynch. What, Sir, do you begin to Challenge? This shall not be allowed you, to Challenge one upon another.

C. Hancock. My Lord, you are Council for the Prisoners.

Lynch. Sir, you are not to tell me my Duty; I will have you to know, Sir, I shall give an Account for my self. I am Judge for the King too, as well as Council for the Prisoners; and I am concern'd for the King.

J. Keating. (turning towards him.) And do you think I am not concern'd as well as you?

Lynch. Yes, my Lord, I speak for you as well as my self.

Coun. Fitzpatrick. My Lord, they agreed at first, that one Man should Challenge for them all — At this rate we are never like to get a Jury for them; it is but an ill sign of their Innocency, that they are not willing to come to a Tryal.

Mr. Hancock, } In the Peremptory Chal-
Council for the } lenges they agreed (but not Prisoners. } in the Challenges for Freehold) and this peremptory Challenge we will stand by.

J. Keating. I will tell you how I understood it; that in their Peremptory Challenges, if any one of them Challeng'd, the rest should be concluded by it; Mr. Westland has made a Peremptory Challenge, and they are willing to stand by that — however, Mr. Birne, stand by, do not go away, we may call you again. Clerk of the Crown, proceed, — &c. — which he did, until he ended the Third Pannel.

Sub-Sheriff calls Will. Baker. My Lord, he has a Free-hold.

Baker. My Lord, I have no Free-hold.

Keating. You see the Sub Sheriff is a fit Man to be an Officer; he is blind — he is indifferent.

High Sheriff calls Peter Ayris. An. He is on the Grand-Jury.

Keating. Mr. Sheriff, why do you call such?

Sheriff. I saw him in Court, and so I called him, my Lord.

J. Keating. There is already but five Peremptory Challenges made, so that they may Challenge fifteen more peremptorily; and there is but two Sworn, so that there wants ten.

Cl. Cr. Sheriff, see if you can get any more.

Sheriff. I see never a Free-holder in the Court.

C. Fitzpatrick. My Lord, the Sheriff ought to be punished for his Neglect.

Bar. Lynch. Sir, why did you not take care to Return a Jury of Free-holders? You shall be Fined for it.

High Sheriff. My Lord, I have Return'd all the Free-holders there is in the County (I sent yesterday above Twenty Miles for one Gentleman here;) They are all gone out of the Country; — I hope you do not expect I should go to the North, or Isle of Man, or England, or Scotland, among the Rebels, to Summon them.

J. Keating. I do really believe you, Mr. Sheriff, you have done like an honest Man; — Mr. Fitzpatrick, what do you say in this Case?

Fitzpatrick. My Lord, I cannot tell what to say.

Deputy King's } What if there was not one
Coun. Hamond. } Freeholder in the County, must not Justice be done?

J. Keating. Can we make a Law for it?

Hamond. My Lord, I know that in case of an Ejectment, a Tryal has been removed from one County to another.

J. Keating. Can you by Law go to another County in Case of Life?

Hamond. It appears there is not sufficient Free-holders in this County, the Lands being in some few hands.

J. Keating. You know the Law is otherwise, and what would you have us that are Judges, do? Pray tell us, Sir, what you would be at?

Hamond. We would have it removed to the next County, or another County.

J. Keating. For Gods sake, Mr. Hamond, do not put us on making Law.

Lynch. Mr. Hamond, when did you hear, that ever a Matter Capital was tryed in a Foreign County? In matters Civil, by Rule of Court, or Order of Chancery it may be, but of a Capital Offence it was never known; and we are by our Commission to Try Offences committed against the Law in the Counties where the Fact was committed. — We must Try them in this County, and cannot remove them from one County to another.

J. Keating. Mr. Hamond, because I would take you off of this new Law that you so much insist on, that in case of an Ejectment it may be Tryed in a Foreign County — I tell you it cannot be Tryed in a Foreign County: We have no Law for it but that of K. James, and the Reason was, because of the Story that was here on foot, for an Heir Male, if Collateral he carried it against the Heir general. K. James he gave direction that in that case it should be Tryed in a different County. And that my Brother tells you of Trying in a different County, by order of Chancery is this, A person comes in Chancery, and he suggests, that such an one was too potent in such a County, and therefore he desired it might be Tryed in an indifferent County, or get such a Rule of Court on such a suggestion. And this was the case of the Archbishop of —, when he was Bishop of Limerick. And if Walcot might be believed, he said, was the occasion of his running into Rebellion.

C. There is a Case in Hobart, &c.

J. Keating. I would undeceive you in that particular. As in the Case of Austen and Colonel Garret Moor. If in the County of Galloway it was Austens, if in the Kings County it was Colonel Moors. So that you see in disputable Cases, the Law has regard, that it be Tryed by Juries in proper Counties. And truly I think it one of the most reasonable Laws in the world, that a man shall be Tryed by his Country, by the Neighbourhood; and it has given ground to a good English Proverb, He that has an ill Name is half Hanged. A Mans Repute among his Neighbours goes a great way in this matter. When his Neighbours shall say they never knew ill by him. And this Man to be carried out of the County of Wicklow, to be Tryed at Wexford, you may by the same rule bring a Jury from Tyrone, or the farthest part of Connaught. There is nothing like what you say in the Law.

Hamond.

Hamond. I do not say that ever I met with such a thing in the Law.

Lynch. And do you think that we will make the Precedent?

Hamond. That two or three persons should have almost the whole County.

J. Keating. Before God I believe they think they have little enough, whatever you may think of their having too much.

Lynch. What you say Mr. Hamond, if there be any thing in it, we shall advise with all the Judges. The Judges declaring their Opinion, that the Prisoners after being Arraigned, could not be admitted to Bayl.

C. Suxborough, to Baron Lynch. My Lord, you took Bayl for Captain Ruth at Kilkenny, after his Arraignment.

Bar. Lynch. What, Sir, do you reflect on me? There was no Evidence appeared; and my Brother bayled him as well as I.

Suxborough. I say he was Bayled.

Hancock. My Lord, Mr. Cooper at Galaway was Bayled by your Lordship likewise.

L. C. J. Keating sent privately to Dublin to the Deputy, acquainting him, that if they were left in prison untill the next Assizes, they would certainly perish, they having lost all they had, and the County was not able to maintain them; upon which he received Orders to Bayl all but Seven of the Principal, viz.

John Price Esq; James Bacon.

Tho. King. Joseph Crichley.

William Lewis.

Who are kept close Prisoners in order to their Tryal the next Assizes, which will be in this Month of July. Upon the taking these Gentlemen Prisoners, the Souldiers and Rabble plundered and spoyled all the English Families in Balinderry, Redrum, Balina-Clash, &c. and the Irish Women with their Skeans came afterwards and stript the Women and Children Naked, leaving them in a most miserable and deplorable condition, having not left them either Bread, or any Food in several Towns, but carried all away with them. And as an Irish man a Tanner declared to several at the Assizes, in the hearing of this Relator, That one Captain Toole had for his share Twenty six Horse Loads (or more) of Plunder; and the Lord of Louths Troop of Dragoons that were quartered in Wicklow Town, had great quantities of Woollen and Linen Cloth, Womens Cloaths, Pewter and other Goods in abundance. But the L. C. J. Keating coming there to the Assizes, and having an account of the extream poverty and misery the Protestants thereabouts were reduced to, did encourage their Petitioning, and where they could find their Cloaths, &c. he endeavoured to help them in the recovery of them. And Mr. Richard Lamb having Ten fat Bullocks taken away by Collonel Tooles men, and brought to Wicklow, and there killed and eaten by the Souldiers. He preferred a Petition to the Court, Colonel Toole being present on the Bench.

L. C. J. Keating. Collonel Toole, you heard the Petition read; do you know any thing of these Oxen Mr. Lamb had taken from him by your Soldiers?

C. Toole. My Lord, I will tell you how it was; Mr. Lamb had sold the Bullocks to Mr. Price, and as they were driving them to Balen- derry, the Soldiers met them and took them away.

L. C. J. Keating. But Mr. Lamb was at home at his own House, and not at Balinderry, the Bullocks were to be paid for upon Mr. *Lamb*s delivering them to Mr. Price at Balinderry, your Souldiers took them away from his Servant several miles from Balenderry; I see no reason why Mr. Lamb should not be paid for them.

C. Toole. My Lord, Colonel Sheldon came down soon after with the Kings Army, and I advised with him, and he ordered they should be killed for the Army, which was done accordingly.

L. C. J. Keating. Pray Colonel Toole however, Mr. Lamb ought to be paid for them; he was not concerned with Balinderry, but kept his own House.

Council Fitzpatrick. My Lord, his House was a Garrison too.

Mr. Hancock. For shame Mr. Fitzpatrick, a Thatcht Cabin a Garison; I find you are for making all Protestants Rebels that live peaceably at home in their own Houses.

C. Toole. My Lord, I have no more to say to the matter.

Clerk of the Crown. Calling over the Gentlemen of the County, called one — Savil Gent.

Savil. Here I am, my Lord, God knows, a poor Gentleman, being Robb'd of all, and not a penny left me to buy a pint of drink.

L. C. J. Keating. Pray Sir when were you Rob'd?

Savil. The last Wednesday they came and took away what little they had left untaken before, my Wife and Childrens Cloaths, Robbing me of all.

L. C. J. Keating. Pray Sir, what value may your loss be?

Mr. Savil. Truly my Lord, I have not yet computed my loss, but they have taken away all; I desire your Lordship will discharge me from attending the Court, for I have not wherewithal to subsist while I am here.

L. C. J. Keating. Sir I am sorry for you, I discharge you.

L. C. J. Keating. Colonel Toole, Let the Officers be sent for into Court, to hear this Proclamation read; that is sent down here by the Government.

Toole. My Lord, they are here most of them, here is Captain Archbold, Captain Toole, &c.

Clerk of the Crown. Read the Proclamation, the substance whereof was, That they should restore the Protestants such of their Horses again, as were not fit for the Kings Service, &c.

J. Keating. Calls for it from the Clerk, and giving it to Colonel Tooles hand, who stood next him on the Bench, Sir, Pray take this Proclamation, and I hope you will take care that obedience be given to it.

Toole. My Lord, we have received other Orders, Colonel Sheldon who is our Chief Commander, has given directions to have them kept for Draught for Carriages.

J. Keating. Nay, Sir, if Colonel Sheldon must be obeyed before the Government, I have no more to say, I have done.

Toole. My Lord, I shall obey it.

J. Keating. Pray then Col. Toole, let the Horses be sent for, while that I am here, that what Horses are not musterable may be return'd: I cannot in my Conscience go about to fine Men, Men, for not appearing at the Assizes, when they have not a Horse left them to ride on.

The further Proceedings at the Assizes at Wicklow, in Ireland: Being an account of the Tryal of several Felons, &c. March, the 6th and 7th, 1688-9.

Several were Arraigned for stealing considerable Numbers of Cows, Sheep, &c. but the Evidence against most of them durst not appear to prosecute.

Leaghlín Birne Indicted for stealing Nine Head of black Cattle, from one Colwell: No Person appearing to prosecute, says,

J. Keating (to the Jury): Gentlemen, you have nothing against this Man; he was born in the state of Innocency: But the truth is, the Parties dare not appear against him.

Witnesses came in against three Fellows, (viz.)

Maurice Cavenagh, Edmond Poor, William Bowland.

Clerk of the Crown, calling them to come and prosecute, and they appearing.

J. Keating. You that are Evidences against the Prisoners at the Bar, I charge you as you will answer it before God, that you neither for favour or affection be inclined to spare any of these Villains; and likewise, that you will conceal nothing of the Truth, as you will answer it at the Great Day; for I tell you, the Cries and Groans of the poor Women and Children, and the many Families that are ruined, and in great Distress, will go up to Heaven against you.

Evidence against Ed. Poor. My Lord, when I came to him, and asked him, why he stole my Cows? He said, The Devil did make him do it. I spake him fair, and he gave me Money for my Cows.

Poor. I, my Lord, and he promised not to trouble me.

J. Keating. It was an unlawful Promise, the Law would not justify him in it; he has done like an honest Man: If you paid the Money out of Conscience, you did well; but I fear it was your danger of the Halter made you part with your Money; for if 22 s. and Damnation stood in the way, I believe you would have kept the Money: I am sure without Satisfaction you cannot expect Absolution; the Priest that gave the other Advice, for the Maddoge or Skean, will, I suppose, tell you so.

Two Protestant Evidences against Maurice Cavenagh, for stealing several Head of black Cattle, bearing Judge Keating speak against Skeans, said, Evidence. My Lord, when we seized him, we took a Skean away from him.

J. Keating. Sir, How durst you carry such an unlawful Weapon?

Cavenagh. My Lord, I am a Butcher, it was a Butcher's Knife.

J. Keating. Ay, I do not question but thou canst butcher upon occasion.

One Hicky spoke. My Lord, he is no Butcher; but one of the greatest Rogues in the County round us. I have been in pursuit of him several times.

Cavenagh. He is a Murderer, my Lord, do not believe him.

Evidence. My Lord, it was near ten Inches long, thick at the back, and sharp point, every way a Skean.

J. Keating. Is that your Butcher's Knife? you are a great Villain, for carrying such a Weapon.

Cavenagh. I was order'd to have a Skean, my Lord.

J. Keating. Pray, Sir, who order'd you?

Cavenagh. The Priest of the Parish.

J. Keating. A Priest, Sir, (turning to his Brother Judge) Do you hear that Brother?

Bar. Lynch. What Priest, Sir? What Priest? What is your Priest's Name?

J. Keating. Hold Brother. Come, Sir, I shall not ask your Priest's Name; I believe you will have occasion to see your Priest soon, to do you a better Office, than to advise you to carry Skeans.

(And looking towards Coll. Tool, and two Priests on the Bench, next Sheriff Birne.)

J. Keating. A Priest, Gentlemen; a Priest is a Minister, and a Minister of the Gospel, his Doctrine ought to be Peace, for the Gospel is a Doctrine of Peace: When our Saviour came into the World, Peace was proclaimed; and when he went out of the World, he left it for a Legacy to his Disciples: My Peace be with you. And pray, Sir, tell your Priest so from me, when you see him. It is not for Priests to arm or animate such Villains as you are for Mischief. I shall not ask your Priest's Name.

Clancy an Irish Gentleman. My Lord, he belies the Priest; he is a Rogue.

Cavenagh. I do not: The Priests of every Parish did give Orders to get Half-pikes, and Skeans; and they were getting together in Companies, in every Parish.

J. Keating. Who were they that were gotten together; such Fellows as you?

Cavenagh. No, my Lord, better Men than I; a great many that are here in Court.

The Jury withdrawing, and returning soon again, brought Poor and Bowland in guilty, Cavenagh not guilty.

J. Keating. Gentlemen, you have acquitted the greater Villain; at your Door let it lie.

The Ordinary being called to give Bowland and Poor the Book, for their Clergy.

J. Keating. Sir, I expect as true a Return from you, as if I were there my self: The Times are so that Men must forget Bowels of Mercy. Ordinary, do your Duty: What place do you shew them?

Ordinary. My Lord, I shew them the 50th Psalm.

J. Keating. Let them read the 5th Verse— This is an Act of Mercy; and I know not why it should not be in Irish rather, the Country Language; it was formerly in Latin, because the Romish Church hath their Worship in Latin.

The Ordinary return'd them both (Non Legit).

J. Keating. You William Bowland, and you Edmond Poor, you have been Arraigned for stealing of Cows, two several Thefts: It is a great misfortune and sin to be guilty of such Crimes at any time; but yours is so much the worse, because it falls in a time when there are such general and vast Depredations in the Country; that many honest Men go to Bed possess'd of considerable Stocks of black and white Cattle, (gotten by great labour and pains, the Industry of their whole Lives) and in the Morning when they arise, not any thing left them; but turn'd out of all, to go a begging, all being taken away by Rebels, by Thieves and Robbers, the Sons

Sons of Violence, that make every thing they lay their Hands on their own. On this side the Cape of Good Hope; (where are the most brutish and barbarous People we read of) there is none like the People of this Country; nor so great a Desolation as in this Kingdom, at this day, any where to be found, and particularly in this County: It is come to that pass, that a Man that loses the better part of his Substance, chuses rather to let that, and what he has besides go, than come to give Evidence: And why? Because he is certain to have his House burnt, and his Throat cut, if he appears against them. Good God! what a pass are we come to! For what has any Man, if the stronger Hand can take it from him; it is better to live under no Law, than in such a place. We have lived to see twenty nine Years of Peace pass over our Heads: And I have sat on this Bench before now; I pray God, that my Lenity and others, has not given Encouragement to these Thieves and Robbers; there may be a Rogue in the Court, or one that is evilly inclined (I know none) but take notice of this, the Government is at length tyr'd with Mercy, they see it does no good; and Examples and Punishments of this kind, are not intended so much in a great part for the Punishment of the Offender, as for discouraging of others; to make them take warning by their Example, that, seeing what evil Courses bring Men to, they may reform.

I will not take up time to tell you how the benefit of Clergy came; whether in the room of the Cities of Refuge that were in the old times; I know that Restitution was under the Jewish Law sufficient Satisfaction; and if the Thief could not make Restitution, he was to be sold for a Slave, and the Money given to the Party. But as the World grows old, it grows worse, and those Lenitives signifie nothing for preventing Thieving and Robbery; for Thieves and Robbers are like a Gangreen in the Commonwealth, they are worse than Drones in the Hive. I cannot tell my self, that under the Circumstances we are in, I should advise to pardon any that are taken in this general Depredation that we are under, and therefore you Bowland and Poore, that might have lived as safely under the Laws, as the biggest Man in the Kingdom, and none of your fellow Subjects durst lay his Hand upon you, but he was liable to answer for it; and thus you might have lived to a fair old age, and ended your days in Peace, but you have chosen the quite contrary, for the Law provides likewise for the Punishment of wicked and offending Persons, among which number you are found by a Jury of Twelve able Men of your Country; and therefore the Sentence of the Law is this, That you be both and each of you taken from this place, to the place from whence you came, and there your Irons to be struck off, and from thence to the place of Execution, and there you shall be Hanged by the Neck till you are dead, and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

And now let me give you advice, your time is short, spend it well, and flatter not your selves with the hopes of a Reprieve or Pardon; and for you Poore, you have shortned the work of your Life, you have gone a great way towards Heaven, if that Restitution you made was out of Conscience. Mr. Sheriff, let them have a Confessor sent to them, for Saturday is the day of their Execution. The Women their Friends setting up the Cry in the Court.

J. Keating. They did not cry thus when the Cows were brought home to them, they were busied then in the killing and the powdring them up.

The Copy of a Protection or Pass, given by an Irish Officer to some notorious Robbers of the County of Wicklow.

I James Byrne, Ensign to Captain Charles Byrne, do hereby certifie to you, Terlagh Kelly, Patrick Byrne, and Patrick Mac-Teige, and William Doyle, to save you harmless from any Misdemeanors whatsoever. As witness my Hand this 24th of April, 1689. James Byrne.

The following Letter being sent by the Lord-Deputy to the Judges of Assize, was read in Court to the Grand-Jury, &c.

By the Lord-Deputy, General. and General Governour of Ireland.

After Our hearty Commendations, We Greet you well. As His Majesty was graciously pleased to entrust us with the Government of this his Kingdom, so upon the Invading of England, and upon receiving certain Information, that the Prince of Orange did intend also to invade this Realm, We have, for the Defence thereof, raised a considerable Army, far above what could be maintained by the King's Revenue at the best of Times, and when the Trade of this Country was in the most flourishing Condition; this we have done by the King's Command, to support his Regal Authority, Crown and Dignity, and to preserve the Lives, Liberties, and Properties of all his Liege People within this Kingdom. And since our Dangers are at hand, and that we may daily expect the Landing of an Enemy, who intends the Subversion of His Majesty's Government, the total Destruction of all his good Subjects. Here we find our selves under an absolute Necessity to keep the King's Army still on foot, in order to our Preservation from the approaching Dangers. And tho' we have hitherto with all the Care and Industry imaginable, and by the generous Concurrence of the Officers, supported the new raised Forces, without being a Burthen to any of His Majesty's People. Yet considering the decay of Trade, the great fall of the Revenue in these distracted Times, the great Charges the Officers have been at in subsisting Men, it cannot be expected that the standing Forces can hereafter be maintained without Supplies; and since the same cannot be done by Parliament, We cannot think of a more effectual Expedient, than by voluntary Subscriptions, by way of Loan, from the People; which if generously done, with what may be made of the Revenue, may support the Army, and will stop all the Disorders that may be committed by the Souldiers, which we shall always endeavour to prevent with all the Care and Industry possible. By this Husbandry may go on as formerly, and we shall be in a Capacity to form the Army so, as that, with the Assistance of Almighty God, we do not doubt to put this Kingdom in a perfect posture of Defence. We do therefore pray your Lordships to Recommend this weighty Matter effectually at the open Assizes in every County when you sit, to all the Inhabitants of such Counties, and to appoint the respective Sheriffs of such Counties, to procure voluntary Subscriptions, by way of Loan, from the Inhabitants of such Counties, Counties, of some certain Sum of Money from each, to be subscribed to their Names, to be afterwards satisfied by them respectively, in Money, Wheat, Oats, or Oatmeal, towards the Maintenance of the Army, to be paid in, or delivered to the respective Sheriffs, or their Order, and in such places as the said Sheriffs shall respectively appoint, from whom we expect an account of their Proceedings herein, and a Copy of such Subscriptions as shall be made. We do not doubt but every True and Loyal Subject will, according to his Ability, and the Excellency of the Subject matter, generously and cheerfully Contribute towards the carrying on of so great, so necessary, and so glorious a Work. We expect your diligent Care herein, and so we bid you heartily Farewel. From His Majesty's Castle of Dublin, the Second Day of March, 1688. Your very Loving Friend, Tyrconnel.

An Answer to the foregoing Letter being drawn up by the Grand Jury, and entred into their Book, and presented to Sir Henry Lynch, setting forth the extream Poverty of their County, occasioned by the daily Ruin of the English, &c. That they were not in a Capacity to subsist themselves, and therefore not capable to raise any thing considerable for the Army; (Chief Justice Keating returning to Dublin, and leaving Baron Lynch to go on to the other Counties, &c.) the said Lynch told the Grand Jury before he discharged them, that the Writing they had drawn up, was a Reflection and Scandal to their Country, would be taken very ill by the Government, and did not question but it would be brought in hereafter as an Evidence against them; and therefore order'd it should be torn out of the Book, which was done accordingly.

The Tryals of Sir Richard Grahme, Baronet, Viscount Preston in the Kingdom of Scotland, and John Ashton, Gent.

Anno Regni Domini Willielmi & Dominae Mariae, Angl. &c. Secundo. Die Veneris, 16. die Januarii, Anno Dom. 1690. The King and Queen's Writ of Habeas Corpora was sent to the Governour of the Tower of London, to bring up the Bodies of Sir Richard Grahme, Baronet, Viscount Preston in the Kingdom of Scotland, John Ashton and Edmund Elliot, Gent. to the Sessions House in the Old-Baily, London; where they were brought between the Hours of Ten and Eleven in the Forenoon; and being placed at the Bar, were Arraigned upon an Indictment of High-Treason, found the Day before by the Grand-Jury for the County of Middlesex, at Hicks's-Hall, in manner following.

Cl of Arraignments.

SIR Richard Grahme, hold up your hand, (which he did, and so the other two.)—You stand indicted by the Names of Sir Richard Grahme, late of the Parish of St. Anne within the Liberty of Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, Baronet; John Ashton, late of the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden in the County aforesaid, Gentleman; and Edmond Elliot, late of the Parish of St. James within the Liberty aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, Gent. for that you, as false Traytors against the most Illustrious and most Excellent Princes William and Mary, King and Queen of England, Defenders of the Faith, &c. your Sovereign Lord and Lady, not having the fear of God in your Hearts, nor weighing the duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience, which every true and faithful Subject of our said Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, towards them our said Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen should, and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and contriving, practising, and with all your strength intending the Peace and Common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disturb, molest, and disturb; and War and Rebellion against our said Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, within this Kingdom of England to stir up, move, and procure; and the Government of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen of this Kingdom of England to subvert, change and alter; and our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, from the Title, Honour, and Royal Name of the Imperial Crown of this their Kingdom of England to depose and deprive; and our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen to death, and final destruction to bring and put; you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, the nine and twentieth day of December, in the second year of the Reign of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are; and and divers other days and times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, Devillishly, and Traiterously, with Force and Arms, &c. with divers false Rebels and Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, did Conspire, Treat of, Compass, Imagine, and intend our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, (your supreme and natural Lord and Lady) from the Royal State, Crown, Title, Power, and Government of their Kingdom of England, to Deprive, Depose, and Cast down; and the same our Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, to Kill, and bring and put to Death; and the Government of this Kingdom of England to Change, Alter, and wholly to Subvert; and a miserable Slaughter among the Subjects of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, within their Kingdom of England, to Cause and Procure; and an Insurrection, War, and Rebellion against Our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, within this Kingdom of England to Move, Procure, and Aid; and the same your most evil, wicked, and Devillish Treasons, and Traiterous Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, as false Traitors, then and there, to wit, the said Nine and twentieth day of December, in the said second Year of the Reign of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, and divers other days and times, as well before, as after, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, with Force and Arms, &c. falsely, unlawfully, wickedly, and traiterously, did Propose, Consult, and agree to Procure and Prepare great Numbers of Armed Men, War and Rebellion against our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen, within this Kingdom of England to Levy and Make; And that you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, afterwards, to wit, the same Nine and twentieth day of December, in the aforesaid second year of the Reign of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, and traiterously, did Prepare, and Compose, and then and there did Cause, and Procure to be Prepared, and Composed, several Traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in writing, to shew and inform Lewis then and yet the French King, and his Subjects, then and yet Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, and very many other evil-disposed Persons, and false Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, of and concerning the Number, Force, and Condition of certain Ships, for, and on the behalf of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen of England, then, and there designed and prepared for the defence of their Kingdom of England, and their Enemies aforesaid to repel and resist; and how some of the same Ships were Manned, and of the Names of the Captains of several of the said Ships; and how the Castles and Fortresses of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, called Portsmouth, South-Sea, and Gosport, within this Kingdom of England, were strengthened and fortified, and how the same Castles and Fortresses, into the hands and possession of Enemies and false Traytors against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, might be taken and seized; as also of the time, places, ways, manners, and means by which, when, and where the same Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, this Kingdom of England might invade and infest; and the same Enemies, and the Ships of the Enemies of this Kingdom of England, should fight against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, and their faithful Subjects; as also to procure, provide, prepare, and obtain against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, Assistance and Armed Men, our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, from their Royal State and Government of this Kingdom of England to cast down and Depose, and to stir up, promote, and procure the aforesaid Lewis the French King, (then, and yet an Enemy of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen) this Kingdom of England to Invade; and to send Ships within this Kingdom of England, the City of London, of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, to Plague; as also to cause very many Subjects of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, to Rise, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen within this Kingdom of England to move, procure, make, and levy. And you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot afterwards, to wit, the same day and Year, at the aforesaid Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex, of and for the same your Treasons and Traiterous Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes aforesaid, to execute, fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect into your Hands, Custody, and Possession, then and there secretly, Knowingly, Unlawfully, and Traiterously did obtain, procure, detain, had, concealed, and kept two several Bills of Exchange then before made, for the Payment of several Sums of Money to the Enemies of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are; as also very many Traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in Writing, then and there composed and prepared with that intent to shew and inform Lewis then and yet the French King, and his Subjects, then and yet Enemies of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, and very many other Evil Disposed Persons, and False Traytors to the Jurors unknown, of and concerning the Number, Force and Condition of the Ships, for and on the behalf of them our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen of England; then and there designed, and prepared for the Defence of their Kingdom of England, and to Repel, and Resist their Enemies, and how some of the same Ships were Manned, and of the Names of the Captains of divers of the same Ships, and how the Castles and Fortresses of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen, called Portsmouth, South Sea and Gosport, within this Kingdom of England, were Strengthened, and Fortified; and how the same Castles and Forts into the Hands and Possession of Enemies and false Traytors against our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen, might be taken and seized; as also the Times, Places, Ways, Mariners, and Means, by which, when, and where

' where the same Enemies of our said Lord and ' Lady the King and Queen, this Kingdom of ' England might Invade, and Insest, and the ' Enemies, and Ships of the Enemies of this ' Kingdom of England should Fight against the ' same our Lord and Lady the King and Queen
 ' of England, and their faithful Subjects; as also
 ' to procure, provide, prepare, and obtain a' gainst our said Lord and Lady the King and ' Queen, Assistance and Armed Men, to Invade
 ' this Kingdom of England, and our said Lord
 ' and Lady the King and Queen that now are,
 ' from their Royal State and Government of this
 ' Kingdom of England, to cast down and depose,
 ' and to stir up, promote, and procure the afore-
 ' said Lewis the French King then, and yet an
 ' Enemy of our said Lord and Lady the King
 ' and Queen, to Invade this Kingdom of Eng-
 ' land, and to send Ships within this Kingdom of ' England, the City of London, of our said Lord
 ' and Lady the King and Queen to plague; as
 ' also to cause very many Subjects of our said
 ' Lord and Lady the King and Queen, to Rise,
 ' and War, and Rebellion against our said Lord
 ' and Lady the King and Queen, within this ' Kingdom of England, to move, procure, make,
 ' and levy. And you the said Sir Richard Grahme,
 ' John Ashton, and Edmund Elliott, afterwards, to ' wit, the Thirtieth day of December, now
 ' last past, at the afore said Parish of St Cle-
 ' ment Danes, in the County of Middlesex, con' cerning, and for the same your Treasons, and ' Traiterous Compassings, Imaginations, and ' Purposes afore said, to execute, fulfil, perfect,
 ' and bring to Effect, for One Hundred Pounds
 ' in Moneys, numbred by you the said Sir Rich-
 ' ard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliott,
 ' then and there paid, and deposited, unlawfully
 ' and Traiterously did hire and prepare, and
 ' then and there did cause and procure to be hi-
 ' red and prepared a certain Ship, and three ' Men; you, the said Sir Richard Grahme, John
 ' Ashton, and Edmund Elliott, with the said Bills
 ' of Exchange, and the afore said Traiterous
 ' Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instru-
 ' ctions in Writing, into the Hands, Custody and ' Possession of you the said Sir Richard Grahme,
 ' John Ashton, and Edmund Elliott, secretly, un-
 ' lawfully, and traiterously, kept concealed and
 ' detained, from this Kingdom of England, unto;
 ' and into France, in Parts beyond the Seas, then
 ' and yet under the Rule and Government of the
 ' said Lewis the French King, then and yet an
 ' Enemy of our said Lord and Lady the King
 ' and Queen, secretly to carry and transport,
 ' with that intent the said Bills of Exchange,
 ' Traiterous Letters, Notes and Memorandums,
 ' and Instructions in Writing there in parts be' yond the Seas, to the Enemies of our said
 ' Lord and Lady the King and Queen, and o' ther Evil-disposed Persons to deliver and dis-
 ' perse. And the said most wicked Treasons,
 ' and Traiterous Compassings and Imaginations
 ' afore said, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect,
 ' as also to cause, promote and procure the afore-
 ' said Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the ' King and Queen, to invade this Kingdom of ' England with Ships and Armed Men. And ' you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton,
 ' and Edmund Elliott, afterwards, to wit, the ' 30th Day of December now last past, at the ' afore said Parish of St Clement Danes, in the ' County afore said, concerning, and for the ' same your Treasons, and Traiterous Compa-
 ' ssings, Imaginations and Purposes afore said,
 ' to execute and fulfil, maliciously, traiterously,
 ' and advisedly, then and there, and diverse o' ther days and times, as well before as after,
 ' took upon your selves to very many other
 ' Traytors to be aiding and assisting in the Exe-
 ' cution of the Treasons, and Traiterous Com-
 ' passings, Imaginations and Purposes afore said;
 ' and then and there, to wit, the same 30th
 ' day of December now last past, at the Parish of ' St. Clement Danes, in the County afore said, ma-
 ' liciously, secretly and traiterously did hire, and ' prepare, and then and there did cause and pro-
 ' cure to be hired and prepared a certain Boat,
 ' and one Man, to the Jurors afore said un-
 ' known; you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John
 ' Ashton, and Edmund Elliott, from thence to, and ' into the afore said Ship, so as afore said, hired
 ' and prepared to carry and convey. And you
 ' the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and
 ' Edmund Elliott, maliciously and traiterously into
 ' the same Boat, then and there did enter; and
 ' your selves from thence, in and by that same
 ' Boat, unto and into the Ship afore said, then
 ' and there unlawfully and traiterously did cause,
 ' and procure to be carried with the intention
 ' afore said. And you the said Sir Richard Grahme,
 ' John Ashton, and Edmund Elliott, with the same
 ' Bills of Exchange, and the afore said traiterous
 ' Letters, Notes, Memorandums and Instru-
 ' ctions in Writing, and in your Hands, Custody
 ' and Possession then and there, in and with the ' Ship afore said, did sail, and depart towards the ' afore said Kingdom of France, in Parts beyond
 ' the Seas; the same your most wicked, evil
 ' and traiterous Intentions, Purposes, Compa-
 ' ssings and Imaginations afore said, to fulfil, per' fect and promote, against the Duty of your
 ' Allegiance, against the Peace of our said Lord
 ' and Lady the King and Queen that now are,
 ' their Crown and Dignity, and against the ' Form of the Statute in that Case made, and ' provided. And the Indictment further sets forth,
 ' that long before the afore said Nine and Twen' tieth day of December now last past, open War
 ' between our said Lord and Lady the King and
 ' Queen, and the afore said Lewis the French
 ' King was begun, declared, and waged, and
 ' yet is; Which said Lewis the French King, and
 ' his Subjects, and the men of those parts, then
 ' and yet, were, and are, Enemies to our said
 ' Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now
 ' are, and to their Kingdom of England: And ' that in the time of the afore said War between ' them our said Lord and Lady the King and
 ' Queen, and the afore said Lewis the French
 ' King, you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John
 ' Ashton, and Edmund Elliott, being Subjects of ' our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen
 ' that now are, as false Traitors against our said
 ' Lord and Lady the King and Queen, during ' the War afore said, to wit, the Nine and ' Twentieth day of December, in the Second ' year of the Reign of our said Lord and Lady
 ' the King and Queen that now are, and diverse
 ' other days and times as well before as after, at ' the Parish of St Clement Danes afore said, in the ' County afore said, with force, and Arms, &c.
 ' To the afore said Enemies of our said Lord and ' Lady the King and Queen that now are, un-
 ' lawfully, and traiterously were adhering, and ' assisting, and in Execution, and performance of the same adhering you the said Sir Richard Grabme, John Ashton, and Edmund Ellyott, then, and there, to wit, the same Nine and Twentieth day of December in the Second year of the Reign of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, above said, at the afore said Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County afore said, falsely, maliciously, and Traiterously did prepare, and compose, and then and there did cause and procure to be prepared and composed, as also into your Custody, and Possession then, and there unlawfully secretly, and Traiterously did obtain, detain, conceal, and keep, divers traitorous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in writing, to shew and inform the afore said Lewis then and yet the French King, and his Subjects, then and yet Enemies of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, of and concerning the Number, Force, and Condition of certain Ships, for and on the behalf of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen of England, then and there designed, and preparing, for their defence of their Kingdom of England, and their Enemies afore said to repel, and resist; and how some of the same Ships were manned, and of the Names of several of the Captains of the said Ships; and how the Castles, and Fortresses of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen, called Portsmouth, Southsea, and Gosport within this Kingdom of England were strengthened, and fortified, and how those same Castles and Fortresses into the hands and possession of the same Enemies of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen might be taken, and Seized, as also of the Time, Places, Ways, Manners, and Means, by which, when and where the same Enemies of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are this Kingdom of England might invade, and Insest, and they the said Enemies, and the Ships of the said Enemies of this Kingdom of England should fight against our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen, and their faithful Subjects. And that during the War afore said, to wit, the afore said Thirtieth day of December now last past, you the said Sir Richard Grabme, John Ashton, and Edmund Ellyott, at the afore said Parish of St. Clements Danes in the County afore said, unlawfully, and Traiterously did hire, and prepare, and then and there did cause and procure to be hired and prepared a certain Ship, and three men, you the said Sir Richard Grabme, John Ashton, and Edmund Ellyott, with the same Traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in writing, from this Kingdom of England, unto, and into France in parts beyond the Seas, then and there under the Rule and Government of the afore said Lewis the French King, then and yet an Enemy of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen, secretly, during the War afore said, to carry, and transport, to the intent the same Traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in writing there, in parts beyond the Seas, to the afore said Enemies of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are to deliver, and disperse during the War afore said, in aid of the said Enemies of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen in the War afore said: And that you the said Sir Richard Grabme,
 ' of

Vol. III.

John Ashton and Edmund Elliot, during the War afore said, to wit, the afore said thirtieth day of December now last past, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County afore said, concerning, and for the same your Treasons and traitorous Adhearings and Purposes afore said to execute and fulfil, maliciously, traitorously, and advisedly, then and there did hire and prepare, and then and there did cause, and procure to be hired, and prepared a certain Boat, and one Man to the Jurors unknown you the said Sir Richard Grabme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot from thence to and into the Ship afore said, by you as afore said, hired and prepared to carry and convey: And that you the said Sir Richard Grabme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, maliciously, and traitorously into the same Boat then and there did enter, and your selves from thence secretly in and by the same Boat unto and into the same Ship then and there did cause and procure to be carried in Prosecution of the adhering afore said. And you the said Sir Richard Grabme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot then and there with the same traitorous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in writing, in your custody and possession being, during the War afore said, to wit, the same day and year, in and with the Ship afore said did sail, and depart towards the afore said Kingdom of France, to the intent the same traitorous Letters, Notes, Memorandums and Instructions in writing, in parts beyond the Seas to the said Enemies of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are to deliver, concerning and for Aid, Intelligence, and Council by you the said Sir Richard Grabme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot to the same Enemies of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are to give and yield, during the War afore said, against the Duty of your Allegiance, against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, their Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. How say you Sir Richard Grabme, are you guilty of this Felony, and High Treason whereof you stand indicted, or not guilty?

L. Preston. My Lord, I have something humbly to offer to your Lordships.

L. C. J. Holt. What is it your Lordship would say?

L. Preston. My Lord, I find I stand indicted by the name of Sir Richard Grabme, Baronet, but I do take my self to be intituled to another way of Tryal, as being a Peer of England, by vertue of a Patent before the Vote of Abdication was made; and it was in a time when all your Processes, and all your Writs went in the late King's Name, and all Officers acted by vertue of his Commissions. My Lord, this is a matter that concerns me in point of Life, Estate, Posterity, and all that's dear to me; and therefore I desired to know whether your Lordships think fit to allow me my Peerage; I offer it, my Lord, with all the respect and modesty imaginable.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I apprehend your Lordship to offer against your being tried here, that you are a Peer.

L. Preston. I take my self to be so, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you must make that out to the Court.

R r r r r 2

L. Preston

L. Preston. I told your Lordships the Ground of my Claim and Apprehension; it is from a Patent I received before the Vote of Abdication, when all Commissions, and all Process, and all the Courts of Judicature run in that Name.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is that Patent, my Lord?

L. Preston. It is in the Hands of the House of Lords.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston, we cannot take notice of that Patent; if your Lordship plead that you were made a Peer by a Patent under the Great Seal of England, you must produce it under the Great Seal, that the Court may see what it is, and whether it be sufficient to justify your Plea.

L. Preston. I hope your Lordship and this Court will enable me to do that, by sending an Order to the Clerk of the House of Lords, to bring the Patent hither; for it is in his hands.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, that is not in our power: If your Lordship take your self to be a Peer, and would thereby stop this Court from proceeding to try you, you must be ready to make it out.

L. Preston. I am ready to make it out, if I had my Patent here, that would make it out. Certainly there is some Authority now in being (I humbly offer it with all Submission and Respect) that may order the Clerk of the House of Lords to attend this Court, and produce this Patent.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston, we are not to enable you to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court:

L. Preston. My Lord, I offer it with all respect to the Court: I am concerned in it for my Life, and my All, and if that be over-ruled, this I hope you will do before you go on, you will hear me by my Council.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, it is nothing that you have said; for if your Lordship plead this Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court, it ought not to be received without shewing your Patent.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire my Council to be heard to this matter.

L. C. J. Holt. I know your Lordship has had the benefit of Council, and I know your Council must tell you, that what you say goes for nothing, unless you put in your Plea, and produce your Patent, that the Court may judge upon it.

* Sir John Somers. * Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I have observed what my Lord Preston has mentioned.—

L. Preston. Pray Mr. Solicitor will you speak out, that I may hear what you say?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I say, I have taken notice of what your Lordship has offered: It has been most truly observed by the Court, that it is your Lordships part to make good your Plea, and it ought not to be expected that any Court should help a Person to plead to its Jurisdiction: But because it should not be pretended that an advantage was taken against the Prisoner for a defect in point of form, or that any thing was insisted on which should have the least appearance of a hardship, and that we may proceed in the most clear and unexceptionable manner that can be, I must beg leave to observe to your Lordship and the Court, how far this matter which my Lord Preston has insisted on has been debated and determined in another place.

L. C. J. Holt. So; on Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, upon the 11th of November 1689. My Lord Preston did make some claim in the House of Lords that he was a Peer of the Realm; the House of Lords demanding of him upon what he founded his pretence; he said he claimed by Letters Patents from the late King James, which passed the Great Seal before the time of the Vote of Abdication. The Lords required that those Letters should be produced, which being done, and my Lord Preston insisting upon his Claim to be a Peer of England, the Lords thought fit that day to commit my Lord Preston to the custody of the Black Rod. The next day being the 12th of November, upon solemn debate of the validity of these Letters Patents, and consulting with the Judges then present, the Lords nemine contradicente did adjudge and declare those Letters Patents to be void and null: And by another Order of the same date, they did order Mr. Attorney General to prosecute my Lord Preston in the King's Bench for a High Misdemeanour in presuming to claim Peerage by those Letters Patents. And by a third it was ordered that the Letters Patents should remain in custody of the Clerk of the Parliament. Thus you see, my Lord, this matter hath had already a solemn Determination in a Court which had the most proper Consuance and Jurisdiction of Claims in this Nature. And they having pronounced their Judgment, I did not think it would have been urged again in this place. I thought it proper to mention these things to shew how it comes to pass that my Lord Preston has not his Letters Patents to produce, and to satisfy every Man that there is no hardship put upon my Lord Preston, by trying him here when he ought to be tried by another Judicature. The Lords have given Judgment against these Letters Patents, and have ordered that they shall remain in custody of the Clerk of the Parliament, and my Lord Preston is not a Stranger to these Transactions, and therefore if my Lords Council had been of Opinion he could have made any use of them, they would have inform'd him he must have taken another course to have got them, and could not expect this Court should make an Order for him, contrary to the Order of the House of Lords, to take the Letters Patents out of the hands of the Clerk of the Parliament, and this, to help him to a Plea against their own Jurisdiction. I omitted one thing, that upon the 27th of the same Month of November, upon my Lord Preston's humble Submission and Petition, his Lordship was discharged of his Imprisonment, and the House of Lords were pleased to remit the Order given to Mr. Attorney, for Prosecuting him in the King's Bench for the Misdemeanour. So that I cannot but wonder to hear of this Claim of Peerage after that Submission. But there is nothing offered to the Court by my Lord that the Court can take any legal notice of. If my Lord will plead any thing to the Jurisdiction of the Court, he ought to have his Plea in Form, and be ready with his Proofs to make it good.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord Preston upon this last Order of the House of Lords has disclaimed any right of Peerage when he made his Petition, otherwise he had not been discharged. —

L. Preston. My Lord I beg leave —

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Besides, my Lord, what my Lord Preston offers is a matter of Record as all Letters Patents are, and tho' out of his hands he might have had recourse to the Record of the Inrolment.

L. Preston. For that, my Lord, I must humbly beg of your Lordships a little time to put my self in a Capacity to plead it in Form. If you will over rule it, I can say nothing to it; I offer it with all the modesty and respect imaginable.

L. C. J. Holt. It shall do your Lordship no prejudice, my Lord, God forbid but that you should make use of all advantages that you can invent for your defence. But, my Lord, we must tell you what you have offered is nothing that we can take any notice of, unless you had your Patent to produce, and we cannot give your Lordship time to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court.

L. Preston. Then if your Lordships are pleased to over rule this matter I submit, but I hope you will give me leave to make all the just defence I can for my self. Does your Lordship over rule me in it?

L. C. J. Holt. I suppose we are all of the same Opinion, if not, I suppose they will declare their minds.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That which has been said by Mr. Solicitor, was only that you and all the World may be satisfied that there is nothing of hardship put upon you. But the Court, if this had not been said, yet could take no notice of what you say, unless it were pleaded, and pleaded in legal Form. But if the matter be, as the King's Council have represented it, that this Patent you now pretend to have, hath already had its determination in a proper place, this Court (which is an inferiour Court to that of the Lords in Parliament) cannot intermeddle with it. We cannot help you, nor can we set up what was condemned there. So that you can entertain no hope or expectation of our doing any thing for you in this matter, or any relief or help by such a Plea.

L. C. Baron. My Lord Preston, you may remember, (I am sure some of us that were there present do,) that you did decline further insisting upon this matter in the House of Lords, and thereupon you had that great favour from the House shewn you, as the King's Council have opened.

L. Preston. I did decline it, 'tis true, my Lord; when they had declared it a Misdemeanour, I made my application to the Court, and therein declared I was sorry for having misdeameaned my self.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. If your Lordships please, we will read the very Orders of the House of Lords, to satisfy my Lord Preston, that we put no hardship upon him.

L. Preston. If there be any thing of hardship upon me in this Case, it is because I think I have a right to insist upon this matter, and cannot have an occasion or power to have that which I would make my Defence by.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordship shall have a fair Tryal, if you will please to put your self in a Condition to be tryed, by pleading to the Indictment.

Mr. B. Lechmere. The Lords in Parliament have disclaimed you for being a Peer, and we cannot make you one.

L. Preston. My Lord, I hope your Lordships will put no hard thing upon me; but give me leave and your Lordships help to make my defence.

L. C. J. Holt. You shall by the Grace of God have all the liberty you can desire to make your Defence; but you must first plead.

L. Preston. Since your Lordships are pleased to over rule me in this Case, I shall say no more of it. I did not intend to offer any thing that might be an Offence to the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. As I told your Lordship before, so I assure you now again it shall do you no prejudice.

L. Preston. Then if your Lordship please, since the Language is different in which the Indictment is written from that in which it was read, and some things may be of different Signification in both Languages, I desire the Indictment may be read in Latin.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it in Latin.

L. Preston. I have one thing to beg of your Lordship before it be read.

L. C. J. Holt. What is it you desire, my Lord?

L. Preston. My Lord, I humbly desire, because I cannot retain all the Contents in my Memory, that my Solicitor may have leave to stand by me.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Do you all joyn in this desire, for if you should each of you severally, have it read a great many times over, they that take Notes in Short-hand may take a Copy of it as it is read, and a Copy not to be allowed.

L. C. J. Holt. If we find they desire to be troublesome, we can over rule them.

L. Preston. I would be guilty of nothing that may give the Court Offence, nor offer any thing that should take up the time of the Court unnecessarily.

L. C. J. Holt. If they would have it read in Latin, let it be read.

L. Preston. If it be troublesome to the Court, I waive it my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. No, we do not think it troublesome.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot, do you desire to have it read again?

Ashton, Elliot. We all joyn with my Lord, and desire it may be read in Latin.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it. (Which was done.)

Cl. of Arr. Juratores pro Domino Rege & Domina Regina: super Sacramentum suum presentant quod— & contra formam Statuti in eo casu editi & provisi.

L. Preston. My Lord, I am sorry I have taken up so much of your time, I thought the difference of Language might have made some mistake, which I thought would be of advantage to me in my Tryal: And for the same reason I humbly request you will please to order me a Copy of the Indictment.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, that we cannot do; it hath been frequently demanded upon these occasions, but always denied. I have always known it denied.

L. Preston. Your Lordship will give me leave to say what your Lordship must needs know much better than I, there is a Statute in the 46 of Ed. 3. that doth order a Copy of any Record to any Prisoner, or other Person if he demand it: And it has been granted, as I am informed in other Cases, particularly in the Case of Colonel Sidney.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, it was denied in Colonel Sidney's Case.

L. Preston. If I mistake I beg your Lordships pardon. It is a Reason in a late Law made for the Reversal of Mr. Cornish's Attainder. The Parliament do there say that it was not a legal Tryal, because he had not a Copy of the Indictment, and time given him to prepare for his Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. Truly, my Lord, I do not know how that matter stands: That Reversal of Mr. Cornish's Attainder is but a private Act of Parliament. I never saw it, nor heard it read, nor can we take notice of it. But your Lordship is to be tried by the same methods of Law, that all Persons that have gone before you have always been, it has always been the course, that the Prisoner should not have a Copy of his Indictment, Colonel Sidney had it not, and I remember in the Case of Sir Hen. Vane in the year 1662, he demanded a Copy of the Indictment, and it was denied him, and it has been constantly denied ever since in such Cases.

L. Preston. I humbly desire to know whether it was not granted in the Case of my Lord Russel.

L. C. J. Holt. No indeed my Lord, my Lord Russel had it not, I can take it upon me to say that, for I know all the Proceedings in that Cause.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. No my Lord, never any Man had it in all my Experience.

L. C. J. Holt. Some of us that are here were of Council for my Lord Russel at that time, and we did not advise him to demand a Copy of the Indictment, for we knew he could not have it by Law.

L. Preston. I am very tender of taking up your Lordships time unnecessarily, but it stands me upon to do all I can to defend my self, may not I have my Council heard to that point? because if it be a point of Law, though your Lordships are of Council for the Prisoner, yet I beg that I may have my Council heard to argue it.

L. C. J. Holt. To what point would you have your Council heard?

L. Preston. To that point, whether I may not have a Copy of my Indictment according to the 46. of Ed. 3. that is the point I would have my Council heard to.

L. C. J. Holt. There is no such Statute as your Lordship mentions, that gives the Prisoner a Copy of his Indictment.

Mr. Jones. If your Lordship please to hear me for my Lord Preston.—

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, Mr. Jones, you are mistaken in this matter: If my Lord himself will shew that there is any such Statute, we will consider of it, and if it be a matter that requires debate, we may assign my Lord Council to argue it, but till then Council are not to be heard. My Lord Preston, if your Lordship can shew us that Statute, pray do?

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire none if it be not so.

L. C. J. Holt. I have heard a Discourse concerning such a Statute, but I could never find it.

L. Preston. I suppose my Solicitor is here with it, there is such a Statute my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Court over ruled it in the Case of Sir H. Vane.

L. C. J. Holt. And so it was I remember in another Case, and in none of the Tryals that have been since King Charles the Second came in, was ever a Copy given that I know or heard of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, this Statute that my Lord Preston mentions, the 46 of Ed. 3. is printed at large in the Preface to my Lord Coke's 3d Report; and has been insisted upon in several Cases in the King's Bench, where the Prisoner has desired a Copy of his Indictment, but a Copy has been always denied, and this Statute has been taken to extend only to Records, which may be Evidence for the Subject.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. 'Twas always ruled that it did not extend to this matter.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, 'tis a misconstruction of that Statute that your Lordship thinks that it gives the Prisoner a Copy of his Indictment: For that Statute says that all Persons shall be free to make use of the Publick Records, and take Copies of them, because oftentimes the Records are Evidences of Mens Estates, and their Titles.

L. Preston. My Lord, an Indictment I suppose is a Record.

L. C. J. Holt. But not such a Record as is within the intent of that Statute.

L. Preston. My Lord, I am tender of taking up your Lordships time, but since all that is dear to me is at Stake, I desire to this point I may be heard by Council.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord, I am satisfied you have had Council with you, I have heard a great many. Does any one of them tell you that this has been done? If ever any one of them will come and shew us when it has been done, you say something, but I dare say none of them will or can. Mr. Jones there, is as like as any body, but I believe he will not say it ever was done.

L. Preston. My Lord, I cannot say my Council has told me so, but I have read such a Statute my self, for it stands me upon it, and I believe there is such a Statute, and it will be produced before your Lordships. If your Lordships will insist upon not allowing me a Copy, I desire I may be heard to it by my Council, for I take it to be a point of Law, with humble Submission to your Lordships.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we must not hear Council to debate plain points that have no manner of Question in them; It has been always disallowed, and 'tis a settled point at Law, and as plain as any whatsoever, that no Copy of an Indictment ought to be allowed to a Prisoner in Felony or Treason.

L. Preston. My Lord there is a Statute that says it shall be allowed to all Persons to have Copies of Records, as well for, as against the King, and certainly the Indictment is a Record, and a Record of great consequence to me at this time; and though my Council has not told me when it was done, yet those that I have advised with, do say that the Statute is express.

L. C. Baron. If any doubtful words be in such a Statute, yet the constant practice must expound it, and since it has been so often denied, nay always, the Law is now settled, that it is not within the meaning of that Statute.

L. C. J. Holt. We must go in the way of our Predecessors, we received the Law from them, and must not contradict the received practice of the Judges in all Ages, nor alter the determinations tions that have been made in all Cases of the like nature.

L. Preston. I hope your Lordships intend, and I don't question it, that my Tryal should be a legal Tryal; If there be such a Statute that gives me a Copy of the Indictment, and the Court deny it me, I am not legally tried.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. If you please to name the Statute my Lord, It shall be read to you, but you are mistaken if you think there is any thing in that Statute that will do your Lordship service in this point.

L. C. J. Holt. See the 46 of Ed. 3. Read it.

L. Preston. Here is a Copy of the Record in Court.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is not Printed, but it is mentioned in the Preface to my Lord Cokes third Report, and 'tis mentioned no where but there that I know of; but whether there were any such Statute or no Non constat, for it is not printed. But if it be a Statute it does not meddle with things of this nature, such as Indictments; for you must consider, my Lord, yours is not a Case different from all other Cases of like nature as to this; But it is the Case of all men that are Tried as you are to be. And if all people were to have Copies of their Indictments to make exceptions out of them before they plead; instead of days of Gaol delivery, the whole year would not be sufficient; but would be spent before they could be brought to their Tryal.

L. Preston. My Lord, I am to defend my self as I can by Law; and not to consider what other peoples Cases are. It is my particular Case now, what the Case may be as to any other hereafter, or what the general consequence may be is not to be considered, but if there be any thing that is legal that can give me an advantage in making my defence, I know your Lordships are too just to hinder me from taking advantage of it.

L. C. Baron. My Lord it is no new thing to demand it, it has been frequently demanded, but it has been always over ruled.

L. Preston. My Lord, it is now desired, and a reason is given you that perhaps was not given before; there is such a Law. My Lord Chief Justice says well it is not printed, but it is a Record, and there is a Copy of that Record in Court. I desir'd there should be; I am sure.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have a Copy of any Record of an Act of Parliament, it shall be read, if it be proved.

L. Preston. Nay we offer nothing if we don't prove it, but there is such a Record, and the Solicitor is ready to attest it. Pray swear Mr. Whitaker.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Swear him.

Cl. of Ar. You shall true answer make to all such questions as shall be demanded of you by the Court. So help you God. Is this a true Copy?

Mr. Whitaker. It is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Holt. Where did you examine it?

Mr. Whitaker. My Lord it is a true Copy of the Record, I examined it at Mr. Pettys Office in the Tower.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Upon what Number Roll is it?

Mr. Whitaker. There is the Number Roll and all upon the Book.

Clerk reads. Item pria les Commons que come recorde & queconque chose en la Court le Roy de raison devoient demurrer illecoques par perpetuel evidnee & aide de tous parties a yeell, & de tous ceux a queux en nul manner illi atteignent quant, mistier leur suit. Et ja de nouvel refusent en la Court nostre dit Seignior de serche ou evidence encounter le Roy en disadavantage de lui. Que please os deiner per Estatute que serche & Exemplification soit faitz as touz Gentz de quconque Recorde que les touche en ascun manner auxy bien de ce que chiet encounter le Roy come autres Gentz. Le Roy le voer.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is only Copies of Records that they shall have for Evidence.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston, your Lordship hears by this Record, you may as well pray that an exemplification be made of this Indictment as a Copy, for so the words of this Act run, it is only meant of those Records that were to be given in Evidence. But this Indictment that you would have a Copy of, is not now to be given in Evidence nor to be exemplified, and so it does not reach your Case.

L. Preston. My Lord, this Indictment is a Record, and a Record against me, and I think it is given in Evidence against me.

Mr. J. Eyres. No my Lord, it is no Evidence but an Accusation, it is no proof at all.

L. Preston. It is always sworn unto.

Mr. J. Eyres. The Witnesses are Sworn that Testifie the matter of it to the Grand Jury, but the Indictment it self is no Evidence.

L. C. J. Holt. Suppose a Statute be doubtful, as truly I do not take this to be, we are to expound the Statute as it has been expounded in all Ages: It was never thought by any Judges in any Reign, that this Statute did entitle a Prisoner to have a Copy of his Indictment, but always held the contrary.

L. Preston. Will your Lordship be pleased then to allow me Council to be heard to it?

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, not Council in a plain Case: If the Court apprehend there is any Matter that may be debateable, or whereupon a Doubt may be made, we may assign Council, and shall; but never in a plain Case, where there is no manner of Question.

L. Preston. My Lord, here is a Doubt in this Case.

L. C. Baron. But, my Lord, it's not the Doubt of the Prisoner, but the Doubt of the Court that will occasion the assigning Council.

L. Preston. But the Prisoner may offer his Doubt to the Court, and your Lordships are so just, that you will take care that the Doubt may be legally resolved.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, it is our Duty to see Justice and Right done, and God willing, it shall be.

L. Preston. And I am bound in Duty to my self in such a Case to insist upon all Advantages I can have by Law.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, no Body blames you, though your Lordship do urge things that are unnecessary, or improper; and we shall take care that it shall not tend to your Lordships prejudice. We consider the Condition you are in; you stand at the Bar for your Life; you shall have all the fair and just Dealings that can be; and the Court, as in Duty bound, will see that you have no Wrong done you.

L. C. J. Pollexfen My Lord Preston, for this thing that you now mention, in all Ages, in all our Books, it is the same thing, and has been in all Mens Cases that have been for their Lives, denied; and this Statute that you bring is quire of another intent: For it is said, the Records shall remain in Court for perpetual Evidence, and the Aiding of all Persons to whom they shall belong. My Lord, this is none of your Case; for God knows, you expect no Aid from this Indictment: But this is meant of all Copies that concern the Estates of Men, that they may have recourse to their Records to make out their Evidences to their Estates, or to have them Exemplified under the Seal of the Court for Evidence: But to have a Copy of an Indictment, thereby to be enabled to consult with Council, how to make Exceptions to that Indictment, is a thing that has been denied in all Ages by all the Judges that ever were. If any one can say to the contrary, it were something; but shall we now admit Council to debate a thing that has been in all Ages denied, and never admitted so much as once? That cannot be expected from us.

L. Preston. The Act says, That it shall be all Records that shall be in Aid to any Person that shall desire it. Here is no distinction made of what kind the Records are to be: If it be for the Aid of any Person, it ought to be granted, and I may be aided by this Record, if I have a Copy of it; and I think it is hard, when I am so much concerned in this Record, that I cannot be helped to it by this Law.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Constant Experience has gone according to what we say.

L. Preston. If that be Law, and it has not been demanded, then they are not entituled to have the benefit of it: But now I demand it, sure it is good Law.

L. C. J. Holt. It is no question a good Law, but not applicable to your Lordship's Case: I suppose we are all of the same Opinion; if any think otherwise, I desire they would speak.

L. Preston. My Lord, I submit to the Court, but then I desire one Thing, you know my Life, my Fortune, my Reputation, my Posterity, and all are at Stake, and all that is Dear to me must fall with me if I miscarry. Therefore I take leave to represent, That I have had very short Notice of my Tryal, I assure you I have not had above 6 or 7 days Notice, I hope you will not refuse me a little longer time before I come to my Tryal, and I have had no Copy of the Jury yet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If my Lord please to Plead to the Indictment, that will be time enough to move afterwards, and till Issue is joyn'd, it cannot properly be moved for.

L. C. J. Holt. It is not proper to desire time yet, till you have put your self upon your Tryal by Pleading to the Indictment.

L. Preston. It was granted in Colonel Sidney's Case, he had 8 or 10 days granted him after he had Plead'd; and in the Act for the Reversal of Mr. Cornish's Attainder, it is given as one Cause for the Reversal, that he had not time to prepare for his Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, 7 days is very fair Notice, your Lordship knew when the Sessions would be, and your Lordship might reasonably expect, that you should be Tryed here, I think truly you have had very fair Notice.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, we have had 7 days Notice of our Tryal 'tis true, this day Seven night at Night we had Notice we were to be Tryed as this day, but 3 days of the 7 we had not the Liberty of seeing any Friend or Council, or any Body, not till Tuesday Night, and that we got with great Application, and great Charge to get an Order for Council to come to us, so that though we have had 7 days Notice, yet we have had but 3 days in all to consult with any Body, and we never have had a Copy of our Jury till this Minute.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. We see the Nature of the Thing, and I am sorry that I must say it is fit that we should take notice of it, perhaps the thing that you are accused of is not true; but if it be true, you see what it is, that there are Letters and Papers preparing for a Design to set all the Kingdom in Confusion: Men that will venture upon such sort of Things are not to Condemn the Law if it be a little hard upon them, for 'tis the common Preservation that is principally aimed at in Prosecutions of this Nature; and if this Accusation be true, 'tis but Just and Reasonable, that all speed should be used to enquire into and prevent it, and as it falls out in this Case, it is not in our Power to do it. This Sessions is set before this Business is known, and this is an Act done in this County, and therefore the Sessions is the proper place for the Tryal, and so you have the same sort of Proceedings that all other Criminals have, which are very many, though I hope not many of so high a Nature, 7 days Notice you have had you acknowledge; if my Lords please we will Indulge you as far as we can, and give you time for your Tryal till to-morrow, but you must Plead presently,

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we debate the time of your Tryal too early, for you must put your self upon your Tryal first, by Pleading.

L. Preston. My Lord, I hope I shall always carry my self as becomes me towards the Court, but I do not really think, you have any Tryals that are of so great Concernment, and this sure is a fit time for me to offer it, for it may be, I have a great many Witnesses in the Country, and at a distance from this place and one another.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we cannot dispute with you concerning your Tryal, till you have Plead'd, I know not what you will say to it, for ought I know there may be no occasion for a Tryal. I cannot tell what you will Plead, your Lordship must Answer to the Indictment before we can enter into the Debate of this matter.

L. Preston. Will your Lordship give me leave to move it afterwards?

L. C. J. Holt. You may offer any thing then concerning your Tryal, if you can shew any Reason to defer it, it will be proper to do it then.

L. Preston. Truly, my Lord, I think one Reason why my Tryal ought to be put off, is, Because I have Privilege of excepting against so many of my Jury, but if I have not time to look into the Pannel I shall lose that Privilege.

L. C. J. Holt. We are not to come to that yet, you are to Plead now.

L. Preston. Then your Lordships are pleased to over-rule my Claim of Peerage.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we are of Opinion you ought to Plead to this Indictment.

C. of Ar. What says your Lordship, Are you Guilty of this High Treason, or not Guilty.

Lord

L. Preston. Not Guilty.

Cl. of A. Culprit. How wilt thou be Try'd?

L. Preston. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God send you a good Deliverance.

John Ashton, What sayst thou? Art thou Guilty of the same High Treason, or not Guilty?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I have only this to observe, besides what my Lord Preston has offered, as to the Business of the Act of Parliament, your Lordships have been pleased to over-Rule that Plea; But, my Lord, I am told, That if an Indictment be faulty, but even in a Letter, we cannot be found Guilty upon that Indictment. Now, if we never have a Copy of that Indictment, how shall we know whether there be any such Fault in it? Your Lordships, who are our Council, I suppose have never seen the Indictment, and suppose there be Twenty Faults, we have not the advantage of them, by not having a Copy, and how shall we come to have any Advantage, if neither your Lordships, who are our Council, nor we our Selves can see them. It may turn upon that.

L. C. J. Holt. But we will see it when you come upon your Tryal.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That is a Mis-Information, for it may be such a Letter as is not Material, and it may be such as is Material; as, suppose, your Name being Ashton, the A should be left out, it would then be a Question, What there would be to Charge you.

Mr. Ashton. We know that it has been so in several Instances.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It may be such an Omission that may make it no Crime, but we must not presently conclude that it is so, but you have heard it Read, and so have we; if there had been any such Letter mistaken, it would have been taken Notice of.

Mr. Ashton. As to the Reading, there may in the Reading of the Indictment be many Words not nicely observed; I suppose the Indictment be Right, I say it is possible, it may, or it may not; but if your Lordships never see it, who are our Council by Law, nor you will allow us Council to look into it; if there be Forty Faults in it, we can have no advantage of it.

L. C. J. Holt. We must not allow you Council to pick holes in the Indictment; that never was done. If you assign any Reason, we may assign you Council to debate any matter of Law that may arise, but never was Council allowed to find out Faults in an Indictment, when you come to your Tryal we shall try you upon your Indictment, and if there be any thing considerable, you are to suppose we shall observe it for your advantage.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, We never had a Copy of the Pannel of our Jury, I pray we may have it.

L. C. J. Holt. That you cannot have till you have Pleaded.

L. C. Baron. Mr. Ashton, We have over-ruled my Lord Preston about a Copy of the Indictment, Do you think we shall Grant it you when we have denied it him?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I desire we may have a Copy of the Pannel.

L. C. J. Holt. You must Plead first.

C. of A. Are you Guilty of the High Treason, or not Guilty?

Mr. Ashton. Not Guilty.

C. of A. How will you be Tried.

Mr. Ashton. By God and my Country.

Vol. III.

C. of A. God send you a good Deliverance.

Edmund Elliot, How say you? Are you Guilty of the same High Treason, or not Guilty?

Mr. Elliot. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. How will you be tried?

Mr. Elliot. By God and the Country.

C. of A. God send you a good Deliverance.

L. Preston. My Lord, I hope now it may be time to pray that my Tryal may be deferred.

L. C. J. Holt. Why would you have it deferred?

L. Preston. Because of the distance of my Witnesses, and other Things that would be necessary for me to have to prepare me for my Defence; and besides, we have not had a Copy of the Pannel of our Jury, and the Reason of the Law does Order, that because it gives us liberty to except against them, and that we cannot know how to do, unless we inform our selves of the Men; and therefore I beg, that I may have a Copy of the Pannel.

L. C. J. Holt. As for having a Copy of the Pannel, the Court grants it. Let them have a Copy of the Pannel.

C. of A. Here is one ready for you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There was Direction given that there should be one ready.

Mr. Ashton. We have demanded it every day since we had notice of our Tryal.

L. C. Baron. You could not have it till there was an Issue joyned, and that could not be till you had Pleaded.

L. C. J. Holt. And as to the putting off your Tryal, I know not to what time to put it off.

L. Preston. My Lord I am willing to have this matter Tried as soon as possible, for it cannot but be uneasy to me to lie under these Accusations; but some of my Witnesses live in the Country, at a remote distance; if it may be next Term my Lord, or the next Sessions; for, if I have a Copy of the Pannel to Night, and am to be Tried to morrow Morning, How can I provide for my Defence? I cannot be prepared to except against the Jury, and I am sure you will be tender, and consider the Case of a Man, whose Life and Fortune are concerned in this Business.

L. C. J. Holt. To put it off till the next Term is to remove it out of this Court, that we cannot do, and to put it off till after the Term will be too long a time.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. We cannot sit here after Monday, because the Term begins on Tuesday.

L. Preston. My Lord, this Term is always a short Term, and if I be Tried to morrow, it is Trying me without giving me time for my Defence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, there has been all the care taken that the Nature of the Thing was capable of, to prevent any complaint of this kind. Order was given, that my Lord and these Gentlemen should have notice as early as was possible. As soon as ever Mr. Attorney General had had an opportunity of looking into the Evidence, notice was given them, that they should be Tried, and that this was the day appointed for their Tryal. But there shall be no contending in a Matter of this Nature, for a day. If it be desired, and the Court please to put it off till to morrow, we are contented, but there can be no reason to put it off for a longer time. As there is always a tenderness to be used, and I know will be, and as far as I am concerned, always shall be towards Persons in these Circumstances, so there is a regard to be had towards the Government and the Publick. I am sure if the Accusation that is against these Gentlemen is true, the Government is highly concerned that this Matter should come to a speedy Examination, and that Persons that enter into such Designs be brought to Judgment: The Charge in the Indictment is of such a Nature as draws very great Consequences along with it, it concerns no less than the Life of the King and Queen, the Destruction of the Fleet of the Kingdom, and the Invasion of the Realm by the Forces of a Declared Enemy. These are the things that the Prisoners are charged with, and certainly there ought to be no delay in the searching into such Matters as these. They have had a Weeks notice of Tryal already, and for many days of that week at least they have had as many Council to assist them as they desired, and all the Solicitors that they had a mind to, have had free access to them, so that they have wanted no opportunity to prepare for their Tryal that Men in their Circumstances could have: As to what has been said with relation to the Jury, the Law indulges them in the Number of their peremptory Challenges without being put to shew Cause, and the Court hath granted them at the very instant of their Pleading a Copy of the Pannel, and there is a reasonable time between this and to morrow for their making such Enquiry into the Jury as is justifiable and fit to be made. But if by time to look into the Jury, it be meant, that there may be a time for tampering, that I am sure your tenderness of the Government will not permit, you will take care as much that no such thing be done, as you will, that they should not be surprized. If your Lordships are pleased, that the Tryal be put off till to morrow, we will be ready to morrow to attend it.
S f f f f and

L. Preston. My Lord, 'tis a very hard presumption that Mr. Solicitor makes of our asking a Copy of the Pannel, that it is with a design to tamper with the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I did not say so, but I said till to morrow was time enough to make a Justifiable Enquiry.

L. Preston. But if I be to be tryed to morrow, I am willing to be tryed to day, for I am as ready now as I shall be then.

L. C. J. Holt. It may be so, and as ready as you will be after the Term: But I know not what your Lordship means by expressing such resentment, that because you can't have what time allowed you would, therefore you will have none, but be tryed now.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. You may have time enough to prepare your self as to the Jury certainly between this and to morrow.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord, we that are for the King have given these Gentlemen notice long enough to be prepared, if we should try them now, for that's the time we gave notice for, but because we would indulge them as far as we could, we are willing that they should have till to morrow, and intending them that kindness, are not ready to try them to day, and there can be no pretence for them to put off their Tryal any longer, for there can be no want of Evidence as to the Fact we charge them with, for all the Evidence that we shall bring against them was taken from themselves, or the greatest part of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what time will you be ready then?

Mr. Serj. Thompson. To morrow morning.

L. C. J. Holt. Then to morrow at Eight a Clock you are to be tryed.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Preston, do but consider you have had seven days notice, and to morrow makes eight.

L. C. J. Holt. You had notice for this day this day sevennight.

Mr. Ashton. But we have had only three days time to consult with our Council, though we desired we might have our Council come to us that day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They were told, they must apply themselves to the King for that at the same time.

Mr. Ashton. We did so that night to my Lord Sidney, then Sunday interven'd, which was no day for Business, and we could not have our Order. On Monday we could not have it till night; so that it was Tuesday before we could get any Body to us. My Lord it is a weighty concern; and all such hasty Proceedings were thought very hard in the late Times, and particularly the denying Mr. Cornish time, and 'tis one of the Reasons given in this Kings Declaration for his coming here into England, the hardships that the Law laid upon Men in their Tryals, which he came to prevent.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The hardship that was upon Mr. Cornish was, that he was taken upon the Tuesday off from the Exchange, and tryed before that day sevennight, and that was hard indeed; but besides, he was taken about his Business off from the Exchange, I know not whether you were about your Business, your Lawful Business, when you were taken, God of Heaven knows that. And pray consider here is a matter of very great consequence on the one side and on the other: For if Men be Plotting against the Government, to give them time to carry on their Plots will be mischievous on that side.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, till that be legally proved before your Lordships, that is but a supposition.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That will lie upon them to prove.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Ashton, we are to suppose you not Guilty, till you are proved Guilty.

Mr. Ashton. Then my Lord, the Law says we may except against so many Persons, what is the end of the giving us a Copy of the Pannel? 'tis not to be presumed we can do it by their Faces, for what can I say to the Face of one I never saw? We must enquire concerning the Men, and that is a work of time, for some of these Gentlemen I presume live eight or ten miles out of Town, Is it possible for me before to morrow morning eight a Clock to send to 35 Men to enquire after them?

L. C. J. Holt. No, nor is it intended you should.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Nay, if you intend to send to the Jury-Men, we have no reason to give you time.

Mr. Ashton. I mean to enquire after the Men, their Lives, what Religion they are of, what sort of Men they are.

L. C. J. Holt. I suppose they are all Protestants of the Church of England, but suppose they are all Strangers to you, and yet good and lawful lawful Men of the County, and there be no difference between you and them, then they are fit to try you.

Mr. Ashton. 'Tis true my Lord, but if I have liberty to except against 35, I ought to know something of them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Yes, and inform your self as well as you can of them, but not to send to them, that is not to be permitted.

L. Preston. There is another Point to enquire of them, and that is, Whether they be Freeholders or not?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. We have neither your Lordships Affidavit, nor the Oath of any other Person, only an Allegation.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you must expect your Tryal to Morrow Morning, we cannot put it off, we are limited in time, the Sessions can hold no longer than Monday, because of the Term.

Mr. Ashton. Then will your Lordship please to put it off till Monday?

L. C. J. Holt. No, we shall not have time to do it, it may be a long Tryal.

L. Preston. I protest to your Lordships I cannot be ready to Morrow to make that Defence I desire, and design to make, and which I may make if your Lordships give me a longer day.

Clerk of Arraignments. Here is a Copy of the Pannel for your Lordship.

It was delivered to the Lord Preston, who gave it to his Solicitor.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, we shall not have time to enquire into the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, we are not bound to do this, but you have it as soon as you have Pleaded.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, it will take up 5 or 6 Hours in writing of it out, and we must each have a Copy.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They are all joyned in one Indictment, and have joynt-Council, and joynt-Solicitors, as we are informed.

Mr. Ashton. Then I hope you will allow us liberty till Monday for our Tryal.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Court cannot allow longer time; the Court here can sit no longer than Monday, and here must needs be a great deal of Business to do of the ordinary Business of the Sessions, and when that day comes, perhaps it will not serve to go through with the Tryal, and then it must be Adjourned till after the Term, and in the mean while some are in hopes the King of France may come and determine the Matter.

Mr. Ashton. Pray my Lord, Let no Suggestion against us, prepossess the Opinion of the Court before we be Tried.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I don't Suggest any thing, but 'tis in the Indictment alleadged against you, and that you are to be Tried upon, and if such things be there Suggested, as we would give you all reasonable time for your Defence, so we must take care that the Government sustain no hurt by delays.

L. C. J. Holt. It is observed by the King's Council, that they are Things of very great Consequence, and therefore they press for the Tryal.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I cannot believe but that you will be as ready to Morrow, as you can be on Monday.

Mr. Ashton. The Government cannot be prejudiced by putting of it off till Monday, sure.

Vol. III.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Evidence that is to Convict you, lies all on their Side that are for the King, and I cannot imagine, where your Witnesses should be, unless they are in France; but you had reason to expect your Tryal, being apprehended in the manner as you were, and to provide for it.

L. C. J. Holt. The want of Witnesses is only a Surmise, and a Pretence, for there is no Oath of any Witnesses that they want, or who they are; indeed if we had Oath made that they wanted material Witnesses, and to material Points for their Defence, that might be occasion for our further Consideration; but shall we put off a Tryal upon a bare suggestion of the want of Witnesses? sure that was never done.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Name any one particular Man that is your Witness, and the particular thing that he can prove, for if any of your Witnesses do know any thing of this kind, it must be Particulars and not Generals; If you will not name them, it is plain, it is only a pretence you insist upon for delay.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I insist upon the point of the Jury, that we have not time to look after them.

L. C. J. Holt. Then that of the Witnesses is waved.

L. Preston. 'Twas I that desired Time for my Witnesses.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But you neither name them, nor bring us any Oath about them, or of any thing they can prove for you.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray don't spend the time of the Court, nor your own time unnecessarily, you must prepare for your Tryal to Morrow.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, there is not a person in Court, I believe, but will think it hard that we are so straitned in time.

L. C. J. Holt. The time you have had notice to prepare for your Tryal, is sufficient.

Mr. Ashton. Mr. Cornish's Case has been complained of as a very hard Case in this very respect, and we would hope, the King, that now is, came to reform such abuses.

L. C. J. Holt. You have been already told, wherein the hardship of that Case lay, I am sure yours is not like it; but take notice, we will be Sitting here punctually at Eight.

L. Preston. Will your Lordship please to let us have our Council come to us, and our Friends.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes sure, you shall have all that is necessary for your Defence, that we can allow you, but unnecessary Delays must be avoided.

Then the Prisoners were taken away by the Keeper of Newgate to the Goal.

Sabbati xvii. January 1690.

THIS Day between the Hours of Eight and Nine in the Morning, the Court being sat, and those Persons who were return'd upon the Jury were called over twice, and their Appearances Recorded; then the Prisoners were brought to the Bar.

Clerk of Arraignments. You the Prisoners at the Bar, these Men that you shall hear called and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord and Lady our King and Queen, and you upon tryal of your several Lives and Deaths; if therefore you, or any of you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they be Sworn.

Challenge

L. Preston. My Lord, I beg your Lordship will inform me, whether if I have any thing to offer to the Court, it is proper before the Jury be impannelled, or after.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I don't know what your Lordship has to offer, I think you have nothing to offer why the Jury should not be sworn, for now your Lordship has put your self upon your Tryal, and are going to proceed in that Tryal, and the Jury are going to be sworn; if you have any thing to offer, as to them, you may challenge them.

L. Preston. Truly my Lord, I have something to offer, but it is only what I did humbly offer Yesterday, and that is, That my warning was so short, that I am not prepared for my Tryal. We had not above three or four days wherein we might consult about it, all the former time we have been kept close Prisoners; we are now brought here to be tryed, without having time to look into the Pannel of our Jury. The Pannel we had not till Yesterday, and I humbly beg, that I may have some time to prepare for my Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, this is that which you insisted upon Yesterday. Your Lordship said you wanted Witnesses, and your Lordship did not then mention what Witnesses you wanted, nor was any Oath made of any one that you wanted; and therefore the Court over-ruled you, and wished you to prepare for your Tryal, and would not put it off: For if it should not be to Day, but should be put off till another time, it must be the putting of it off till another Sessions; for we are streightned with it in point of time, for the Session can last no longer than Monday, and you have had convenient Notice.

L. Preston. Truly, my Lord, I think it is hard when my Life and Fortune, and all are concerned, that I should be hurried on to a Tryal, only because the Court is streightned in point of time; and yet that is the only Reason that I can perceive, why such haste is made. I desire a little more time to prepare my self; and I think it very hard I should be denied; I must submit it to your Lordships: if you will not allow me time, I cannot make my Defence as I would.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, as to the Shortness of the time, that is no Objection; you have had convenient Notice, as much Notice as the Law requires, and as much time as without particular cause shewn, hath here at any time been given in such a Case. If indeed there had been any particular Reason offered for putting off the Tryal, and you had made it appear by Oath, the Court possibly might have put off the Tryal; but because your Lordship only suggested you wanted a Witness, naming neither Person, nor Place, or Matter such Witness should prove, they are of Opinion no cause appears for such delay of your Tryal.

L. Preston. My Lord, I assure you I am not prepared for my Tryal.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, the Court over-ruled this Matter Yesterday, it cannot be put off.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I would humbly offer your Lordship one thing before the Jury be called and sworn. By the Law, these Gentlemen at the Bar have the Privilege to challenge peremptorily to the Number of 35; which is so great a Number, that if each of them severally take advantage of it, (as they may do by Law, and God forbid they should be denied any advantage the Law gives them) it will be next to impossible to have a sufficient Number of Jurors appear so as that we may proceed in the Tryal.

L. Preston. Truly, my Lord, we don't hear what Mr. Solicitor says.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you not? Then I'll tell you what he says when he has done: Go on, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, all that I would know of them is, Whether they intend to take the Advantage that the Law gives them, of single and particular Challenges; for then they must be tried severally: Or whether they will be content that the same Persons that are challenged by any one, shall stand challenged for all three. I leave it to them to take their own choice; let them do what they please in it.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston, Mr. Solicitor tells you what the Law is, that every one of you may challenge five and thirty without Cause; and if the Court should proceed to try you all together, and every one of you should challenge five and thirty, perhaps a sufficient Number will be wanting to try you, the Number challenged will then amount to 105 in all. If so be you agree in your Challenges, that what one challenges shall be challenged by the other two, then the Court will go on, and try you all together, otherwise they will be forced to sever you; therefore he desires to know, whether you will joyn or sever in your Challenges.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Take your own choice, Gentlemen, and do what you think best.

L. Preston. My Lord, the matter of challenging is so great an Advantage to a Man upon his Life, that for my part I must insist upon that which the Law gives me, to challenge as many for my self as I think fit, to the Number that the Law allows me.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston says, he will, as 'tis fit he should, take all Advantages he can; What says Mr. Ashton to it?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I expect the same Advantage.

L. C. J. Holt. You must have it; it is not proposed to preclude you from any Advantage that the Law allows you: If you insist upon that Advantage, you must have it, and then you must be tried severally.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then my Lord, since they are pleased to declare they will sever in their Challenges, we must desire to sever them in their Tryal, and to begin with the Tryal of my Lord Preston.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I desire the Liberty to be by when my Lord is tried.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no, that is not to be permitted.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. If you had joyned in your Challenges, then you had been tried all together.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That advantage you lose by severing in your Challenges; you lose the Assistance of each other at your Tryal.

L. C. J. Holt. That is the Consequence; but do as you please; set them by.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It may be they do not so well weigh the Consequence, therefore call them them again. Gentlemen, Do you consider the Consequence of your not joyning in your Challenges? You must not be by if my Lord Preston be tried by himself, but must withdraw, and thereby you will lose the Advantage of helping one another.

Mr. Elliot. My Lord, I desire to be tried alone.

Mr. Ashton. And so do I, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then, Captain Richardson, take them away.

Afterwards the Court was informed that Mr. Elliot desired to be tryed with my Lord Preston, and thereupon they were called again.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen, Do you desire to be tried alone, or with my Lord Preston?

Mr. Elliot. My Lord, if you please, I desire to be tried with my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Does Mr. Ashton desire it too?

Mr. Ashton. No, my Lord, I desire to be tried by my self.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will try my Lord Preston by himself.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Elliot, the King's Council do not think fit to try you with my Lord Preston, without Mr. Ashton; and unless you will all join, you must all be tried severally.

Mr. Elliot. I can only answer for my self.

Mr. Ashton. I am for being tried alone.

L. C. J. Holt. Then my Lord Preston must be tried alone.

The other two were carried back to Newgate, and the Lord Preston was bid by the Clerk to look to his Challenges.

Cl. of Ar. Sir Goddard Nelthorpe, Baronet. Challenged.

Sir Thomas Cooke, Knt. Challenged.

Sir William Hedges, Knt. Challenged.

James Boddington, Esq; Challenged.

Thomas Johnson, Esq; Challenged.

Ralph Bucknall, Esq; Challenged.

L. Preston. I do not challenge him. Sworn.

Cl. of Ar. Henry Whitcheot, Esq; Challenged.

John Crosse, Esq; Not appeared.

Thomas Smith, Esq; Challenged.

William Withers, Esq; Challenged.

Richard Cradock, Esq;

Mr. Cradock. My Lord, I know not how I came to be summoned upon this Jury; for I am no Freeholder.

L. C. J. Holt. Then set him aside.

Cl. of Ar. John Cane, Esq; Challenged.

William Jacomb, Esq;

Mr. Jacomb. My Lord, I am no Freeholder.

L. C. J. Holt. How long have you not been a Freeholder?

Mr. Jacomb. Near this four Months.

L. C. J. Holt. Give him his Oath. (Which was done.)

Have you no Freehold in the County of Middlesex in your own Right, nor in the Right of your Wife?

Mr. Jacomb. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you must go on to the next.

Cl. of Ar. Joseph Dawson, Esq;

Mr. Dawson. My Lord, I am an ancient Man, and not fit to serve upon the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, now you are here, for this time serve; we will excuse you hereafter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we challenge him for the King.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire to know when any one is challenged for the King, whether they must not shew cause.

L. C. J. Holt. By and by, if there be not enough, they shall shew cause.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. You shall have all that the Law allows you certainly, my Lord.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Austin, Esq; Not appeared.

Richard Paget, Esq;

L. Preston. Has this Gentleman any Freehold?

Mr. Paget. Yes, my Lord, I have in the County of Middlesex.

L. Preston. I do not except against him.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, we challenge him for the King.

L. Preston. My Lord, I humbly desire they may shew their cause.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, Cause is not to be shewn by the King's Council till all the Pannel be gone through; and then, if there be not Twelve left to try, then they are bound to shew Cause; that is the Law.

L. Preston. My Lord, it is a thing of a very tender concern to me; I desire to know, if it be not usual that they should assign the Cause, when they Challenge any for the King: For if it be not according to Law, it may be a prejudice to me; and I desire I may have Council heard to that point.

L. J. C. Holt. My Lord, shall we assign Council to dispute Matters not disputable? There is not any more clear Case in all our Law, than that: If your Lordship please, you shall have a Book to read, that the King is not bound to shew Cause till the Pannel is perus'd.

L. Preston. Then I don't insist upon it.

Cl. of Ar. Walter Bridal, Esq; Challenged.

Samuel Hodgkins, Esq; Challenged.

Thomas Elton, Esq;

L. Preston. I do not challenge him.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we challenge him for the King.

Cl. of Ar. Arthur Bayly, Esq;

L. Preston. I have nothing to say against him. Sworn.

Cl. of Ar. John Milner, Esq; Not appeared.

Richard Page, Esq;

L. Preston. I do not except against him.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then we challenge him for the King.

Cl. of Ar. Richard Marsh, Esq;

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, I desire to be excused; I am not fit to serve upon a Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Why?

Mr. Marsh. I am thick of hearing.

L. C. J. Holt. Methinks you hear me very well.

Mr. Marsh. Truly, my Lord, I do not hear well.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, you may spare him, if there be enough.

L. Preston. My Lord, I do not challenge him; I desire he may be sworn.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. We challenge him for the King.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Harriot Esq; Challenged.

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made, as usual.

Cl. of Ar. Sir Richard Grahme, Hold up your Hand — (which he did) — Gentlemen, you that are Sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands Indicted by the Name of Sir Richard Grahme, late of the Parish of St Anne within the Liberty of Westminster Baronet, together with John Ashton, &c. — prout in the Indictment mutatis mutandis — and against the form of the Statute in that Case made and provided; upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to enquire, whether he be Guilty of this Felony and High Treason whereof he stands Indicted, or Not Guilty; if you find that he is Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the time of the Felony and High Treason Committed, or at any time since: If you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it, if you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty; If you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Knapp. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Indictment of High Treason against my Lord Preston, who is Indicted by the Name of Sir Richard Grahme Baronet, and stands now Prisoner before you at the Bar; and the Indictment sets forth, that the Prisoner, together with one John Ashton and Edmund Elliot, as false Traitors against our Sovereign Lord and Lady King William and Queen Mary, not weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, the 29th of December, in the Second year of their now Majesties Reign, at the Parish of St Clement Danes, in this County of Middlesex, did Conspire, Consult and Imagine to Depose their Majesties from the Throne and Government of these Kingdoms, and to bring the King and Queen to final Death and Destruction, and to Levy War within this Kingdom, and procure an Invasion to be made here; and that to bring their Treasons to pass, they did prepare and compose, and cause to be prepared and composed divers Treasonable Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in Writing, which were to inform the French King and his Subjects, and other Enemies of the King and Queen, of the Number, Force and Condition of their Majesties Ships, and how some of them were Mann'd, and the Names of several of the Commanders of them, and how the Castles and Forts of Portsmouth, South-Sea and Gosport within this Kingdom were fortified, and how they might be Seized and Surprized by the King's Enemies; as also to inform them of the time, places, ways and means how they might invade this Kingdom, Depose their Majesties, and Fight with their their Ships against their Majesties Ships, and cause and procure great Forces to be raised against the King and Queen, and send Ships to plague the City of London, and War and Rebellion within the Kingdom to procure; and that they did knowingly and secretly prepare and conceal two several Bills of Exchange for the payment of Money to the King's Enemies, and got these Bills of Exchange, Letters, Notes and Memorandums into their Custody; and afterwards, the 30th of December, for the Sum of One Hundred Pounds, by them, or some of them paid, they did hire a Ship to carry them and the said Bills of Exchange, Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions, into parts beyond the Seas, to, and among their Majesties Enemies; and did also prepare a Boat, which was to carry them to the Ship, and accordingly they went into the Boat, and went on Board the Ship with the Bills of Exchange, and Papers aforesaid, and being on Board they set Sail, and made away towards France with those Bills of Exchange and Papers, with intention to disperse them, and to perfect their said Treasons. And the Indictment further sets forth, that there was, and is a War between our King and Queen, and the French King, and the People of those parts, under his Dominions, who are Enemies of the King and Queen; the Prisoner, together with those other two named before, as false Traitors, did adhere to the Enemies of the King and Queen, and to bring about this Treason, they did procure such Bills of Exchange, Letters, Notes, Memorandums and Instructions, and did hire such Ship and Boat to carry them and those Papers into France, and did go on board the said Ship, and Sailed away for France, with intention to aid and assist the King's Enemies in Counsel and Intelligence, by those Papers, and Bills of Exchange, as I before opened unto you, and this is laid to be against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of their Majesties, their Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. To this Indictment, Gentlemen, the Prisoner Pleaded he is Not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himself upon his Country, which you are; if we prove him Guilty, it is your Duty to find him so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury, the Indictment hath been opened to you at large, and I do not doubt but you have observed it: It consists of two Parts, which are formed upon two several Branches of the Statute of the 25th of Edward 3. the one is for compassing and imagining the Deposing and Destruction of the King and Queen; the other, aiding and assisting the King and Queens' Enemies.

Treason, Gentlemen, consists in the imagination of the Heart, but because that imagination of the Heart can be discovered no other way but by some open Act; therefore the Law doth require, that some Overt Act, manifesting that Intention and Imagination, be assigned and proved. I doubt not but you have observed that there are several Overt-Acts of both these kinds of Treason, assigned in this Indictment.

Gentlemen, the general Design of the Conspiracy (as will appear by the Evidence) was this: The King and Queen were to be Deposed, and this was to be effected by a French Army and a French Fleet.

It will be easily Granted, that nothing more dreadful can enter into the Imagination of an English-man, than the destruction of our Fleet, and the Conquest of the Kingdom by the Arms of France.

But yet it will be part of the Evidence that we shall offer to you, that the Prisoners, and others of the Conspirators seem to be of another Mind, for amongst the Papers which were taken with the Prisoners, you will see one, which is styled, The Result of a Conference, wherein they pretend to shew the possibility of Restoring King James by the Power of the French King, and yet to preserve the Protestant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom. They themselves went no farther than to think it possible, and I believe it will be hard to persuade any other English-man, that it is possible, unless one Instance could be given, that the French King ever employed his Arms for setting up any Body but himself, his own Religion, and his own Government. I never heard that he did pretend to Form any part of his Glories upon the virtue of Moderation, or Self-denial. And there can hardly be imagined a greater Instance of Self-denial, than for the French King, after he had destroyed the Dutch and English Fleets, and subdu'd our Forces at Land, not to make use of his Success, so as to add these Three Kingdoms to his Conquests, and possess himself of the uncontested Dominion of the Sea for ever, but only to Intitle him at so great Hazard and Expence, to become a Mediator between King James and the People of England, and by his Mediation, to establish the Protestant Religion, and the Liberties of the People; And yet as absurd as this seems, you will find this to be the Result of one of their Conferences. I did never think it was the part of any who were of Council for the King in cases of this Nature, to endeavour to aggravate the Crime of the Prisoners, by going about to put false Colours upon Evidence, or to give it more than its due weight; and therefore I shall be sure to forbear any thing of that Nature. But I think it my Duty to give some short Account of the Nature and Course of the Evidence to be produced to you, which consisting of several sorts, it will be in some sort necessary to open it, that you may the more clearly apprehend it, and with more ease make your Observations upon it.

Gentlemen, we shall produce in Evidence, as well living Witnesses, as Papers and Writings, which by a strange kind of Providence were taken upon my Lord Preston, and the other two Persons named in the Indictment when they were Apprehended; and therein this Design that I have opened to you, will be made Evident beyond all contraction.

As to the living Witnesses, the course of the Evidence will be this. One Nicholas Pratt is the Owner of a Smack, called the Thomas and Elizabeth, he does usually entrust his Wife Jane Pratt with the Hiring out of this Smack; William Paceley is Master of the Vessel, and has of late been made a Part-owner, to protect him from being Press'd; for it is a Priviledge that the Owners of Vessels claim, not to be Press'd.

Some time since, (the Witnesses will tell you the precise time) this Jane Pratt was sent for to one Mr. Burdett's House in the City, where she met with Mr. Ashton, who desired to know, whether she could undertake to Convey him and some others, with safety into France. She said, she did not doubt but she could do so; and thereupon Mr. Ashton told her, That he and his Friends were Merchants and Traders, and that they should make great advantage, to the value of a Thousand Pounds at least, if they could be there quickly; their Discourse went no farther at that time, but Mrs Pratt was appointed by Mr. Ashton to bring the Master of the Vessel along with her, for he had a mind to Discourse himself with the Master, and they were to meet at the Wonder Tavern in Ludgate-street; and because there should be no mistake about the Meeting, Mr. Ashton gave the Woman a Note of Direction in Writing, ready to be produced.

Accordingly by the 29th of December, Mrs. Pratt and the Master came to the Wonder Tavern, where Mr. Ashton met with them, and there they treated of the Price to be given for the Hiring of this Vessel to carry them to France, and I think 150 Guineas was the Sum then insisted upon, but no Bargain was made at this time, but there was a new Appointment to meet the next day, which was the 30th of December, at Mr. Burdett's House.

The next day when she and the Master came thither, they found there together Ashton and Ellyot, the two other Persons named in the Indictment, and there this Matter was treated of with great secrecie in Mrs Burdett's Bed-Chamber.

And they came to an Agreement, that 100 l. should be the Sum to be paid to Mrs Pratt for conveying into France, Ashton and Ellyot, and two other Persons; So the Contract was Originally made for others besides Mr Ashton and Elliot, and the Money was actually deposited by Mr Ashton and Ellyot in Mrs Burdett's Hand, and a Six-pence was broken, one half of which was delivered to Mrs Burdett to keep, the other half Mr. Ashton was to take along with him, and when the Master had safely landed them in France, Mr. Ashton was to deliver his half of the Six-pence to the Master; which being brought to Mrs Burdett either by him or Mrs Pratt, upon the joining of the two pieces together, the Master was entituled to receive the Hundred Pounds.

The next Appointment was to meet at one Mr. Rigby's House in Covent Garden, and that was to be on the One and thirtieth of December, when the Voyage was to be begun: And the Tide not serving to go through-Bridge till late, the appointment was to meet the later. When they, Mrs. Pratt, and the Master came there, they found only Mr Ashton and Mr Ellyot, but before that time care was taken to provide a Sculler at Surrey-Stairs to be ready to carry them on board the Smack, and the Waterman was appointed to stay in a little Ale-House thereabouts to be ready when he should be called.

About ten a Clock at Night four Persons came down together, and went into this Sculler with the Master of the Smack, and made what hast they could through-Bridge till they came to Pickle-berring Stairs over-against the Tower, where the Smack lay, and there went aboard the Master and these four Persons, my Lord Preston, a Servant of my Lord Preston's, Mr Ashton and Mr. Ellyot.

The Smack set sail immediately after they were on Board, and their hast made them carry away the Watermans Coat which he had lent them whilst they were in the Sculler, and that accident was the occasion of discovering who the Waterman was that carried them from Surrey-Stairs.

After they were on Board the Smack, they were possessed with great fear of being surpris'd, they knew the nature of the Business they were about, and the danger they were in if they should be discovered, and therefore when they were to pass by the George Frigate, a Man of War that lay in the River, they desired the Master to hide, which he did, by putting them under the Quarter-Hatches, a place where they could not stand or sit, but must lie along on the Ballast. When they were passed by the George Frigate they quitted that place, but when they were near the Block House at Graves, they grew apprehensive, and they desired to be hid a second time, which was accordingly done.

And they continued to lie in that place till they were taken, and it was a happy thing they did so, the place was such that they had not any possibility of throwing away their Letters and Papers, though they had made preparation for it in case of any Accident, having tied them together, and fix'd a piece of Lead to them, that so if they saw themselves in danger of being taken, they might easily sink the Pacquet; But being so close shut up in this place, that they could not execute their Purpose, the Papers were taken, and will be offered to you in Evidence.

Gentlemen, Captain Billop, by the Order of a noble Lord now present, was directed to use his utmost diligence to seize some dangerous Persons, of whose design of going beyond Sea for some very ill Ends, an Intimation had been given. He got ready a Pinnace well Mann'd, and went in pursuit of them down the River, and both as he went and return'd, he took care to search suspected Vessels; when he came to this, he demanded of the Master what number of Men he had on Board, pretending he came to press Men; the Master told him he had but three, and for those he had a Protection. But the Captain said he must be better satisfied, and must search the Vessel, and in the search he found these four Persons lying concealed in this secret place, under the Quarter-Hatches.

As they were taken out one after another, one of the Seamen observed Mr. Ashton to take up a Bundle of Papers from off the Ballast, and put it in his Bosom, and near the place where Papers lay, he took up two Seals, which after proved to be my Lord Preston's Seals when he was Secretary. Captain Billop being inform'd of this by that Seaman, he put his Hand into Mr. Ashton's Bosom, and took away from him the Bundle of Papers with the Lead fix'd to it.

When they were put on board the Captain's Pinnace, they all pressed him much, that he would let them go on shore at Gravesend, pretending want of Refreshment, they not having eaten, and the Night having been cold, but he did not think that proper, nor safe, but told them, they should go on Board the George Frigate, and refresh themselves there.

When they came on Board the George Frigate, all the three Gentlemen, and my Lord Preston in particular, were very earnest with Captain Billop to dispose of the Bundle of Papers, mixing extraordinary Promises, with great Complements.

Not prevailing there, when they were return'd to the Pinnacle, they renew'd their Sollicitations, and one of them told him, it would be easie to remove all Suspicion by fixing the Lead to some other Papers of little Signification, which were found in my Lord Preston's Pocket, which he might produce, and they would without difficulty pass for the Papers that were taken.

But the Captain was too just to comply with this Proposal. When they found he was not to be moved, you will find from the Witnesses, that their Promises were turned into Threats, and they used another sort of Language.

When they were brought to Whiteball Stairs, upon their landing they gave Money to the Master and the Seamen, desiring them to say, they were hired to go for Flanders, and not for France.

Gentlemen, these things which I have opened carry a strong Presumption of Guilt, for Englishmen, especially one of that Quality of my Lord Preston, to go into the Country of an Enemy without any manner of Passport, and in such a manner as they could not expect but to be seized for Spies, unless they were assured, that their Character was so well known there, that they should be look'd upon not as Persons coming to get Intelligence, but to give it, unless they were well assured of a good Reception, when they came there.

But there is no occasion to leave any thing to Conjecture in this Case, what is contained in these Papers makes the Design of the Voyage beyond dispute. I think, Gentlemen, after you have heard the Evidence, you will be very well satisfied, that my Lord Preston and the other two who stand indicted, were equally concerned in the Papers; they were all alike earnest to preserve them from being seen, they all solicited for the disposing of them, and promised Rewards if they might prevail.

Gentlemen, these Papers are of various Natures.

One I mentioned before, is Entitled, The Result of a Conference between several Lords and Gentlemen, both Tories and Whigs, in which it was undertaken to prove the Possibility and Methods of Restoring King James by a French Power; without endangering the Protestant Religion, and the Civil Administration according to the Laws of this Kingdom.

Another contains Heads for a Declaration to be prepared, in order to be published when the French have had Success at Sea, and are landing; and that is filled with such Pretences as they thought most specious, and most likely to amuse and delude the People.

There is another sort of these Papers which consists of Letters. These Letters are directed in false Names, and are not subscribed, and it is not to be imagin'd it should be otherwise. Yet, Gentlemen, (though that is not the present Business) the Hands of the Writers of these Letters are very well known, and the Subject Matter of them will easily reveal to you for whom they were intended, for though these Letters are most of them Written under divers Cants, some under the Colour of Trade, some of them under the Colour of a Law-Suit for the Redeeming of a Mortgage, others under the Notion of a Match, and a Settlement to be made upon that Match, yet the real Business is so plain, that you need but hear them read to see through the Disguise.

Though they begin generally in the Stile of Merchants writing to one another, or the like, yet towards the end of the Letters you will observe Expressions of Duty and Reverence (Terms which do not usually pass in Correspondence between Persons of that sort) sufficient to shew, that somewhat else was intended to be covered in what went before.

Gentlemen, It will appear to you, that some of the Writers of these Letters were of the number of those who were secured the last Summer when the French Fleet was upon our Coasts, and you will observe they complain, that by reason of that Restraint, the Design was very much hindred, though they have endeavoured to redeem that loss of time since their Discharge, and have carried on the Business with more vigor than ever.

In short, The design of these Letters is to importune the setting out of the French Fleet with all possible Expedition: They say they must not suffer such a fit Season to be spent unprofitably; That the best time is between this and the first of March to come to a good Market; and if they come not before the 10th of March, all will be lost. In another of their Letters they say, If the Suit be well solicited and managed, it may come to a final hearing before the end of Easter Term.

They complain that there are several indiscreet Letters came from St. Germain's, that turn to the prejudice of the Design. Those Letters are not enough disguis'd to deceive the People here, but speak too plainly what is to be expected from themselves, and from the French. You will take notice, that the Letters which all you will hear, are all Bills with high Characters of the Bearer: for which reason they write in such general Terms, because the Bearer was intrusted with the whole. Some of the Letters say, no Particulars are or need be expressed, because he will inform them of every thing. Others, That they could not write so much as he could say; and that nothing was wanting but to allow him a full and fit Season to give an account of all the Business; and that they intirely depend upon his account of them and their Condition.

And, Gentlemen, in one of the Letters the Bearer is styled a Lord; and to whom can that be applied, unless to the Prisoner at the Bar?

In another Letter, when they speak of sending the Copper and the Linen (the Goods pretended for carrying on the Trade) it is added, And what the meaning of that is, they must refer to the Bearer, who was able to give them a particular account.

I have mention'd so much of the Papers, only that you might have a general Notion of them; that so when you hear them read, you may more readily make your Observations. I assure you I have been as careful as I could, not to exceed the Truth in opening any part of the Evidence. But it is your part to see whether what I have opened be made out in Proof.

There is another Paper that gives an account of their Majesties Fleet to be sent out this Summer; and there is an Observation at the end of it, that it was hoped it may be out in March. But you will find by other Papers (and particularly by one of my Lords own Hand-writing) that he was of another mind, that the Fleet will not be out before June.

Gentle-

Gentlemen, the last sort of Papers which I will mention to you, are some Memorandums and Notes, written by my Lord Freston; wherein he gives an account of several things of great moment; which as his memory served him, are put together without Connexion or Method, being only to remind him of them when he should have occasion to mention them.

He therein gives an account of the number and strength of the English Fleet; how they are manned, and who are the Principal Officers and Commanders, and in what time they will be out.

He likewise gives an account of the number and state of the Dutch Fleet, and how that is to be divided and disposed of.

And with relation to the French Fleet, there is a particular Memorandum, That they must be out at farthest in April; That they must be out so as to separate the Dutch Fleet and ours; That they must be sure to look in at Spithead as they come by, and secure what Ships should be in that Harbour from joyning the rest.

There is also a hint given of those that were most likely to come in to them. And there is Advice in what place their Fleet should fight ours. They must not come so high as Beachy, where they fought the last year, but rather chuse to fight in the Chops of the Channel.

There is an account of Portsmouth, how fortified and garrison'd, that it had but 500 Men; that Gosport had nothing but Pallisadoes about it; and Southsea Castle very weak.

There are Memorandums of other Heads proper for a Declaration.

There are the Names of several Persons, some of them with particular Characters, and some without; and amongst the rest, there is this Character given of the Clergy of the City of London, that they are the worst of all others.

Gentlemen, we shall proceed to the Evidence, and first call the Living Witnesses, and then read the Papers; and when you have heard what the one can say, and what the other contain, we must leave it to your Consideration, and submit all to the Direction of the Court.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray swear Mrs. Pratt.

Jane Pratt.

Who was sworn with Seven or Eight more.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Mrs. Pratt, Pray will you tell us what you know concerning the hiring of a Vessel, and whither it was to go? and by whom it was hired, and for what? Pray tell your whole Knowledge in this Matter.

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Burdet, may it please your Lordship, sent for me, to his House, to hire a Vessel to go for France, and asked me if I could carry them secure; I told them I could let them have a Smack that would carry them; and if it please you my Lord, we met several times at his House, and at last there was Mr. Ashton there, and Mr. Ashton appointed to meet at the Dog Tavern upon Ludgate-bill; I think they call it the Wonder-Tavern.

L. C. J. Holt. Mistress, Pray begin again, and speak out.

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Burdet sent for me to hire my Smack to go for France, and they asked me if I thought it would carry them secure; I told them yes, I thought it would. And I came several times about it to Mr. Burdet's House; the Smack was not then come to the Tower, as it did afterwards; and then after they sent for Mr. Ashton, and he met me at Mr. Burdet's, and meeting at Mr. Burdet's, he gave me a Note, to meet at the Dog Tavern upon Ludgate-bill; and there Ashton met, but Mr. Burdet did not come.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was with Ashton when you met at the Dog Tavern?

Mrs. Pratt. None but a Man of his, as Mr. Ashton said; there we sat about an hour and an half and did nothing: At length we went away, and appointed to meet at Mr. Burdet's House the next day at seven or eight a Clock, and there we met, and the Bargain was made.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Bargain?

Mrs. Pratt. I askt 150 l. and they told me that was too much; says Ashton, I will give you Four-score: Says Mr. Burdet, pray encourage them, offer them 100 l. thereupon he did offer 100 l. and we agreed for 100 l.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What day was that, can you remember?

Mrs. Pratt. We met on the Monday, and the Tuesday we agreed.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What Money was paid?

Mrs. Pratt. Ninety three Guineas and Six-pence.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was by when the Bargain was made?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Elliot was along with them; Mrs. Burdet and the Master of the Vessel at the Agreement.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What is the Master's Name?

Mrs. Pratt. His Name is Pasely, and there was Six-pence broken, and Mr. Ashton took one of the Six pences, and Mr. Burdet ordered him to give his Wife the other, and so he did; and when the money was paid, Mr. Ashton brought it in a Paper wrapt up, and said, we should see it told out, and he told it out there, and it was Ninty three Guineas and the Six-pence.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Who did they tell you they were to carry into France?

Mrs. Pratt. Truly my Lord they said Three, that was all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What followed then? Did they give you any Note where you were to come for them?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton bid Mr. Elliot write a Note where they should come; it was at Mr. Rigby's in Covent-Garden, at the Seven Stars, and there we were to meet at Eleven a Clock at night; and when we came there, Mr. Ashton was within, and went out and fetch'd in some Company, Mr. Elliot came and two other Gentlemen that I never saw in my Life before.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Mistress, you speak of the breaking of a Six-pence, what was to be done with that?

Mrs. Pratt. My Master was to bring the half of the Six-pence that Mr. Ashton had, to Mistress Burdet, and then we were to have the 100 l.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Had Mrs. Burdet the other Piece?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, Mr. Ashton had one half, and she had the other.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Was there any Provision carried on Board this Smack?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, there was a Hamper and a Trunk, which were fetch'd from Mr. Burdet's House; my Man John Fisher carried the Trunk, and a Porter carried the Hamper, and I took care to see it put in the Vessel.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When you came to Covent-Garden that Night, what Discourse had you? and what Inquiries were there made, and by whom?

Mrs. Pratt. Mrs. Ashton comes in, as she said Mr. Ashton was her Husband, and said there was some News from Court, of having Papers in a Hat, and that they had chosen some Lord or other: Something it was I remember, I can't tell what; but says one Gentleman that stood by, and said, I was chosen the last Year, that signifies nothing; and another said, I missed it; It is only a Christmas Gambal, it signifies little.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What further discourse had they?

Mrs. Pratt. Mrs. Ashton said she was afraid they should have no very good Luck, for the Cock crowed.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there any discourse what advantage they should get by going, or you by carrying of them?

Mrs. Pratt. They said they would help us to the earning of 1000*l.* before Lady-day, if they went this time safe.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray Mrs. recollect your self; were they to go to Flanders? or where?

Mrs. Pratt. They were to go for France: they were not to go for Flanders.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What time of Night did you depart from Mr. Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. About Eleven a Clock.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. How did they go away from Mr. Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. I did not go with them: Mrs. Ashton kept me, and gave me the Leg of a Goose and some Drink.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Do you know any thing further?

Mrs. Pratt. No; I think I have told all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were you hired for France, or Flanders? I ask you once again.

Mrs. Pratt. We were hired for France; any place there where we could touch.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there any particular Port mentioned?

L. C. J. Holt. If you have done with her, will my Lord ask her any question?

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire she may be askt, whether she ever saw me before?

Mrs. Pratt. No; never, my Lord, but in the Tower.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But, she says, when they were at Rigby's there came in two Gentlemen with Mr. Ellyot that Night.

L. Preston. I desire to know of her whether I was one of them two.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord, she does not say your Lordship was one of them.

Mrs. Pratt. No, my Lord, you were not one of them.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then set up Pafeley. Pafeley, what do you know about hiring of this Smack to go for France? I think you are Master of the Smack, called the Thomas and Elizabeth, are you not?

Mr. Pafeley. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then pray give an account of the whole matter.

Mr. Pafeley. The Smack was hired of the Woman, and not of me; and when I came up to London she told me she had got a Voyage over to France, if I was minded to go; I said, yes: and she appointed me to go along with her to this Mistress, what do ye call um's House, this Mrs. Burdet, and when he came to this House, there was no body within but Mr. Ashton: presently after came in Mr. Ellyot; after they came in they told us the things were not ready yet, but they would be ready presently to carry on Board; when these things were ready, John Fisher carried the Trunk down, and the Porter carried the Hamper, and I went with them along to Billinggate and carried them on Board; and when I carried them on Board I went to Billinggate again, and so we went along to this Mr. Burdet's House; and so when we came up to Burdet's House, Ashton and Elliot were not there present, but we had been there but a little time e'er they came in, and then they came and said to my Owner and me, You shall see the Money told; it was all in Gold but one Six-pence; there was Ninety three Guineas: And, after the Money was told, there was a Six-pence that was broken in half, and the Guineas he rolled up in a Paper, and gave them to Mistress Burdet, and bid her lay them up; and he gave her one half of the Sixpence, and kept the other half himself; and when I brought that other half that he had, or my Owner, then she was to give the Money to her or me.

Vol. III.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray what Room of the House was this in at Mr. Burdet's?

Pafeley. It was on the Left Hand going in.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was it a Bed-Chamber?

Pafeley. Yes, 'twas.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What time of Night was it pray?

Pafeley. About Eight a Clock.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What discourse had you with them there, pray?

Pafeley. They asked me if I thought they might get well over? I told them yes, I believed they might.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did they tell you what part of France they were to go to?

Pafeley. No, they named no place, but any part in France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Well, go on, tell us what they said further.

Pafeley. So, Sir, they gave us direction to meet them at the Seven Stars in the little Piazza's in Covent Garden: when we came there it was Eleven a Clock at Night, and they were not in the House when we came in, except 'twere Mr. Ashton; but presently after Ashton and Ellyot came in, and they sat down; and so in came two Gentlemen more, but what they were, or who they were, I don't know; and they discoursed about Papers shaking in a Hat, and said they should have no good Luck, for the Cock crowed: And after this Ellyot and Ashton came out of the House and called me to go with them, and after we were gone out, Mr. Ashton leaves Ellyot and went away from him, and Ellyot bid me go along with him, says, come Master, come along with me; he did not name any place whither they were to go, but it happened to be Surry-Stairs, and going down, he calls in at the corner House, which is an Ale-house, for the Water-man, and bid me go before to the Water-side; and when we came thither the Water-man steps into his Boat, and I after him; and when I was in the Boat I went into the Stern, and by that time I was seated in the Stern there came down four Men; but I never saw my Lord and his Man before they came into the Wherry.

T t t t t 2

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. Who came into the Wherry?

Paseley. There was all those four, Mr. Ashton, Mr. Ellyot, my Lord, and his man.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was this do you say?

Paseley. At Surry-stairs, there the Boat was.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Was the Prisoner at the Bar one of them?

Paseley. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what did you do then?

Paseley. After we were seated in the Boat at Surry-stairs we put off, and went down through Bridge, and going through Bridge we came on Board; the Vessel, riding just against the Tower almost, and we went all on Board; and when we came on Board, my men were all asleep, and being asleep, I called them out of the Cabin to hale up the Anchor; and there being very little Wind stirring, we could not go very far, but came just below the half-way Tree, and then we stopt, and I order to drop the Anchor for fear of the Vessels in the River: and the next morning about Eight a Clock we weighed our Anchor again, and went on till we came near to the George Man of War, and there they all of them hid.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Who?

Paseley. All of them, my Lord. There was Ashton, and Ellyot, and my Lord Preston, and his man.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. In what place did they hide?

Paseley. In the Quarter-hatches, under the Hatches where we lie.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did they desire you to hide them?

Paseley. Yes, they did.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What did they say?

Paseley. They said; that if there should come any Boat on board to press, I should shew them my Protection; and so there came no Boat then.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. How big is this place that they hid in?

Paseley. 'Tis in the Quarter under, near the Cabin-hatches.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. I ask you what kind of place it is?

Paseley. They cannot sit upright, nor stand upright, but they are fain to lie along, or lean upon their Elbows.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Well, go on, what happened afterwards?

Paseley. After that we were past the man of War; they came up and sate in the Cabin where we used to eat our Victuals; and when we came to Gravesend, over against the Dock-house, they would go down again and hide, and did so till we passed the Block-house, and then they were for coming up again, and then I saw a Boat coming about Tilbury which made towards us, and thereupon they ducked down again, and the Hatches were laid down upon them, and there they remained till they were taken.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Where were they taken?

Paseley. They were taken between the North Block-house and the Little—

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. But I mean in what part of the Ship?

Paseley. They were taken in that little place where they were hid.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Were the Hatches shut down upon them?

Paseley. Yes, they were.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. How long had they been hid before they were taken?

Paseley. A quarter of an Hour, or thereabouts.

Sir W. W. Did they desire to be hid there?

Paseley. Yes, they did, and they were hid there.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Now tell us, after such time as they were taken, what they said, and what you observed.

Paseley. After they were taken, they said nothing to me, my Lord, nor none of them did speak to me after the Boat had taken them.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. But what happened after they were taken?

Paseley. After they were taken, Captain Billop ordered them to go into the Boat, and us with them; and when we came to White hall-stairs, one of them said to me, Master, when you come upon your Examination, say you were bound to Flanders, and not for France.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Which was that that said so?

Mr. Paseley. 'Twas Ellyot, and he gave me half a Crown to bear my expences that Night, and said he would remember to take care of us afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did they give any money to the Seamen?

Paseley. Yes, Ashton gave one of my men half a Crown, and bid him say he was bound for Flanders, and not for France; and my Lords man gave my other man half a Crown.

L. C. J. Holt. Was my Lord Preston by when that money was given?

Paseley. My Lord was upon the Bridge, but not near me.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. If my Lord have any Questions to ask him, we have done with him for the present.

L. Preston. No, my Lord, I have no Questions to ask him.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Was my Lord Preston by when the directions was given you to say you were to go to Flanders, and not to France?

Paseley. I say he was upon the Bridge, but was not near me.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. What discourse had you on board with any of them?

Paseley. Very little. They askt me if I thought they should go clear, and I told them yes, I thought they might.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Clear of what?

Paseley. Clear of the Vessels searching: They examined me that Night I was at the Seven Stars, if I knew the way of the Swing on the back of the Channel, to go clear of the Town. I told them I did not know the way by the Back of the Sands by Margaret's, but the Swing would not keep them clear of the Town.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Was there a Note written whither you were to come?

Paseley. Yes. There was a Note written to meet them at the Seven Stars in the little Piazza's.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Whereabouts is Rurder's House?

Paseley. That is in Queen-street in the City.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. You Paseley, Did the Waterman that brought them on Board, leave two Coats behind him?

Paseley. Yes, the Waterman did leave two Coats;

Coats; and I put them into my Chest, and afterwards they broke open my Chest, and took them out, and brought them to my Lord Chief Justices.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we will next produce that Waterman. Set up Charles Betsworth.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Come, will you give us an Account who you carried on Board a Smack, and what hapned.

Betsworth. I was going over the Water from Surry Stairs about Seven or Eight a Clock, and a Gentleman at the Stairs call'd Sculler, and ask'd me if I would carry him down the River; said I how far, says he to the Tower; said I 'tis against Tide, and I can't carry you down so low; he said he would stay till the Tide turn'd; said I, if I be out of my Bed so long, I deserve to be well paid for it; If you will give me Half a Crown I'll carry you down; says he I'll give it you; so then I came a-Shore, and he ask'd me what my Name was, I told him Charles Betsworth; says he, will you be sure to stay for us; Yes, said I, if you will be sure to come: If I be not at the Stairs, I'll be at that Ale-house there in the Corner; so I staid, and carried over a Fare or two over the Water; and about Eleven a Clock, as I was sitting in the House a Gentleman comes, and calls Charles, and so out I went to my Boat, and took them in. There was one man, as I suppose, in the Stern, and he that called me out followed me down, and by and by came three more into my Boat; one of them had a Whitish Cloak on, and the other a gray loose Coat, and a red Bag, of the quantity of a Peck; and so we put off, and rowed away; and just under the Temple Wall, which was all the Words I heard from them, that I can remember, says one Gentleman, When do you hear the King goes away? and another made answer and said; a Tuesday: So we rowed down through Bridge, and when we were through Bridge, they asked where the Vessel lay; and he that was in the Stern said, it was Southwark side, over against the Tower, and bid me row over thither. And when we came just below Battle-Bridge, that man said, that is she that rides a Head of us, I look'd, and she had a Pennant up; so they were put on Board; and as soon as they were on Board, she went off, and I rowed up to the Bridge, and went through Bridge, and came up as far as and there I staid and took my Scull and my Staff out of my Boat; and when I took them out, I missed my Clothes; says I, God blefs me, I have lost my Clothes; but then I thought it was but a still Tide, and therefore I would try if I could overtake them; for I thought they could not be got far, there being little or no Wind; so I went down to the Place where the Vessel lay, and she was gone; and I enquired of several Smacks that lay there, but could hear nothing, and I rowed as low as Limehouse Reach; and about Black Wall and Limehouse Reach, I came up to a Smack, that I supposed was she, and I cry'd out, Ho the Smack; and they answered me So; I asked them if I did not bring a Fare a board that Smack a while ago; then they said no; I told them I had brought a Fare on Board some Smack that lay about Horsleydown and Pickle-berring Stairs, and they had got two Coats of mine, which I had forgotten, and it had a Pennant up when they went on Board, but this had none; so I rowed on further, till I came as far as Berking

Sherf; and I thought there being so little Wind that none could be gone beyond me; and therefore waited to see a Smack with a Pennant coming down, but I could not meet with it, and there I lay all Night in my Waitcoat; and the next day I came back to Greenwich, and as I came along, I went on Board several Vessels to enquire, because I took her for an Attendant upon a Man of War, but I could not hear of my Clothes, till last Friday was Seven-night, two Watermen came, and brought me the Clothes I lost.

L. C. J. Then you have your Clothes again?

Betsworth. Yes, I have.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray look upon that Gentleman there, my Lord Preston, are you sure that he was one of them that was in your Boat?

Betsworth. I can't tell that ever I saw him in my Life before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. You Pafely, I ask you, was my Lord Preston one of the Gentlemen the Waterman brought on Board your Smack?

Pafely. Yes, he was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Is that the Waterman?

Pafely. Truly my Lord I can't tell; but the Waterman's Coat was left on Board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then let me ask you another Question, Had you a Pennant?

Pafely. Yes, I had when I came on Board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you take in your Pennant?

Pafely. Yes, I did afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Why did you take it in?

Pafely. They asked me if there was a Pennant; and I told them yes; and they bid me take it in.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who bid you take it in?

Pafely. Ellyot did; so we took it down.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Will my Lord ask Betsworth any Questions?

L. Preston. No, I have nothing to say to him.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did they carry a board with them, Pafely?

Pafely. They had nothing a board but the Trunk and Hamper, that were brought down before from Burder's House; and there was nothing brought in the Boat but only a Leather Bag.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then set up Fisher. I think his Name is John Fisher. You were one of the Seamen that did belong to the Smack, I think.

Fisher. Yes, I was.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray then tell us, who were brought thither; and what happened upon it.

Fisher. About six Hours before they came on board us, our Master came himself on Board, and took me along with him; but whither I was to go then I did not know. He carryed me to a House in the City, and there gave me a small Trunk to carry, and a Hamper to a Porter: and we went away with them; and he bid us, at Billingsgate, carry them a Board, which we did.

L. C. J. Holt. When was the Trunk and Hamper brought on board?

Fisher. About six or seven a Clock at night, on Wednesday, I think.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, and what followed?

Fisher. My Lord, and Mr Ashton, and Mr Ellyot, and my Lords man, and the Master came on Board between eleven and twelve: There was no more came on Board that I know of; but we were asleep when they came on Board:

Board; and immediately our Master ordered us to hale up the Anchor. Now there was but little Wind stirring; and by that time we were sail down as low as half-way Tree, it being still Flood, we could go no farther: so there we were ordered to stop, and we lay by till morning; and about eight in the morning we weighed Anchor again, and about nine, when we came to the George Man of War, they hid, they desired to go down into the Quarters, and we laid the Hatches upon them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What kind of place is it that they hid in?

Fisher. They could not stand upright, nor sit upright, but they must lie or lean upon their Elbows. So when we were got below the Ship, they came up again into the Cabin: And when we came at Gravesend near the Block House, then they hid again till we were below the Block-House; and then we spied a Boat coming, which made them to keep below; and there they continued till Captain Billog took them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were they all four there?

Fisher. Yes all four.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. After they were taken, what said they?

Fisher. After such time as they were taken, and come up to Whitehall Stairs, Captain Ashton gave me a Half-Crown piece; and bid me say they were going to Flanders and not to France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But whither were you going?

Fisher. Truly, I did not know where we were to go, till since we came on Shoar. I understood nothing till they hid; and then indeed I thought we were going to France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When did any Body tell you you were to go to France?

Fisher. Since we came on Shoar.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Will my Lord ask him any Questions?

L. Preston. No.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then the next Witness we call is one Amonds, Pray tell us what you know of this Matter.

Amonds. May it please you my Lord, I know nothing concerning my Masters Business, but all that I know of this Business is, That they came on Board about Twelve a Clock at Night, and I was then asleep in the Cabin, and hearing some come on Board, and my Master call, I looked out, and there were three or four Gentlemen, and my Master, and he ordered us to set sail immediately, and make our way down as fast as we could; there was little or no Wind; so that when we came down to the half way Tree, we were forced to come to an Anchor, and there we rid at Anchor till it was broad day, when there was a brave Gale to the Westward, and by that time we got down to Long Reach; about Nine a Clock we came to the George Frigate, a Man of War, and they understanding that, desired to hide these Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Holt. What Gentlemen?

Amonds. My Lord Preston, Mr Ashton and Mr Ellyot, and the other Gentleman that was with them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look upon my Lord there, was he one?

Amonds. Yes, that Gentleman was one.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, go on.

Amonds. And so Sir, after we were passed the Frigate, they came up again, and did not design to go down any more till they see some other danger. When we came almost to Gravesend, they went down again: When we were past the Block House I was at the Helm, and they were resolving to go to Dinner, and bid that Man, my Fellow, to reach them some Victuals out of the Hamper: And while he was reaching them some Victuals, I see the Pinnace coming towards us; said I, here is a Pinnace coming a Board; says my Lord and they, we must go down again and hide, and so they did go down again; we apprehended that they were coming aboard to press us, and they had no mind to be seen. When the Pinnace came near, they waved to us in this manner, as much as to bid us stay; so we laid the Sail by, and staid for them till they came up; and when the Captain came on Board, says he, this is worth our coming on Board, here are a couple of brisk Seamen will do the King Service; I must have them, I think; says I, I hope not so, Noble Captain; says he, have you any thing to keep your selves clear? Yes, says our Master? I am sorry for that, says the Captain; what is it? says the Master, I have a Protection; says the Captain, let us see your Protection: so the Master pulls out his Protection, and shews it: Well, says the Captain, I must look a little further, and away he goes into the Cabin, and takes up the Hatches where these Gentlemen were; says the Captain; Hye, hye, who is here? Turn out, says he; but I suppose they did not make so much hast as the Captain expected; so he called some of his men on Board; and when they came on Board, my Lord came out, and the rest of the Gentlemen and says my Lord to the Captain, I hope you will be so kind as not to take any thing from us: Says he, I'll meddle with nothing but Papers, 'tis Papers I look for, and put his Hands in both his Pockets and pulled out Papers, and put them into his own Pocket, but whether they were new or old I can't tell; and there was a Watch likewise, but that he gave my Lord again, and said, I'll meddle with nothing but Papers: then he searcht Mr. Ellyot, and Mr Ashton was the last that came out, and there was one of my Lords Watermen in the Cabin with him; and, says he, and please you Noble Captain, That Gentleman puts something in his Bosom: Says the Captain, What did you put in your Bosom, Sir; nothing, says he, but my Handkerchief.

L. C. J. Holt. Who said so?

Amonds. Mr. Ashton, and shews him his Handkerchief, and afterwards the Captain put his Hand in Mr. Ashton's Bosom, and pulled it out.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What did he pull out?

Amonds. A Roll of Papers with a Piece of Lead to it.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did you see the Lead fix'd to the Papers.

Amonds. I did see it fix'd to the Packthread that tyed the Papers.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What sort of Place is it in which they were taken?

Amonds. They could not sit nor stand upright in it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Had you any money given you?

Amonds. I had half a Crown given me by my Lord's man.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it gave you the money?

Amonds.

Amonds. It was my Lord's man, he that was on Board the Ship; he gave me half a Crown in Whitehall, and said, I should say we were bound for Flanders, and not for France, but who the half Crown came from I can't tell, my Lord said nothing to me at all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you hear any Discourse as they came down?

Amond. No, I did not mind any thing of discourse, for I never came among them, unless it were at the Hour of Watching.

L. Preston. Pray did I say any thing to you at Whitehall?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, your way is to propose your Questions to the Court, and they will ask them for you.

L. Preston. My Lord I desire to ask him if I said any thing to him at Whitehall.

L. C. J. Holt. What say you? Did my Lord Preston say any thing to you at Whitehall?

Amond. No my Lord, he never said any thing to me at all; it was his man that gave me the half Crown, and spoke to me.

L. C. J. Holt. Will your Lordship ask him any other Questions?

L. Preston. No my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then call your next Witness.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Swear Captain Billop.
Which was done.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Come, Captain Billop, Pray will you tell my Lord and Jury, where you did apprehend my Lord Preston, and the Circumstances of what happened at their taking.

Capt. Billop. Sir, I met with them at the upper end of the Hope.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray give us an Account from the beginning to the end, what passed, how you came with the Boat, and all that happened at that time.

Capt. Billop. About Two a Clock, or between One and Two, upon the last of December, my Lord Danby came to me at one of the Doors of the House of Lords, and told me his Father would speak with me; and he carried me to my Lord Linsey's Chamber, where immediately my Lord President came, and told me there were some Persons were going for France about Business of dangerous Consequence, and he desired me to use some means to get them apprehended; I then proposed what I should have to enable me for the Undertaking. My Lord Danby said there was such a Boat, that he would procure for me, and my Lord President gave me a Letter to another Person, who was to instruct me further about this Matter: My Lord Danby got the Boat ready, and some Men and Arms in it; but I thought there was not Arms enough, so I borrow'd some Arms of my Lord Lucas, and about Eleven a Clock as near as I remember we put off from Tower Wharf, it being very calm; I thought we should be swifter than any Vessel, and should have the advantage of them all; and therefore run down as far as Graves-End; and I brought several Vessels by the Lee, in which time I pressed some Barkin men, two or three of them; and amongst them, one that knew the Vessels that lay in the River, having been on Board several; and we did board divers, and took out some Men, having a Press Warrant; and he that I had taken of the Barkin Men, after he had passed by several Vessels, seeing this Vessel sailing, told me that was the Thomas and Elizabeth; whereupon we made up to them, and waving towards them, they staid for us: when we came up, there was standing by the Master two lusty Sailors, and I told him I would take but one of them; he said he had a Protection, I bid him shew it me; when I was come on Board, and had looked upon his Protection, I told him I must look a little further, and I went down into the Cabin, and took up the Hatches, and there I found them all four lying together.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What four?

Captain Billop. My Lord Preston. I did not know him then, nor till afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who else was there?

Captain Billop. Mr. Elliot was there, and Mr. Ashton, who were both my former Acquaintance, but my Lord Preston I had forgotten, till one of them called him my Lord, and I asked them what Lord it was; and they said it was my Lord Preston; so then I saluted my Lord, so we rowed up.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray Captain tell us what happened in the Vessel before you went out of it, after you found them there?

Captain Billop. I handed my Lord Preston up first, and after he came out of that little place, which he was forced to creep out of on his Knees, I turned my Lord about, and told him I must search him; he said, he hoped I would not meddle with any thing; I told him I would meddle with nothing but Papers, so I put my Hand in his Pocket and took all the Papers I could find, and put them in my own Pocket, and taking out a Watch, I delivered it to my Lord again. The next was Mr. Elliot, and I searcht him, and found nothing at all upon him. After that Ashton came up, and one of my Men told me that Gentleman had put something in his Bosom; whereupon I gave him a sudden turn, his Back being towards me, and asked him what was that he put in his Bosom? he told me nothing but his Handkerchief, and pluckt his Handkerchief out; with that I clapt my Hand in and got the Packet, and took it out, with the Lead fixt to it; I have the Lead now in my Pocket.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray will you produce it, Sir. Which he did.

Captain Billop. This is the Lead, several of my Men saw it when 'twas fix'd to the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What did you do with the Packet?

Captain Billop. I put it immediately into my Pocket, as soon as I had searcht Mr. Ashton further, and then commanded these Gentlemen all into my Boat, and took all the People that belonged to the Smack with me, after I had brought her to an Anchor, and left two of my men on board of her, and there she rid till next Day, when I sent two more of my men to bring her up, and those two men I order'd to search all the parts of the Vessel, and take what they could find, and whatsoever they found they should carry it to the Tower to my Lord Lucas; which, I supposed, they did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Well, Captain Billop, after such time as you had taken these Papers, and brought these Gentlemen into your Boat, pray what discourse had you with them? What said they to you concerning the Papers?

Captain Billop. It was a pretty while before we talked of any thing; the beginning of our talk was, I remember, they desired to go ashore at Gravesend to refresh themselves, for it was cold, and they had not eaten any thing: it was my Lord

Lord that desired it; but I begged his pardon for that, and told him there was a Man of War that lay at Long-reaab, where as I believed his Lordship would be very well accommodated with any thing he wanted.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Well, what said they afterwards?

Captain Billop. My Lord Preston, after I had saluted him upon knowing who he was, and Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot telling him I was of their Acquaintance, he said he was glad he was fallen into a civil Gentleman, and they said they were glad they were fallen into the hands of an Acquaintance. I told my Lord I hope he should never find any thing otherwise than civil from me; my Lord was very civil to me in Complimenting, and assuring me he would acknowledge my favour and kindness to him.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Ay, what did he say to you?

Captain Billop. My Lord Preston told me, if ever it lay in his Power to do me service he would, and he did not doubt but he might, and he used a great many Words and Expressions of Kindness, and his readiness to do me service; and amongst the rest, my Lord said once to me, if I would dispose of the Packet——

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray speak that again.

Captain Billop. My Lord Preston, in one of his Discourses of his Kindness in doing me service, had this Expression, as near as I can remember, if I would dispose of the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What he would do for you if you would dispose of the Packet?

Captain Billop. He did not come to any particular instance of what he would do: but he said he would serve me in any thing that lay in his Power; Mr. Elliot and Mr. Ashton discoursed me several times about it; they courted me, and desired me to throw the Packet over board; but I told them I would not do any thing of that kind; and Mr. Elliot said that I might take the Papers that I took out of my Lord Preston's Pocket and tie the Lead to them, and say that was the Packet, and throw the t'other over-board. I told him he took the King's Council to be odd People, and very indiscreet, that could not find out such a thing as that: After this was over, we had a little interval, and there was a Hamper in the Boats Stern, and there was some Bottles of Wine taken out, and we drunk several times; and by and by we had some discourse a little further about the same thing, and they pressed me to throw the Packet away; and one time particularly Mr. Ashton I remember, said it would be a generous thing, Billop, if you would go along with us, I think you may do as well there as here.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Whither would he had you gone with them?

Captain Billop. He did not name any place, as I remember.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What promises did they any of them make you?

Captain Billop. Mun Elliot whispered me several times, Dear Billop throw the Packet over-board, what good would it do you to injure so many honest Gentlemen? And Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot said, I had it now in my Power to make my self as great and as rich as I would be.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did any of them say about the Tide turning?

Captain Billop. Mun Elliot also said, It was impossible the Current or the Tide could run long this way, or always this way.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. When you had refused this that they desired of you, notwithstanding their Promises, pray tell us how they turned their discourse into Threatnings

Captain Billop. Elliot told me, when nothing would prevail, that every Dog had his day; but I answered, I hoped never to see it your day; but however, said I, pray desist from any such Language, for I can't bear it. After that they never askt me any thing about it.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Now tell us what you did with these Gentlemen, and these Papers afterwards?

Captain Billop. I brought these Gentlemen up to my Lord Nottingham's Office, and delivered the Packet with the Lead fixed to it, and stood by my Lord Nottingham in the Room till he had opened the Papers, except while my Lord Preston was examined, and when he opened the Papers I stood by, that I might see him make them up again; and, I think, I took some of them in my hand, and said I might read them, but I was uneasie, and not disposed at that time to read many of them, so I did not read them all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. They were all by when Ashton said you would do generously to go along with them, were they not?

Captain Billop. Yes, they were all in the Boat.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did not one of them say to you, I know if Captain Billop do serve us, he will do it generously.

Captain Billop. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was it?

Captain Billop. It was Ashton.

L. Preston. I desire I may ask Captain Billop a Question.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray, my Lord, put your Question to the Court and they will ask it him.

L. Preston. I desire to know my Lord, where it was, I said this to Captain Billop, that he would dispose of the Packet.

Captain Billop. Just after I had first saluted your Lordship, you said, you were glad you were fallen into the Hands of a civil Gentleman.

L. Preston. Was it aboard the Boat that I desired you to dispose of the Packet?

Captain Billop. Yes, and before we came on board the George Frigate, when we drunk about, upon the opening of the Hamper, it was in the Boat I am very sure, and before we came on board the George.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston said to you, you say, he would do you all the Kindness that lay in his Power if you would dispose of the Packet; how would he have you dispose of it? What did he mean by it?

Captain Billop. I don't remember he used any other Word, but that dispose of the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. But Ashton and Elliot did desire of you a great many times to throw it over board?

L. Preston. I desire he may be ask'd this Question: You said you carried these to my Lord Nottingham: Did you see them opened?

Captain Billop. Yes, I did see them opened, and I saw my Lord as he opened, lay them one by one, and read them over, and put them up again. And I looked upon several of them, while my Lord Nottingham was reading others; and and I stood by the Fire, and I see my Lord make them up, and he tied them with a piece of Twine, and he clapt his Seal upon them, and delivered them to me; and I went immediately and delivered them to my Lord President.

L. Preston. Were you all the while by, while my Lord Nottingham was reading the Papers?

Captain Billop. Yes, I was by when he opened them, and read them, and staid till he put them up again; and as they came from his hands, I presently carried them to my Lord President.

L. Preston. Are you sure, or can you swear that these are the same Papers which were taken on board the Smack, that you carried from my Lord Nottingham to my Lord Danby?

Captain Billop. So many of them as I looked into, I marked; and all that I marked I can swear to, and no more than them I cannot.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. I think you say all those Papers that you delivered to my Lord Nottingham, you saw my Lord Nottingham seal up, and all them you carried to my Lord President.

Capt. Billop. Yes, I did so; all that my Lord opened at that time, were put together again, and his Seal put to them.

L. C. J. Holt. But my Lord asks you, whether you can swear the particular Papers?

Captain Billop. What I read, I marked, and them I can swear to.

L. C. J. Holt. You say you carried all those Papers my Lord Nottingham sealed, after he had opened them, to my Lord President.

Captain Billop. Yes, my Lord, I did see my Lord Nottingham open them, I see him make them up again; and when they were made up, he put his Seal to them, and I carried them to my Lord President.

Fury man. My Lord, I desire Captain Billop may be asked one Question.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay; What is it you would ask him?

Fury man. I desire to know whether the Papers were sealed when he took them and brought them to my Lord Nottingham?

Captain Billop. No; they were all tied up together with a Tape, or a Twine, I think with both, very fast together.

Fury man. There was no Seal on them when he took them,

Captain Billop. No; but there were several Letters within the Pacquet that were sealed.

L. C. J. Holt. Was not the outside of the Pacquet sealed?

Captain Billop. I don't remember, the outside was sealed; there was a Cover, but as near as I remember, they were folds of Paper fast tied together.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You delivered them as you took them, to my Lord Nottingham?

Captain Billop. Yes: I never took them out of my Pocket after I had taken them from Mr. Ashton till I came to my Lord Nottingham's Office, where I deliver'd them to him.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Had you ever opened them, or seen them opened, before they came to the Hands of my Lord Nottingham?

Captain Billop. No indeed.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then set up Johnson. (which was done.) Pray tell us what you know of this Matter?

Johnson. I was in my Lord Dunblain's Barge, and I went down with this Captain Billop, and we were on board several Vessels; and we light upon a Ketch, where we pressed some Men, we thought it had been only some Seamen that were to be pressed, we did not know of any thing else. When we had rowed down as far as you have heard, we rowed up again, and searched several little Vessels and Smacks that were in the River; when a Fisher-man that we had pressed, said, That that was the Vessel the Captain enquired after: And then the Captain bid us take some small Arms; and I took a Pistol, and I went aboard. The Captain read the Protection, and then said, he must look further: When the Captain look'd into one of the Cabins, and took up the Hatches, I saw a great piece of Roast-Beef, and my Lord Preston by it, and a Mince-Pye, and a Fowl; and we took the Beef out, but my Lord's Man said, he missed his Knife, it lay upon the Bench: And then came my Lord up, and his Man, and Mr. Elliot; and when Mr. Ashton (the Man with the Pock-holes) came up, he went down again and pretended to look for his Hat; but when he was down, I see him cram something into his Bosom, and I told the Captain, I had seen him put something in his Bosom; and the Captain took him hold by the Buttons of his Coat and turned him about, and asked him, what he put into his Bosom? He said, nothing but his Handkerchief; and pulling it out of his Bosom, he shewed it the Captain: but the Captain put his Hand into Mr. Ashton's Bosom and pulled out the Pacquet.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You say you see him put something in his Bosom when he went down: Did you observe whence he took it?

Johnson. It was upon the Gravel, and there were a couple of Seals which he afterwards took up lying by, and I believe he took up the Pacquet, and forgot the Seals.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray let us see the Seals.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Your Lordship observes the Pacquet was not at first in Mr. Ashton's Bosom.

L. C. J. Holt. No, it was not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But he took it up from the place where the Seals lay, and put it in his Bosom: Pray in what place did this Pacquet and these Seals lie?

Johnson. Upon the Ballast, for they had shov'd away the Board.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was my Lord Preston upon the Ballast?

Johnson. Yes, my Lord lay almost upon his Back, he was the first that we saw, and he came out first; they were all four lying together there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who lay next my Lord Preston?

Johnson. My Lord's Footman, Mr. Ashton lay next, and Mr. Elliot lay next.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where were the Seals then?

Johnson. My Lord was the first that I see come up.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I ask you where the Seals were?

Johnson. The Seals were down upon the Ballast; whether they were my Lord's or no, I cannot tell, or whose they were?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Now that we will ask Captain Billop: Are these the Seals?

Captain Billop. Yes, these are the Seals this Man gave me.

Johnson. I took them from off the Ballast.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did my Lord own these to be his Seals?

Captain Billop. I did not ask him that I know of.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Well, Johnson, go on, tell what you know further.

Johnson. After we came to Long-reach, a Gentleman that had a long Perriwig, a black Gentleman, Mr. Elliot I think they call him, had a pair of Whiskers on when he was taken; and he took a pair of Scissers and cut them both off; and he said, if ever he liv'd, he should remember me, having a Tooth out, because I was so sharp upon him to make him come out: And when we came on board the George Frigate in Long-reach, my Lord's Man came to me, and said, he would give me something to drink, if I would deliver him the Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. Had you any Discourse with my Lord Preston himself about them?

Johnson. No, it was his Footman that came to me, and said there was no body there but myself and him; I had them, and he would give me something to drink if I would deliver them, but I delivered them to Captain Billop.

L. Preston. My Lord, may I ask a Question or two of this Witness?

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, my Lord, if they have done with him. What say you, Brother Thompson?

Mr. Serj. Thompson. We shall have done with him presently, my Lord. Pray had you any Money given you?

Johnson. No, but my Lord gave the Ship's Company ten Shillings to drink, and one piece was a Brass Half-Crown.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What did they say as they went along, as you remember?

Johnson. They had a great deal of Discourse while we rowed; I was at the next Oar to them, but I cannot tell what 'twas.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Who did discourse?

Johnson. Ashton, Elliot, and the Captain.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Cannot you remember what they said any of them?

Johnson. They did talk together several times, Elliot said he was a cold; and came and rowed at the Oar a while, and Elliot swore an Oath, says he, they row all as if they were rowing to Prison; but truly I did not much mind their Discourse, I minded my rowing. There were some Victuals handed to us which we did eat.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Elliot seem to be angry? What did he say?

Johnson. Elliot wished that a Thunderbolt might drop into the Boat several times, and sink it; and when we went through Bridge against Tide, he wished that London-Bridge might have fallen upon our Heads.

L. Preston. Now I would ask him, if your Lordship please, Did you see Ashton take up the Pacquet?

Johnson. Yes, I did, as it lay by the Seals.

L. Preston. I perceive there seems to be some stress laid upon my lying next to Mr. Ashton, and my Seals lying by the Pacquet.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, here has been no Inference made from that yet by the King's Council.

L. Preston. My Lord, it is in vain to deny we were all together there.

Johnson. You were the first that I see, my Lord.

L. Preston. We were all together, but there is no such thing to be gathered from thence as they would insinuate; but I suppose 'twould be deduced from hence, as if this Pacquet, because it lay near these Seals, should be my Pacquet.

L. C. J. We have not yet heard, my Lord, what use they will make of it.

L. Preston. But I desire to take notice of it, my Lord, and I think it is a very hard Presumption because we were in one place and the Seals at a little distance from the Pacquet, therefore the Pacquet must be presumed to be mine, I hope it shall not be presumed against me.

L. C. J. Holt. Since your Lordship mentions it, I will take notice a little of it too: It is only a circumstantial Evidence that is made use of against you; how far it will weigh, is to be left to the Jury when all the Evidence is heard. The Pacquet is found in the place where your Lordship lay, and by it Seals that belong to you; one is the Seal of your Office, as Secretary of State, the other is your own proper Coat of Arms.

Jury-man. With Submission, my Lord, I desire this Witness may be asked this Question, Whether he saw Captain Billop take the Pacquet out of Ashton's Bosom?

Johnson. Yes, I did.

Jury-man. And, whether he saw Billop deliver the same Pacquet to my Lord Nottingham?

Johnson. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Holt. You Gentlemen of the Jury, consider this, he was not then by: Captain Billop tells you, that very Pacquet which he took out of Ashton's Bosom he carried to my Lord Nottingham, and he tells you my Lord opened it in his presence, and he is sure he put all the Papers together again and set his own Seal upon them, and then he took them from my Lord Nottingham, and carried them to my Lord President.

Johnson. As soon as I came to White-hall, I was set Sentinel over those three Men that came out of the Smack, and was not admitted into the Room.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we must desire my Lord Nottingham may be sworn.

The Earl of Nottingham sworn.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Where are the Papers?

Earl of Nottingham. Mr. Bridgman, I think you have the Papers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, does your Lordship remember Captain Billop brought a Bundle of papers to you, and what became of them? Will your Lordship be pleased to give the Court and the Jury an account of it?

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord, all that I have to say in this matter is, Captain Billop brought to me a Bundle of papers tied about with a Packthread, to which was fixed a piece of Lead, I believe the same piece that was now produced, at least it was one very like it, he brought also a Signet which I presume I can know again when I see it.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray shew my Lord the Seals. (which was done.)

Earl of Nottingham. This is the Signet I presume which he brought to me, I am sure he brought just such a one, if not the same: those Papers when he delivered them to me, I opened in his Presence, and when I had so done, I read them and put them up together again and sealed them with my own Seal, and delivered them to him.

him back again. What the Papers are, and what he did with them, I suppose he will give you an account.

L. C. J. Holt. But your Lordship says the Bundle of Papers he delivered to you, you sealed up, and delivered to him again.

Earl of Nottingham. All those Papers that he brought to me, I did seal up, and deliver back to him again.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, my Lord, were they ever out of Captain Billop's sight while your Lordship had them?

Earl of Nottingham. Not after they were opened: there was a little Paper that was tied to the Bundle which fell loose upon the taking away the Lead, and I opened that while he was by, and the Bundle lay upon the Table while I examined my Lord Preston, and after my Lord Preston was gone out, I called in Captain Billop (who went out while I examined my Lord) and I opened that great Pacquet in his sight and read the Papers, and he read some of them, and all the Papers in the great Pacquet, and the little Paper that was stuck in; I delivered sealed up to Captain Billop.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, my Lord, were the Letters in the Pacquet sealed?

Earl of Nottingham. Yes, there were some of them sealed, and all that I received from him I delivered to him, and no more.

L. C. J. Holt. The Gentlemen of the Jury hear what my Lord says.

Earl of Nottingham. The very same, all; and no more, I say.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Captain Billop, when you had them back from my Lord of Nottingham, pray to whom did you deliver them?

Captain Billop. To my Lord President.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we must desire my Lord President would be pleased to be sworn.

The Marquess of Carmarthen, Lord President of the Council, was sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We must desire the favour of your Lordship, to acquaint the Court when Captain Billop came to your Lordship, what he said, and what he brought with him.

L. President. Captain Billop did bring me a bundle of Papers, and he told me he brought them from my Lord of Nottingham, and they were sealed, wrap'd up with a Packthread, and sealed with a Seal, which I knew to be my Lord's Seal; he delivered them to me my self; and these Papers I kept till I shew'd them the King the next morning. And after I had shew'd them the King, the King delivered them up back to me, having read some of them, and commanded they should be delivered to the Cabinet Council. A Cabinet Council was called, and accordingly there I did deliver them Paper by Paper, and they were all marked by my Lord Sidney, and some I think by my Lord Marlborough; and so I delivered them all together to my Lord Sidney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we desire my Lord Sidney would please to be sworn.

The Lord Sidney Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Will your Lordship please to acquaint the Court and the Jury what Papers were delivered to you, and by whom, and where those Papers are?

L. Sidney. The Papers that were delivered by my Lord President, I have kept them, my Lord, ever since: As soon as I had them, I read them, and marked them with a Letter of my own Name, the Letter H. I have kept them ever since, only one morning I gave them to Mr. Bridgman to be copied out as soon as he could; and he delivered them me back again, and they have not been out of my Custody since, only the night before last Night they were sent to Mr. Solicitor to read, and brought immediately to me again.

Vol. III.

Mr. Sol. Gen. To whom did your Lordship deliver them to be copied?

L. Sidney. To Mr. Bridgman, I tell you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So that they were never out of your Lordship's Hands till now, but only in Mr. Bridgman's Hands?

L. Sidney. No, I kept them in my Pocket ever since, only the Night before last Night when they were sent to you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did your Lordship mark them before they were delivered to Mr. Bridgman to copy?

L. Sidney. Yes, I marked them when I received them.

L. Preston. My Lord Chief Justice, your Lordship does observe that Captain Billop swears that they were never out of his Possession till he delivered them to my Lord Nottingham; my Lord Nottingham says he never opened them, but left the Pacquet upon the Table while I was examining.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray, my Lord, will you speak a little louder that I may hear you?

L. Preston. My Lord, I am saying, my Lord Nottingham says, That while he was examining me, the Pacquet lay upon the Table unopened, and were never out of his Eye till he sent them sealed by Captain Billop, and so they come to my Lord President, and they were kept by my Lord President; my Lord President says, my Lord Churchill saw the Papers, and they were in his Possession.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston, your Lordship does mistake my Lord President, he does not say that they were in my Lord Marlborough's Hands; but he did communicate them at the Cabinet Council where my Lord Marlborough was; he said indeed, they were in the King's Hands, but he was by all the while.

L. Preston. From that time they came out of my Lord President's Hands, I know not what may be put in, nor what taken out, these Papers are not sealed, as I hear of, afterwards; and passing through so many Hands, no body knows what may be done to them: Truly, I think it very hard to swear, after all this, that these are the Papers that were taken aboard the Smack.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Will you please to ask any Questions to satisfy your self of any of these Noble Lords?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I'll put your Lordship right.

L. Preston. With all my Heart, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordship hears what Captain Billop says; he says, he brought them, as he took them out of Ashton's Bosom, to my Lord Nottingham: My Lord Nottingham opened them before him, and did deliver them to him again, having made them up. My Lord Nottingham says, the same Papers Captain Billop delivered him, he delivered back again, all, and no more; and Billop says, he carried them to my Lord President; my Lord President shew'd them to the King, and afterwards carried them to the Cabinet Council ; there the same Papers were opened, and there they were marked, some by my Lord Marlborough, and all by my Lord Sidney.

L. Preston. Your Lordship will please to observe this ; my Lord Nottingham was pleased to say, he opened no Papers till I was called in and examined, and then Captain Billog withdrew. Now, my Lord, I don't know whether the Captain can say that these were the very same Papers that he took in the Smack ?

L. C. J. Holt. Captain Billog says, that he saw the Papers opened by my Lord Nottingham.

Captain Billog. My Lord Preston observes a thing that is very right, my Lord, that after I had delivered the Pacquet to my Lord Nottingham, while my Lord was examined, I withdrew ; but my Lord Nottingham has given your Lordship an account, that he had not opened the Pacquet then, but only the small Letter or Note that lay apart from the rest : But, my Lord, the Pacquet was in the same condition when I came in again, upon the Table, as when I left it ; my Lord Nottingham, as I believe, had not opened that Pacquet, for I found it just as I left it, upon the Table.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Nottingham says, he delivered back to Captain Billog all the Papers that he received from him ; they were never out of my Lord Nottingham's presence ; nor were they opened, as my Lord says, but in Billog's presence, nor opened till after my Lord's Examination, except the little Paper that was stuck in, and was loose upon taking away the Lead.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray swear Mr. Bridgman.
(Which was done.)

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, when you received the Bundle of Papers from my Lord Sidney, to whom were they carried, and to whom were they delivered ?

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord Sidney gave me these Papers to have them copied ; and I copied some of them with my own Hand, the others I delivered to Mr. Poultney, and were copied in my presence in the Office : They were never out of my sight, and as soon as ever they were copied, I carried them back to my Lord Sidney, and delivered them to him myself.

L. Preston. Were any of them taken from you, Sir ?

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord, I say I copied some of them myself, the others were copied in my sight and presence, in the Office.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, Sir, let me ask you one Question ; Were the same papers that were delivered to you by my Lord Sidney, re-delivered back again and altered ?

Mr. Bridgman. I am very sure I gave them all the same back again, because I read them every one before they were copied.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did you observe my Lord Sidney had marked them before you had them ?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, they were all marked before I had them.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire to ask Mr. Bridgman this Question, Pray, Sir, were they sealed up when you sent them to my Lord Sidney ?

Mr. Bridgman. No, they were not sealed, they were tied up, but about the Seals I remember when I was in my Lord Sidney's Office —

L. C. J. Holt. The Question is ask'd you, Whether you carried them back sealed or no ?

Mr. Bridgman. No. They were not sealed when they were delivered to me, but I can safely swear they were never out of my Custody till I delivered them back again ; for what I did not copy myself, were copied in my sight.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. But your Lordship is pleased to observe they were all mark'd by my Lord Sidney before they were delivered unto him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have done with our living Witnesses for the present, and will read the Papers.

Mr. Bridgman. One thing, my Lord, I do remember, as soon as my Lord Sidney received the Papers back again, he looked over every one of them and read them, and looked upon the Marks.

L. Preston. If your Lordship please, I would beg the favour to ask one Question of my Lord Sidney ; Pray, my Lord, did your Lordship number the Papers ?

L. Sidney. No, my Lord, I did not number them.

L. Preston. But your Lordship says upon your Oath and Honour, that those are the very Marks upon them that your Lordship set there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are indeed to produce them, and then we shall ask that particular Question.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Sidney will see them, and then he will answer your Lordship's Question.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Preston, my Lord Nottingham is here a Witness, and his Occasions call him away, have you a mind to ask him any more Questions ?

L. Preston. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. What say you, Gentlemen, have you any further occasion for my Lord Nottingham ?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we must beg his Lordship's Patience, we do not know what occasion there may be ; I desire this Paper may be shewn to my Lord Sidney.

(which was done)

L. Sidney. That is my mark, that Paper I know is one of the Papers.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Here are two of them, one of these is the Copy of the other, both were taken in the same Packet, the one is fairer written than the other.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, the Paper we are now offering to you is that which I mentioned before, it is the Result of a Conference ; there were two of them taken in this Bundle, the one of them seems to be the first Draught, the other is a Copy more fairly written ; but I think they are both in effect the same ; however they were both taken in the same Pacquet, and you shall hear them read.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire that before it be read, it may be shewn to Capt. Billog, to know whether it be the very Paper that he took.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, let Capt. Billog look upon it.

Capt. Billog. My Lord, I do not remember that Paper.

L. Preston. Your Lordship observes that Capt. Billog cannot swear that this was one of the Papers that he took.

Capt. Billog. All the Papers that I looked into I marked, and all the Papers that I mark'd I can swear to, and no others.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Did you look into all the Papers ?

Capt.

Cap^t. Billop. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Holt. But he swears all that he brought to my Lord Nottingham were sealed up by my Lord Nottingham, and carried by him from my Lord Nottingham to my Lord President, and my Lord President swears he delivered them all to my Lord Sidney, and my Lord Sidney swears this is one of those Papers.

L. Preston. Certainly; my Lord's swearing to a Paper in this manner cannot be a good Proof: my Circumstances, my Lord, are very hard, and your Lordship, I have heard, ought to be of Council for me in any Point of Law; and, my Lord, I humbly desire to know, whether this can be a Proof of a Paper, that he says was taken in a Pacquet, and yet he can't swear it?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, he does not swear that this was one of the Papers; but the Question is, Whether all these Witnesses together do not prove it? You see how the Evidence runs; All the Papers taken were delivered to my Lord Nottingham: All that were delivered to him were sent back by him sealed, and delivered to my Lord President; my Lord President brought them all to the Cabinet-Council, and delivered them to my Lord Sidney, and this my Lord Sidney says is one of those Papers;

L. Preston. My Lord, I have a very great Honour for that Noble Lord, and I am sure, if he had not been upon his Oath, he would have said that which was truth; but in this condition that I am in, I must crave leave to observe every thing I can for my self, and I cannot but say these Papers are very oddly managed, and delivered up and down from one hand to another; I desire your Lordship would please to observe that these Papers are here brought after a very odd manner.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord Preston, you are not to sum up the Evidence to the Jury till we have done, nor to make your Observations.

L. C. J. Holt. Brother, my Lord opposes the reading of the Paper, as not well proved.

L. Preston. I do so, my Lord, and I hope your Lordship will advise me whether you do think it a sufficient Evidence and Proof of these Papers; they are Papers that have been copied out, and sent unsealed from hand to hand by some Messengers from one to another, and which now appear to be unsealed, and some of which he that took them cannot swear to.

Jury-man. My Lord, we cannot hear one word that is said.

L. Preston. That is my misfortune: but I am urging to my Lords the Judges, whether this Paper ought to be read, and I desire your Lordship to advise me, whether it can be admitted as Evidence, being thus oddly proved?

L. C. J. Holt. It is Evidence surely, my Lord: but the Question is, What Credit the Jury will give to this Evidence, the Jury are Judges of that; but certainly it is Evidence to have the Paper read.

L. Preston. I doubt not but your Lordship will do me Justice, and I readily acquiesce in what your Lordships do appoint.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, see how the Evidence stands about this matter; first it is sworn by Billop, that he took a Bundle of Papers, tho' 'tis true, the Particulars he does not undertake to swear to; Well, what is next? why, says he, all that was in that Bundle I carried to my Lord Nottingham, and I received from my Lord Nottingham all that I carried to him. What says my Lord Nottingham? he swears I delivered back again to Cap^t. Billop the same Papers he delivered to me, and all and no more, sealed up with my Seal. When he has it sealed up, what does he do with it? why he carries it to my Lord President. Is there any possibility of creeping out of this Evidence? Well, he delivers them to my Lord Sidney, and my Lord Sidney says this is one of those Papers: Can there be a plainer Evidence than this? when he says, all he had lie carried to my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord Nottingham swears all he did receive he sent back sealed by him to my Lord President, and my Lord President swears all he received so sealed he gave to my Lord Sidney, and my Lord Sidney swears this is one of those Papers.

L. Preston. But your Lordship will please to observe they were carried to the King, and they were in the hands of my Lord Marlborough.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, nor out of the sight of my Lord President. My Lord President says my Lord Marlborough marked some of them, but they were delivered to my Lord Sydney, and my Lord Sydney does say they are the same Papers that he had from my Lord President, and my Lord President says, they are the same that were brought him by Captain Billop from my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord Nottingham swears he sealed them, the same Papers, all and no more than he received from Captain Billop.

L. C. Baron. Your Lordship should observe where the defect of the Proof is, and then it may be supplied; for truly, put it altogether, I cannot see how there could be a plainer Proof given.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire to be heard as to this, my Lord President was pleased to say, that some of them were delivered to the King.

L. C. J. Holt. No, they were shewn to the King, but my Lord President was by all the while that the King did read them.

L. Preston. My Lord, where a Mans Life lyes at stake, and all that is dear to him, your Lordship will certainly allow him to make what observations he can for himself.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, in God's Name, by all means: You shall have all the Liberty you can desire.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we desire my Lord President will be pleased to look upon those Papers.

Which was done.

L. President. This is one of the Papers that I received from Captain Billop, and which I shewed to the King, and which I brought to the Cabinet Council; and this is another of the Papers.

L. Preston. Pray my Lord, was your Lordship by when His Majesty read those Letters.

L. President. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. Preston. My Lord, I ask it for this end, to know whether they were out of your Lordships sight.

L. President. No never; I was in the Kings Cabinet, His Majesty read some of them, and then put them up again, and gave them me, and I delivered them at the Cabinet Council to my Lord Sidney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we desire this Paper may be read.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it.
Clerk of the Peace, Reads.

The Result of a Conference between some Lords and Gentlemen, both Tories and Whigs, in which it was undertaken to prove the possibility and method of restoring by a Fr. Power, without endangering the Protestant Religion and Civil Administration, according to the Laws of this Kingdom.

1 F Must either Oblige or Conquer us: If the last, he will find few helps here, but a bloodier resistance than ever the Romans, Saxons, or Normans found: It being incredible, how unanimous and obstinate that very thought renders the People, so that it may make us a heap of ruin, but no Nation that can ever help or import any thing to F.

2. If K. L. desires to oblige Us, and make the Work easie, that he may be at leisure to ply the Empire or Italy, or to have an advantageous Peace, he must take off the frightful Character we have of him, and shew us he has no such design, as returning our Offended K. a Conqueror upon us, but that he can and will be our Friend and Mediator; upon which terms he will find that many Lords and Gentlemen will speedily shew themselves to his Satisfaction; especially, if he makes haste, and loses no approaching Opportunity.

3. If he incline to this sort of Sense, he must over-rule the Bigotry of St. G. and dispose their Minds to think of those Methods that are more likely to gain the Nation; for there is one silly thing or other daily done there, that comes to our notice here, which prolongs what they so passionately desire. The Methods thought upon are these,

First, To prevent dangerous and foolish Intelligence, by forbidding all in that Court to write any News hither, and that K. J. only have his Correspondence by whom to hear from, and speak to People here; since Letters so often miscarry, and are filled with nothing but what we should not hear; and what we have are Arguments for the most part against the K's Restoration.

Secondly, Since there is a great Body of Protestants that never defected, and that many Thousands are returning, and that they are the Natural Weight and Power of these Kingdoms, by having the Heads, Hands and Wealth of their side, to the odds and advantage of at least Two Hundred Protestants to one Catholic; the K. may think of nothing short of a Protestant Administration, nor of nothing more for the Catholics than a Legal Liberty of Conscience; for much e mutt is against all other Notions, to which all private Passions, and artificial Frames in Government must yield or break. He may Reign a Catholic in Devotion, but he must Reign a Protestant in Government. Cromwel could not, yet on a broader bottom, with a Victorious Army, subsist or keep what he had got.

Thirdly, He must give us a Model of this at St. G. by preferring the Protestants that are with him above the Catholics; one being Loyal upon less ties of Interest, and to tell the Nation here what they are to hope for when he comes.

Fourthly, He must give Incouragement to Lords and Gentlemen here to come to him, at least Seven or Nine for a standing Council, which will make us here think he is in some degree ours again, and that we have a relation to him, and some interest and share in him, by the Men of Quality of our own Religion that are with him. This will incomparably facilitate the matter here, nor will they, when they come, come empty, and in their own Names, which is still better, and will be more satisfactory there.

Fifthly, To induce this, English Protestants should be encouraged by an Edict of Liberty from the K. of F. to have Chappels at their own Costs, in which to Worship God after their respective ways, by which that K. will make us reflect upon his Conduct towards his Hugonots, rather to flow from the hazard he thought himself in by their Antimon. and resisting Principles, than a desire of Persecution.

Lastly, All other requisite Measures depending upon the acceptance this finds, an Answer hereunto is impatiently desired by those that have Discouraged the K's Business to this Maturity. So ended with an Unanimous Consent, both Tories and Whiggs upon this Occasion, that are in a way of closing in his Interest.

L. Preston. I can very safely swear, my Lord, that I never saw that Paper in my Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Come, go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is another Paper of the same, but the Words that are written short in that are written at length in this.

The Paper was read accordingly, and in the first blank there was written K. J. in the first Paragraph (France) twice, in the third Paragraph (St. Germain's) in the Fifth, (Mathemat. for Much e mutt) the rest are obvious, and need not to be supplied.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray shew my Lord Sidney that Paper, what says your Lordship to it?

L. Sidney. This is one of the Papers that I marked, and that I received from my Lord President.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will my Lord President be pleased to give himself the trouble to cast his Eye upon that, and see if that be one of the Papers.

L. President. My Lord, I remember it well, it is one of the Papers I received from Capt. Billop.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. This Paper is what Mr. Solicitor mention'd as heads of a Declaration.

L. Preston. My Lord, I think it necessary to offer one thing to your Lordships before it be read, I desire Capt. Billop should swear it to be one of his Papers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If your Lordship pleases, you observe what has been done already. My Lord President says 'tis one of those Papers that was sent him by my Lord Nottingham; and my Lord Sidney has sworn it is one of the Papers he had from my Lord President.

L. Preston. I shall not give your Lordship any more trouble than needs; I only offer it to your Lordship: I wave it.

L. C. J. Holt. There is Evidence enough to have the Paper read.

Clerk of the Peace, Reads.

That the King will return with a design of making an Entire Conquest of his People, is so so ridiculous as well as difficult, that it needs not be spoken to.

That the Kings Declaration be worded in General Terms, That he will Govern by the Laws, that they shall be the Rule of his Actions, that he will Endeavour to settle Liberty of Conscience by Law, that whatsoever things were formerly done by him, which occasioned Jealousies in the minds of his People, shall be left to the determination of a Parliament, to be formally and regularly called as soon as is possible.

That he has given sufficient Evidence of his unwillingness to bring an Army of Strangers into his Kingdom, by refusing the Succours of the King of France offered him, and which were even ready to be Embarked upon the first Notice of the P. of Oranges intended Invasion.

That he brings with him such an Army only as is necessary for his own defence, and for the security of such of his Loyal Subjects as shall resort to him, that he will dismiss them as soon as he shall have rid the Nation of those Foreigners who have Invaded it, and trampled upon the Laws and Liberties of his People.

The Kings large exercising his Dispensing Power gave the great alarm to the People, and contributed most of all toward the General Defection. Yet when that Power came to be debated in the last Convention, there appeared so many difficulties in the limiting of it, (every Body, even the present Judges believing it necessary, That a dispensing Power should be in the K.) That it was let fall, and that point remains as it was. And without mentioning that, or any other particular, the K. can be in no danger by leaving all things which have been the occasion of Jealousies to the determination of Parliament, where besides the Kings professed Friends and Servants, there will not want others who will be glad of opportunity to ingratiate themselves.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Gentlemen of the Jury, If you desire any thing to be read again, or any thing doubtful in it, should be Explained, tell us, and it shall be done.

Juryman. No, my Lord, There is no occasion for that. I believe we apprehend these three Papers that have been read.

L. Preston. My Lord, It is necessary the Gentlemen of the Jury should be satisfied in this point.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Ay in any point, and if they desire any scruple should be cleared, the Court will do it for them.

Juryman. My Lord, I desire to know whether Captain Billop Signed that Paper or no.

L. C. J. Holt. No, he did not sign half of them, but unless it be proved, you ought to take it for granted, that it is not Signed by him.

L. Preston. My Lord, I think it fit the Jury should be satisfied in any scruple they raise.

L. C. J. Holt. They asked this Question, Whether Captain Billop did sign the Paper, and I told them Captain Billop did not say so, and therefore they are to take it for granted, that he did not.

Juryman. My Lord, We take this last Paper that was read to be a Paper that was delivered in the Bundle taken from Mr. Ashton to my Lord Nottingham, but not Signed by Capt. Billop.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Then you take it right.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then the next paper that we produce is a List of the English Fleet that these Gentlemen were carrying over into France.

L. Preston. That is printed, and to be found in every Coffee-House.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Shew that paper to Captain Billop. (Which was done.)

Can you take it upon your Oath, Captain, That that paper was in the Pacquet that was taken in Mr. Ashton's Bosom.

Captain Billop. That paper I have marked, and that paper I swear was in the Pacquet I took away from Mr. Ashton aboard the Smack.

L. C. J. Holt. You are sure of it.

Captain Billop. Yes my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then read it.

Cl. of Peace. Reads.

Memorandum, The new Ships Building are expected, will be ready to be lanch'd by the end of March.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray shew this Paper to Captain Billop. (Which was done.)

Pray was that paper there among the others that were taken with these Gentlemen?

Captain Billop. Yes it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you take it upon your Oath, that that paper was in the Pacquet that was in Mr. Ashton's Bosom.

Captain Billop. Yes, my Lord, I can.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray shew him that paper too. (Which was done.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. And can you take upon you to say, That that was one of the papers in the Pacquet?

Captain Billop. Yes, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We desire these may be read.

Clerk of the Peace reads, New-Years Eve, and it is directed for Mr. Redding.

Sir, Though the Bearer of this will do us the Justice, to assure you, we are as full of Duty, as unfeignedly, and unconcernedly yours, as your self could wish; yet this Gentleman has undertaken. You will forgive the Presumption, if I do my self the Honour to give you this fresh assurance in a few words, which I hope we do by our Accounts; I shall omit no Occasions, not neglecting the least, and making zealous Wishes for the greatest, to shew our selves such as we ought to be.

Sir,

' Sir, I speak in the plural, because I write
' my Elder Brother's Sentiments as well as my ' Own, and the rest of the Family, though
' lessened in Number; yet if we are not migh-
' tily out in our Accounts, we are growing in
' our Interest, that is in yours: He that delivers
' this, will I hope, intirely to your Satisfaction,
' represent us and me in particular, as with all
' the Devotion imaginable, and unchangeable
' Affection'.

Yours, God grant the happiest New-Year.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Read the other paper.

Cl. of Peace. This is dated Dec. 31. 1690. I must not let this Bearer depart, Madam, without assuring you—

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hold, Sir, Don't read that yet.
Here, shew this paper to Captain Billop:

(Which was done.)

What say you Captain Billop? Is that one of the papers taken from Mr. Ashton.

Captain Billop. Yes, This is one that I read and marked.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then read it.

Cl. of Peace, reads: This is directed for Mistris Redding.

' As 'tis impossible for me to expresse that Ex' traordinary great Satisfaction it gave me this ' time Twelve Month, when I had the Honour
' to receive that mark of your Favour and ' Goodness under your own hand; so I have ' lived in some pain for an Opportunity to write
' you my humblest Acknowledgments and truest
' Duty, from which by the Grace of God I am no
' more capable of swerving, than of renouncing
' my hopes of Heaven: I lay this in behalf of my
' Elder Brother and the rest of my nearest Rela' tions, as well as for my self: You may intire-
' ly depend upon us, not only for a constant ad' herence to so well chosen a Principle, but for
' our utmost Activity to promote your Interest,
' which are inseparable from our own: I need
' come to no Particulars by this Bearer, who ' can and will tell our whole heart; and I wish
' you could see them, how sincerely they are ' devoted to your Service. God grant you a
' most happy New Year, and many, very many,
' and very happy. Our young Master hath all
' our best Wishes, he daily gains more Friends,
' and we get ground of his Adversaries.

New Years-Eve.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now read your other Paper of the 31. Dec. 1690.

Cl. of Peace. Reads, December 31. 1690. ' I
' must not let this Bearer depart, Madam, with' out assuring you of my best respects: I have ' written by him to a Friend of yours, but de' pend upon you to give my Note Credit.

' Though my Creditors were no Friends to
' the Match which has been so long in treaty,
' for your Relations have been very hard upon
' me this last Summer; yet as soon as I could ' go safely abroad, I pursued the business, and
' do beg you to believe, that no Endeavours of ' mine shall be wanting to perfect the Settle' ment. You once put me in hopes of seeing ' you before this Christmas: Your Friends are ' sorry for the Disappointment, pray lose no
' more time than is of absolute necessity: The ' Bearer will tell you all things may be now

' easily settled, if the right way be taken. I
' long to hear how your young Daughter does,
' she will find many Friends, and I hope her ' Portion will be well secured. God send you a ' happy New-Year, and that I may be merry
' with you before it be far spent, and I beseech
' you, keep me in the good Opinion of your ' Friend, I will always make good what I pro' mised to you. It is directed for Mrs. Charlton.

Jury-man. My Lord, I desire to know what that is directed to.

Cl. of Peace. 'Tis directed to Mrs. Charlton.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Shew Captain Billop those two Papers. (Which was done.)

What say you to them Captain?

Captain Billop. My mark is on the outside, but there is nothing written in that, I believe it is taken off from the Inner paper.

L. Preston. Pray my Lord is this any proof? I beseech you for God's sake to have a regard to a Man's Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray shew the paper, to my Lord Sidney. (Which was done.)

Lord Sidney. This was one of the papers I received from my Lord President.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we must beg my Lord
President would be pleased to look on it.

(Which was done.)

L. President. This was one of the papers brought me by Captain Billop, from my Lord
Nottingham, in that Bundle.

L. Preston. Captain Billop does not know the paper, though his mark be to it.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is not indeed very material, whether he does or no, because he did not read all; but I would observe that 'tis sworn by my Lord Sidney, that this was delivered to him by my Lord President, and sworn by my Lord President, that he had it in that Bundle from Capt. Billop.

L. Preston. But, my Lord, it does shew that there may be some alteration in the papers, because he having marked it, and marking none but what he read, he does not now own that to be the paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will your Lordship be pleased to take it as it is: These are two papers;
the one is only the Cover, the other is the Writing: Captain Billop has only marked the Cover, and not the Writing, but my Lord Sidney he has marked the paper it self, as delivered him by my Lord President, and my Lord President has given you an account, that it is one of the Papers he received in that Bundle from Captain Billop.

L. Preston. I only mark, That there may be alterations made in these papers since they were taken.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray read it.

Cl. of Peace, December 31. 1690. it is directed to Mr. Jackson.

' The Bearer can give you so full an account
' of all things relating to your Estate here; that ' I need not have troubled you at this time, but
' that I am desirous to lay hold of any Oppor' tunity I think safe to assure you of my Service,
' and that I will never quit your Interest what' ever the rest of the Freeholders do: Your Ad-
' versary has been so hard to his Neighbours,
' that he has extreamly disoblig'd all the old
' Tenants, and a little matter would redeem the ' whole Estate, if you would appear in Westmin- ster

After Hall your self, the best Council have a good Opinion of your Title, and will zealously pursue your Instructions: I only beg you would hasten them to us, and that you will appear your self as soon as is possible, no time should be lost, and the Cause may be brought to a final hearing before the end of Easter Term, if it be well solicited. I heartily wish you a happy New-Year, and beg you to tell Mr. Charlton that I long to know wherein I may serve him, and that I will follow his Directions to the utmost, while I live: God keep you and yours.

L. Preston. Pray, Sir, to whom is that Letter directed?

Cl. of Peace. To Mr. Jackson, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray shew that paper to my Lord Sidney. (Which was done.)

L. Sidney. This is one of the papers I receiv'd from my Lord President.

Then it was shewn to my Lord President.

L. President. This is one of the same papers that I received in the Bundle from Captain Billop.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it.

Cl. of Peace. Reads, 31st. December.

The Interruption of the former Correspondency had a very ill Effect many ways, but for that reason, no Opportunity ought now to be lost, and I hope this will prove a happy one.

In Trade as well as in Government Schemes must be laid, for there is no living from hand to mouth any more in Commerce than in Politicks. Lay therefore your designs probably, and pursue them diligently, and with Vigour, though it be a hazardous time, yet by venturing boldly, where venturing is advisable, it often returns great profit.

There is nothing more to be said, but to give the Bearer fit and full Seasons to tell what he knows, both as to Goods fit for our Market and when and where to be sent; the Sea will quickly grow so troublesome, that unless you dispatch what you intend for us, you will lose a great opportunity of advantage. I hope the account he has to give of our Negotiations here, with the Merchants that deal with us, especially those that have lately brought us their custom, will both encourage a larger Trade, and excite the utmost diligence; I will say nothing of my self, it shall be enough that I can live in the good Opinion of one I bear so great a reverence and affection for; but for this honest Factor, I must own I can hardly say enough. Truth and Boldness are excellent qualities in a Servant, and he has shewn both, as occasion has required him to shew them.

I have but one word to add, and pray take it as the truest mark of unalterable respect, chuse well, but have to do but with a few, for a multitude may give, but can never keep Council.

I shall with more impatience than becomes me, wait the result of this, and it will be a great mark of Goodness, to let us have it the best and safest way.

Once more, let not the Season spend unprofitably, for a more likely one can hardly come than between this and the 1st of March. Interpret this I pray, as no private interest of my own, or partial motion of any other Person. It is my Sense, my Duty, and my Friendship, which will not let me prevaricate, nor suffer those I love and honour to lose so happy and pressing an occasion of advantage. With the best Wishes I close up this, and am &c.

Vol. III.

L. Preston. Pray, my Lord, who is that Paper directed to?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. This is directed to no body at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew that Paper to my Lord Sydney.

(Which was done.)

Lord Sydney. This was one of the Papers I had from my Lord President.

Then it was shewn to my Lord President.

Lord President. This is one of the Papers I had from Captain Billop.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it.

Clerk of the Peace Reads. This is Dated December 31. but is not directed to any Body at all.

It is a presumption incident to those that are any where upon the spot, to think that they know better than those that are not, what is fittest to be done in any Occurrence: This makes me say, that now is the time to make large advantages by Trading; the Sea being freer than two Months past, or we can hope it will be two Months hence. This Gentleman is well instructed in our Markets, and what the Goods are we want, and when and where they should be sent: It is most earnestly desired that this happy opportunity may not be lost, especially by the late Undertakers, and I would not for much, they should receive the least disgust. They are somewhat positive in their terms; but they also say, they will be good and constant Customers; and I have more than once seen the mischief of over-rating and over-staying the Market. Opportunities are to be used, they cannot be given by Men.

The Bearer needs nothing from me to commend him, but he is deserving in our Opinion here, and many will take their measures by the usage he finds there; and indeed the pressing posture of our Trading Affairs will not permit more Experiments. If the several Parcels arrive nor, that have been promised, before the 10th of March at furthest, (especially the Copper and Linnen, of which the Bearer will be more particular) I am satisfied we shall lose this Summers profit. I am the more pressing because I am well assured of what I write; and if ever I judged right it is upon this occasion.

I have said nothing of another Gentleman that takes this Opportunity to see those parts, but he has shewn a zeal and a sincerity in this affair equal to most. Jo. is not yet gone, by a misfortune, but he will follow with a good Postscript in this affair. Of my self I will say nothing, I hope I need not, for no body without Vanity can be more sincerely and affectionately a Friend and Servant to the Company than my self. I writ at large yesterday, and cannot write what the hand that gives this can say; and therefore will write no more, but that with the greatest Respect, I am, &c.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray shew this Paper to my Lord Sydney.

(Which was done.)

Lord Sydney. This is one of those Papers I received from my Lord President.

X x x x x

Then

Then it was shewn to the Lord President.

Lord President. This was one of the Papers in the Bundle I received from Capt. Billop.

L. C. J. Holt. Then read it.

Clerk of the Peace, Reads.

SIR, I vow to you, I do not repine at having lost all for your sake which I got by your favour, but it grieves me extremely that there is not that left which can secure me from being troublesome to you; for that is the thing in the World I would not be. I have told my Lord my condition. What I desire of you he thinks very moderate, I hope you will. Pray Sir be not backward in settling my little affair, for I have deserved your Care. Your Daughter and I must starve, if this Government can make us. I hope our Interests are not divided, that is, you have an equal tenderness at least for both. If you think fit to speak what I would have you to this Bearer, he will give me a just account of it. You know he is obliged to be my Friend, and I believe him grateful, since he ventures so boldly for you. He brings with him some merry Papers. Adieu, for I dare write no more; but pray send a Messenger on purpose to me, that I may know exactly what you will do, and would have me do. If you send upon no other business, there will be no danger. Pray Sir ask my Lord, and he will tell you how I have been used, and upon what account; I believe you know it not.

Dec. 29. Your Daughter is very well, very tall, and very pretty, as I am told.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That is not directed to any body neither.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray then shew these Papers to my Lord Sydney and my Lord President; (which was done). They were two.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. These Papers my Lord Sydney swears he received from my Lord President, and my Lord President swears he received them in the Bundle from Billop.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. We pray they may be read.

Clerk of the Peace. Dec. 31. 90.

WAs my Condition more desperate and uneasy than it is, I desire no greater satisfaction than to have done my Duty to so good a Master, I wish it was of more use to him; that is not my fault, nor of those I have acted with: Let it be looked into what has been foretold both as to Engl. Scot. and Irel. and see if most of it is not come to pass already, and the rest will follow if not prevented. I wish it may also be considered what usage we have met with from men employed, and how they have left your Business and Friends; how they managed it, you will know from all hands; things they could not do, nor durst not undertake were better undone than not done by them. Men in this Place, and in these Times, must have some Courage as well as Sense to do any thing with People here. It is not my own ill usage makes me say this, but my concern for one I wish the best to in the World, and will give my Proofs of this upon all occasions. I need not enlarge, since all our Grievances are known to him that brings this. For my own part I will stay here, so long as I can be safe, if with ne're so great trouble; but it would be some Comfort to know Men (when driven from hence) may be so; therefore the reports of Peoples usage are terrible, as well as of the indiscretions of St. Germ. Family, we feel the smart of it by ridiculous Letters falling daily into the hands of the Government. Their Master and Mistress are little obliged by it no more than we: If there is any thing, Sir, you do particularly command me, or depend upon me for, let me know it. I cannot undertake much, nor furnish more. I have still helped every Body, and paid to every thing I could; and if a twelve month ago my condition was what I then represented, you best know if it has been mended. Use, and considering that of others, makes me grow more contented; and if the prospect of misery to us all was any satisfaction, that is now plainly seen.

Pray God bless us all, by restoring every Man his own, and you with long Life.

He that gives you this, hath furnished for your use to me, &c. Two Hundred Pounds, which I desire may be repaid.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read the t'other, it is in the same hand, and was enclosed in the former.

Clerk of the Peace Reads. I only beg Madam, no ill malicious Report may take any place in your Thoughts, in regard to me. I value your good Opinion, and will endeavour to deserve it. I can do little towards, but wish most heartily for your Happiness. I know no Interest, Madam, but my Masters and yours, nor do I think they are to be made two: If you command me any thing, I will faithfully obey you, as I have ever done him.

We all depend upon this Bearers accounts of us and our Condition. His Faith and Courage hath been enough experienced.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Here is another Paper, shew that to Capt. Billop.

(Which was done.)

Capt. Billop. This Paper I did mark, and this was one that was in the Bundle.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. What is it Brother, pray open it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. 'Tis a draught of a Cypher, with an Alphabet of Names for carrying on the Correspondence.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Your Lordship observes these matters were designed to be carried on under several sorts of Cants.

L. C. J. Holt. What says Captain Billop to that Paper?

Capt. Billop. That was one of the Papers that I read at my Lord Nottingham's, and markt it there.

L. C. J. Holt. Then Read it.

Clerk of the Peace Reads. For Mrs. Anne Russell, to be left with Mrs. Richeson at the Blue-Boar in Ryder-street, near St. James's.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. Then the next Papers we produce are the Bills of Exchange; Pray shew them to Capt. Billop. What say you Capt. Billop, were those among the other Papers?

Capt. Billop. Yes, they were I remember very well.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, they are in French, and therefore we must Swear a Gentleman that we have here, to interpret: Call Mr. Humphry Levermere.

Mr. Levermere, Here I am.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray how much do they all come to?

Mr. Levermere. They come to 500 l. wanting but Twelve pence.

Mr. Serj. Tremayn. My Lord, we have shewn your Lordship part of the Papers that were taken in this Pacquet, but we have reserved three of the Papers till the last place; and these three Papers, if we had no other, were sufficient to maintain this Indictment, for they are written all with my Lord Preston's own Hand, wherein he gives an Account how the French should Invade us, how the Forts may be taken, how London should be plagued, and what a sort of Rascals the Clergy of London are; these are the Contents of the Papers among other things. Pray shew them to Captain Billop.

(Which was done.)

Captain Billop. These were two Papers that were in the Pacquet, and the other little one with them.

L. Preston. My Lord, I would desire your Lordship to observe one thing, to the best of my remembrance, Captain Billop said, he only mark'd six of the Papers.

L. C. J. Holt. How many has he sworn to?

L. Preston. I believe he has proved more.

Capt. Billop. I never said so; I mark'd a great many, tho' not all, but I did not say how many.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were these Papers taken in the Pacquet?

Capt. Billop. Yes, all three.

L. Preston. Just now he said but two.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you look'd upon them all, Sir?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I marked but two of them, but the other little Paper was with them, I read them my self, I remember it very well.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then we pray the Clerk may read them.

(Cl. of Peace reads.) Lady D. 2000 l.

And 200 l. for Shop Debts —

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord, we would open this piece of Evidence before we read it,
 X x x x x 2 that

Mr. Bland. I have seen my Lord's Hand sometimes.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Have you looked upon those Papers, Sir?

Mr. Bland. Yes, I have.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray whose Hand are they?

Mr. Bland. I do believe these three Papers are my Lord Preston's Hand-writing.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we pray Mr. Warr may be sworn. (Which was done.)

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Do you know my Lord Preston's Hand?

Mr. Warr. I have seen my Lord Preston write, but not very often; most commonly it was only his Name: but I have seen him write some Letters too.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Sir, look upon those Papers; whose Hand are they do you believe?

Mr. Warr. This Paper seems to be like my Lord Preston's Hand; the other I cannot say much of, because that which I commonly saw him write was a large fair Hand, and this is a little Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Mr. Warr, look upon these Seals; whose Seals were they?

Mr. Warr. I believe the Seals to be my Lord Preston's; one of them was his Seal when Secretary of State.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You were under him in that Office, were you not?

Mr. Warr. Yes, my Lord, I was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Now my Lord, we have done with our Evidence, and shall rest here till we hear what my Lord Preston says to it.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston, you have heard what has been said concerning the matter you have been indicted for; What has your Lordship to say for your self?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. If the Gentlemen of the Jury desire to see the Seals, they may have them.

(The Seals were shewn to the Jury.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have done for the present.

L. C. J. Holt. Then if your Lordship please, you may make your Defence.

L. Preston. My Lord, in the first place I must refer my self again to my Indictment, for I find, my Lord, that the Treasons of which I am accused, were none of them done in the County of Middlesex, and they are laid to be done within this County; I find nothing of that kind proved upon me to be done here, for any Memorandums that they say may be in that hand, I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will consider, that there was nothing followed upon any of these things, that may be found in those Papers: And in the next place, I desire to know, whether they are sufficiently proved to be mine; that is, whether similitude of Hands is proof or not against me in such a Case. I humbly offer these things to your Lordship, and hope your Lordship and the Jury will consider of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Is this your Lordship's Defence, my Lord?

L. Preston. My Lord, I leave these things to the Consideration of the Court and the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordship insists upon it first, that there is no act of Treason proved in the County of Middlesex; and then, whether similitude of Hands be a good proof to prove these three Papers, or any of them to be your hand.

L. Preston. No body saying they see me write them, if I did write them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord, have you no Witnesses, nor nothing that you would use of Evidence for your self?

L. C. J. Holt. Would your Lordship disprove any thing of the matter that has been proved against you?

L. Preston. I must deny the whole Fact; but I have no Witnesses or Evidence to offer you.

L. C. J. Holt. Then your Lordship has no more to say?

L. Preston. I have not. I must leave it so with your Lordship and the Gentlemen of the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We shall offer nothing farther, but leave it wholly to your Lordship.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordship has done then?

L. Preston. Your Lordship observes none of the Witnesses have declared that I was going into France, nor knew any thing of it. I did not hire the Ship, nor any thing of that kind; tho' I suppose if they had, it is not Treason; but your Lordship observes there is no such thing has been sworn.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, as to the first matter that your Lordship makes a Question upon, Whether there be any act of Treason proved in Middlesex, that does depend upon the proof of your Lordship's being concerned in the papers, for if your Lordship had an intention in carrying these papers into France, which speaks a design to invade this Realm, your Lordship took Boat in Middlesex at Surrey-Stairs, in prosecution of that Intention, there is an Overt-act in this County of Middlesex.

L. Preston. Your Lordship and the Gentlemen of the Jury observe these papers were not found upon me.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord; but if it be proved that your Lordship had an intention to carry these papers into France, and took Boat in order to go with them into France, in the County of Middlesex, where ever your Lordship acted in order to that design, that is Treason, and there you are guilty. It is a Treason complicated of several Facts, done in several places.

L. Preston. My Lord, I humbly desire to know, whether they have been proved to be my papers?

L. C. J. Holt. That is a Question that must be left to the Jury upon the Evidence.

L. Preston. No body swears they are mine; nor were they found upon me.

L. C. J. Holt. But what I am speaking to your Lordship, is in answer to your Question about the place, for you say, that there is nothing proved done in the County of Middlesex; now the Question is, Whether your Lordship had a design to go to France with these papers; if you had, and if your Lordship did go on Ship board in order to it, your taking Boat in Middlesex in order to go on Ship-board, is a Fact done in the County of Middlesex.

L. Preston. It is not proved by any Witnesses that I designed to go into France.

L. C. J. Holt. That is before the Jury upon the Evidence.

L. Preston. I hope your Lordship, and the Jury will observe 'tis not proved, and in the next place, there are no papers taken upon me, with humble Submission, there is no proof of any such thing.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, how far your Lordship was concerned in these papers, and whether you were going with them into France, is to be left upon the Evidence that hath been heard, to the Consideration of the Jury.

L. Preston. But I humbly submit that.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to say?

L. Preston. As to what I offer, that nothing has been proved in Middlesex, I hope your Lordship will take it to be a point of Law, and then it ought to be argued; and I desire I may have Council.

L. C. J. Holt. No, 'tis a Matter of Fact only; but if you please, the rest of my Lords the Judges may give you their Opinion; for this is a Question upon a Supposition that your Lordship was guilty of a Design of going into France, and this with a purpose to depose the King, and alter the Government; then the Question is upon such a Supposition that you were guilty of that Design, whether you were guilty in Middlesex or no.

L. Preston. My Lord, they have not proved that Design.

L. C. J. Holt. We do not say, it is taken for granted now, but 'tis a Question upon a Supposition. Now my Lord, I'll tell your Lordship in short my Opinion, the rest of the Judges will tell you theirs, I am of Opinion, if your Lordship had such a Design to go with these papers into France, and these Papers were formed by you, or you were privy to the Contents of them, then it is plainly proved, that you went into a Boat in the County of Middlesex, in order to carry on this Design, and that will make it a good Indictment, and here is a plain Overt-act of High-Treason in Middlesex.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I am of the same Opinion; for your Fact as to this particular point in Law stands thus: You are indicted of High-Treason in two points; one is, For conspiring to depose the King and Queen, and alter the Government: and the other is, For aiding and assisting the French King, and his Subjects, declared Enemies, and in open War against the King and Queen, and to invite the Enemies of the Kingdom to invade the Kingdom. Now this Design, and this Help and Assistance, are written in these papers; for they are Instructions for the carrying on of this Design. You my Lord are the Person that is charged to go with these papers to help on this Design; you began your Journey in the County of Middlesex, for according to the Evidence, you took Water at Surrey Stairs, which is in the County of Middlesex, and every step you made in pursuance of this Journey, is Treason, where-ever it was: So then here is a sufficient proof of a Fact in Middlesex.

L. Preston. That, my Lord, is a point of Law, and I humbly desire your Lordship, that I may have Council in this Case. It is not proved by any Body, that I said I would go into France; and in the next place, it is not proved that I had these papers about me; there has been no Evidence given that I did take Water with an intention to go with these papers into France.

L. C. J. Holt. The Jury are to be Judges of that.

L. Preston. Then my Lord, what have I done? I have not done any thing within the danger of any Statute upon which I am indicted; besides, Lord, what I have to offer further, is this, I think I ought to have two credible Witnesses to prove every Fact, and I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will consider, there is nothing but Supposition as to me; and I hope I and my Family shall not be ruined upon a Supposition.

L. C. J. Holt. Has your Lordship any more to say?

L. Preston. All the Judges have not given their Opinion.

L. C. J. Holt. The rest will give their Opinions, if you desire it.

My Lord Chief Baron, what say you?

L. C. Baron. My Lord Preston, I am called upon, it seems, to give my Opinion in this Case; but this I take it must be left to the Jury, what credit they will give to the proof. Your Lordship makes a Question, as the proof stands, whether here be any thing done in this County; here are Instructions given to the French King how to invade England and carry on the War against us. These Instructions are contained in several papers, and these papers in a Pacquet are carried to the Smack, which Smack was hired to go to France. You are found taking water at Surrey-Stairs, which is in the County of Middlesex, in order to go to the Smack: You did go to the Smack; the papers were taken in your Company, and were seen lying by your Seals; and the Witnesses swear, they believe some of them to be your Hand; you took care to desire to have them disposed of. Now how far the Jury will believe this matter of Fact, that is thus testified, is left to them; this seems to be the Proof, and if the Jury do believe it, here is a plain Evidence of an Overt Act in the County of Middlesex.

L. Preston. I do insist upon it, with humble Submission, it is not proved that these papers were taken upon me, or that I did take water at Surrey-Stairs to go to France.

L. C. Baron. That must be collected out of all the Circumstances; the Credit of which is left to the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. All the rest of my Lords the Judges are of the same Opinion, as they tell me? Have you any more, my Lord?

L. Preston. I must submit.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, My Lord Preston stands indicted for High Treason, in imagining and compassing the Deposition, Death, and Destruction of the King and Queen; and for that purpose, did write, or cause to be writ, several treasonable Papers and Letters, designed to go into France, and there to correspond with the French King and his Subjects, who are Enemies to the King and Queen; and to carry with him those treasonable Papers and Letters, containing a Project and a formed Design how this Kingdom should be invaded by Foreigners.

There is another Treason in the Indictment mention'd, and that is for adhering to and abetting the King's Enemies, there being open War declared between the King and Queen, and the French King.

You have heard, Gentlemen, a very long Evidence, Witnesses have been produced viva voce, and several papers have been read to you; some of the papers that have been produced, tho' they may seem mysterious and canting, yet they are not so very obscure and unintelligible, but if you consider them well, the meaning of them will appear. Others of them are more express, and do plainly demonstrate a Design, that this King

King and Queen should be deposed, and that there should be another Prince set upon the Throne, and restored to the Government of this Kingdom.

Gentlemen, There are two other Persons mentioned in the Indictment with my Lord, and tho' my Lord is only now upon his Tryal, yet the evidence which doth affect them, doth also concern my Lord.

You have heard how there was an Intention of some Persons to go to France, and how Mr. Ashton, one of the two others that stands indicted with my Lord, did treat with one Mrs. Pratt, one of the Witnesses, to hire a Vessel for that purpose, and it was by the means of one Mr. Burdett, that lives in the City; they had a Meeting at Burdett's House, where they treated about the Price that should be given for the Hire of this Ship to go to France, but at that time they did not agree. It was concluded, that the Woman and Ashton and Burdett should meet at the Wonder Tavern, but Mr. Burdett not being there, nothing was concluded upon then.

After that the Woman, Mr. Burdett, and Ashton, and Elliot, met at Mrs. Burdett's; the Woman insisted at first upon 150 l. After they had been treating for some time, the Bargain was made to go to France for 100 l.

Then the next thing considered was, how this Money should be paid, by agreement, 93 Guineas and 6*d.* which made up the 100 l. was deposited in Mrs. Burdett's hand; a Six-pence broken, one part Mrs. Burdett had, and the other part of the Six-pence Mr. Ashton had; and when either Mrs. Pratt, or the Master of the Vessel did bring back that part of the Sixpence that Ashton had to Mrs. Burdett, the Money was to be paid.

After this Agreement, they were appointed to go to the Seven Stars in Covent Garden, to the House of one Mr. Rigby, and there the Woman, Mrs. Pratt, and the Master of the Vessel, Ashton and Elliot met, and they were that Night to go away and to take Water at some place near to go on Ship-board; and having stayed there till it was about ten a Clock at Night, then they went away into the Strand and so into Surry-street, and took Water at Surry-stairs.

But before that they came from Mr. Rigby's, some Persons went to Surry Stairs to see for a Boat, and met with that Fellow that was here produced, who was a Sculler, and did hire him to go through the Bridge when the Tide served, and to carry some Gentlemen on Ship-board; they agreed with him for half a Crown, and he was to stay in an House near the Stairs until they came.

And at the time appointed, Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot and the Master of the Vessel came to that place, and my Lord Preston and his Man with them to take Water. My Lord Preston was not at Burdett's House at the hiring of the Ship, nor at Mr. Rigby's; but it is proved by the Master of the Vessel, that he took Water with the rest of them at Surry-stairs, that he went with them on Ship-board, and was to go along with them.

Being on Board the Ship, they did appear to have some Apprehensions of Danger, and passing by a Man of War, my Lord Preston, his Man, and the other two went under the Quarter-Hatches, where they lay down to prevent themselves from being taken or discovered; and they hid another time when they came near Graves- end, and coming up they seeing a Boat coming towards them, they hid themselves again. Captain Billop, who it seems, was sent to apprehend them, pretended he was to press Seamen, and when he came on Board the Smack he said he would press the Mariners, who answered they had a Protection: But he being upon his Search pulled up the Boards of the Quarter-Hatches, and there was my Lord Preston and the other Persons lying down: It was not a place that was very proper for Gentlemen, or indeed for any Passengers, to repose themselves in; it was an uneasy place, no body could stand or sit upright in it, nay, there was no convenient place for lying down, but they must lean upon their Elbows, which posture those Gentlemen were in; so that their purpose was plainly to conceal themselves, and their concealing themselves must be because of some Design they were about, which they would not have discovered.

They being taken out from under the Hatches, one of the Witnesses tells you he saw a Pacquet lying there, and Ashton pretending to fetch his Hat, went down, took it up, and put the Pacquet into his Bosom; and the Witnesses informing Captain Billop thereof, he caused Ashton's Coat to be searched, and from thence took the Pacquet and a piece of Lead tyed to it, which was produced here in Court.

When they were bringing away in Custody, they seemed all of them to be very much concerned about this Pacquet; some of them, that is, Ashton and Elliot, would have had it thrown with the Lead over-board. My Lord Preston did not say so much, but Complimented Captain Billop in this manner, He was glad he was fallen into the hands of a Civil Gentleman, a Person of worth, and he should always acknowledge his Kindness, and would do him all the service he could if he would dispose of the Pacquet.

My Lord Preston was searched at that time, and Letters of no great moment taken about him. Ashton and Elliot would have had Captain Billop to take those Letters which were taken in my Lord Preston's Pocket and tye the Lead to them and have thrown the Pacquet over-board, and to report to the King and Council, That those Letters were the Pacquet that was taken with the Lead, and so have perswaded him to be false to the Trust that was reposed in him.

And Ashton and Elliot used many Expressions to induce him to that Compliance; they told him the Government was unstable, and every Dog had his Day, and the Tide would turn; and that he would deserve very well if he would change sides and go with them where they were going, and that he had opportunity to get any Preferment he would have.

L. Preston. My Lord, I hope your Lordship observes that I said none of all this.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, I do not say you did; my Lord Preston did not say any thing of all this, but only about disposing of the Pacquet that his Lordship spoke of to Captain Billop, and Complimented him, and promised him Kindness if he would dispose of the Pacquet.

But, Gentlemen, as there was a Pacquet taken, so there were two Seals taken at the same time and in the same place, which have been produced and shewn to you; they lay both of them upon the Ballast under the Quarter-Hatches, near the Pacquet: the one of them is the Seal of my my Lord Preston's own Coat of Arms, the other Seal belongs to the Secretaries Office, which Office my Lord once held in the late Reign.

L. Preston. I beg your Lordship would be pleased to observe that the Papers were not taken upon me, and it can be no Treason to have Seals, I suppose.

L. C. J. Holt. Good my Lord, I will not do your Lordship any wrong; I do not say that the Papers were taken about you; no nor the Seals; but only that they lay upon the Ballast from whence the Pacquet was taken: And I say further, That these Seals are not denyed by your Lordship to be your Seals; the one is your own Seal of your Coat of Arms which was taken at that time, and so I do not your Lordship any wrong, and by the Grace of God will not.

L. Preston. It is no Crime, I hope, to have Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. I do say, my Lord, the Papers were taken about Ashton and not about your Lordship; but they lay upon the Ballast where the Seals were, and where your Lordship lay: But how far my Lord Preston is concerned in this matter, is to be considered by you of the Jury by and by.

Now, Gentlemen, you have heard how earnest Mr Ashton and Mr. Elliot were; one of them, to wit, Elliot, wisht a Thunder-Bolt might strike the Boat under Water as they were coming back; and when they came through Bridge he wisht that London Bridge had fallen upon them and knockt them upon the head.

L. Preston. But I hope that is not to lye upon me neither, for I said no such thing.

L. C. J. Holt. No: But Ashton and Elliot did say these things, and how the case stands as to that in Relation to your Lordship is to be considered. It is proved they afterwards gave Money to the Seamen, half a Crown a piece, to two of them, to say they were going to Flanders, and not to France.

Now Gentlemen, that my Lord was on Board this Vessel, that my Lord was under the Hatches, and that the Papers were taken in this manner, is beyond all contradiction: So likewise that the Ship was hired for France; that my Lord took Water at Surrey Stairs, and was taken in this Vessel in that manner that you have heard.

The next thing Gentlemen is about the Papers: I must tell you though there are several of them that do seem mysterious, yet they are Papers that do shew a very great design of Deposing the King and Queen, and a purpose of altering the present Government.

But Gentlemen, I will mention to you those Papers that are very plain, and leave you to consider what construction to put upon those that are obscure. There is one Paper that seems to be instructions and heads for a Declaration, that is to say, That the King of France must not come with a design to make an intire Conquest.

L. Preston. My Lord, with submission to your Lordship, I hope you will please to remember and observe to the Jury, that Paper is not proved to be mine.

L. C. J. Holt. No my Lord, I'll do your Lordship no wrong, but I cannot speak all my words at once.

L. Preston. I am sure you will not my Lord, but I beg leave to put your Lordship in mind.

L. C. J. Holt. Well then Gentlemen the Paper begins, That the King's Declaration is to be formed in general Terms, that he will govern by the Laws, that they shall be the Rule of his Actions, that he will endeavour to settle Liberty of Conscience by a Law, and that whatsoever was done by him that gave any occasion of Jealousy, shall be settled by Parliament. That the hath given sufficient Proofs and Evidence of his not being willing to bring an Army of Strangers into the Kingdom, by refusing the Succours the King of France offered him, and that were even ready to be Embarked upon the first notice of the Prince of Orange's coming. That he brings such an Army only as is necessary for his own Defence, and securing such of his Loyal Subjects as should come to him; and that he will dismiss them as soon as he shall have rid the Nation of those Foreigners that had invaded us, and trampled upon the Laws.

So that Gentlemen, here is a Paper in this Pacquet, that has plainly laid open and proved the Design, and shews the meaning of it was to seduce their Majesties Subjects from their Allegiance; it was to be in such general Terms, making general Promises, hoping thereby that People would be the more easily imposed upon to renounce their Allegiance to their present Majesties.

But Gentlemen, the Declaration imports farther, that the Realm was to be invaded by Foreigners, and to palliate it, it is pretended that Foreigners were only brought in to rid the Nation of Foreigners, and you know who are meant by that: So that this Project was only to colour a Foreign Invasion; and this Declaration was to direct them how and upon what pretences they should invade this Kingdom.

Gentlemen, there is no manner of doubt but this is a Treasonable Declaration, and if any Person had this in his Possession, and was going into France to carry, with an intention there to make use of it, that is Treason, though it be couched under specious Pretences of restoring People to their Liberty: It was plainly a Design to invade England by a French Army.

L. Preston. My Lord, that Paper was not found about me.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no, my Lord, it was not; but good my Lord give me your favour, I will certainly observe every thing that is fitting; but I tell you I cannot do it all at once.

Then Gentlemen, there is another paper found in the Pacquet, that is said to be the result of a Conference that was had between divers Lords and Gentlemen, as well Tories as Whiggs as they call them, to prove it possible to restore the late King by French Arms; and how this may be effected, were Proposals made: Yet still it was pretended to preserve the Protestant Religion, and the Civil Administration according to Law.

And that it might be brought to pass, the credulous were to be imposed upon, and made to believe that the French King would not conquer England for himself; no, but he would conquer it for the late King; he would be at that vast Charge, that great Expence of Men and Arms to restore King James, and make no Profit of it himself.

And it was proposed how to seduce the People of England into a belief of the French King's Kindness; He was to indulge the English Protestants in France, and let them have the exercise of their own Religion there at their own Charges; and this to satisfy the English Protestants, that that his Persecution of the Hugonots in France, was not out of aversion to the Protestant Religion, but only because of their Antimonarchical and relisting Principles. So that they were proposing among themselves what they were to do to make the People believe the French King had no dangerous Design against our Religion and Liberties; and if they could meet with Persons to believe this, that was a probable way thought upon in this Conference to get a great many Adherents to the French King, thereby this Invasion to be facilitated; and the whole Project rendred more successful.

There is another thing Gentlemen, in this Paper, and that is this; they complained of the mismanagement of their Affairs at St. Germain's; that though they did earnestly desire the Restitution of the late King, yet there was always some foolish thing or other that came from St. Germain's that obstructed their Design.

What that foolish thing is, I can't say, it does not appear; but whether it were not too great a Discovery of their Zeal for Popery, and the advancement of the Popish Religion, is worth your Consideration.

And something is to be done for Satisfaction of the People as to that; and it is advised that there should be Seven or Nine, or such a Number of English Men that should go over, and be received into favour at St. Germain's, and they should be of the Council there, and these were to be Protestants; and that was to be a colour and pretence that the late King was reconciled to the Protestant Interest, because he chose Protestant Counsellors, and had received them at St. Germain's, and was advised by them.

This, says the Paper, will make the World believe, he is ours, and that we have gained him; which was to delude a great many of the People of England, that they should not be affrighted in case there should be such an Invasion of England, but invited rather and encouraged to joyn with the French when they came.

But, Gentlemen, the three last Papers that have been produced to you, are Papers that do somewhat more nearly concern my Lord Preston.

The first Paper contains several Memorandums; It begins with Lady D. 2000 l. who that Lady D. is, I must leave it to you to imagine, tho' perhaps it may not be hard to guess.

It takes notice that the English and Dutch were like to joyn; and these Memorandums do also shew a design and purpose of something to be done for the prevention of that Conjunction. They seem also to be Instructions to be made use of upon going into France to negotiate or transport some matters of dangerous Consequence.

L. Preston. My Lord, I hope that your Lordship will observe, that these Memorandums are broken kind of Notes, incongruous and incoherent.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, my Lord, they are so, they are but broken things; but I say still, they are Memorandums that were to be used for some purpose: Now I leave it to the Jury to consider of the matter of them: What can be plainer than what is there expressed? The French are to come in time, before the Dutch and the English joyn; they are to watch their Opportunity and come betimes, and they are to fight at the Chops of the Channel, and not to come so far as Beachy.

L. Preston. This is all but presumptive Evidence, my Lord.

Vol. III.

L. C. J. Holt. I appeal to your Lordship if it was not in the Paper, and I appeal to the memory of the Jury whether I misrepeat it or not.

The Paper mentions Gennings and Strickland and Trevannion, that they were to come from St. Malo's in one Night; the King (meaning the late King) was not to be on Board; and there were Ships to lye at Newcastle, to plague London: It is easy to understand what they meant. Among these Memorandums, it is made as a remark, that the London Clergy are the worst. It gives an account how Portsmouth was fortified, and Gosport, and what number of Men were in them; and of the state and condition of our Navy; what rates our Ships were, and how many, and who were to be the Commanders.

L. Preston. I beg your Lordship to observe this is not Treason.

L. C. J. Holt. I shall tell you that my Lord, by and by; I am now stating the Evidence.

Gentlemen, my Lord Preston insists upon it, that these Papers were not found about him: It is true, they were not, but it does not therefore follow that they were none of his Papers: But you have Three Witnesses, Mr. Townsend, Mr. Bland, and Mr. Warr, produced to prove these Papers to be my Lord's Hand; Mr. Townsend says he was acquainted pretty well with my Lord Preston's Hand; he was one of his Clerks in the Office of the Wardrobe; he says he has seen my Lord write several times, and does believe the Writing to be his Hand; and to the same purpose says Bland; and Mr. Warr swears to one of the Papers, that he believes it to be my Lord Preston's Hand.

L. Preston. I hope your Lordship will please to observe to the Jury, That this is only a proof of Similitude of Hands, no body see me write them.

L. C. J. Holt. They only say they do believe it to be your hand; no body says they saw you write them; if I omit any thing, pray tell me when I have done.

Gentlemen, there are other Papers which have been produced and read, that are writ in Canting Terms, which yet plainly shew the general Design; they tell the Party that Council are of Opinion, he has a very good Title; they hope he will appear himself, and if the Cause be well solicited it may come to a hearing before the end of Easter Term.

There is another matter mentioned in another Letter which is under the disguise of Trade, That the Goods must come before the first of March. And another of them says, That unless the Copper and the Linnen come before the tenth of March they should lose this Summers Profit.

Gentlemen, what can be the meaning of all this?

L. Preston. I know not indeed, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. In another of the Papers it is said, 'Tis thought our Fleet will be ready by March or April, but they believe not till June.

Truly, Gentlemen, I have not been able to take particulars of every Letter, but I must leave it to your Observation; only there is one of them that makes mention of acquainting my Lord with the condition of the Writer, and direction is therein given to speak to the Bearer; and what other Lord was there, but he in the Company?

Y y y y y

L. Preston.

L. Preston. I desire to observe, my Lord, that I was not the Bearer.

L. C. J. Holt. Truly, my Lord, I can't tell who was meant; I must leave it to the Jury to judge of that; but there was no other Lord in that Company.

L. Preston. I give your Lordship thanks for observing that it was not proved that they were taken upon me before; but I beg your Pardon for interrupting of your Lordship.

L. C. J. Holt. Interrupt me as much as you please, if I do not observe right; I will assure you I will do you no wrong willingly.

Now, Gentlemen, the Question is in the first place, Whether this be Treason? and I told you before, without question, if any Persons do go into France to Negotiate such a design as this, or do purpose to go into France, and do any Act in order thereunto, that is High Treason; and these Letters do import High Treason as great as can be committed, a Treason against the King and Queen, a Design to invade the Realm, to subvert the Government, to restore another Prince to the Throne by the assistance of Foreign Force.

There was a Design to delude and impose upon a great many People, and those that would not be deluded into a belief by these fair Pretensions of Friendship, they were to be subdued by an Army of Foreigners.

Then, Gentlemen, the next Question will be, how my Lord Preston is affected by this Evidence, and whether you have sufficient proof from what has been offered, to satisfy you, that he is Guilty of this Treason or no.

First my Lord tells you, there has not been a clear proof that these are the Papers that were taken; for (saith he) they have been conveyed from hand to hand, and therefore possibly there might be some Alteration made in them. You, Gentlemen are to consider, notwithstanding this objection, whether the Identity of the Paper be not proved.

Captain Billop tells you he took them, and in what manner; and afterwards carried them to my Lord Nottingham, who laid them by for a little while upon his Table, and Captain Billop withdrew (that is part of my Lords Objection) while my Lord Nottingham examined my Lord Preston: after that, my Lord Nottingham called in Billop again, and Billop swears the Pacquet was not opened, but remained intire in such manner as they were delivered to my Lord Nottingham; and so says my Lord Nottingham. Then Captain Billop saw my Lord Nottingham open it at that time, and he saw all these Papers every one put up again by my Lord Nottingham; so that he could not be deceived: and my Lord Nottingham delivered them to him, and he carried them to my Lord President all sealed up with my Lord Nottingham's Seal: And my Lord President tells you he opened them, and brought them to the King, and had them back from the King; but they were never out of his sight while the King read some of them, but he took them all and brought them to the Cabinet Council, where my Lord Sidney received all these Papers that have been read, and marked them. You have my Lord Sidney's Oath that these are the Papers he had from my Lord President; you have my Lord President's Oath that he had them from Billop sealed with my Lord Nottingham's Seal; you have my Lord Nottingham's Oath that he had them from Billop; and Billop swears that they were taken in the Smack.

So that it is plain, if you believe this Evidence, that they are the same papers. Besides, as to several of them, Billop marked them, and swears directly to them. If you believe these Witnesses, as you have no reason I think, to the contrary; it is plainly proved these are the very Papers which were taken from the Bosom of Ashton, and taken up by him from under the Quarter-Hatches in the Smack.

L. Preston. I beg your Lordships pardon for one thing.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, what say you, pray? Say what you will

L. Preston. With humble Submission, there is one thing that I think the Jury ought to take notice of, That when the papers were sent from Mr. Bridgman to my Lord Sidney, they were sent by a Messenger.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you are mistaken as to that Objection, for my Lord Sidney did not send them to Mr. Bridgman by a Messenger, but he delivered them with his own hand, and after he had set his own Mark upon them; and Mr. Bridgman says they were never out of his sight, he copied them all but two or three, the other Mr. Poultney copied in his presence, and so he swears he re-delivered them to my Lord Sidney.

L. Preston. With humble submission, my Lord, if I remember right, they were in a third hand.

L. C. J. Holt. Never, never.

L. Preston. Did not my Lord Sidney say so, or Mr. Bridgman?

L. C. J. Holt. No: neither my Lord Sidney, nor Mr. Bridgman said so; I suppose the Jury are apprehensive of the matter; I would not mislead them, I'll assure you, nor do your Lordship any manner of Injury in the World.

L. Preston. No, my Lord, I see it well enough that your Lordship would not; I am for my Life, and beg your Lordships pardon for interrupting of you.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen, the next thing is to consider, Whether my Lord Preston be answerable for these Papers or a Party in this Treason.

First, Gentlemen, I would have you to consider that there was the hiring of a Vessel for France: It is true, my Lord Preston was not present at the bargain; but you observe that my Lord Preston, his Servant, Ashton and Elliot took Water at Surrey-Stairs on purpose to go on Board that Smack.

Now, Gentlemen, Whether or no you can intend any other ways than that my Lord Preston was privy in the hiring of this Vessel, though he was not present at the hiring of it; for how should my Lord Preston be ready to take Water with them at Surrey-stairs? Can you imagine my Lord came there by chance, and took a sudden Resolution? If you can imagine that he came only to go a Ship-board without knowing the previous Design, truly you imagine a very great thing for my Lords advantage.

It is plain he went voluntarily without Compulsion; truly, I think the Evidence is very strong to induce you to believe he was privy to this design, and that he did know of hiring the Vessel.

L. Preston. I hope your Lordship will observe at the same time, that I was never seen before we took Boat.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord I have observed it, and I lay that weight upon the Evidence, that I think it will naturally bear, and no more; and leave it to the Jury to consider, whether your Lordship was privy to the Design or no, when they they weigh the Circumstances of the Evidence together.

L. Preston. I hope I shall not be condemned upon Presumption and Argument.

L. C. J. Holt. What weight the Evidence has they will consider.

And then, Gentlemen, there is another thing that I would observe; Why should my Lord Preston, a Noble Man, a Person of his Honour and Quality, put himself in such a place as he was found in, and that twice? It must sure be out of an Apprehension of some Danger. As for the Seamen they were secure enough; they were not frightened, because they thought they were protected, and my Lord Preston knew he was not lyable to be prest; the Master of the Vessel tells you they were fearful, and therefore hid themselves in a place they could not stand in, nor sit in; there was the Gravel and Ballast, it was uneasy to them, dangerous to their Health to be there.

Gentlemen, why do Men avoid the light and put themselves under covert, unless they have some evil design? Persons that are innocent seek not obscurity.

The Seals were found there, and my Lord does not deny they were his Seals.

L. Preston. I do not deny that, I hope it is no Crime to have such Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay but, says my Lord, that does not affect——because the Papers were not found about me, but were found about Ash-ton. Gentlemen, if you can imagine my Lord Preston had a different Design from the rest of the Company that were with him, then you may acquit my Lord, and find him Not Guilty. But it is left to you to consider whether he had not the same Design with them. Besides there's mention made in one of the Letters, My Lord, and there was no other Lord but he; and here are Papers proved to be my Lord's own hand, containing several of the matters of which he stands Indicted, and he would have had the Captain to have disposed of the Papers.

Now, Gentlemen, what account does my Lord give you where he was going? it seems they did pretend at the time they were taken, and they would have had the Master of the Vessel said, that their design was for Flanders; but the Witnesses tell you positively, That the Vessel was hired for France.

Truly, Gentlemen, I must leave the matter to your Consideration whether my Lord be Guilty of this Design or Not Guilty.

There is another thing that my Lord has urged (for I would not willingly omit any thing material on the one side or the other) he says his Indictment is laid in the County of Middlesex, but the Papers were not taken there, the Ship they went on board lay at Anchor in Surrey; and when they were taken it was in the County of Kent, and so there is no Proof of Treason in Middlesex.

Ay, but Gentlemen, give me leave to tell you, if you are satisfied upon this Evidence, that my Lord was privy to this Design, contained in these Papers, and was going with them into France, there to excite an Invasion of this Kingdom, to Depose the King and Queen, and make use of the Papers to that end, then every step he took, in order to it, is High Treason, wherever he went; his taking Water at Surry-stairs, in the County of Middlesex, will be as much

Vol. III.

High-Treason, as the going a Ship-board in Surrey, or being found on Ship board in Kent, where the Papers were taken.

Gentlemen, I have failed of recollecting several of the Particulars of the Evidence, because they are many; and you will not depend upon my Recollection of things so very incoherent as some Parts of the Evidence in the Papers are, but upon your own Notes and Observations.

If you do think, having heard this Evidence, That my Lord was not concerned in this Matter, That my Lord had no Design to go into France with these Papers, but that he was an utter Stranger to all these things, then you are to acquit my Lord. But if you believe my Lord was privy to, and knew of the hiring of this Vessel, and that he went to carry on the Design, contained in these Papers; and that he wrote some of these Letters, and with the others he was acquainted, then you are to find him guilty.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord, if you please, I would observe one thing, to the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, by all Means my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Gentlemen of the Jury, I shall say but a few Words to you, because indeed my Lord has sum'd up the Evidence very fully, for matter of Law: I am fully of Opinion there never was a more black nor horrible Treason than is in this Plot that is now discovered; for I think Englishmen have no greater Enemies than the French and the Papists, and you see this is a Plot to bring in both; and therefore I think there was never any thing of greater Consequence to the Government and the Nation than to have this Plot detected and punished; tho' perhaps never any thing was more improbable than this same Plot, that it should ever take effect, whatsoever they promised to themselves, and their Desire of having it effected might persuade them to the contrary.

But, Gentlemen, the thing that I would mention about the Matter before you now, is this; Here are three Papers that by three several Witnesses, acquainted with my Lords Hand-writing, are testified, as they believe, to be his Hand-writing; if so, then there is an End of all, for therein is a horrid deal of Treason contained. If these Instructions, these Memorandums, these Heads that were written down were my Lords, and he did intend to go with these in a Voyage towards France, that will be sufficient of it self, if there were nothing else in the Case, to maintain this Indictment.

But, Gentlemen, you have in the rest of the Papers, that were taken, a great Character of the Bearer; that the Bearer had done great things; that the Bearer could inform them fully of every thing; and there should be full and intire Confidence put in the Bearer, and a great such many Phrases.

But, says my Lord, I was not the Bearer, it was Mr. Ash-ton that the Papers were found about; it does not appear directly who the Bearer was; and they were not found about me.

Now, Gentlemen, pray let us look a little how this Evidence stands: Pray where was this Bundle found? even upon the Gravel, where my Lord Preston and Mr. Ash-ton lay; there was it found, and my Lord's own Seal with it.

How, in the Name of God, came my Lord's Seals to be found with other Peoples Papers, if they did belong to any body else? How came they together in that place? It may be he had a mind to leave his Seals behind him, because they would discover his Quality. But why should my Lord Preston have all this fear upon him? Why should two Men go and take a Ship for themselves and two others; and when they came to take Boat, take in my Lord and his Man, if they were not the two others that were designed? and this to be done at Night in the Dark? Why should my Lord be under such terrible Apprehensions as to creep into a hole so unfit for one of his Quality?

Why do you not hear from my Lord some good Account upon what occasion my Lord and his Man were going to France? Or whither else my Lord was really going? for some where or other it was plain he was going.

Gentlemen, no Man goes into an Enemies Country without some Licence, unless he go upon some ill Design: Fear seldom is without some Guilt; and there appears, throughout the whole management of the Story, that there was a great deal of fear upon these Gentlemen.

Besides afterwards, when he is taken, and the Letters taken with him in the same Company, you hear what endeavours there were to suppress the Truth, even by my Lord's desiring to have the Pacquet disposed of; and my Lord's Man gave one of the Seamen half a Crown to say they were going to Flanders, not to France. I suppose the Man knew how unfit it was to be known that they were going to France: And my Lords two Companions spared for no Pains to get the Pacquet thrown over-board; tho' all that my Lord said was what great Kindness he would do him when it lay in his Power, if he would dispose of the Pacquet; I suppose that is very easily intelligible.

Gentlemen, there is one thing which is mentioned in one of the particular Letters that I desire particularly to observe to you, and that is all I shall say to you; Here is a Letter in my Hand that in divers places has somewhat remarkable, it says, Your Daughter and I must starve, if this Government can make us: That the Party did not repine at all for having lost all for your sake, which your favour had bestowed. And in another place this Letter doth say, Your Daughter grows very tall, and very pretty, as I am told. But that which I chiefly mention it for, is, it's twice mentioned, My Lord will tell you all my Condition, how I have been used; and I have told my Lord my Condition: what I desire of you, he thinks very moderate.

And pray consider and remember, that the first Article of my Lord's Paper, that is taken to be under my Lord's own Hand, there is two thousand pound to the Lady D.

Now if any body should put these together, do they lack any great Interpreter for? for my part I leave them to you.

Then in another place, towards the end of the Letter, it is said, Pray, Sir, ask my Lord how I have been used.

Now this Letter being thus taken, and there is never a one of the rest that was a Lord, do you think any of the rest was meant? I must leave it to you.

If my Lord Preston had produced any Testimony to prove his own good Carriage and Behaviour towards the present Government, it had been very much for his advantage, and might have had great weight with you; but when things appear only in this manner as they do now, I must leave it to you.

Gentlemen, 'tis a great Matter, and of great Moment; if those that conspire against the Kingdom, against the Protestant Religion, and against the present Government, may do it with impunity, it will be worth the considering what the Consequence of that may be. Your own Consciences require you to do Right and Justice on both sides; and if you are satisfied he is not guilty, you will find him so; if you are satisfied that he is guilty, you will find him so.

L. Preston. My Lord, may I have the liberty to say any thing before the Jury go out?

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordship should have said what you had to say before. It is contrary to the course of all Proceedings in such Cases to have any thing said to the Jury after the Court has summed up the Evidence, but we will dispence with it. What has your Lordship to say?

L. Preston. My Lord, I humbly thank your Lordship; I am not acquainted with such Proceedings.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you know I permitted your Lordship to interrupt me as much as you would, which was never done before in any such Case.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is contrary to the course of the Court: But yet if you have any thing to say to the Court or the Jury, for this once we permit it.

L. Preston. Gentlemen of the Jury.—

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, what you have to say, pray direct your self to the Court, that we may hear what it is.

L. Preston. My Lord, I only desire the Jury may be informed that I am a Protestant, that I was baptized in the Religion of the Church of England, and have always lived in it, and hope to dye in it. My Lord, 'tis true, things have been urged with Severity against me that are a little hard; in making that, which I hope will amount to but a Presumption, to be a Proof; as in the Case of the Letters that are written in a Cant, and my Intention to go to France, and those words in the Letter, where my Lord the Bearer is named. But your Lordship observes, That that Letter is not directed to any body, and that is full of Cant as well as all the rest; Why should I be supposed to be the Bearer any more than either of the others, and they were found about one of them? But, my Lord, for the reason of my going beyond Sea, it was this; I designed to go to Flanders or any place I could be driven to, and that ought not to be wondred at; for really I who had lived quietly after the loss of my Places, upon this Revolution, and suffered great Inconveniences in my Estate, and was retired to my own House, with a Design to live a retired Life, was imprisoned twice in the Tower, and proclaimed a Traytor in every Market Town, without any Indictment; and my Imprisonment tended greatly to the impairing my Health and my Fortune; all this made me very uneasy here: and, my Lord, I went under a fixed Resolution to go to Flanders or any place where I thought I could be quiet.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, your Lordship should have said all these things before, for it is not the course to reply upon the Court; if you had had any thing to say, you know we heard you out of Course, and I let you interrupt me as much much as you did think fit, though that has not been allowed at any time before. But, my Lord, pray let me say one thing more: Suppose your Lordship did think your self hardly used, though I know not any reason you had to think so; yet your Lordship must remember it was in a time of danger that your Lordship was taken up before, and you had shewed your Dissatisfaction with the present Government, and therefore they were not to be blamed if they secured themselves against you; but if you had a mind to retire into the Country, or to go abroad, was France the only Country you could choose? a known declared Enemy's Country at open War with the Government?

L. Preston. My Lord, I beg your Lordship's Pardon, if I give any Offence.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, you give me no Offence at all; but your Lordship is not right in the course of Proceedings; I acquaint you with it not by way of Reproof, but by way of Information.

L. Preston. Then I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will consider, that all that is alledged against me is but Presumption; my Life and Fortune, my Posterity and Reputation, are all at Stake; I leave all to the Jury's Consideration, and the God of Heaven direct them.

L. C. J. Holt. If you go on thus to reflect upon the Court, you will make the Court to reflect upon you. The Jury hear how the Evidence has been stated: I think it has been done very impartially, and without any Severity to you: Why should you think we would press the Evidence further than it ought to go against you? You are a Stranger to most of us, and I am sure we do not desire your Life; but still we must take care that Justice be done to the Government and the Kingdom, as well as to any particular Person; and Evidence that is given must have its due Weight and Consideration: If any one can design innocently to go into France, at this time of day, with such Papers, and in such a manner, that I leave to the Jury's Consideration.

Then the Jury withdrew, to consider of the Evidence, and the Court adjourned for a little while, and returned in half an hour; and the Jury came in and were called over, and appeared.

Cl. of Ar. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Fore-man.

Cl. of Ar. Sir Richard Grahme, hold up your Hand, (which he did) Look upon the Prisoner. How say you? Is he guilty of the Felony and High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods and Chattels had he?

Foreman. None at all that we know of.

Then the Verdict was recorded.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I think, truly, Gentlemen, you have done according to your Evidence; and though it be a hard Case upon particular Men that have brought themselves into these Inconveniences; yet it is necessary Justice should have its due course, or else there is no longer living for any Man in any Society or Government.

Then the Prisoner was carried back to Newgate, and the Court Adjourned till Monday Morning following at seven a Clock.

Die Lunæ, xix Januarii, 1690.

The Court being Sate, the Jury was called over, and the Appearance of those who answered Recorded. Then Mr. Ashton and Mr. Ellyot were brought to the Bar; but Mr. Ellyot was ordered to be carried back to Newgate, the King's Council resolving to try Mr. Ashton by himself.

John Ashton, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Those Men that you shall hear called, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord and Lady our King and Queen, and you upon your Tryal of your Life and Death. If therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to speak as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they be Sworn.

Mr. Ashton. Pray stay a little.

L. C. J. Holt. What say you, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I humbly desire your Lordship will allow me the benefit of Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray let him have Pen, Ink and Paper.

Mr. Ashton. And likewise that you would give my Solicitor leave to be as near me as possibly he can, only to refresh my Memory, if I should forget any thing.

L. C. J. Holt. That is a thing you cannot of right demand, the other of Pen, Ink, and Paper you may.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I shall acknowledge it as a very great Favour.

L. C. J. Holt. That is an Innovation that ought not to be, the Court cannot allow it.

Mr. Ashton. I acknowledge it a Favour, but if the Court thinks it not fit to allow it, whatsoever your Lordship shall order I readily submit to.

L. C. J. Holt. You shall have Pen, Ink and Paper; and what is fit for the Court to do they will do it.

L. C. Baron. If the Witnesses say any thing that you do not hear, you must speak to the Court, and you shall have them say it over again.

Pen, Ink, and Paper was given to the Prisoner.

Cl. of Arraign. Sir William Hedges, Knight.

(He appeared)

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I would not trouble your Lordship and my self with unnecessary Challenges; I intend to put my self with an intire dependance upon the first Twelve Men that that appear, be they who they will.

L. C. J. Holt. What you please for that matter, you have your own choice.

Mr. Ashton. Whoever they are, I submit to them; I know them not.

Cl. of Arr. Swear Sir William Hedges.

Which was done.

And so were the Eleven next succeeding in the Pannel; and the Names of the Twelve Sworn follow.

Sir William Hedges, Knight.

John Wolfenholm, Esq;

James Boddington, Esq;

Thomas Johnson, Esq;

Ralph Bucknall, Esq;

Lucy Knightsley, Esq;

Thomas Cuthbert, Esq;

John Herbert, Esq;

John Tully, Esq;

Thomas Smith, Esq;

William Withers, Esq; and

Daniel Thomas, Esq;

Then the Jury were Numbred, and Proclamation made for Information and Evidence in the usual manner.

Mr. Asht. Gentlemen of the Jury, if you desire Pen, Ink, and Paper, I hope the Court will take care to provide them for you.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, ay, let the Gentlemen of the Jury have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

(Which was done.)

Cl. of Arr. John Ashton, hold up thy Hand.

(Which he did.)

Gentlemen, you that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause: He stands Indicted by the Name of John Ashton, late of the Parish of St. Pauls Covent-Garden, in the County of Middlesex, Gent. For that he, together with Sir Richard Grabme, late of the Parish of St. Ann, in the Liberty of Westminster, Baronet, who stands Convicted of High Treason, and Edmund Ellyot, late of the Parish of St. James, in the said Liberty, Gent. For that they as false Traytors, &c. (Prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis,) and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. Upon this Indictment he has been Arraigned, and thereunto hath Pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himself upon God and the Country, which Country you are; your Charge is, to enquire whether he be Guilty of the Felony and High Treason whereof he stands Indicted, or not Guilty; If you find him Guilty, you are to enquire, what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the time of the Felony and High Treason Committed, or at any time since; If you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it; If you find that he fled for it; you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty; If you find him not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it; you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Knap. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; This is an Indictment of High Treason against John Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar, and the Indictment, Gentlemen, Charges him, That he as a false Traytor against their present Majesties King William and Queen Mary, his Supreme and Natural Lord and Lady, not weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, did upon the Twenty Ninth of December last past, together with Sir Richard Grabme, who stands Convicted, and one Edmund Ellyot, and divers others ill disposed Persons unknown to the Jury, did Conspire, Imagine, and Intend to depose, and deprive the King and Queen, and to bring them to Death and Destruction, and to subvert and alter the Government; and to cause War and Rebellion within this Kingdom against their Majesties; and to bring these Intentions and Purposes to pass, the Prisoner, with the rest of them, did prepare divers Notes, Papers, Letters, and Memorandums in Writing, which were to instruct the French King, and other Enemies of the King and Queen, of the number of their Majesties Men of War, how they were Mann'd, and the Names of the Commanders of several of them, and to inform them how the Castles and Forts of Portsmouth, Southsea, and Gosport were fortified, and how they might be surpris'd by the King's Enemies, and of the Times, Ways and Means how they might invade the Kingdom, in order to depose the King and Queen; and to Procure and Incite such an Invasion, and further to bring these Purposes to pass, the Prisoner and the other Traytors did secretly conceal, and detain in their custody several Bills of Exchange for the payment of Money to the King's Enemies, and the several Letters, Notes, and Memorandums before mentioned, which were for the purposes I before opened to you; and further to bring these Purposes, and Treasonable Intentions to pass, they did for one Hundred Pound hire and prepare a Ship, which was to carry them secretly out of this Kingdom into France, with an intent there to deliver these Instructions, and Memorandums, and Bills of Exchange into the Hands of their Majesties Enemies; and did hire a Boat to carry them to the Ship, and did enter into it at St. Clement Danes, within your County, and rowed to the Ship, and went on Board the Ship; and there with the Bills of Exchange, Notes, and Memorandums, they set sail to go to France, in order to deliver them to the French King, and other Enemies of the King and Queen; and the Indictment does further set forth, that there hath, and still is a War between the French King and our King and Queen, and that he and his Subjects are Enemies to the King and Queen and their Subjects; and that during this War, the Prisoner, together with the rest that were before named, were adhering to the King and Queen's Enemies in this War; and in pursuance thereof, did prepare such Letters and Instructions before opened, and had, and concealed in their custody, and hired a Ship and a Boat, and went into the Ship, and set sail in order to go for France, to aid and assist the King's Enemies there with Money, Intelligence, and Counsel; and this is laid to be against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of the King and Queen, their Crown and Dignity, and against the form of the Statute in that case made and provided. To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty; if we prove him Guilty, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, The Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted of a very heinous Offence, no less than High-Treason, the greatest Offence that can be committed against any Humane Law. You have heard the Particulars in the Indictment read. I will not trouble you with any Repetition, but go to open the Evidence according to the Steps that are obvious in the case. You have heard in general the Design was to depose this King and Queen, which the Law expounds pounds to be to bring them to Death and Destruction: You have heard it was to alter the Government, and cause a Rebellion in the Kingdom, and to bring in Foreign Power; and these are laid to be the Heads of the Offences that the Prisoner stands charged with.

Gentlemen, the first step that was made in this matter was by the Prisoner at the Bar; for there was one Mr. Burdett, which it seems had been one of his Acquaintance, and had undertaken to bring him acquainted with a Person that could furnish him with a Ship; and in order to that, one Mrs. Pratt, that had the management of the Smack which belonged to her Husband, she by Burdett's means was brought to Burdett's House, where she met Mr. Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar, and they had some Treaties about the hiring of a Ship; the purpose declared by the Prisoner then was to hire a Ship to go to any part of France, and he would give a considerable Reward for it; he said it was for himself and Three more. They did not come to any conclusion about the Ship; but there was an Appointment made to have the Master of the Ship to meet with them at the Wonder Tavern in Ludgate-street, and in order to that, Paseley that is the Master, and the Woman came there, and met with Mr. Ashton; but because Mr. Burdett was not there, they came only to this proposal, one Hundred and Fifty Pound was demanded for the Hire of this Vessel; but there being no conclusion then made, they thought it better to do it at Burdett's House, and about a day after they came to Mr. Burdett's, and then it hapned that Elliot, one of the Persons that is Indicted, but not one before you, came thither too; and at that time it was agreed to give one Hundred Pounds for the Hire of the Ship. Ninety Three Guineas were deposited in Mrs. Burdett's Hands; and there was a Token past betwixt them by the breaking of a Sixpence, one part whereof was to ly with Mr. Ashton, and the other with Mrs. Burdett; and whenever the Master of the Vessel brought back the broken piece of Six pence that Mr. Ashton had, then she was to pay the Money, that being the sign that they had attained their Ends, and were safely landed in France.

The next step they take, is this, they appoint to meet at the Seven Stars in Covent Garden, thither the Master of the Vessel and the Woman were to come, and that was near the time, that very day that they designed to go down, and there was Mr. Ashton, and Mr. Elliot, but the other Person did not appear as yet, there the Sea-men were ordered to go along with them, and thence they went down to the Water side, to Surry-stairs, and the Waterman was called, and in the mean time came my Lord Preston and his Man to them, and they four did go in that Boat, by the Direction of the Master, and were carryed on Board his Smack.

After they came on Board (for I would note the particular Circumstances) they were very apprehensive of Danger, for they knew what they went about, their own Guilt gave them Reason of Fear, and when they came near a Man of War, which lay at Anchor in Long Reach in the River, they desired the Master to hide them, that they might be safe from any Search, and they were hid and put clofe under the Hatches for some time; afterwards when they came to another place of Danger, it was by the Block Houses at Graves-end, (as they apprehended) there they desired to be hid again, and so they were put in that place where they were in very difficult Circumstances under the Hatches, and there they remained till a Pinnace, that had been sent to enquire after them, came and Boarded this same Vessel.

Upon its Boarding of them, the Captain made a Search, and found these Gentlemen, my Lord Preston, Mr. Ashton, and Mr. Elliot, and I suppose his Man also, all hid under the Hatches.

Then the next thing which is obfervable, Gentlemen, and the great Matter that will shew where the Treason was, is this, there was a Bundle of Papers that was on Board, read prepared, if they had not been surprized, but could have had an Opportunity for it, to have been cast Over-Board, and there was Lead fixt to it, to have sunk it, and Mr. Ashton the Prisoner at the Bar, was the Person that concealed this Bundle of Papers, betwixt his Body and his Coat, and from thence it was taken by the Captain that took them.

When they were so taken, the Captain, according to his Duty, was bringing the Prisoners to Whitehall, they desired to go on Shore at Graves-End, but the Captain did not think that so fit, but carryed them on Board the George Frigate, and then you will hear these Gentlemen did fall into a Treaty with the Captain, to suppress these Papers, and one Instance I remember they did tell him, that since there were a parcel of Papers that he had taken out of my Lord Preston's Pocket, he might take off the Lead and fix it to those Papers, and sink the others; and what should he have for it? they promised him great Rewards, they told him he might be a great Man, he had an Opportunity of making his Fortune; and when that would not do, they used many Threatnings to him, all which will appear in the several Circumstances that the Witnesses will tell you of.

I come, Gentlemen, in the last place to shew you, That all the whole Conspiracy, all this Treason, did lye hid under this Bundle of Papers that were taken from Mr. Ashton, and so he might well be afraid of having them opened, for there you will find a formed Design, to alter this Government by a French Power and Assistance; and they contain so many Particulars, that in regard, I would not do the King's Evidence injury on the one hand, nor the Prisoner on the other, I will forbear repeating the Particular Instances.

Gentlemen, You will have all the Letters and Papers Read, but in the General, I must needs say, you will find it manifest, that there is a black and wicked Conspiracy to introduce a Foreign Power, to Establish the Protestant Religion, and that by a Popish Interest, and to settle our Laws, Liberties, and Properties, by a French Army. And let them pretend what they will for the Protestant Religion, when you hear these Papers read, no body will imagine it was to any other purpose, (if the Plot had taken Effect,) but to have what Religion, what Laws, the French King had pleased to impose upon us.

If the Prisoner be Guilty, Gentlemen, of these Matters, I know you will do your Duty; but if he be not Guilty, God forbid that you should find him Guilty.

L. C. J. Holt. Call your Witnesses, Brother.
Mr. Serj. Thompson. We begin with Mrs. Pratt.
She was Sworn.

Sir W.

Sir W. Wil. Look you, Mrs. Pratt, here is another Gentleman at the Bar to be Tried, against whom you are called as a Witness.

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, my Lord.

Sir W. Wil. Pray hear what we ask you. Pray do you give the Court and the Jury an account, what Treaty you have had with that Gentleman, about a Vessel to go to France, and what was done in it.

Mrs. Pratt. If it please you, my Lord, I was sent for to Mr. Burdett's House in Queen-street by Cheap-side, to know whether he could have a Smack to go for France; I told him yes, I could help him to one; he told me, there were two or three Gentlemen bound for France, as Merchants to fetch Silk, and I was at Mr. Burdett's two or three times, and at last Mr. Ashton met me there.

L. C. J. Holt. Look upon the Gentleman, is that he?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, that is the Gentleman, and he met me there, and meeting with Mr. Ashton, he hired the Vessel; but first of all, he desired us to meet at the Dog Tavern upon Ludgate-Hill, to make the Bargain, and we did meet there, and were there about an hour, or an hour and a half, and Mr. Burdett did not come; and the next Morning, Mr. Ashton desired me to meet him at Mr. Burdett's again; and the next Morning I met at Mr. Burdett's, and there we made the Bargain for 100 l. and there was Sixpence broke in two pieces.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was the Hundred Pound paid?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, but we agreed on the Tuesday Morning, and there was a Sixpence broken in two, and Mr. Ashton had both the Six-pences in his hand, and the Tuesday night the Hundred Pound was paid at Mrs. Burdett's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was by?

Mrs. Pratt. There was one Mr. Elliot, and the Master of the Smack, and Mrs. Burdett.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did they pay the Money in Gold or Silver?

Mrs. Pratt. This Gentleman, Mr. Ashton, told the Money, there was 93 Guineas and a Six-pence, and Mr. Ashton gave one half of the broken Six-pence with the 93 Guineas to Mrs. Burdett; and when the Master of the Vessel brought the other half of the Six-pence, or I, either of us, we were to have the 100 l.

Sir W. Wil. Pray to what Place did they hire the Ship to go?

Mrs. Pratt. To France.

Sir W. Wil. Who hired the Ship?

Mrs. Pratt. That Gentleman.

Sir W. Wil. Who paid the Money?

Mrs. Pratt. That Gentleman, Mr. Ashton.

Sir W. Wil. To what hand was the Money paid?

Mrs. Pratt. It was paid in Mrs. Burdett's Bed-Chamber, into her Hand.

Sir W. Wil. Who broke the Sixpence?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton, that day the Bargain was made.

Sir W. Wil. Who carried it away?

Mrs. Pratt. When the Money was paid, Mr. Ashton had one, Mrs. Burdett had the other part.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. To which part of France were you hired to go?

Mrs. Pratt. To any part where they could touch.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray did they give you any Note about any thing?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, they gave me one Note to meet at the Dog Tavern, and another to meet at the Seven Stars in Covent Garden.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who gave you the Notes?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Look upon that Note.

(Which she did.)

Mrs. Pratt. This to my best remembrance Mr. Ashton wrote, I cannot well remember the Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Mr. Ashton desire to meet at the Dog Tavern?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, and he did meet at the Dog Tavern, but Burdett did not.

L. C. J. Holt. When did you meet at the Dog Tavern?

Mrs. Pratt. On the Monday Night before New Years Day.

L. C. J. Holt. When was the Money paid?

Mr. Pratt. On Tuesday Night, at Mrs. Burdett's.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. After the Money was paid, what did you do the next day?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton Ordered a Note to be written, to meet at the Seven Stars in Covent Garden, at one Mr. Rigby's.

L. C. J. Holt. At what time were you to go to Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. A Wednesday Night.

L. C. J. Holt. But at what time?

Mrs. Pratt. Some time about Ten a Clock, and we came there accordingly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was with you at Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. There was the Master of the Vessel, Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot, and two Gentlemen more, that I never saw before, nor since.

Sir W. Wil. I ask you again, who first Treated with you about Hiring this Vessel?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Burdett first treated with me about it.

Sir W. Wil. Who next?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton.

Sir W. Wil. Who made the Bargain with you?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton.

Sir W. Wil. Who paid the Money?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton.

Sir W. Wil. What can you say more?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray let me ask you, when you came to Mr. Rigby's, in what manner did you go away from his House, and what was said at parting?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton was not there himself at first, but he and Mr. Elliot, and two other Gentlemen were there afterwards, and Mr. Ashton's Wife said something about Papers hove in a Hat at Court, and about some bodies being chosen; and one of the Gentlemen said there was nothing in that, I was one that was Chosen last Year.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Ashton and Elliot go out together from Mr. Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. I did not see them go.

Mr. Trevor. Had you any directions from Mr. Ashton, to send for a Hamper or a Trunk?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, that was at Mr. Burdett's House.

Mr. Trevor. When was that Hamper and Trunk to be sent for?

Mrs. Pratt. On the Wednesday Night before we went to Rigby's House.

Sir W. Wil. Do you know one William Pasely?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes.

Sir W. Wil. Was he with them?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, he was with them.

Sir W.

Sir W. W. What occasion brought him thither?

Mrs. Pratt. I carryed him to Mrs. Burdett's House.

Mr. Trevor. Pray did the Prisoner desire to see the Master of the Vessel, or speak with him?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, and when I brought him, he said he liked him very well.

Mr. Trevor. What is the Master's Name?

Mrs. Pratt. William Pafeley.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Had you any Discourse with Mr. Ashton's Wife after they went away?

Mrs. Pratt. We had little discourse, only she gave me some Victuals and Drink; and she said she hop'd I would not tell of her Husband.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What else did she say?

Mrs. Pratt. She hoped God would deliver them out of the Lyon's Mouth.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did she say any thing about Cock Crowing?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, she said she thought she should have no good Luck for the Cock crowed.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was by in the Chamber when the Money was paid?

Mrs. Pratt. There was the Master of the Vessel by, and Mrs. Burdett.

Juryman. My Lord, I heard her say somewhat of some Papers, which I do not very well understand. Does she know of any Papers that the Prisoner had?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That was only about the Two Notes.

L. C. J. Holt. She talks of Papers being shaken in a Hat, but nothing can be made of it.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. If you would ask her any Questions before she goes, now is your time to do it.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I desire she may stand up again. Mrs. I ask a Question, not so much in kindness to my self, as Justice to another Gentleman. You say Mr. Ellyot writ one of the Notes.

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, as I remember, it was that to meet at Mr. Rigby's.

Mr. Ashton. I do it to justifie that Gentleman, I take that Note upon my self; and you say I hired the Ship, and Mr. Ellyot was by.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Ashton, Mr. Ellyot is not now upon his Tryal, it concerns you only to ask such Questions as relate to your self. What is said now concerning Mr. Ellyot, goes for nothing against him.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I do it only to do him Justice.

L. C. J. Holt. But you are to ask Questions only for your self.

Mr. Ashton. Remember, good Woman, you are upon your Oath; and have a care of forswearing your self; my Blood is at stake.

Mrs. Pratt. I am sure I say nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Ashton. Did I ever speak to you of going to France?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, you did.

Mr. Ashton. As I hope for Salvation I did not.

Mrs. Pratt. And another thing you told me more; if I help'd this well away, you would help me to the earning of 1000l. before Lady-day.

Mr. Ashton. Gentlemen, as to what was said of that kind, of helping her to 1000l. is no great matter to the thing in Hand; for if I was minded to go out of the Kingdom, it was necessary to use all Arguments I could, to persuade her to help me to go away.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Ashton, you must stay your time before you speak to the Jury; make your Observations upon the Evidence to your self, you shall be heard at large all that you can say in your proper time.

Mr. Ashton. I do assure my self, my Lord, of all the favour that can be shewn to a Man in my Circumstances.

L. C. J. Holt. You shall have all that is just, I do assure you.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I am glad in the Circumstances I am in, that I am to be tryed before your Lordship. But, good Woman, by Vertue of the Oath that you have taken, did I ever speak to you directly or indirectly of going to France?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, and you ask for a hie to hide what you might have occasion to keep secret.

Mr. Ashton. But I ask you about going to France; did I speak to you about going to France?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes you did.

Mr. Ashton. Then, as I hope to be sav'd, I never spoke directly or indirectly of going to France to her.

Mrs. Pratt. You were not to go for Holland nor Flunders, I am sure.

Mr. Ashton. Nay, I did take it for granted, that you did know before I met you, that we were to go to France; but I never spoke to you of it in my Life, that I am sure of; but I only urge this to let your Lordship know, that Woman has forgotten her-self.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Ashton, You will have all lawful favour; but your time for arguing upon the Evidence is not come.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You must ask your Questions now, and make your Observations afterwards; you must reserve your self for that, till after we have done.

Mr. Ashton. But then, my Lord, I shall have too many things for my Memory to retain; and therefore I beg leave, as they occur to my Memory now, and as the Witnesses go along, to make my Observations.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Mrs. Pratt, Pray, when the Vessel was hired, and you were told it was to go to France, what Persons did Mr. Ashton say were to go with him?

Mr. Pratt. Three Persons he said were to go, but he did not name them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then set up William Pafeley.

(Which was done.)

Sir W. Williams. What can you say of any for the hiring of a Vessel?

Pafeley. I did not know the Vessel was hired before I came thither.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Prithce tell us what thou dost know?

Pafeley. The Woman came to me when I was at Billingsgate, and said I must go a little way along with her: and as we were going she told me it was to go to Mr. Burdett's in Queen-street; and when we came there, Ellyot and Ashton were not within: But by that time we had been there a little while, in came Mr. Ashton, and presently after him Mr. Ellyot; and Mr. Ashton bid the Woman give him the Money out of the place where it was.

Juryman. My Lord, we do not hear him.

Sir W. Williams. Pray begin again, and speak out.

Pafeley. I met with this Woman at Billingsgate, and she told me I must go a little away along with her.

L. C. J. Holt. That Woman, name her.

Paseley. Mrs. Pratt; and I went along with her, and askt her where she was going; she said up into Queen-street: And coming to Queen-street, we went to Mr. Burdett's House, I was never there in my Life before. When I came there Ashton nor Ellyot were either of them there; after a little while in came Ashton, and presently after in came Ellyot, and he went up Stairs into the Bed Chamber; and being in the Bed-Chamber, they brought the Money out, rolled up in a half-Sheet of Paper, set up an edge, and told it out at the Window.

L. C. J. Holt. Who told it?

Paseley. Ashton told the Money out; and after the Money was told, he pulled out two pieces of a Six-pence, and when he had pulled out the two pieces of a Six-pence, he gives one half to this Mrs. Burdett, and the other half he kept himself; and he bid her pay this same Money, when the other half Six-pence that Ashton kept came to this Woman, to match that which she had; and after the Money was told, we stayed but a small while there, and came down Stairs; and when we came down Stairs we went down to Billingsgate. I think John Fisher was there, and we carried away with us a Trunk and a Hamper; John Fisher carried the Trunk, and another Man the Hamper; and after that we had carried the things on Board, I came up to the House again; and after I came up to the House, they directed us to go to the Seven Stars in the little Piazza, there was a Note written to direct us, which ordered us to go thither betwixt 10 and 11 at Night. When we came there, I think there was neither of them there present, but by that time we had been there a small space, in they both came, and sat down; and a Gentleman came in and said the Cock crowed; and therefore they should have no good luck. And then they talkt about Papers being tossed in a Hat, I dont know what, and in came two Gentlemen more, just before we went away, to see them; and after those Gentlemen had seen them, they staid but a little while. Says Ellyot to me, Master, come along with me; so I went along with him, and we came to Surrey Stairs; and on the Corner on the left hand, there was an Ale-house. He called the Waterman out of the Ale-house, and he bid me go before, and I went down; and by the time that I had gotten down, the Waterman came and halled his Wherry to, and I went in; and by that time I was gotten to the Stern, down came Ashby and Ellyot, and my Lord, and his Man.

L. C. J. Holt. You mean Ashton, not Ashby?

Paseley. Yes, my Lord, that is the Man. And after they had got into the Wherry, and were seated, they bid the Waterman put off from Land, and so we went through Bridge; and after we were through Bridge, we got on board the Smack, and they got into the Cabin; and when they were got into the Cabin, I called my Men, and bid them hale up the Anchor, and they did so; it proved to be but little Wind, but that Tide we got below half-way Tree, and were forc'd there to drop our Anchor, and stay till the next Morning: the next Morning we weighed Anchor, and by that time it was Nine a Clock, we got to Long-Reach, where lay the George Man of War, and there they hid.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And how was the hiding, pray?

Mr. Paseley. It was down in the Quarters under the Hatches.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did they hide?

Paseley. We reckoned they would come on Board a Pressing, and they bid me show my Protection.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did they desire to be hid?

Paseley. Yes, and after we came by the George Man of War, they came up again, and remained afterwards in the Cabin, till we came almost to Gravesend: a little before we came to Gravesend, they all hid again; and when they were hid, remained hid all, I think, but only Ellyot; I think, he popt up; and they were resolved to go eat their Victuals; but then I told them, there was a Barge coming, and so he went down again, and there they remained, till they were taken, for the Barge was on Board presently, and found them there.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What kind of place was it, that they were hid in?

Paseley. They could not sit, nor stand up right in it, but lay all along, or lean'd on their Elbows.

L. C. J. Holt. What did they lie upon there, pray?

Paseley. There was Ballast, and slit Deal a top of the Ballast.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Well, what happened when the Captain came on board?

Paseley. When Captain Billop came on board, Master, says he, you have got a couple of stout young Men, I must press them, or to that effect. I hope not so, Captain, said I. Why, what have you to shew, says he? I told him, I had a Protection. Let me see it, says he. So I shews him my Protection, and he looks in it. Well, says he, Master, I must look farther; and went to rights to the Place where they lay, and found them lying all together. After they were taken, and were come out, Captain Billop commanded them into his Boat, and commanded me, and my two Men, to go into the Barge; afterwards he set his Man on shoar at Hungerford Stairs; and when we came to Whiteball Bridge, the Gate was not opened, and we stayed a little while at Whiteball Bridge; and when we came a shoar, Ellyot gave me half a Crown, and bid me say, when I came upon my Examination, that we were bound for Flanders, and not for France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Where were you bound for, pray?

Paseley. They examined me in the Chamber, when they paid the Money, if I knew they went to France; and I told them, yes, very well.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did they desire you to go to any particular Port in France?

Paseley. No, we were to touch at any Place we could.

Sir Willi. Williams. Did they mention any thing of Flanders to you?

Paseley. No, they did not.

L. C. J. Holt. Did any body mention going to France to you?

Paseley. Yes, they did. They askt me, whether I could carry them to France safe.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. Who did ask you that?

Pafeley. Ellyot or Ashton, one of the two, I cannot directly say which; but if I be not mistaken, it was Ashton.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When you came from Rgby's at the Seven Stars, Who came away with you?

Pafeley. Ashton and Ellyot.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Ellyot and Ashton both come out with you?

Pafeley. Yes, they did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. And did they part, after they were come out?

Pafeley. Yes. Ashton did go away from us presently after we were come out.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. When you came on Board, had you any Discourse with Ashton, about going to France?

Pafeley. No, not that I remember.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you go on foot, from the Seven Stars?

Pafeley. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. And did they part, after you came out?

Pafeley. Yes, they did.

L. C. J. Holt. And who went with you, did you say?

Pafeley. Ellyot came with me.

L. C. J. Holt. Whither went Mr. Ashton then?

Pafeley. I cannot tell, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he say to you, when he went from you?

Pafeley. He bid me go along with Ellyot.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Mr. Ashton there as soon as you?

Pafeley. Not quite; but by that time the Waterman had got the Boat to the Shoar, and I in the Stern, they were all come down.

L. C. J. Holt. When Ashton came, who came along with him?

Pafeley. I saw them all upon the Stair-head; I was in the Boat when they came. I never saw my Lord, till he was upon the Stairs.

Juryman. My Lord, I desire to ask him, What the Sum of Money was, that was paid at Burdett's?

Pafeley. It was 93 Guineas and Six Pence.

L. C. J. Holt. Who brought it?

Pafeley. It was laid down in the Window.

L. C. J. Holt. But I ask you, who brought it?

Pafeley. I did see Ashton bring it, and lay it down in the Window, and he told it out, and put it up again, and gave it to Mrs. Burdett.

Juryman. My Lord, I desire to know what is the usual Rate to go to Flanders; What may a Smack and three Men deserve?

Pafeley. Truly I cannot tell, I never went upon my own account in my Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Pratt, what say you, what is the usual Rate to go to Flanders or Holland?

Mrs. Pratt. I believe they may go for a matter of 20 l. or 30 l.

L. C. J. Holt. You hear them Gentlemen, what they say.

Juryman. Yes; but, my Lord, he says, he gave them notice the Barge was a coming. I desire to ask him. Did he know there was a design to search him or no?

Pafeley. Sir, I knew that there was a search for Seamen.

L. C. J. Holt. But did you know there was to be a search, in order to the taking these Gentlemen on board you? For that is the Question, I believe, the Jury would ask you.

Pafeley. No, I did not know of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But you say, these Gentlemen desired to be hid?

Pafeley. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you hid them according to their desire?

Pafeley. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Before you went on Board, had you any discourse of hiding? did they ask you for a place to hide in?

Pafeley. Yes, they did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who did?

Pafeley. Ashton and Elliot both askt if there were a place in the Ship to hide them, and I told them, yes, there was.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Ashton, will you ask him any Questions?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I desire to ask him this Question. Did we desire you to come and hide us, or did you desire us to go down?

Pafeley. You desired this of us, that if we saw any Man of War's Boat we would tell you that you might be hid.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray repeat that over again, did they desire you to give them Information when any Boat was coming, that they might hide, or did you desire them to hide your Self?

Pafeley. They desired it of me.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then set up Charles Betsworth.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Before Betsworth is examined, I would ask Pafeley one Question? was there any Coat left on board you?

Pafeley. Yes, there were two Coats of the Waterman's left on Board, and I took them and lockt them up.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Is that the Man that own'd the Coats?

Pafeley. Yes, it is:

Sir W. Williams. Then Betsworth, will you give an Account of what you know against the Prisoner at the Bar?

Betsworth. I cannot tell, my Lord, I never saw the Gentleman in my Life before, that I know of.

Sir W. Williams. Prethee hear, Friend, tell what you know of carrying any Gentlemen on Board the Smack.

Betsworth. If it please your Lordship, I was going home from our Stairs about 7 or 8 a Clock in the Evening; that is, from Surrey-stairs, and a Gentleman called Sculler. Said I to him, Sir, where do you go? says he, As far as the Tower; said I, 'tis against Tide, I cannot go; it will be ten a Clock before it be high Water. Says he, will you go with us at that time? Said I, what will you give me? Will you give me half a Crown? then I'll carry you down, for I cannot stay out so late for nothing. Yes, says he, I will give it you. Then I came and brought my Boat to the Shoar; he asked me then what my Name was; I told him Charles Betsworth. Says he, will you be sure to stay till we come? Yes, said I, if you will be sure to come; and if I be not here, I will be at such a House, an Ale-House, that was there by; the Sign of the Swan: So I staid, and carryed a Fare or two over the Water, and about 11 a Clock comes a Gentleman down, and calls Charles; and I went out a doors down towards my Boat, and there comes one Gentleman down, and a kind of a Seaman,

As I thought; and the Seaman went into the Stern, and the Gentleman sat down at the Back-board, and there was three Gentlemen more came down the Stairs into the Boat; one had a whitish Cloak, and the other a loose Coat; and they brought a Leather Bag that would hold about a Peck; so I put off with them, and rowed down the River, and all that I heard them say, was when we came under the Temple; says one of the Gentlemen, when do you hear the King goes away? Says another of them, he goes away a Tuesday; and when we got through Bridge, one of the Gentlemen askt where the Vessel lay, and a Man in the Stern said on Southwark side, over against the Tower, and when we came a little below Battle-bridge near Pickle Herring-Stairs, the Master said, there lies the Vessel, and it had a long-Pendant and a top Sail loose; so they paid me before they came on Board, and when they were got a Board away rowed I; and when I came to land to take out my Sculls and things, there I mist my Cloaths; and I rowed after them, thinking they could not be got far; but when I came to the place where they went on Board, the Vessel was gone, and I rowed down as low as Lime-house Reach, and in Black Hall Reach I overtook a Vessel, which I thought was the Vessel. I askt them who they belonged to, and they said they came from Hursleydown, and I made answer I brought two Fares on Board a Vessel at Pickle-herring-Stairs; and had forgot to take my Cloaths that they had; they made answer, I brought no Fare on Board them, so I rowed on farther beyond Barkinshelf, and because there was no Wind, I thought none could have gone beyond that Place, and therefore resolved to row back again when it was Flood; and I rowed up to Greenwich, but could not meet with the Vessel; and I heard nothing of my Cloaths, till last Friday was Seven-night I had my Cloaths brought to me.

Sir W. Williams. Can you say this Gentleman Mr. Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar was one of them that you carryed on Board the Smack?

Betsworth. No, I know never a one of them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But you say the Persons that you took in at Surrey-Stairs carried away your Cloaths with them?

Betsworth. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then I ask you, Pasely, Is that one of the Persons that he brought on Board your Smack?

Pasely. Yes, he was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. How many came on Board the Smack?

Pasely. Four; My Lord Preston, Mr. Ashton, Mr. Elliot, and my Lord Preston's Man.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you take in your Pendant?

Pasely. Yes, I did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When did you take it in?

Pasely. As soon as we weighed Anchor.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. How came you to take it in?

Pasely. Elliot spoke to me to take it in.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they mention how many were to go in the Smack?

Pasely. He said, they were three of them, not four, as I remember, that were to go.

Sir W. Williams. Will you ask him any thing Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. No, Sir: But I desire the Woman may not go out of Court.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no; she shall stay.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then call John Fisher, and James Amonds. (Fisher stood up.)

Sir W. Williams. Pray do you acquaint the Court and the Jury what you know of this matter, whether you carried any things on Board the Smack, and what; and who came on Board, and what hapned.

Fisher. My Lord, a matter of six Hours before they came on Board, my Master carryed me a Shoar, and brought me to Mr. Burdett's House, and gave me a Trunk, and I went with it, and another Man with a Hamper, and brought them on Board; and about 11, or 12 a Clock, my Master comes and brings Mr. Ashton and the other aboard; and he bid me go forward, and heave up the Anchor, and so I did, and we went down the River; but we could go but a little way because there was no Wind; and when we came to Half way tree, the Tide Turning, we were forced to cast Anchor again, and stay till the Morning; and in the Morning we weighed Anchor again about 8 a Clock, and about 9 we came into Long reach, where lay the George Man of War, and then Mr. Ashton and they hid; and when we came below them again, they came up again till we came almost near the Block-House at Gravesend, and there they hid again; and Mr. Ashton I think came up afterwards, and bid me go down to the Hamper, and fetch them up some Victuals for their Dinner, and I went down and fetch'd up some Beef, and Mr. Ashton took hold of it; and I took a Bottle of Wine or two out; and just before I brought all the Victuals up, the Barge was spied a coming to us; and then he went down again: And there they hid, and the piece of Beef was a top of them. Captain Killep when he came near, waved his Hat, to bid us lie by; and we did lie by, till he came up to us; and when he came up to us, says he, Master, you have gotten a couple of good likely Men, worth the coming on Board for. Says the Master, I hope Captain, you wont press them. What have you to keep you clear. Says he, I have a Protection. Have you says the Captain? Let me see it. So he shew'd him the Protection, and he read both our Names in it. Then, says he, Master, I must look farther; and he went down to the Quarter Hatch- es, and took them up, just where they lay. First my Lord came out; and he searcht them all, as they came out. Mr. Elliot came out next, and Mr. Ashton stay'd within, being the last Man. And after he had searcht them, and done what he pleased; he got all the Papers and Writings: then he commanded us all to go into the Barge; and they came on Board the George Frigate in Long Reach. And at the Ship, Mr. Elliot came to us; and bid us say, we were going for Flanders. And after we came to Whitehall, Mr. Ashton gave me a half Crown Piece, and bid me say, we were bound for Flanders, and not for France.

L. C. J. Holt. Was that after they were taken, or before?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. When was the first time, that they would have you say, they were bound for Flanders?

Fisher. It was on board the George Frigate in Long-Reach.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it that bid you say so?

Fisher. Mr. Elliot and Mr. Ashton both, in the Ship's Steerage, where they came to us.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Where was the next Place, that they bid you say so?

Fisher.

Fisher. At Whitehall Bridge, Ashton gave me a half Crown Piece, and bid me say so.

Juryman. Did he speak that aloud, or softly at Whitehall?

Fisher. He whispered it in my Ear.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they ever say they were bound for Flanders, till after they were taken?

Fisher. No.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What manner of Place was this that they hid in?

Fisher. An ugly hole, where a Man has no room to lie along at ease; he can neither stand upright, nor set upright.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you see the Waterman that brought them on Board?

Fisher. No.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there any Waterman's Coat left?

Fisher. Yes, there was two.

L. C. J. Holt. But didst thou see the Boat?

Fisher. We were asleep when they came on Board, and the Boat was put off as soon as ever they came on Board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then as soon as ever they were on Board, you got up the Anchor, and pulled in the Pendant?

Fisher. Yes. We immediately hove up the Anchor; and took in the Pendant.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did any Sculler hale you afterwards, as you were going down?

Fisher. Yes, as we were going down there did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did you say to him?

Fisher. I was not steering then: but this other Man made answer.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Ashton, Will you ask him any thing?

Mr. Ashton. When I gave you the Half Crown that you speak of, what did I say to you?

Fisher. You bid me when I came to be examin'd, say we were going to Flanders, and not to France.

Mr. Ashton. What did I say else?

Fisher. You bid me take that half Crown for to Night, to help to bear my Charges, and to Morrow you would take farther care of us.

Mr. Ashton. I told you you were Prisoners now, and I gave you that; and told you I would take farther care of you.

Fisher. You did not say we were Prisoners, but you said you gave me that to help bear Charges for that Night, and on the Morrow you would take farther care of us.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then set up James Amonds.

Sir W. Williams. Are you sworn Friend?

Amonds. Yes, Sir.

Sir W. Williams. Then let the Court and the Jury know what you can say in this matter.

Amonds. My Lord, they came on Board about 11 or 12 a Clock at Night, I was asleep in the Cabin, and heard a Boat coming aboard, and I turn'd out, and before I could get out of the Cabin, they were got aboard, and I see no Boat, nor nothing. So, says the Master, go forward and heave up the Anchor; and after we had heaved up the Anchor, I goes into the Ship to tow the Vessel down, because there was no Wind, and we would not let the Vessel go foul on the Ships that were in the River, and a little after we came on Board again; and when I came on Board again, they were all on Board, all four. After that comes a Waterman, and I was at the Helm steering, and he called out to us! Oh hoe, says he; did not I bring a Parcel of Gentlemen on Board this Smack? Nor as I know of, said I. Says he, I carryed a Parcel of Gentlemen on Board some Smack, that had a Pendant out, and I know not where it is; they carryed my Cloaths on Board with them. Said I, I know nothing of it, nor I did not; for I saw neither Waterman, nor Boat; so away the Waterman goes, and we went down the River, and when we came to Half-way Tree, we came to Anchor, and my Miller went and laid himself down, the Tide being almost done, and there being no Wind, and Mr. Ashton and they lay in the Cabin; and says Mr. Ashton to me, take care of us now, and we will take care of you hereafter; says he, we shall help you to many a Freight, and many a Pound. Ay, ay, said I, you will be taken care of to be sure at Day break, or when the Day comes on; about 8 a Clock, we hove up the Anchor again, and fell down as low as Long Reach, where the George Frigate lay; and when we came there, they went down to hide in the Quarter Hatches. I steered it down still; and when we were got past that Man of War, the Hatches were taken up, and they came up again out of the Quarters, and sat in the Cabin again, and we had a fresh Gale of Wind, and run down to Gravesend quickly, and when we came near the Block Houses, said I, we are almost at the Block Houses; then said they we will go down and hide a while; and so they did till they were past there, then resolving to go to Dinner.

L. C. J. Holt. What time a day was this?

Amonds. About 11 a Clock, as near as I can guess.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, they did go down to hide then, did they?

Amonds. Yes, they did go down and hide, and came up again. I am sure some of them; I heard some of them in the Cabin.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, what followed?

Amonds. After they were gotten up, and past Gravesend, this Man was sent for Victuals for them, and so he fetch'd them some Roast Beef, and some other things; and just as the Roast Beef was going into the Cabin, said I, Here comes a Barge off to press. So when I cried, the Barge was a coming, they took the Victuals down into the Quarters, and there lay they; and the Victuals a top of them. And when the Barge came near us, the Captain waved his Hat, to command us to lie by. Said I, We must lie by, for the Barge is coming up to us. And we capp'd the Helm a lee, and lay by; and after we were laid by, the Barge came on Board us. Says the Captain of the Barge, You have got a couple of likely, good Men, Master, said he. Ay, says the Master; but I hope you won't press them. Says the Captain, Have you got any thing to keep you clear? Yes, if it please you, noble Captain, I have got a Protection. I am sorry for that, says he, and comes on Board, for he staid all this time in the Barge; and smiling upon him, he comes on Board, and says he, Come, let's see your Protection. And the Master shew'd it him, and he read it. Says the Captain, I must look a little farther. And he goes into the Cabin, and took up the Hatches, and there lay all these Gentlemen. They were something longer a coming up than he would have them; so says the Captain to his Men in the Barge, Come on Board and see who is here. And so some of his Men did come on Board; and to the best of my remembrance, my Lord was the

the first Man that came up: And when my Lord came up, the Captain run his Hands into his Coat Pockets, to feel for Papers, as I suppose; and my Lord desired the Captain to be kind, and take nothing away. Says he, I'll take nothing but Papers; 'tis Papers I look for: And he pull'd out a Watch, and gave it him again. After that, Elliot came out; and whether he found any thing upon Mr. Elliot, or no, I cannot tell. Mr. Ashton was the last that came up; and when he came up, a Waterman of the Captain's calls to him, and says, That Gentleman that came up last has put something in his Bosom, but what I can't tell. So the Captain took Mr. Ashton by the Arm, and turn'd him about; and, says he, What did you put in your Bosom? Says Mr. Ashton, Nothing but my Handkerchief; and pull'd out his Handkerchief, and shew'd him. Then the Captain put his Hand in, and pull'd out Papers, with a piece of Lead tied to them. And that is all that I saw.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But tell us what happen'd afterwards.

Amonds. When that was done, the Captain commanded us all into his Barge; and I row'd, and some of the rest row'd, it being cold Weather, till we came up to London. After we came up to London, they did not say any thing to me, because I was a rowing till then. It seems they did give them some Money, but they gave me none, not till I came into Whitehall; and then my Lord's Man came to me, and call'd me a one side; says he, Here's Half a Crown, will serve you to Night; and be sure, when you come to be examined, that you say, you were bound for Flanders, and not for France, and you will be taken farther care of to Morrow.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What manner of place is that Quarter-Hatches?

Amonds. They could neither sit, nor stand upright in it.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What did they lie upon?

Amonds. There were three or four slit Deals that were laid over the Ballast, but it seems they had shuffl'd 'em on the one side when they were taken, for the Ballast lay open.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did the Waterman that brought these Men on Board you, leave his Coat there?

Amonds. I did not see the Boat, nor the Waterman; and therefore I am not able to say any thing about it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came the Pendant to be taken down?

Amonds. I can't tell that, I was in the Skiff when it was taken down.

Jury-man. My Lord, I do not well understand how the Papers came to be taken away from Mr. Ashton.

L. C. J. Holt. He tells you, Mr. Ashton was seen to put his Hand with something into his Bosom; and being tax'd with it, he said it was his Handkerchief; and the Captain put in his Hand, and pull'd out a Bundle of Papers.

Jury-man. Did he see Ashton take away the Papers from any other place?

Amonds. No, an't please your Honour, I did not see them till they were taken out of his Bosom.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you see Captain Billop take the Papers from out Mr. Ashton's Coat?

Amonds. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Holt. Where were they before they spy'd the Barge a coming?

Amonds. If it please your Honour, I heard 'em talk; I thought they had been up, but it seems there was but one of 'em up when they said, the Barge was coming a-board: I was at the Helm, and heard 'em talk.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you knew nothing of these Papers, but when you saw 'em taken out of Ashton's Bosom?

Amonds. No, my Lord.

Sir Wil. Williams. If you will ask him any thing, Mr. Ashton, now you may.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, Friend, had not I been up first, and search'd before the Papers were taken?

Amonds. Not as I know of.

Mr. Ashton. Did not I go down into the Hold to take my Hat, and call to you, and desired that I might go down for my Hat?

Amonds. I can't tell; for when I saw the Papers taken from you, I was in the Stern; I was not down.

Mr. Ashton. Had not I been search'd first?

Amonds. Not that I know of, till you were in the Stern.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then swear Captain Billop.

Which was done, he standing up by the Sheriff.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Captain, I suppose you may be heard from that place.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I desire the Witness may come down, else I shall not be able to distinguish what he says: It is the proper place for him I think.

L. C. J. Holt. Let him come down.

Mr. Ashton. I humbly desire, my Lord, that the Witnesses may all be obliged to stay in Court.

L. C. J. Holt. Let them all stay.

Sir W. Williams. You are sworn, Sir: Are you not?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I am.

Sir W. Williams. Then, pray, will you give an Account where you took these Persons, how you took 'em, what you found, and how you disposed of it.

Capt. Billop. Must I begin from the Beginning?

Sir W. Williams. Yes; Tell your whole Knowledge, in Order of Time, as it fell out.

Capt. Billop. What, from the Time I went out?

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Make it as short as you can.

Sir W. Williams. Yes, you must tell all; for you speak now to a new Jury, and here is another Prisoner at the Bar to be tried.

Capt. Billop. The last of December, about Two a Clock, or between One and Two, my Lord of Danby came to me at one of the Doors of the House of Lords, and told me, his Father must speak with me; and he carry'd me up to my Lord Linsey's Chamber; and in a little time my Lord President came there, and told me, he heard there were divers Persons that had Papers of dangerous Consequence, and were going to France, and desired me to use my Skill for my seizing and securing of the Papers. I began then to talk of what was proper for such an Undertaking; and I told my Lord, I thought the best way, was to go to Woolwich or Deptford, and to take a Man of War's Pinnace with us: Upon that, my Lord of Danby being by, said, he knew of a Boat that he could have, which was my Lord Duke of Grafton's; and my Lady Dutchess had had lent it him, and he would go, and get it ready: Upon this my Lord President said, he would give me a Note of the Name of the Vessel, and where she went out; and likewise a Letter to another Person, that would instruct me farther, and shew me the Vessel; accordingly my Lord President gave me the Letter, and I went away to look for the Person, but could not find him. My Lord Danby came to Tower-Wharf himself with the Boat; and I left a Man there to bring me word, when the Boat came up at the Place where I was; and Captain Stringer, and Sir Thomas Taylor came there to me. After my Lord of Danby had told me what I had in the Boat, I told him, I thought there were not Arms enough; and therefore it were best to go to the Tower, to borrow some Arms from thence: When we came to the Tower, my Lord Lucas was not come in; and when I had staid a little time, he did come in: And when I had acquainted him with my business, he sent for an Officer of the Guard, and there we borrowed some Arms, a Blunderbuss of his, and a Carbine, and the like; and about Eleven a Clock, or somewhat past, we put off from Tower-Wharf. It was calm, and we rowed down towards Gravesend; and we went aboard a Vessel or two, but I was not willing to lose much time, because I was resolved to take them before they were gotten too far: So we rowed away for Gravesend, where I refresh'd my Men, and afterwards went down into the Hope; and I did judge that no Vessel that came from London that Tide could be a-head of me. I went on board several Vessels that lay in the River, in order unto the pressing of Men; and I went on board all sorts of Vessels, because I would give no Suspicion of what I was about; and having been on board of several, I pressed two or three Rarkin Men; and one particularly, that knew all the Vessels upon the River; and I made him row very near to me, that I might talk to him; I had got the Names of a great many Smacks, and gave it out that I would press a Smack to carry for a Tender to my Ship, when the Fleet went out; and naming this Smack that I was to go search, I told him, I heard such a Smack sailed well, and I had Thoughts of pressing her; he told me, She was old; but said I, She will serve a Summer well enough; and that is it I intend to press, if I can find her. Says he, I'll shew you her, I know her when I see her; so we went on board several Vessels as we went along. And as we were rowing along before, we came to the Nest Point by Tilbury Fort, we saw several Smacks coming down the River; and when we came about the Point, the headmost Smack of all, the Fellow lookt out, and said, Tonder is the Thomas and Elizabeth. Then I called to one of my Men to wave, and bring them to lie by, which they did, and they lay by till I came on board. When I came on board, I saw two lusty Men stand by the Master; said I, Master, you have got two good lusty Fellows that would serve the King; but I'll be kind and civil to you, I'll take but one. Says the Master, I hope not so; for I have a Protection; with that, I came on board, and took his Protection in my Hand, and read it. As soon as I had read it, I ask'd him, if he had no more Men upon Deck than what I saw. He said, No. Then, said I, I must look a little farther. And I went into the Quarters, and took up the Scuttle, and the Hatches, and I saw some Gentlemen lie. Oh, said I, What a pretty

Posture is this? Where are we a going? Gentlemen; you must turn out. The first that came to hand was my Lord Preston; but I did not know him then, nor some time after I was in the Boat with him: So I took hold of him, and help'd him up; and when he was up, said I, Sir, I must search you. Says he, I hope you will take nothing from me. Nothing, said I, but Papers: So I search'd all his Pockets; and as I found any Papers, I put them into my own Coat Pocket. And I took his Watch, and pull'd it out, and gave it him again: After that I had search'd him, came up Mr. Elliot the first Man, and the next was Mr. Ashton, who crouded up while Elliot came up, in his Night Cap. I think, Mr. Ashton, you had your Night-Cap on. So Mr. Ashton goes down again, and puts on a Perriwig, I think; but coming up again, one of my Sea-men sees him take something, and put it into his Bosom: He follows Mr. Ashton quick, and pulls me by the Coat; and, says he, That Gentleman has got something in his Bosom: So I took hold of him, and turned him round; said I, Mr. Ashton, what have you got in your Bosom? Nothing, says he but a Handkerchief; and immediately he put his Hand into his Bosom, and pluck'd out the Handkerchief, and shew'd me. As soon as he had pulled out the Handkerchief, I put my Hand into his Bosom, and there I met with the Pacquet that had the Lead affixed to't; and pulling it out, I clapp'd it into my own Pocket; for I thought that was the Matter of Moment that I was to secure. So I ordered them to go into the Boat, and the Master of the Vessel to let go his Anchor; and two Men I left in the Vessel, whom I ordered to search, and to secure what they found till farther Order; and I left two Muskets with them. And after we were in the Boat, they desired to have something handed in, which I gave Order for, a Hamper, and a Night bag; and away we put off from the Vessel, and rowed up; it was against Tide, and very cold Weather. In a little time Mr. Elliot called one of the Gentlemen, my Lord; then I whispered him, and ask'd him who that Lord was, and he told me, It was my Lord Preston. Then I saluted my Lord; and my Lord was pleased to say, he was very well satisfied they were fallen into the Hands of a Civil Gentleman. So rowing up against Tide, and it being a Westerly Wind, which blow'd very fresh, My Lord desired that I would let them stop at Gravesend, till the Tide turned, that they might refresh themselves. I begged his Pardon, and said, there was a Ship in Long-Reach, the George Frigot, and we would stop there; and I did not doubt, but I could command the great Cabin for his Accommodation; and there he might have any thing that he wanted. My Lord seem'd contented with it; but before we came on Board the Man of War, there happened a great deal of Discourse betwixt us of several things.

Sir W. Williams. Pray repeat it, as well as you can remember, what Discourse happened.

Capt. Billop. Truly my Lord Preston being cold, and the Hamper standing by, says he, Captain Billop, we have not eaten, we will eat if you will. And there was a piece of Beef at the top of the Hamper, and Bottles of Wine; and I opened the Hamper, sitting fairest for it, and handed out the Beef, the Bread, and the Bottles; and after we had eaten what we would, my Lord ordered the rest to be given to the Men that were were the Boats Crew, and after we had done this, and taken out a Bottle or two, and shut up the Hamper again, my Lord Preston drank to me once or twice, and seem'd very well satisfy'd and pleas'd with his Usage. He told me he was sensible of my Civilities; and if ever it lay in his Power, he would not forget me. So we drank again, and talk'd again; but before we came to the Ship, my Lord Preston told me, that if ever it lay in his Power, he would be sure to make an acknowledgment of the Civility I had shew'd him. And to the best of my Memory, he had this Expression, If there ever was any thing he could serve me in, he would do it with all his Heart, if I would but dispose of the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What would Mr. Ashton have had you done? What did he say to you?

Captain Billop. Mr. Ashton said, it would do me no good to injure so many Gentlemen; and desired me that I would throw the Packet over-board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did he mean by so many Gentlemen?

Captain Billop. My Lord, I cannot tell, but that was his Expression.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who desired you to throw the Packet over-board?

Captain Billop. Mr. Ashton did several times.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did he say to you? What Arguments did he use?

Captain Billop. My Lord, it was so many times over, and so much mixture of Discourse we had; that I am not able to tell the Particulars.

L. C. J. Holt. But what Arguments did he use?

Captain Billop. I don't know that he used any more great Arguments, more than what I have told you already.

L. C. J. Holt. Say that again that you said before.

Captain Billop. He said, 'twould do me no good to injure so many Gentlemen. Prethee, Captain Billop, says he, throw it over board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did he say farther?

Captain Billop. I'll tell you, if you'll give me leave. Mr. Ashton did say, a little after this, with a great deal of Insinuation, Captain Billop, What if you should turn about, and go along with us? No, Mr. Ashton, said I, that I cannot do. Says Mr. Ellyot, Prethee, throw the Packet over-board. This they did as we came up the River; and 'tis the most that I can remember, till we came on board the George; and when we came on board the George, Ellyot called me into the Steerage, and desired me, of all Love, that I would dispose of the Packet: And he said, that now I had an Opportunity to make my self as rich, and as great as I would, and no body could see it, if I did throw it away. While I was in the Ship, Mr. Ashton, my Lord, and Mr. Ellyot, were with me, in the Steerage. Said I, I shall be taken notice of, to be whispering; pray forbear. Ashton then spoke to me again, to desire me to throw the Packet over board; by this time the Victuals was handed in, and there we eat and drank, and my Lord smoked a Pipe of Tobacco, before the Tide turned; and when the Tide made, we went into the Boat again, and rowed up towards London, and they were using these sorts of Arguments over and over again. And once Mr. Ellyot, I think 'twas, to the best of my remembrance, told me, Now you have it in your Power to make your Fortune, and may be as great a Man, and as rich a Man as you can desire. And Mr. Ashton said some Words something to the same purpose; Prethee, said he, throw it over board: What good will it do you? So I refusing of it, as I did many times, Mr. Ellyot told me, that I might take the Letters that were taken in my Lord Preston's Pocket, and tie the Lead to them, and throw the Packet over board. No, said I, Mr. Ellyot, Sure, you would take the King's Council to be a very odd sort of Men, that they cannot find out such a thing as this. Prethee, dear Billop, said he, throw it over-board. Many times whispering me in the Ear; and so did Mr. Ashton many times, saying, You may do us a great Kindness in it. And we drank, and had several Intermissions; and they at me again, and I denied them, and they desisted; and then they at it again: And Mr. Ellyot then told me, Prethee, dear Billop, throw it over board. Said I, Mr. Ellyot, If I should be so great a Villain to do such a thing, if ever it was your Day would you trust me again? Put it to be your own Case. Says he, You have Gentlemen to deal withal. But, said I, I will never put it into your Power. Mr. Ellyot seem'd to be angry at this, and said, Every Dog had his Day. Said I, I hope never to see it your day: But I pray, forbear this Discourse; let me beg that of you; for I do not desire to be provoked to use you otherwise than as Gentlemen. And after that, they never urged me more to throw the Packet over board: But Mr. Ellyot was angry, and very much disturbed, and wish'd a Thunderbolt might strike the Boat, and sink it. So I brought them up, through London-Bridge, and they said no more about the Packet; but Ellyot wish'd, that London-Bridge might have fallen on our Heads. At length, I brought them to Whitehall; and I put my Man a-shore at Hungerford Stairs, that he might get before, and give the Porter notice at Whitehall-Bridge, that he might open the Gate. I brought my Lord Preston, and the rest, to the Bridge; and while I was arming my Men to guard them up to my Lord Nottingham's Office, I suppose they then took the Opportunity to give the Men Money, getting near to them; I know nothing of that: But I carried them up to my Lord Nottingham's, and there I delivered them, and the Packet to my Lord. After some time, the Packet lay upon the Table, and my Lord Nottingham sends me for my Lord Preston. When my Lord Preston came in, I withdrew without bidding, and the Packet lay upon the Table unopen'd: And when my Lord Preston came out, I went in on my self, and the Packet lay in the same Place and Posture, and not opened. And I stay'd while Mr. Ashton was call'd in, and my Lord Nottingham ask'd him a great many Questions.

Mr. Ashton. Pray repeat those Questions, Captain Billop; and what Answers I made.

Captain Billop. Truly, my Memory does not serve me to remember all of them, and I was in a very uneasy Condition at that time, and would much rather have been in my Bed, than any where else: For the Night before I went down, I had a Plaister of Spanish Flies put to my Back, and they had rais'd a great Blister, and it had not been dress'd so long, that the Napkin that was applied stuck so to it, that the Flesh was jagged, and I was in a great deal of Pain, so that I did not mind so much as I should have done at another time, what was said.

Mr. Ashton. But pray, Captain, remember as much as you can what pass'd.

Captain

Captain Billop. But I'll tell you what I remember; I remember my Lord Nottingham ask'd, who I took the Packet from? And you owned, I took it from you.

Sir Will. Williams. Pray Mr. Ashton, give us leave to have done with him, and then you shall ask him what you please. Pray go on Captain Billop.

Captain Billop. Then my Lord Nottingham sent for Mr. Ellyot in, and ask'd him whither he was going? And he said for Flanders. My Lord asked him, what he was going there for? He said, he was going to seek his Bread; he was turned out of all at home, and he had rather go abroad to seek his Bread, than stay at home to starve.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was this the Lead, that you took fix'd to the Packet?

Captain Billop. Yes, Sir; that is the Lead.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you take that Lead, with the Packet, out of Mr. Ashton's Bosom?

Captain Billop. This was tied fast to the Packet that was taken out of Mr. Ashton's Bosom. These honest Men saw me take it.

Sir Will. Williams. Now, if you have a mind to ask him any Questions, you may.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, Captain Billop, did not you search me before you took the Packet upon me?

Captain Billop. No, not that I remember.

Mr. Ashton. Had not you taken some other Papers from me before?

Captain Billop. No, Sir; I took none from you but the Packet.

Mr. Ashton. Pray recollect your self, for perhaps my Life may turn upon it: You are as much a Witness for me, as for the King; you are to swear the Truth, and the whole Truth.

Captain Billop. And I will do you all the Justice I can, I will assure you.

L. C. J. Holt. Answer his Question, Captain Billop.

Mr. Ashton. Was not I the first Man that spoke to you after we came up?

Captain Billop. No, Mr. Ellyot was the first Man that spoke to me, that I knew.

Mr. Ashton. Did not I ask you to give me leave to go down for my Hat?

Captain Billop. Truly, I don't remember that.

Mr. Ashton. Did not you reply, That the Man should go down and fetch my Hat?

Captain Billop. 'Tis likely I might, but I don't remember it.

Mr. Ashton. Had not you search'd me then, and taken my Papers from me?

Captain Billop. No, Mr. Ashton; for, upon the Oath that I have taken, I took no Papers that I remember, but the Papers that I took out of my Lord Preston's Pocket, and the Packet that I took out of your Bosom; for my Lord Nottingham ask'd me, if that Packet was all the Letters I took? I told him, no; and shew'd him the Papers I took out of my Lord Preston's Pocket, and they prov'd to be of no Consequence, and my Lord Nottingham gave them me again, and I carried them to my Lord Preston.

Mr. Ashton. Did not I go down into the Hole for my Hat?

Captain Billop. I believe you might.

Mr. Ashton. And was it not after that, that you took the Papers out of my Breast?

Captain Billop. Yes, I believe it was.

Mr. Ashton. Where is your Man that call'd to you, and said, I put something in my Breast?

Captain Billop. Here he is, by me, if you would ask him any thing.

Mr. Ashton. You say, I spoke to you about disposing of these Papers: Pray, from the Time that we came into your Boat, before we came on Board the George Man of War, did I speak to you?

Captain Billop. Yes, of the Packet you did: You said, What Good would it do me to injure so many Gentlemen?

Mr. Ashton. There pass'd no more than general Discourse before we came on Board.

Captain Billop. Yes, Mr. Ashton; I'll tell you another thing you put me in mind of. When you saw that, though you were so eager with me, nothing would prevail, you said, I know Captain Billop, and have known him many Years; and nothing will prevail on him, if he have no mind to it: And I know, if he will serve us, he will serve us generously, and like a Gentleman.

Sir W. Williams. Speak that again.

Captain Billop. He said, I know Captain Billop; if he will serve us, he will do it generously, and like a Gentleman.

L. C. J. Holt. Who said so?

Captain Billop. Mr. Ashton.

Mr. Ashton. Did I speak to you to dispose of the Papers after we came from on board the Ship? I suppose you remember it was cold, and the Tilt was call'd for, to be lay'd over us, and I fell asleep; and you know I never wak'd, nor spoke, till I came to London-Bridge.

Captain Billop. Yes, yes; we had the Tilt over us.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray speak your Questions out, that we may hear 'em, Mr. Ashton.

Captain Billop. Mr. Ashton did go to sleep a while, but he had many times urg'd me, and spoke to me to throw the Papers over board.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it that told you, Every Dog had his Day?

Captain Billop. That was Ellyot.

Sir W. Williams. Was there any Discourse about Turning of the Tide?

Captain Billop. Mr. Ellyot said, You have now an Opportunity to make your own Fortune, and you may be as great, and as rich as you please; for 'tis impossible the Tide can run long this way.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Mr. Ashton say any thing about going along with them?

Captain Billop. Yes: You may remember, Mr. Ashton, that you said, Come, go along with us; you may do as well there, or better than you do here.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did he tell you, where you were to go with 'em?

Captain Billop. No, Sir; nor I did not ask him the Question.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, When did you give my Lord Nottingham these Papers?

Captain Billop. Do you mean that Bundle that I took out of your Bosom?

Mr. Ashton. Yes.

Captain Billop. As soon as ever I follow'd my Lord Nottingham into his Room, I pull'd 'em out, and gave 'em him.

Mr. Ashton. Did not you go out of my Lord Nottingham's Room, and give my Lord Nottingham some loose Papers?

Captain Billop. Yes.

Mr. Ashton. After this, Was not my Lord Preston call'd in to be examin'd?

Capt. Billop. Yes.

Mr. Ashton. How long was my Lord Preston in the Room, while you were out?

A a a a a

Capt:

Capt. Billop. I can't tell very well.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, Sir, answer that Question.

Capt. Billop. I believe it might be half a quarter of an Hour: I do not think it was much more.

Mr. Ashton. I believe you must remember some sort of Discourse that was betwixt you and Captain Ellyot, even to a Quarrel almost. And did you not speak to my Lord Nottingham's Servants, to fetch your Hat out of my Lord Nottingham's Room.

Captain Billop. Yes, I do remember that.

Mr. Ashton. This must be a good considerable Time: It was all the time that my Lord Preston was within with my Lord Nottingham, that you were out?

Captain Billop. Yes, it was.

Mr. Ashton. And all that while was not the Bundle of Papers out of your sight?

Captain Billop. It lay upon the Table.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, answer my Question: Was it not out of your sight?

Captain Billop. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, yes; it must be, for he was out of the Room.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When you came into the Room, did you find the Papers in the same Condition?

Captain Billop. Yes, they were unopen'd, except that my Lord had taken off the Lead and a little Paper fell loose from the rest.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, take notice of that, Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Holt. But pray don't infer more from thence than it will bear.

Mr. Ashton. It seems some of the Papers were taken out.

L. C. J. Holt. He does not say any such Thing, that some of the Papers were taken out.

Mr. Ashton. He says, something was cut, and some Papers fell out.

Captain Billop. There was a little Paper or two tied to the great Pacquet.

L. C. J. Holt. What became of them?

Captain Billop. They were cut loose, but not opened.

Mr. Ashton. How can you tell they were not opened?

Captain Billop. Because I stood by when they were cut.

Mr. Ashton. But how can you tell that; for you see the little Papers taken, and they were loose from the others?

Captain Billop. They were taken from the great Bundle before I went out.

Mr. Ashton. Had not my Lord opened those Papers before you came in?

Captain Billop. No.

Mr. Ashton. How can you tell that?

Captain Billop. I tell you, as near as I can judge, they lay in the same Posture that I left them in.

Mr. Ashton. Was the Pacquet sealed when you took it?

Captain Billop. No; but it was tyed. There were several Letters in it that were sealed; it was tyed up very hard.

Mr. Ashton. I do not Question but my Lord Nottingham will do me the Justice to say how long he was in the Room.

L. C. J. Holt. You must not Comment, nor make your Observations till your proper time.

Jury-man. Pray, my Lord, I desire he may be asked who was with my Lord Nottingham when my Lord Preston was there.

Captain Billop. There was no Body else then.

Jury-man. Then 'tis not probable they were altered before Captain Billop came in.

Mr. Ashton. But I hope Probabilities shall not be Evidence to condemn any Man.

Jury-man. Those two little Papers you speak of, were they severed from the Pacquet?

Captain Billop. I cannot tell whether they were or no; they seemed loose upon untying the Bundle.

L. C. J. Holt. Were they cut in your presence?

Captain Billop. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot say that I did see them cut.

Mr. Ashton. Pray take notice of that, Gentlemen of the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. They are Twelve honest Gentlemen, they will do you right.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Observe what the Witness says; he says, That he does not remember that they were cut in his presence, but he does not say, they were not.

Mr. Ashton. If he does not swear they were, it is reasonable to conclude they were not cut in his presence.

L. C. J. Holt. He says, the great Pacquet was not opened, the two little Papers were loose from the rest of the great Bundle.

Captain Billop. There might be two or three of them, less or more, I cannot tell.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You will be further satisfied in this Matter upon my Lord Nottingham's Evidence, I suppose.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. We have done with Captain Billop for the present. Pray call Johnson.

(Who was sworn.)

Sir W. Williams. Were you at the taking of that Gentleman, and the others in the Smack?

Johnson. Yes, I was.

Sir W. Williams. Then pray give an Account of the Matter how it was.

Johnson. We went down in a Pleasure Boat and went to the Tower, we set through Bridge against Tyde, my Lord of Danby was with us; and when we came to Tower Wharf there they went to the Tower for Arms, and we stayed till Ebbing Water, and Rowed to Gravesend; and when we came to Gravesend we went on board several Ships, and I thought we were going a Pressing; and we stayed at Gravesend the time of the writing of a Letter, and then we went both into the Boat again, and rowed after a Smack that had gained of us, but that not being the Smack, we turned back again, and then it was high Water: And when we came to the upper-end of the Hope we saw several Smacks coming, and there was a Fisher-man on board that said, that was the Smack the Captain enquired after, that was coming down there; and when they came on board, the Captain said there were two or three brave Men, and he hoped he could spare one of them; and the Master said he hoped he would take none of them because they had a Protection, which he shewed to the Captain. Then the Captain went in and bid me take some small Arms and go on board with him, and told the Master he must look a little further; and the Boards were taken up, and I saw a great piece of Roast-Beef, and under that my Lord Preston, and Mr. Ellyot, and this Gentleman Mr. Ashton: My

My Lord Preston came up first, and Mr. Ellyot next to him; and I see this Gentleman take up something and put it into his Bosom, and I told the Captain of it, and he asked him what it was, and he said nothing but his Handkerchief, and plucked out the Handkerchief; but the Captain put his Hand into the Bosom and pulled out something else.

L. C. J. Holt. What was it?

Johnson. It was a parcel of Papers tied up with a piece of Lead tied to it, for I came up close after him and see him take it up.

Sir W. Williams. What else were there found with the Papers, was not there some Seals?

Johnson. That was afterwards; but when the Captain asked him what he had gotten in his Bosom, he pulled out his Handkerchief, and said nothing but his Handkerchief; but the Captain took the other Papers out of his Bosom and so I went down and there were the two Seals, and I took them up; and when I came up, Ellyot had a pair of black Whiskers on, and he borrowed a pair of Scissers and cut them off, and said he should remember me again if ever he lived, he should know me by my Tooth being out. And coming up into Long-reach, Ellyot was a cold, and got to the Oar and Rowed, and said you row as if you were rowing to Prison; and he wished that a Thunder-bolt might drop into the Boat, and that London-Bridge might drop down upon his Head. And when we came up to Whitehall I stood a Guard over them.

Fury-man. Did you see Captain Billop take the Packet of Letters from that Gentleman's Breast?

Johnson. Yes, I did.

Fury man. Did you belong to Captain Billop?

Johnson. Yes, I was one of the Boats Crew.

Mr. Ashton. Had not I been up and searched before?

Johnson. Yes, I think you had been up before.

Mr. Ashton. And then you saw me take up the Pacquet off from the Ballast?

Johnson. Yes, I saw you take it out of the Ballast and put it into your Bosom.

Mr. Ashton. Gentlemen, I hope, you will be pleased to take notice of that.

L. C. J. Holt. No doubt of it they will.

Mr. Ashton. Did not that bundle of Papers that was taken out of my Breast, did not they lie near to the place where the Seals lay?

Johnson. Yes, it lay just by them.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray set up Captain Billop again.

(Which was done.)

When you brought these Papers to Whitehall, Captain Billop, who did you deliver them to?

Captain Billop. To my Lord Nottingham.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. After he received them, what did he with them?

Captain Billop. After he had examined all these Gentlemen, he went to opening of the Papers, and he desired me to stay in the Room till they were opened, which I did; and my Lord looking on some of the Papers said, if this Pacquet had gone we had quickly been visited by the French. With that I took them up, and lookt into them. My Lord said, I might look into as many Papers as I pleased; but I was very uneasy and full of Pain, and had more mind to be gone, and be a Bed, than a looking into Papers; but several of the Papers I did look into, and several I put my Mark upon; and the next day at the Council, what of them I did know, I did put my Mark upon.

Vol. III.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. After my Lord Nottingham had perused them, what did he do with them?

Captain Billop. My Lord put them up in a Cover, and tyed them with a Piece of Twine and put his Seal upon them, and gave them me, and desired me to carry them to my Lord President; which I immediately did, and without stopping carried them to my Lord President.

Mr. Ashton. When was this, Sir? Was it that very Night that we were brought to Whitehall?

Captain Billop. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we must desire my Lord Nottingham to be sworn.

The Earl of Nottingham Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Will your Lordship please to give the Court an Account how these Papers came to your Lordship, and how your Lordship disposed of them.

Earl of Nottingham. Captain Billop came to my Office——

Mr. Ashton. I humbly desire your Lordship would please to speak louder; for I cannot hear your Lordship, and I fear the Jury cannot.

Earl of Nottingham. I speak as loud as ever I can, but I have a great Cold.

L. C. J. Holt. You may hear my Lord very well, if the Court be but silent.

E. Nottingham. Captain Billop brought to me a Pacquet tyed about with a Packthread, to which there was a Piece of a Leaden Pipe fixed, in which Pacquet there was stuck in another Paper; I think there was but that one besides the Cover but what it was particularly I do not remember, this Pacquet was laid upon the Table while he was by; and I called in my Lord Preston, not being willing to make him stay, and after I had some Discourse with my Lord to examine him what account he could give of these Proceedings; then I called in your self Mr. Ashton, and Captain Billop was by also, but the Pacquet so tyed with the Packthread I cut open in Billop's presence with a Pair of Scissers; the same Papers that were in that Pacquet, together with the little Paper that was stuck in, I tyed up, I am sure I sealed them in a Sheet of Paper, and gave them back again to Captain Billop to carry them to my Lord President.

Sir W. Williams. Captain Billop, you have already declared that all you received from my Lord Nottingham you carried to my Lord President.

Captain Billop. All the Papers that I received from my Lord Nottingham, just as I received them sealed with my Lord's Seal, I went directly to my Lord Presidents, and gave them him.

Sir W. Williams. Pray, my Lord, did your Lordship deliver to Captain Billop all the Papers that you received from him?

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord; all the Papers that Captain Billop brought to me that were in the Pacquet (for he brought some Letters that he took out of my Lord Preston's Pocket that were of no Consequence) but all the Papers that were in the Pacquet I delivered back to Captain Billop sealed as I received from him, and no more and no others; for the other Letters, they being from my Lord Preston's Children, and not relating to the Publick, I gave them to him to give my Lord Preston again.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I humbly beseech your Lordship to tell the Court how long my Lord Preston was with your Lordship in the Room.

A z a a z z z

Ent

E. Nott. Truly I am not able to tell you particularly how long it was, I believe it might be about a quarter of an Hour, or scarce so much.

Juryman. Was there no body with your Lordship, when Capt. Billop was out, but only my Lord Preston?

E. Nott. No, not that I know of.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I have one Favour more to beg your Lordship, I humbly pray your Lordship will please to tell the Court and Jury what Answer I gave to your Lordship, when you asked me how I came by those Papers.

E. Nott. As near as I remember the Account that you gave of them was, That you went down again after you were come up, as you said, to fetch your Hat; and that when you did go down into the little Hole to fetch your Hat, you brought up these Papers with you.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, this was the Account I did give. Now this very well corresponds with that Man's Evidence, that says he saw me take up the Papers and put them into my Breast.

L. C. J. Holt. He does say so, and this does all very well agree.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we desire my Lord President would be pleased to be Sworn.

The Lord President sworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, my Lord, will your Lordship please to declare to the Court what Papers Capt. Billop brought to your Lordship, and how your Lordship disposed of them.

L. President. Captain Billop did bring me a Pacquet tied with a Packthread, and that was sealed with my Lord Nottingham's Seal, I knew it to be his Seal; and he told me that my Lord Nottingham commanded him to bring the Pacquet to me. I opened the Pacquet, and perused all the Papers; it was very late and I locked them up till Morning, and I then carried those very Papers to the King, and in the King's Closet, at Kensington, the King read some of them, and in my sight, for I never parted from the King, but was by all the while: The King put up all the Papers again, and commanded me to call a Cabinet Council, and to let them be delivered there to the Council; accordingly I did deliver them Paper by Paper, and they were all marked there by my Lord Sydney, who is here present; and they were then delivered into the Hands of my Lord Sydney.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Will you please to ask my Lord any Questions, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, if your Lordship will be pleased to pardon me, I would ask your Lordship, Did any of your Lordship's Servants, or Family read any of these Letters?

L. President. No, not one.

Mr. Ashton. Were they locked up where any of your Lordships Secretaries, or Servants could come to them?

L. President. No, I lockt them up in a strong Box in my Closet.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I only desire this Favour further of your Lordship. Your Lordship at the Committee of the Council was pleased to ask me, how I came by those Papers; I presume you may remember, and I pray your Lordship to declare, what answer I gave.

L. President. Truly Mr. Ashton, to tell you Truth, I do not remember the Particulars, I remember you denied every Thing; I can only say that in the general, but what you said in particular I cannot remember.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Do you put my Lord in mind, if you can; See whether he does remember it.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I only desire to ask my Lord President, whether I did not tell him I went down after I had been searcht into the Hold, and there I see the Papers lye, and brought them up, and put them into my Breast; they were no sooner in my Hands but Capt. Billop had them in his; for the Man called and said, This Gentleman has something in his Breast, and the Captain put in his Hand and pulled it out.

L. President. Truly, Mr. Ashton, I do not remember the Words that you used, but remember you said something to which I made answer, What makes it matter, They were found upon you, and taken out of your Bosom, do you look to it how you came by them. I do not remember what you said, for I cannot remember particular Words, but I believe you might say some such Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, pray my Lord Sydney, will you be pleased to be Sworn.

The Lord Sydney sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will your Lordship be pleased to declare what Papers you received from my Lord President?

L. Sydney. At the Cabinet Council my Lord President delivered a Pacquet of Papers; I received them every one there, and markt them, and put them into my Pocket.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did your Lordship deliver them to any Person afterwards?

L. Sydney. The next Day, or the Day after, I gave them to Mr. Bridgman to Copy out, and he delivered them back to me again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, give me leave to ask this Question —

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Your Lordship had markt them before you delivered them to Mr. Bridgman to Copy?

L. Sydney. Yes, I markt them at the Council Table, at my Lord Nottingham's Office.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, those Papers that you markt were the same Papers that my Lord President brought, and delivered in at the Council?

L. Sydney. Yes, the very same.

Juryman. My Lord, shall we have leave to ask my Lord Sydney a Question?

L. C. J. Holt. Ay; What is it?

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, did the Pacquet come to you Sealed? That which was taken from this Gentleman, was it Sealed when it came to you?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, it had been opened by my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord President.

L. C. J. Holt. Sir, you are under a Misapprehension of the Matter. My Lord Nottingham after he had opened them sealed them up again, and delivered them to Capt. Billop; Capt. Billop carried them sealed to my Lord President, my Lord President opens them and lays them up, they were never out of his Possession, he carries them to the King, the King read some of them in his Lordship's presence, he delivers them at the Cabinet Council to my Lord Sydney, and my Lord Sydney swears he read them there, markt them, and, when he had done, put them in his Pocket.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord Sydney, will your Lordship be pleased to look upon these Papers, and see if these be part of them.

L. Sydney. I know them very well, I have read them Ten times, I mark them at the Council, and that is my Mark.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, are those two Papers that you have in your Hand, Two of those Papers that my Lord President delivered at the Cabinet?

L. Sydney. Yes, that they are.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord President, will you please to look upon them?

(Which his Lordship did)

L. President. These are Two of the same Papers that Capt. Billop brought me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we shall desire to have them read, but give me leave to observe to you, That one of them is a Copy of the other; only in the one some Words are written short, that are written out at length in the other:

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, I desire to ask, are they of the same Hand?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, they are of different Hands.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, Gentlemen of the Jury, take notice, and observe these Papers, for there is a great deal of Matter of great Moment in them; for you cannot expect the King's Council should repeat every Thing that is in so many Papers as we shall read; it is impossible we should take notice of all.

L. C. J. Holt. Or I either; therefore pray, Gentlemen, observe what is read, for I shall be able only just to state the Evidence to you.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I hear them say one of those Papers is a Copy of the other; I desire the Original may be read, and not the Copy.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Who knows which is the Original?

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Ashton, we don't know which is the Original, or which is the Copy, they are both found together, they contain the same Matter and the same Words: It may be you can tell which is the Original.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You may look upon them your self, and tell us which is the Original if you please.

Mr. Ashton. That is very well observed, Sir. That is throwing Water upon a dead Mouse. Then I desire both of them may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Indeed, Mr. Ashton, I think there is a particular Reason why you should not desire to have the Copy read, because least it should prove to be your own Hand Writing.

Mr. Ashton. Pray let both be read.

Cl. of Peace Reads. The result of a Conference—

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray attend, for this is the Scheme of the whole Work.

Cl. of Peace Reads. The result of a Conference, &c.

And the other was likewise read as before.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray let Mr. Ashton see that Paper.

The Paper was banded to Mr. Ashton, being one of the Papers before read.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Ashton, look upon that same Paper a little, satisfy your own Mind a little whose Hand that Paper is in. Look upon it well, I would have you be satisfied about it. Look particularly upon the latter part of it.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I have look'd upon it, I have seen it all.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Come then, give it me back again, and think of it a little in your own Heart.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord Sydney, pray, will your Lordship look upon this Paper.

L. Sydney. This is one of the Papers that was among the rest, delivered by my Lord President at the Cabinet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray shew it my Lord President; What says your Lordship to it?

L. President. This was one of the Papers I gave my Lord Sydney, and was brought to me in the Pacquet by Captain Billop.

Cl. of Peace reads. That the King would return with a Design of making an entire Conquest of his People—

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, my Lord, give me leave, before it be read, to acquaint the Jury what this is, that they may make the better Observations upon it. This, Gentlemen, is the Heads of a Declaration that was intended to be Published when the French came; and you will see what it is when it is read. Pray observe it.

Cl. of Peace reads. That the King will return, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. The next Paper is an Account which they had taken with them of the Force of the Kingdom, of the Ships, particularly how many in Number, what Rates, what were in Repair, what out of Repair, and what a Building. Pray shew it my Lord Sydney.

L. Sydney. This is another of the Papers that I received from my Lord President, and mark at the Cabinet.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then shew it my Lord President.

L. President. This is one of the Papers that were in the Pacquet, that Captain Billop brought me.

Clerk of the Peace reads.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord Sydney, look upon these Papers, and tell where your Lordship had them.

The Papers were Shewn both to the Lord President and the Lord Sydney.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord President says he received them from Captain Billop, and gave them to my Lord Sydney; and my Lord Sydney says they are the same he received from my Lord President.

Juryman. Are those the Papers that have been read, my Lord?

Mr. J. Eyres. No, but they both say the same as to those that have been read.

Juryman. Then pray, my Lord, What are those Papers that are going to be read?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. These are Two Letters, Gentlemen, that are written, giving an account how the Affairs in England stood, with reference to the Persons Concerns that they are written to; and there is a particular Passage in one of them, How their young Master prevailed in his Interest, and got ground of his Adversaries. If you observe them, you will easily understand what is meant by them.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mr. Redding, New-years Eve, Though the Bearer of this, &c. As before.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mrs. Redding. As it is impossible for me to express, &c. As before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we desire my Lord Sydney and my Lord President would look upon these Papers.

Juryman. My Lord, I desire the former part of that last Letter may be read again.

Which was done.

L. Sydney. These I had from my Lord President.

L. President. And I had them out of the Pacquet that Capt. Billop brought me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. If your Lordship please I will open them to the Jury. Here are two Letters, in one of them there is an Account given that they were heartily sorry they were disappointed, and that they had not been here already, but hoped they will be here as fast as they can; that the Match was concluded, the Settlement prepared, and no doubt but the Daughters Portion would be well Secured, if they would come quickly.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Dec. 31. 1690. 'Tis directed for Mrs. Charlton. I must not let this Bearer depart Madam, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That Letter tells you that the Daughters Portion would be well Secured; this that we now produce will tell you, how it shall be Raised. It says, the old Tenants are weary of their Master, and a little Matter, if he would but appear in Westminster-Hall, would redeem the Estate; and the Cause might be brought to a final hearing before the end of Easter Term, if they made haste, and it were well Solicited.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mr. Jackson. Dec. 31. 1690. The Bearer hereof will give you, &c. As before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We must desire my Lord President and my Lord Sydney would be pleased to look upon these Papers.

L. President. I received these from Capt. Billop in the Pacquet, and gave it to my Lord Sydney.

L. Sydney. These are some of the Papers I had from my Lord President.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. The Letters we now produce to be read seem to be written by a Man that was involved in a great Trade, that had great Projects in his Head, and drawn many Schemes in his own Brain how to carry on the Trade, he directs what sort of Wares he would have sent, what was proper for their Markets, that he had got many a new Customer, and hoped they should not be disobliged; that all must be sent before the First of March, at least before the Tenth, or the whole Summer Profits would be lost.

Cl. of the Peace reads. 31 Dec ———

L. C. J. Holt. Read the Superscription first.

Cl. of the Peace. There is no Superscription, my Lord, at all.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, read on.

Clerk of the Peace reads. 31 Dec. The Interruption of the former Correspondence had a very ill Effect many ways, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Gentlemen, doubting that that Letter might not be pressing enough, here is another to the same effect.

Cl. of the Peace reads. Dec. 31. It is a Presumption incident to those that are any ways upon the Spot, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. One would imagine this Letter were written by some Person that used to talk Cant, that he is so ready at it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord President, what says your Lordship to these Papers?

L. President. These Two Letters were in the Bundle that Capt. Billop delivered to me, and I delivered them to my Lord Sydney.

L. Sydney. These are some of the Papers I had from my Lord President, at the Cabinet.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That first of these Papers is a Letter wherein the Party gives an Account of his own Condition here, and how he would venture to bring about what was desired.

Cl. of the Peace reads. 31 Dec. 1690. Was my Condition more desperate and uneasy than it is, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. This little Paper was inclosed in the other.

Clerk of the Peace reads. I beg, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Now shew this Paper to my Lord President, and my Lord Sydney.

Which was done.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord President, and my Lord Sydney, swear the same for this Paper, as for the rest.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. This Paper shews they were going about a Deed that they did not desire to have known; 'tis a Key how to explain their Meaning.

Cl. of the Peace reads. For Mrs. Anne Russel, &c. As before.

Then three other Papers were shewn to and sworn by the Lord President, and the Lord Sydney, to be part of the same Papers.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. The Papers that we are going to read are these. Gentlemen, here is a Letter of Recommendation in behalf of one Mr. Orbinet, which is a Name they pretended of some Person that was at Paris, or to go there, and 'tis written by one Mr. Dellivere to his Correspondent there, and he tells him, the Bearer had something to disclose to him, and that he might have an entire Confidence in him: But the Letter of Recommendation alone, without a Sum of Money, they reckoned would meet with a bad Welcome in France, and therefore they take sool with them, and here are Two Bills to pay it.

Then Mr. Humphrey Levermere was sworn to interpret them, being in French, (which he did) and read them as in the former Tryal.

Juryman. Were these Bills found in that Pacquet?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Yes, Yes; they are sworn to by both those Lords.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, pray my Lord, will you please to look upon these Papers.

The Lord President, and Lord Sydney both testified, That those were part of the Papers.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. This next Paper that we give in Evidence is very short. It seems to be a Table for the Memory of the Person that was to carry it; They are short Heads for the Memory, consisting of a great many Particulars; You will make your Observations upon them, and what Judgment you think fit of them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, I desire to take Notice of these Papers that we are now going to read; you will observe these Things in them, which are worth your remarking, Gentlemen; because these Papers that we now read to you are of themselves sufficient to prove every Article in the Indictment: For these Papers give an Account of the Ships, their Number and Force, the Forts of the Kingdom, how they are Manned, how they may be Surprized, where the French Fleet should Fight, where they should Assault us, how they should hinder the Dutch and English Fleets from Joining, what Number of Soldiers would be sufficient, and what Number of Ships in Newcastle to plague the City of London, don, how to manage this whole Affair; and it gives Characters of the Clergy of England; and particularly of the City of London, and says, they are the worst of Men.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. No Brother, 'tis the worst of all the Clergy.

L. C. J. Holt. Come read them.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Lady D. 2000 l. &c.
As before.

The Jury desired to see the last Papers, and had them delivered to them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we rest it here, to see what the Prisoner will say to it.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Ashton, the King's Council have done their Evidence for the King, what have you to say for your self?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I humbly desire to know of your Lordship, whether all the Letters are read, that were read at the Tryal of my Lord Preston?

L. C. J. Holt. What is that material to you, whether they be or not?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I am informed that there were several Letters, that particularly name my Lord, implying him to be the Bearer, and I desire those Letters may be read.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. With all my heart, if you do desire it, it shall be read, we do not think it material.

Mr. Ashton. I do desire it, it will be plain, I believe, from hence, that I could know nothing at all of this matter; and if your Lordship please, my Lord, to observe it, three or four of these last Papers, as Mr. Serj. Tremain observed, were the Ground-work of all this Business, which refers to Portsmouth and South Sea, and some other Papers; these I think, with Submission, were proved to be the Hand of another Gentleman, and I desire it may be proved again to the Jury, by which I think it will be plain, that they do not affect me.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Ashton, it is not proved to be your Hand, nor pretended to be so.

Mr. Ashton. But positively proved to be another's Hand, as I am informed, and 'tis that which Mr. Serj. Tremain observed was the Ground-work for carrying on the whole Design, I presume the Witnesses are in Court that proved it then, and I hope your Lordship will be so kind as to let it be proved now; they did prove it to be another Persons Hand upon a Tryal not long ago.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have a mind to call any Witnesses to prove the Papers to be another's Hand, you may call them.

Mr. Ashton. I hope the King's Witnesses are now in Court that did prove them to be his Hand Writing, and they'll prove it now I suppose.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have a mind, you may call them, they have not a mind to produce them for the King.

Mr. Ashton. I know not where they are my Lord. Pray Mr. Aaron Smith, be you so kind as to call them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. You should have sent and Subpcna'd them to be here.

Mr. Ashton. Mr. Warr is there, my Lord, I desire he may be ask'd the Question; and I believe Mr. Blane is in the Court, pray let him be ask'd.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Warr, you are called by the Prisoner, as a Witness, to prove my Lord Preston's Hand.

Mr. Ashton. Mr. Warr, Mr. Townsend and Mr. Blane, I desire may be all ask'd.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Ashton, you have insisted upon it, that these Papers were my Lord Preston's own Writing.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I do insist upon it, to know whether they were not proved to be his Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Yes, they were so, 'tis agreed.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. We do grant the King's Witnesses proved, that they did believe them to be my Lord Preston's Hand.

L. C. J. Holt. The King's Council do admit, that these three last Papers were not your Hand, but they admit them to be my Lord Preston's Hand, and 'tis very well done of them to admit it; so that now it is to be taken for granted, that those three last Papers were my Lord Preston's Hand.

Mr. Ashton. Then my Lord, I desire the Substance of those Papers may be the more press'd upon the Jury, because Mr. Serj. Tremain observed that the whole Design in the Scheme of it lay in those Papers, and they are not my Hand, but another's; and for what is in them, I know nothing, nor am concern'd.

L. C. J. Holt. What have you farther to say, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You mentioned another Letter which you did desire should be read.

Mr. Ashton. Ay; two or three where my Lord is nam'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is the Letter I suppose you mean, the Clerk shall read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Sir, I vow to you, I do not repine at having lost all for your sake, &c.
(as before)

Mr. Ashton. Gentlemen, I hope you will observe, in that Letter my Lord is called the Bearer; and it tells that he brings Papers with him, by which it is plain, that you cannot imagine I could know any thing of these Papers. And Gentlemen, it has not appeared by any Evidence that has been given, that I knew any thing more, than that they were unfortunately found upon me: But with Submission, I believe there is another Letter, if I am inform'd right, wherein my Lord is named, and called, my Lord the Bearer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir, I do assure you now, we have to my Observation, read every Letter, and every Paper, that was read on Saturday.

Mr. Ashton. Mr. Solicitor, I am satisfied, for I am confident you would not affirm it if it were otherwise.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. There is not any Letter that says my Lord the Bearer, but my Lord will give you an account, so and so; the Bearer will tell you these and these things; will you have it read again? You shall if you will.

Mr. Ashton. I am unwilling to take up your Lordship's time, unless the Jury desire to have it read again.

Jury man. Pray my Lord, when that Letter was read on Saturday, how was it construed by the Court? How did they take it then?

L. C. J. Holt. We did take it then, because my Lord was mentioned, that he might possibly be the Bearer.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is very probable, and so it was understood then, that the Lord mentioned in the Letters was my Lord Preston, and so that my Lord was the Bearer that could give an account of the Countess's Condition; and in the beginning of those Papers that are of my Lord's Hand, there is mentioned so much Money for the Lady D—which is my Lady Dorset I suppose, that is there meant, and that writ that Letter.

Mr. Ashton. No, my Lady Dorchester.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Dorchester I cry your mercy; and it is probable the same reason is a reason still to make it believed that my Lord Preston was meant.

Mr. Ashton. I think my Lord Chief Justice was pleased to observe, as I have been informed, in giving his Charge to the Jury, that these Papers, some of them naming my Lord, must be meant of my Lord Preston, there being no other Lord but he; and he likewise gave another reason, says he, they lay by my Lord's Seals that were produced, and therefore it was plain, they could not be Ashton's nor Elliot's.

L. C. J. Holt. No not so, but my Lord might be concern'd, because my Lord's Seals were there where the Papers were found.

Mr. Ashton. I am wrong inform'd if those were not the words my Lord Chief Justice Pollexfen used.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. What do you say were the words? if you will repeat them, I'll tell you as near as I can.

Mr. Ashton. Your Lordship seem'd to infer, that my Lord being nam'd, and the Bearer in the same Paper, that of Consequence that must be my Lord Preston, and the Papers must be his; and you did give another reason for it, to enforce it, that the same Man that saw me take them up, saw them lye by the Seals, which were proved to be my Lord Preston's, from whence your Lordship did say, it is plain they were my Lord Preston's, and that Ashton or Ellyot could not be concerned in them.

L. C. J. Holt. You mistake that matter, sure there was not any such word said, for that Evidence that tended to convict my Lord Preston, did by no means tend to acquit you; the question then was, how far my Lord Preston was concerned; my Lord insisted upon it, says he, They were not taken from me but from Mr. Ashton; there the Question was not about you.

Mr. Ashton. I humbly hope, my Lord, you will forgive me for insisting upon these Matters, because I am for my Life.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I would do you all the right I can, I assure you, Mr. Ashton; but certainly there was no such thing said as you have mentioned.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I do not question but you will do me right, and I thought so, when I chose the Jury out of the first that appeared, without challenging any.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Sir, pray go on to your Defence.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, my own Defence will be very weak upon the whole, for I am very illiterate and unskill'd in the Laws, but where I do fail of taking Advantage, to observe what may be for my Advantage, I hope your Lordships will be so kind to me, as well as just (I may call it) to your selves, being upon your Oaths, as to take notice of it. My Lord, in the first place—

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Before Mr. Ashton proceeds, I would observe one word in a Letter that has been read, which is one of these Papers, it says, I say nothing of another Gentleman that takes opportunity to see those parts, but he has shewn a Zeal and Sincerity in the affair equal to most.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You hear, Gentlemen, that there is notice taken of another Person besides the Bearer.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, my Lord, is it any Consequence that I must be the Person that must be meant, or that I must know what the Contents of the Letter was? There was another besides me, and so it is not plain who was meant, or if I were the Man meant in this Letter, it must not therefore follow that I must know of it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I did not mention it as a Proof that you were the Person meant, but only to shew that there was another Person besides, my Lord, taken notice of in them.

L. C. J. Holt. I must confess. I think Mr. Ashton observes right, it does not concern him, for as well as he was there, there was another, and it is uncertain whether it relates to him or the other, and so it signifies nothing at all; that's my mind. Pray go on Mr. Ashton.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, upon the whole I have this to observe, first as to my business of going into France, I must ingenuously own it, though I protest to you I never own'd it or nam'd it to the Woman though she had Sworn it, but yet I do now. My design was to go to France, and I had very great and good Reason for it, I think, I had endeavour'd all ways I could in the World to procure a Pass to go to France, 'tis very well known, I did business under Lieutenant General Worden that died half a year ago, his Accounts are now depending, and such Accounts as may be prejudicial in some points to his Family, to whom I have always own'd and must a great Obligation, and would be very glad upon all occasions to serve it, and all the Branches of it; this was not the whole nor the only design I had in going thither, but I had likewise some business of my own, I have a considerable Sum of Money owing me, if it be necessary to prove it, I can prove it by a Bond from a Person that is there; a great Sum it is, a very considerable one to me at least. And, my Lord, I did think if I did not go my self it was impossible for me to do any thing in that Affair, and that was the true and only Reason of my design in going to France, having been out of hopes of getting any other Convenience otherways; this was not a Design just now formed, as if I were just now upon some Plot concerning the Publick, but it has been my design ever since Lieutenant General Worden died, and he upon his Death-Bed ingaged me to do it; and I once went down, hoping to have gone from Dover, and there I was apprehended and taken. And, my Lord, I have used all manner of Endeavours to go other ways, but they have always failed me, and this way I hoped would have taken: my Lord, I do own I did hire the Boat, and I did pay the Money, but with Submission, I think that is not any manner of Treasonable Act, my Lord; perhaps it is an ill Act, but it does not amount in the least to Treason going to the King's Enemies, suppose I went upon that account, that is no manner of Treason in the World, carrying Papers to the King's Enemies, except it be proved that I was privy to them, and knew the Contents of them, if Lawyers inform me right, is not Treason; then what remains? 'Tis true, I must own the Papers were found upon me, and I believe there is no body that has heard the Evidence that has been given, but must readily conclude that I found them in the place where the Sea-man says I took them up; and besides, my Lord, there is not any manner of proof so much as aim'd at by the King's Council in all their Evidence, that I was privy to any one of these Papers; so that, my Lord, I think there is very little proved upon me at all; I had the misfortune to be taken in this Company that was going where these Papers were taken, it's true, but they have not attempted to prove that I was privy to or knew any thing of them at all, nor that I was more concern'd than that they were taken in my Stomach; this is all I have to observe upon the whole; as to the business of the Indictment there are great and grievous Aggravations in it, and such as I am not able to comprehend the meaning of, the Words confound me; and therefore I humbly desire your Lordship to tell me upon what Statute I am Indicted.

L. C. J. Holt. I'll tell you, Mr. Ashton, you are Indicted upon the 25th of Edward the Third, for conspiring, compassing and imagining the Death of the King and Queen, and for that purpose going to France, and endeavouring to incite the French King to invade the Kingdom, and telling him how he should do it, and letting him know in what State and Condition the Kingdom was, and how fit to be invaded.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, my Lord, is that at all proved upon me?

L. C. J. Holt. That is the Question that the Jury are to judge of upon the Evidence that has been given.

Mr. Ashton. As to that of compassing the Death of the King and Queen, I am ignorant of dealings in Law; but I conceive there are several Species of Treason mentioned in that Act of the 25 of Edward III. and as to the imagining the Death of the King, that's only to be proved by some Overt Act: Now I think nothing at all has been proved of any open Act conducing to prove the imagination or compassing the Death of the King or Queen, no manner of Consultation or Treasonable Act at all, and therefore, my Lord, I do not see that there is any great matter that is proved upon me, and I hope you are of that Opinion too.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Ashton, that you may not go away with a Mistake, any that design'd the Deposition of the King and Queen, and the Invasion of the Kingdom, which is proved by any Overt Act, is sufficient to prove that they compass and imagine the Death of the King and Queen.

Mr. Ashton. I presume it may be so, I believe that may be the Construction of the Law.

L. C. J. Holt. And I make no question but those that you have consulted with have told you as much.

Mr. Ashton. Truly as to Council my Tryal has been as hard as ever Man met withal.

L. C. J. Holt. Why do you say so, Mr. Ashton? the Court has not been hard upon you.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I do not complain of the Court, but as to the matter of time, I had notice by that Gentleman, Mr. Bale, to prepare for my Tryal, and that was on Friday, and not before.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Friday was Sevensnight, you mean, I suppose.

Mr. Ashton. Yes, I do mean Friday was Sevensnight, I was then a close Prisoner, I had not the opportunity or liberty of seeing any Christian Soul, I spake to him then, and told him, Mr. Bale, this is very short notice; pray be so kind as to move my Lord that I may have Council; truly he was Civil enough, and said, he would do all he could; says he, will you give me the Names of your Council? so I gave him the Names of four, and of a Solicitor; but I never heard more of him in the matter: I did with all my Industry and Skill give my Friends notice, but I was under great difficulty, for I had not the liberty of Pen, Ink, nor Paper, nor a Man to send upon a Message, on Saturday; I gave my Friends notice of it upon Sunday, which was no very good Day for business, they apply'd themselves to my Lord Sydney, whose Favour and Kindness I shall always own as long as I live, he gave me all the dispatch possible, and got me an Order to see my Wife that day, though it was Sunday; the next day I made Application to have my Council come to me, that was Monday; he with the same readiness procured that, but it was Tuesday in the Afternoon before I could see any living Soul but my Wife; and some of the Council that I desired would not readily come to me, and it was Wednesday before I did see any body of them, and so I had but Wednesday and Thursday to consult with them in. On Friday I was brought here, and I endeavour'd to procure a Copy of the Pannel, that I might inform myself of the Characters of the Men that were to be my Jury; and my Lord, I would desire you to give me leave to clear one Point, which through Inadvertency slipt from me about the time that I desir'd to send to enquire about the Jury. I did not mean as was apprehended, to send to them to take them off, but I only meant to enquire after their Characters; this was done upon Friday; I had not a Copy of the Pannel till last Friday, when we were Arraigned in Court, it was Two of the Clock before the Pannel was given us, it was between Three and Four when we came to Newgate; we were to come upon our Tryal the next Morning by Eight of the Clock; so that before the Copies could be transcribed for us, there were left but six Hours for us to enquire into the Morals of so many Men, of whom some liv'd eight, some ten, some fifteen Miles out of Town; for my part I was not able to enquire after any one, and that your Lordship may think by my taking the first Twelve that appeared, and believing my self Innocent of this matter, I resolv'd to put my self upon my Tryal by any twelve indifferent English-Men; I only beg if I have omitted any thing in reference to my self, or misbehaved my self, with respect to the Bench, that you would please to set me right, and consider that I stand here for my Life; and to grant me your Pardon for any thing wherein I have offended your Lordships, to whom, and to the Jury, I refer my Cause; only I beg leave to call two or three Witnesses, I know it hath been allowed before in such cases, to give some short account of my Life and Conversation, because it hath been reflected upon me that I was a Papist, because cause I designed to go into France: but I believe there is not any Man, whose Devotion to the Protestant Religion established by Law, is greater than mine hath been, or to whom that Religion is Dearer than to my self.

L. C. J. Holt. You are not accused of any such thing, no body pretends you are a Papist, but call whom you will.

Mr. Ashton. Pray call Dr. Bursh, Dr. Lake, Dr. Fitz-Williams and Dr. Davenant. There is Dr. Fitz-Williams; I beg the Favour of you Dr. Fitz-Williams to give the Court an account of your Acquaintance with me, and particularly about my Religion.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. Will your Lordship give me leave, my Lord?

L. C. J. Holt. Aye; Come, what do you know of Mr. Ashton?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I suppose, my Lord, that he calls me in as a Witness to his Religion, and to his Morality, I think so; with my Lord's Permission I will give the truest Testimony I can: I have known him for some time, he used to be frequently at the Service of the Church in the Protestant part of the Family, at St James's, where I was Chaplain; during the time I was there, I observed him to be a frequent Receiver of the Holy Communion; and as far I could observe, lived answerable to what he professed to be, a Sincere Member of the Church of England, and a Serious Christian. For his Sincerity and Zeal for the Protestant Religion, I can give this Instance he had an Aunt that had a Relation to that Family, one Mrs. Du-pee, who he thought did warp a little towards Popery, and he desired me, about five Years ago, to have recourse to her, and desired to know if she were dissatisfied with any Point of Religion in the Church of England, in Communion with which she lived visibly, and I would do my endeavour to satisfy her; as I do not doubt but I could. She was desirous to know who was the Person that sent me: I told her I came of my own Head in the greatest part; but I suppress'd the Interposition of Mr. Ashton for several Reasons, and told her, I had great Suspicion of her inclining the other way; and I had great reason for it, because of her Husband, who was a Papist, and the great Resort of Popish Priests to their Lodgings. She told me then, she was satisfied in every thing, and if she had any Dissatisfaction she would send for me to give me an account. Some Months after I came to St. James's to wait, and observing her to be more than usually before from Prayers in the Chappel, I went to her, and asked her the reason: She told me, it was because she was making some Linnen for her Master King James, which was to be made in haste: But she then design'd to go for Flanders quickly; and Mr. Ashton about that time, or two or three days after, told me his Aunt was gone to France, and spoke it with very great concern, and that he believed, under the Pretence of calling over her Younger Son, she was gone to declare her self a Papist, and he was very much troubled at it. This I know for his Zeal for the Protestant Religion.

L. C. J. Holt. When was this, Doctor?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. This was, my Lord, about five Years ago.

Mr. Ashton. That is, as to the business of my Aunt I suppose, I know not how he comes to mention it, but as to my Life and Morals, you can give a later account.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. My Lord, I have Administred the Sacrament to him.

L. C. J. Holt. What Questions do you farther ask him, Mr. Ashton? or can you say any more, Doctor?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. No, my Lord, I can say no more, but that he received the Sacrament about half a Year ago.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. We have not objected any thing, as to his Religion, at all.

Mr. Ashton. But I know it has been a Reflection that has gone about of me, that I am a Papist, therefore I beg leave to prove my Religion and Conversation.

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, call whom you will, you shall not be hindered, take what Course you please.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Doctor, you say he has received the Sacrament lately; when was that, and where?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. It was at Ely Chappel within this six or seven Months.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Have you been lately conversant with him?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. Truly, my Lord, I have not been very lately.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray what have you heard him say concerning his Affection to King William and Queen Mary?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I do not remember any thing at all of that.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Have you heard him say any thing to the contrary?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. No, I cannot remember that.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What have you heard him say about his Affection to K. James?

L. C. J. Holt. Do not ask him that, there may be a Snare in that Question.

Juryman. You say, Doctor, that he received the Sacrament six Months ago in Ely Chappel; Did you deliver the Sacrament to him there?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. No, I did not.

Juryman. Pray, Doctor, were the Prayers that were used at that time altered, as they are now in the Common Prayer-Book?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I cannot say they were.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Did you ever see him Drink King James's Health?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I do not use to Drink Healths, I came here only to do an Office of Justice and Kindness to Mr. Ashton, to testify about his Religion and Conversation.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But answer the Question, Did you ever see him drink King James's Health?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I cannot remember I ever did.

Juryman. Was King William and Queen Mary Pray'd for in those Prayers?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I cannot say they were.

Mr. Just. Eyres. But the Juryman's Question was, whether King William and Queen Mary were Pray'd for? and whether the Prayers were as they are now altered?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. My Lord, I say I don't remember there was any Names mentioned, as the Prayers are now altered.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That's very well.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I did neither read the Prayers, Sir, nor Administer the Communion at that time.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But you were not at the Prayers, as they are now altered, I perceive.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. Yes, I have, several times.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Not with that Gentleman, Mr. Ashton.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. But I have been an hundred times at the Prayers as they are now altered.

Mr. Ashton. I desire Dr. Lake, who is there upon the Bench, that he may be asked what he knows of me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But I have one question to ask of Dr. Fitz-Williams before he goes.

L. C. J. Holt. What will you ask him?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I would ask you, Sir, one question, Have you taken the Oaths to this King and Queen?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. No, I have not, Sir, that's my Unhappiness, but I know how to submit and live peaceably under them.

Mr. Ashton. But there is one Dr. Lake that has taken them, he'll give you an account what he knows of me.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. If any one can say I have done or acted any thing against the Government, I will readily submit to be punished for it.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Dr. Lake, what say you?

Dr. Lake. My Lord, I have known Mr. Ashton above these sixteen Years, we liv'd together in the same Family several of them; I always observed him to be a Person of exemplary Piety and singular Devotion; he duly came to the Prayers of the Church twice a day, and to the Sacrament once a Month; he has taken occasion, that I know several times, both at St. James's and at Edinburgb, to testify his Zeal against Popery; and I am apt to think, that he has suffered sometimes for doing so.

Mr. Ashton. Dr. Bursh, Pray, as to my Religion, I beg you to give an account what you know of me, particularly something you may remember of me, of my perhaps over-heat against Popery.

Dr. Bursh. My Lord, I have long known Mr. Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar, and till within these two years frequently conversed with him; and while I did so, I believed him a good Protestant, and I have so many Instances of it, and particularly before some upon whom his Fortune depended; but as to any thing of late, I can say nothing, because our Conversation has ceased.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Dr. Bursh, have you known any thing of Mr. Ashton's Conversation for two Years past?

Dr. Bursh. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any thing more, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. No, my Lord, I have nothing more, unless your Lordship desire any thing more of this Nature.

L. C. J. Holt. Call whom you will.

Mr. Ashton. Here is one Mr. Tomlinson.

L. C. J. Holt. Come, what say you, Sir?

Mr. Tomlinson. My Lord, I waited upon Major General Worden when he was Sick, and there read the Prayers of the Church, and Mr. Ashton was a constant Attender upon the Publick Prayers at the Visitation of the Sick, and was very Devout; that's all I can say.

L. C. J. Holt. When was this?

Vol. III.

Mr. Tomlinson. It was in the Sickness of Major Gen. Worden.

L. C. J. Holt. How long ago was that?

Mr. Tomlinson. It was about half a year ago.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Were those Prayers as they are altered now or not?

Mr. Tomlinson. It was only the Visitation of the Sick, and the Collect for the Morning and Collect for the Evening, because the General's Sickness was such, that he could not bear long Prayers.

L. C. J. Holt. Sir, have you been acquainted with the Prisoner any time?

Mr. Tomlinson. About eight Months.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then I would have you to answer me this one thing; why were you so desirous, and used such Importunity, that the Papers should be thrown over Board.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, that is a Point I ought to have spoke to, to clear my self.

L. C. J. Holt. It seems material, and I would not have it forgot, if you can answer it.

Mr. Ashton. I humbly thank your Lordship, and whatsoever my Fate is, I cannot but own I have had a Fair Tryal for my Life, and I thank your Lordship for putting me in mind.

L. C. J. Holt. And take this other thing with it, why did you desire Captain Billog to go along with you where you were going?

Mr. Ashton. He has Sworn it, my Lord, that I did so, but as I hope for Salvation, if I were to dye immediately, I do not know that I spoke to him of any such thing; how was it possible that I should prevail with him? or how was it likely that I should force him to go along with us, when he had about twelve or fourteen Men with him Armed, and we unarmed?

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, it was not Forcing, it was but Perswading him to go.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I do not know any thing of it, I'll assure you; but as for endeavouring to perswade him to throw the Packet overboard, I must own I did endeavour to perswade him to it; and I do presume there is no body in Court, that had been engaged with a Person so Unfortunate, that would not have done the same thing for any common Friend, not knowing what the Contents of those Papers were, seeing them in that Posture, especially when I saw some body else so near me, so uneasy and concern'd to have them seen.

L. C. J. Holt. Then, Mr. Ashton, there's another thing which you open'd, which I would have you prove; you say you were to go into France upon the Affairs of Col. Worden's Family; first you say Col. Worden had a great account to make up; how will you make that out?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I will prove here in Court, though it is a sort of surprise upon me; that there is a great Account depending, I believe I may appeal to Mr. Solicitor himself, who knows that there is a Petition in the House of Commons, now depending, from the Queens Tradersmen and Debtors, whom she owed 68000*l.* she did Assign the Arrears of some growing Rents for the Satisfaction of this Debt; but the King and Government have not thought fit to let it be applied to her use, or to the paying of those Debts she assign'd it to. Nay it has gone farther, I can appeal to several Persons, there is one Man by chance in the Court, that I believe does know that I promised and engaged, and actually have paid a great part of this Debt; for believing that the Money was good upon the Assignment, I have actually paid some of these Men out of my own Pocket, and perhaps more than became me to venture; I think it may very well call my Discretion into question.

L. C. J. Holt. Who will you have called, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, here is Mr. Spalding.

L. C. J. Holt. That the late Queen does own People Money, that I believe is true.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, Mr. Spalding, will you give the Court an account, whether there is any Money due from the Queen to you.

Mr. Spalding. My Lords, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I have a Debt due to me from the late Queen, as her Coach-Harness-maker, it is 470*l.* or something thereabouts, and Mr. Ashton has paid me part of this Debt; this I do own.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, how long have you been acquainted with Mr. Ashton, Sir?

Mr. Spalding. A dozen years, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Have you any Intimacy with him?

Mr. Spalding. He and I have been very well acquainted.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Have you seen Mr. Ashton write at any time?

Mr. Spalding. Yes I have.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Do you know his Hand?

Mr. Spalding. Yes I think I do.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray how came Mr. Ashton to pay you that part of your Money?

Mr. Spalding. I press'd Mr. Ashton, and told him my Necessities, and he did advance me this Money.

L. C. J. Holt. How much did he advance?

Mr. Spalding. Almost 400*l.*

L. C. J. Pollexfen. When was it he paid it you?

Mr. Spalding. Almost a Year ago.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he pay it out of his own Pocket?

Mr. Spalding. I believe so.

L. C. J. Holt. I believe so; or was it Money that he had returned to him?

Mr. Spalding. I believe it was out of his own Pocket, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Why do you believe so?

Mr. Spalding. Truly I believe it was out of his own Pocket.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray who was to repay him?

Mr. Spalding. About that very time we were Petitioning the House of Commons, that we might have our Debts secured, and our Money out of the Arrears of Rents due to the late Queen, according to her Assignment; and we so far press'd the matter, that there was a Clause inserted into the Bill for the securing of our Debt; but upon the next day, or the day following, the Parliament was Prorogu'd.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Which way did he expect to be repaid?

Mr. Spalding. I'll tell you which way, I suppose, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Did he not tell you which way?

Mr. Spalding. No, he never told me.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Ashton, did you never tell him how you should be repaid?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I hoped to be repaid, and concluded I should, out of the Arrears of Rent in the Tenants Hands.

L. C. J. Holt. But you were very kind to pay Money out of your own Pocket upon such Hopes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray Sir will you look upon that Paper; do you know the Hand?

Mr. Spalding. No, Sir, I do not.

L. C. J. Holt. I suppose he did compound with you.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. This does shew an extraordinary kindness towards some sort of People.

Mr. Ashton. If he Discounted the Interest to the time that we reckoned it would be paid, you know that Prejudice would be to him, and not to me; it may indeed prove a Prejudice at last, if the Debt be not paid, because the Receipt is Conditional: if it be not allowed him, the shall Discount to me again.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Was there no Money return'd over from the Queen, K. James's Queen that was?

Mr. Ashton. No my Lord directly nor indirectly, not one Penny. I believe they are not in a Condition to return Money.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Mr. Ashton, what have you more?

Mr. Ashton. I have nothing more to say, I submit my Cause to your Lordship.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look you Mr. Ashton, as to some things that you have mentioned: First, there's no body questions but you are a Protestant; nay, as far as I discern, so they are all that are concern'd in this Matter. The whole design shows that they are all so careful of the Protestant Religion, that they design to restore and establish it by the King of France; so that it appears they are all Protestants concern'd in this Project.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, my Lord, who is it that proposes that?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Papers that were carrying to France, Mr. Ashton, you have heard them read.

Mr. Ashton. I hope, my Lord, that no doubtful Insinuations or Suggestions are to affect me?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. There is a Gentleman that was called to by the Prisoner, it may be, he knows his Hand; pray Dr. Fitz-Williams look upon that Paper, you have been acquainted with him many years, do you know his Hand?

Dr. F. Williams. No Sir, I do not know his hand, I never did see him write, I cannot say I ever received a Letter from him.

Mr. Ashton. I entirely submit my Cause to your Lordship and the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you have done, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. Yes.

Mr. Just. Eyres. Mr. Ashton, because you cannot reply again upon my Lord Chief Justice, after he has summed up the Evidence. There's another thing that I would put you in mind of, that you may give an Answer to it. Captain Billop swears before the Papers were found upon you (and it seems to stick upon you) when he was informed by the Sea-men, that you had put something in your Bosom, and he ask'd you what it was, you said nothing but your Handkerchief? Now, if you knew not what was in the Papers, how came you to deny you had any thing in your Bosom?

Mr.

Mr. Ashton. For the same Reason that I would have endeavour'd to have had them thrown over-board, out of kindness to the Person with whom I happened to be taken.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Consider Mr. Ashton, what a strange many things you run upon: First, you would have it believed, That you had a mind to go into France upon your own account.

Mr. Ashton. I do own that.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Next then, That you hired a Vessel for you and Ellyott. Why would you have Ellyott to go with you into France?

Mr. Ashton. I would not have him, he desired the Favour of going.

L. C. J. Holt. Who desired my Lord Preston to go, or did he desire to go with you?

Mr. Ashton. I had not seen Mr. Ellyot of Three Months before I went into the City to hire the Boat.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Why would you have my Lord Preston go with you?

Mr. Ashton. Why would I have my Lord Preston go with me? My Lord, I hop'd to have got my Passage free with a Person of my Lord's Quality.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you hired this Vessel for my Lord Preston?

Mr. Ashton. No my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Was it my Lord's Money or your own that you paid?

Mr. Ashton. The Money I paid, but how I should be repaid I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Would you for your own Convenience pay a Hundred Pounds for a Boat to go to France, and yet hope to get your Passage free by taking in my Lord Preston.

Mr. Ashton. Truly my Lord, I cannot tell how it would have been; at the utmost, we could but have paid our share of it.

L. C. J. Holt. But you can tell me if you will, I ask you, how it was agreed among you?

Mr. Ashton. Truly my Lord, as I hope to be saved, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Then there is another thing, why did you desire one of the Sea-men to say, That you were to go to Flanders and not to France, and give him Half a Crown to say so?

Mr. Ashton. I presume your Lordship knows that it is a Fault, though it be not a Treasonable Fault to go into France.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But Mr. Ashton, Truth is the thing that we are enquiring after; and, that is the thing we would have prevail, and I hope shall in all Cases: If you are not Guilty, we hope it will prevail of your side, if you are Guilty we hope it will prevail on the other side. Now how likely is it that you should get into this same Company by chance without a Previous Agreement; you sent something from Burdet's, a Hamper and a Trunk, and afterwards some other things went from Rigby's, who is your Father-in-Law.

Mr. Ashton. No, There was nothing at all carried from Mr. Rigby's.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, the Leather Bag, I believe. but another thing is this, That if it be possible you will do well to give an answer to, why did you enquire for a hiding Place? Why did you ask the Master of the Ship whether there was a convenient Place to hide in?

Mr. Ashton. As to that Matter, my Lord, I had heard of diverse People, that actually had Passes, and were going to Flanders, yet were stopp'd and brought to Town again. I believe my Lord Nottingham has bail'd many a One, and your Lordship knows it to be so, and has bailed many your self; and therefore I had great reason upon that account to endeavour secrecy as much as I could.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Ashton, as I remember, you said your self you were once before a going over, and had the Misfortune to be stop't; now to venture a Second time without a Pass, was something strange. Why had you not gone and applied your self to the Secretary for a Pass?

Mr. Ashton. I had made all the Application I could to my Lord Nottingham, I cannot say in my own Name, because I was sure before hand, I should be denied; but I did by other hands endeavour to have got a Pass to have gone into Flanders, because it was of extraordinary consequence to me, as I tell your Lordship, to go quickly.

L. C. J. Holt. If you had such an occasion to go, and had made it out to the Secretary, and given Security, you might have got it sure.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. One word further, Why should you be so much concerned to have these Papers thrown Over-board?

Mr. Ashton. Perfectly out of Friendship, and had I been Travelling with your Lordship or any Man else that had been so unfortunatel, would have done the same.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Well, Have you any more to say for your self?

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Mr. Ashton, call what Witnesses you will, and speak as long as you will for your self, you shall be heard at large.

Mr. Ashton. Mr. Serjeant, I thank you heartily, I have no more at present.

L. C. J. Holt. Then the King's Council desire to speak a Word to the Jury.

Mr. Serj. Thomps. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: It falls out to be my Duty to Sum up the Evidence that has been given. I opened the Cause at the beginning to you, and I opened it at large, and many Particulars there were mentioned, and truly, I do not think we have failed in the Proof of any one; I know you are Men of that Observation, that I need not, nor shall take upon me to repeat all the Particular Circumstances, but as near as I can, I shall touch upon the Heads of the Evidence, and do it with as equal regard to my Duty, and as much tenderness to the Prisoner as any one can do.

Gentlemen, In the First place, you see what the Indictment is for; 'tis for a High Treason of a very Great Nature, no less than the Deposing the King and Queen and Subverting this Government, and that by a French Power and Interest: If inviting an Invasion, and giving an Account of the Weakness, and where the Strength of the Government lay, carrying Papers to Sollicit the French to come and to incite this Nation into Rebellion, that so they might depose this King, and set up the late King James again. If these be High Treason, as doubtless they are, then Gentlemen, how far forth the Prisoner at the Bar had a share in it, I must refer to you from what we have proved.

He is the Man, it seems, that made the first step, for you may remember it was proved that he met this Woman at Burdet's in the City, for the hiring of this Ship, and after Two or Three Meetings more, they come to a Conclusion, and 93 Guineas and Six Pence are deposited to make up 100*l.* which was the Price agreed upon, and that was actually paid by Mr. Ashton, this is Sworn to be so

The next thing is, to what purpose this Money was paid, and the Ship hired, that is directly Sworn, it was to carry Mr. Ashton and Two or Three more of his Friends, not naming of them, and they were to go for France, one of the Witnesses says, to any Port in France, it was not directly declared to what Part. This I say was the purpose, for which the Money was paid, and the Vessel hired, and this was to carry you Mr. Ashton and Two or Three more Friends of his into France.

It is true, Mr. Elliot afterwards did meet Mr. Ashton, and I think was by at the Bargain making, or at leastwise, when the Money is paid, I will not be positive in that, because I would do him no wrong, he being to make his Defence hereafter.

Mr. Ashton. No, he was not by, I made the Bargain my self.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then afterwards I remember one Circumstance when he hired this Ship, he was to hire a Ship that had a Place to hide in, and so he must needs know upon what Design, I say, by that he must needs know, that there was a Matter of great Moment which he was to transact, for he was to have such a Ship as he might hide in.

After this Ship was hired then they met in Covent Garden, and there they take Order with the Man to go down with them to the Stairs, where the Waterman was called, indeed Mr. Ashton did part from them in the Way, but presently after came to them at the Stairs, and there came my Lord Preston and his Man, who together with Elliot, that was there before, I think before, all Embark't in the Boat, and were carried to the Ship, and made all the hast away they could for France.

When they were there, and came to a Place of Danger, near a Ship of War, there was care taken, according as they had enquired of the Master of the Ship before, that they should be hid, and hid they were.

Afterwards, when they were past that Danger, when they came to the Block-House at Gravesend, there they thought fit to hide again, and did so, and there they concealed themselves, till they were surprized in that Place by Captain Billop.

My Lord, after such time as Captain Billop had surprized them, he tells you, how he came down after this Smack, you see what happened; my Lord Preston first came up, and after he had search'd my Lord Preston, Elliot came up and he was searcht, and after Mr. Ashton was once come up, he went down to fetch his Hat, and there was seen to take up this Bundle of Papers, and there the Papers upon search were found in Mr. Ashton's Breast.

This being so found in his Breast, you have heard what applications were made by this Gentleman, to get these Papers cast Over-board, and what Promises were made to the Captain, and what likelihood there was of making his Fortune, if he would go along with them or throw away the Packet.

You hear, Gentlemen, that after they came to White-Hall, one of the Men Swear, that this Gentleman gave them Money, that they should say, they were not hired for France; but for Flanders.

These, Gentlemen, are the several Circumstances that do appear in this Case, which shew the mighty care and diligence that was used to get these Papers suppressed that had been thus taken, or to get them again into their own Custody, and that is a Matter that shews how far this Gentleman was concerned in this Design, and taking all these things together, I think there can no greater Evidence be given, that Mr. Ashton was in this contrivance, that he was concerned in the Message, that he was to be sent, and all this business that was to be done, was as much Guilty as my Lord Preston, who now stands convicted for it.

And the Court will tell you, Gentlemen, there are no Accessories, in Treason, all are Principals, though it be not actually proved, that this Gentleman did know all these Papers what they were, yet in Case he hired a Ship for himself, and the Lord whose Papers they were, to go in, and take such notice of the Papers as to take care of them, to suppress and conceal them, that is an Evidence of his knowledge of the Importance of them; and if so, he will be equally Guilty of the High-Treason.

L. C. J. Holt. I doubt that.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord, I would not willingly press any thing further, than the Nature of the thing will bear.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray go on, Brother, we are only talking among our selves.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. The next thing is this, that is to be considered, that after such time as these Papers came to be laid open, what is it that appears among them? Truly I shall not take upon me to repeat so much as the substance, much less the Particulars of the several Papers; but, I must say, that there does appear to be a Formed Design of Subverting the Government, of Deposing this King and Queen, and of bringing us all into War Rebellion and Blood-shed, all this under a pretence of Establishing the Protestant Religion, and our Legal Government again (tho I can see no means they had to depend upon for it) but by a Popish Interest and a French Power, and how far that is possible or probable to promote such an end by such means, I leave to your consideration.

Gentlemen, you have heard all the particular Papers read, here was the Resolution of a Consult and Conference, where this Project was designed, here were Heads of a Declaration, that was to be framed to make the Credulous believe, what mighty things should be done upon their New Revolution, you see, what Letters have been produced, and cannot but easily apprehend what is the Import and Meaning of them. I resolve, as I said, not to mention the Particulars, but there is scarce One Line among them, but what is Treason, for it all tends to this Purpose and Design, to depose the King and alter the Present Government.

Now upon the whole Matter, Gentlemen, what this Gentleman has said, I confess to me seems strange, he said indeed at first, that he had no defence at all, or that which was very weak, and so it should seem, the Truth was, for you see what his Defence has been.

He says, that he went into France, that he owns that he was going thither, but what it was was it to do, it was to settle some Accounts with the Family of Colonel Worden, and to receive a Sum of Money that was owing to him by a Person there.

Gentlemen, if the Design had so much Innocency in it, certainly he might have had a Pass, at least, there was no need of hiring a Vessel at such an extravagant rate, there was no necessity of hiding in this secret manner, and no necessity of impossible suggestions, and proffering Great Rewards for the disposing of, and concealing, these Papers.

Gentlemen, You will remember many Particulars more, which have not slipt your Observation, I shall not take upon me to repeat them, but leave them to your consideration.

Only this I must say, That this is a Treason of a very high Nature, a Treason to depose a King that has ventured all he had, even his Life has been in Danger, and his Blood has been spilt to Establish this Government, and our Religion, and our Laws, and yet it seems there are Men that think this may be better done by a Popish Interest and French Power, which I think no body of either Wisdom or Honesty can imagine, or will engage in, and therefore I leave it to your determination.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, you understand, that Mr. Ashton is now Trved for High Treason; it is mentioned in the Indictment, to be for Conspiring the Death, and Deposing of the King and Queen, and for that purpose, he did endeavour to go into France, and to carry divers Proposals in Writing, and several Memorials to shew how this Kingdom might be Invaded by the French.

To prove this, the Evidence that has been produced and given by the King's Council has been long, and consists of two Parts, Witnesses Viva Voce, they have told how Mr. Ashton designed a Voyage to France, and that he hired a Ship for that purpose, and several Papers were taken out of his Bosom.

In the first place, the Witnesses tell you, that about the latter end of December last, Mr. Ashton, and Mr. Elliot came to Burdett's House, where they met with Mrs. Pratt, and Burdett having before that spoken to her about a Smack that she called the Thomas and Elizabeth.

Then there was a Meeting appointed between her and Mr. Ashton at the Wonder Tavern, where they did Treat and Debate about the hire of it; afterwards they came back to Burdett's again, and there the Agreement was made betwixt the Woman and Mr. Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar, to have a Hundred Pounds. Ninety Three Guineas and Six Pence was fetcht down by Mr. Ashton and told out, and deposited in the Hands of Mrs. Burdett, then there was a Six Pence broken, and one part Mrs. Burdett had, and the other part Mr. Ashton had, and when either the Master or Mistress Pratt should bring the part of the Six Pence that Mr. Ashton kept, to Mrs. Burdett, the Hundred Pounds was to be paid.

And this Agreement being made, 'tis positively Sworn, that they did ask, whether there was a Hiding Place in that Vessel? an Answer was made, There was one, and thereupon a Note was given, that the Master and Mistress Pratt should go to the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden.

Upon Wednesday Night, they went there according to the Directions, where meets Ashton and Elliot, but before that, there was a Boat hired at Surrey Stairs to carry them down to the Ship through Bridge, over against the Tower, but the Tide not serving till about Ten a Clock at Night, they had agreed with a Waterman for Half a Crown to carry them, and he was to stay till the Tide served. And when they went out from Rigby's they parted, Elliot and the Master went together, Mr. Ashton did not go with them, but came near about the same time to Surrey Stairs, where they took Water.

Being aboard, it was observed that all these Gentlemen were very timorous, and seemed to be much frightened at the sight of any Vessel, from which there was any apprehension of their being taken notice of; and, therefore they went down under the Quarter-Hatches, which is a Place very inconvenient for such Persons, where none could stand or sit upright, but they were forced to lye upon the Boards, or upon the Ballast.

It seems some intimation was given, that some Gentlemen had an intention to go into France to prosecute some Treasonable Design; And Captain Billop being employed to pursue them, which he did in a Pinnace, when he came near the Vessel where they were, he called to the Vessel, and under pretence of Pressing Seamen, he went on Board; The Master of the Vessel said he had a Protection from the Admiralty; so that there was no cause for them to fear pressing, nor indeed was there any for Gentlemen to fear it, they being not lyable to be pressed.

When the Captain came near the Ship, and declared his intent of coming on board, these Gentlemen were gone under the Quarter Hatches again, Captain Billop coming on board, and speaking about pressing of the Men, and saying, there was a Couple that would make good Seamen for the King; the Master shewed his Protection, and then the Captain said he would search further in the Ship, and so he did, and then he pulls up the Boards, and there he finds all these Gentlemen, who were called up one after another, and searcht by the Captain.

Gentlemen, There is one of the Witnesses tells you, that when they were come up, he saw a Packet that lay in this very place under the Quarter-Hatches, unto which was tyed a piece of Lead, which Mr. Ashton takes up and puts in his Bosom, with which the Captain being acquainted, Enquiry is made by him, what Mr. Ashton had there? Mr. Ashton said it was his Handkerchief, and nothing but that which he pulled out: But Captain Billop puts his Hand in his Bosom between his Coat and his Body, and takes out the Packet, and carried these Gentlemen on Board the George Frigate, where they stayed till the Tyde served to bring them to White-Hall.

But before they came on board the Frigate, Mr. Ashton was very importunate with him to throw this Packet into the Water; when they were on board the George Frigate, and in the Cabin alone, they continue their importunity.

Now, say they, we have you here, and you are alone, pray will you throw this Packet over-board; and particularly Mr. Ashton said it would do the Captain no good to injure so many Gentlemen, and Mr. Elliot would have perswaded the Captain to take the Lead that was tyed to the Packet, and tie it to some Letters that were taken out of my Lord Preston's Pocket, and throw the Packet over-board; and then have informed the the King and Council, that those Letters was the Packet taken out of Mr. Ashton's Bosom: But the Captain very honestly rejected all their Motions of that kind.

Truly, Gentlemen, my Memory will not serve me to repeat all the Particulars, but I question not your Notes will bring them to your Minds. Mr. Elliott, it seems was so mightily concerned at their being taken with these Papers, that when they shot London-Bridge, he wisht the Bridge might have fallen upon them and knockt them on the Head; and, when they were got through, he wisht a Thunder-bolt would fall down into the Boat and sink them: That, indeed was Mr. Elliott, and not Mr. Ashton; but Mr. Ashton was as much concerned about disposing of the Packet as Mr. Elliott.

At White-hall this Packet is opened, and you have several Papers produced in Evidence and read to you, you have heard what Evidence has been given, that these are the very Papers that were in the Packet thus taken.

First of all Captain Billop tells you he carried them to my Lord Nottingham, and that they lay there in his Office; he withdrew indeed while my Lord Nottingham examined my Lord Presfon, but the Packet was not opened in the interim, but there was only a Paper stuck on the outside that my Lord had taken off before the Captain returned into the Room, and there the Packet remained intire. He says, my Lord Nottingham opened the Packet and put up all the Papers that were in the Packet in his presence into a Cover again, and sealed them up with his Seal. My Lord Nottingham says positively, he did put up all the Papers that were in the Packet again, all and no more, except the Cover, and that he sealed up and delivered it to Captain Billop.

Captain Billop says, he took these very Papers from my Lord Nottingham, and as he received them, carried them without opening to my Lord President.

My Lord President says he lockt them up unopen'd in a close Cabinet in his Closet-Room, where no body comes; there they were that Night, and the next Day he carried them intire to the King, and some of them were read by the King, in the Presence of my Lord President; and, they were all taken away again by his Lordship, no more nor no less; and, my Lord President brought them all to the Cabinet Council, where they were read, and were delivered to my Lord Sydney.

My Lord Sydney swears, these Papers now produced are the same Papers he had from my Lord President, and my Lord President swears, that they are the same he received by Billop from my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord Sydney markt them.

So that there can remain no doubt of these being the same Papers, that were contained in the Packet, that was taken out of the Bosom of Mr. Ashton.

Then, as to the Matter of the Papers, I think it is plain beyond all contradiction, that the Import of them is Treasonable: They shew a Design of invading the Kingdom by a Foreign Force, and of Deposing the King and Queen from the Government, and of setting the late King upon the Throne.

It is agreed, as it is mentioned, at a Conference, between several Noblemen and Gentlemen, that were of the Whig and Tory Party, as they call them, that the late King was to be restored, though by a French Power.

It was impossible for them to effect it, by going plainly to work, and saying in plain Words, the French should invade us. It was to be done in this manner.

The French King must pretend by all means to be our Friend and a Mediator betwixt the late King and the People of England, and this was out of design plainly to get a Party of the Kingdom, to joyn with them; the most credulous and inconsiderate sort of People; who when they shall be seduced into a Belief of the French King's great Kindness, it was not doubted but there would be a Conjunction between them and the French Forces, to restore the late King.

And to procure such a Perswasion in the People; the French King was to shew himself kind to the English Protestants, to appear and act another part than he had formerly done; he was to permit them the Exercise of the Protestant Religion, thereby to perswade many, that his Persecution of his own Subjects, the Hugonots, was not out of any Aversion to the Protestant Religion, but only to their Antimonarchical and Resisting Principles.

Then an Inconvenience is to be removed; for they complain, that they are too full of Bigottry at St. Germain's, and too bare faced: For they make an open Profession of Popery, and speak truly what they do intend; but say they, if they will have the Design take effect, they must be more Close and Secret: For the Folly and Bigottry at St. Germain's was a very great Obstruction. Therefore, they proposed, that some Persons might be substituted as Agents to Correspond here, that understood the Temper of the Nation, and what would easiliest prevail with the People: And a Model was to be framed at St. Germain's, the Protestants are to be seemingly caressed, Seven or Nine to be of the late King's Council, that so we might believe, that he was ours in Interest again, and that we have a Relation to him.

And if things were carried with such cunning and subtilty, they hoped to delude a great many People over into the Interest of the late King; but, if they went bare-faced, it would cause such great Jealousies, that they must totally despair of Success.

Yet they did not hope by these Artifices to obtain so many Friends here, as might have been sufficient to accomplish their Design; and therefore they must have recourse to a Foreign Force, particularly a French Force. For says one of the Papers, Use Foreigners to expel Foreigners; that is, Use French to expel Dutch Foreigners, who are our Allies, and are falsely accused by them to have trampled upon the Rights and Liberties of the Nation.

There is one Argument used to encourage People to assist the French in the Invasion of their own Country, which I cannot omit, namely, That as soon as the French, with a considerable Expence of Men and Money, had restored the Protestant Religion, the late King to the Crown, and the People to their Liberties, that he would withdraw all his Forces, and reap no Profit or Advantage by his Success. I must confess, this carries so little of Persuasion in it, that it is ridiculous to think thereby to impose upon any number of Men. But notwithstanding the weakness of their Arguments, it is apparent they were in good earnest; the Papers give an account to the French, in what state and condition our Forts were, Portsmouth not man'd with above 500, and Gosport how weakly fortified.

It was a happy juncture between this and the first of March, when Advice is given to make use of the Opportunity. For Men cannot give, but Men may use Opportunities, and something was to be done forthwith, and the Goods must be got in readiness, particularly Linnen and the Copper, are mentioned, which are mysterious and dark Expressions, and you may put a Construction upon them as well as I; for they are written in a style of Trade, as if there were a Correspondence between two Tradesmen, and the Linnen and the Copper are ordered to be brought before the 10th of March.

But however obscure some of these Expressions are, there are others that are more plain, That the French Fleet must be cut in April at farthest, and are to come before the Conjunction between the English and the Dutch, and Jennings, Strickland, or Trevannian are to come from St. Mallo's in one Night, and to fight the English Fleet in the Chops of the Channel, and not to come so high as Beachy, where they came the last Year.

And there is an account given, in what condition and state our Navy was, how many Ships, what Rates, how Man'd, and who the Officers; and then as the French were to be in readiness to come in April, so they say our Fleet was not to be out till June.

Gentlemen, There are a great many other Particulars; but these are enough, nay half of them were enough to make any Man Guilty of Treason, that was concerned in them, or that had a hand in carrying or making use of them.

Besides, there are other Letters which can import nothing, but the Writer was of the late King's Interest; one directed to Mr. Redding, the other to Mrs. Redding; and these were to go to France to let them know how zealous he was in his Duty, and how the Interest of the young Master increased. The Letters have these Expressions: That though the Family were decreased, yet our Interest is increased, which is yours, and I speak in the Plural Number, because I speak the Sentiments of my elder Brother, and the rest of our Relations, and desire them to believe they were zealous and cordial in their Duty to Mr. Redding. Now what Interpretation you will make of this, I'll leave to you.

Then there is another Letter to Mrs. Charlton, and another to Mr. Jackson, and divers other things that have been read, and amongst the rest, have been read the Heads of a Declaration at large, shewing what should be done, and what Methods should be taken in order to the restoring the late King, and deposing this.

And there is also mention made in a Paper, how divers Persons, who were to be pardoned, as particularly, all Justices of the Peace actually in Commission are not to be excepted; Outlaws are to be pardoned; Chimney Money to be taken away; and all that come in within One and Twenty Days are to be forgiven.

So that it is plain, these Letters import a Design to depose the King and Queen, and the Kingdom to be invaded by Foreigners, only a little to colour the matter, nor to lose the presence of a Protestant Interest altogether, there was to be 5 or 6000 Swedes to be made use of in the Invasion.

Gentlemen, if there was a Design of an Invasion, be it by Papists, or by Protestants, if any Act was done tending thereunto, it is High Treason within the Statute of 25 E. 3. For purposing and intending to depose the King and Queen, manifested by any Overt-Act, hath been always held to be High Treason.

This, Gentlemen, is the Sum and Substance of the Evidence that has been given against the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Ashton says for himself, it is true, saith he, my Design was to go to France, I was so unfortunate as to have the Papers taken about me. I did take them up; but, says he, it is not at all proved that any one of the Papers that are now produced are my hand: Which is true: There is no such Proof.

The next thing is, that Mr. Ashton being ask'd, what occasion he had to go to France? He says, he had formerly a Relation to Col. Worden, and did transact and had the Management of his Affairs, which were very great. Col. Worden died half a year ago, and he enjoind him upon his Death Bed to go into France about settling some Accompts of his, and he was desired by the Family of Col. Worden so to do.

This Mr. Ashton alledges; but he has not proved it. 'Tis very strange, that if Mr. Ashton was to go to France to negotiate that Affair for Col. Worden's Family, none of that Family should be produced to prove, that Col. Worden gave him such Directions, or that the Family desired him to go into France upon that account.

Then Mr. Ashton hath endeavoured to give another reason for his Voyage into France: he affirms, he had some Affairs of his own with relation to the late Queen, he was concerned for her, and she did owe Monies here, and he paid several Debts to Tradesmen, particularly 400 l. she owed to the Coach Harness Maker; and he having paid it, went over to reimburse himself: The Tradesman was produced, and he says, Mr. Ashton did pay the Money a Year ago; but whether Mr. Ashton had Effects from the late Queen, or paid it out of his own Pocket, does not appear; Mr. Ashton says, he paid it out of his own Pocket, which is very extraordinary, that he should be so kind to pay what he was not obliged to pay, and have no security to reimburse himself.

So that, Gentlemen, you had best consider whether there be any thing at all said or proved, that can justify Mr. Ashton's going to France, or whether there be any good reason offered for it.

Then Ashton has called Witnesses to prove, that he was always a Protestant, though he did live in a Popish Family, where they did encourage Papists and discountenance Protestants; for which he had the ill will of those he did depend upon.

Gentlemen, all that is agreed, and it is not a question in this Case; whether Mr. Ashton be a Protestant or a Papist; but the Question is, whether he be guilty of High Treason, from which the being a Protestant does not secure a Man.

But Gentlemen, if Mr. Ashton had no Knowledge upon what design the other Persons were to go into France, though he had actually gone into France, it had been a Crime in this Juncture of Affairs, yet not High Treason; but to go into France, and carry a Treasonable Scheme of a Design and Project of an Invasion, that is Treason.

Now the Question is, whether Mr. Ashton went with such a Purpose or not, you are to consider; I would not lead you into any strain of the Evidence, but only state it how it stands. It is plain he was concerned all along in hiring the Smack, and as the King's Council observed to you, the Price was something extraordinary, they were to pay 100*l.* for the Voyage, to which was added some Encouragement to the Woman, that if she performed this Voyage well, she might get 1000*l.* before Lady Day, and the Money was paid by Mr. Ashton, and he was taken aboard the Vessel.

Mr. Ashton was much concerned to secure the Papers; by taking them out of the place where they lay, upon the Ballast under the Quarter-Hatches; and after they were taken out of his Bosom, he was very importunate, and so often with Captain Billop to throw them overboard.

And why should he be so earnest and concerned, unless he very well knew and was acquainted with the contents of those Papers?

And he gave one of the Seamen 2*s.* 6*d.* to say they were bound for Flanders: Unless it was a matter of great Importance he went about, and that was not fit to be known; why should he deny it, or labour to have it concealed? An 100*l.* to be paid for this Voyage, was, upon a joint Account, as well for my Lord Preston as for Mr. Ashton and Ellyot; Mr. Ashton did pay the Money, and he does not make it appear whose it was.

Gentlemen, it rests upon you to consider the Evidence you have heard, whether it is sufficient to induce you to believe Mr. Ashton was going into France with these Papers to carry on the Design of Deposing the King and Queen, and invading the Kingdom: If you are not satisfied in your Consciences that he is Guilty, then find him not Guilty: On the other side, if you are satisfied that he is Guilty, I do not question but you will find him so.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, My Lord has rightly repeated and stated the Evidence to you, I shall only say but a very few Words to it.

Mr. Ashton, as at first he did, so in his Defence has complained of a very speedy Tryal, and would insinuate something of Favour that he might find for that Reason. It does appear he had notice of his Tryal sufficient, and had Time enough to prepare for it: But there is one thing extraordinary has happened to his Advantage, which I would desire may be taken notice of. If he had been tryed on Saturday, perhaps he had had more reason to complain than now he has; for he has now (and you see he uses it, and wisely enough too) the Advantage that happened to him upon my Lord Preston's Tryal; and has had time since Saturday to prepare for this day's Work, so that there is no hard Point upon him as to that Matter, but he has had pretty good Fortune therein.

Next he does insinuate that he is a Protestant: Gentlemen, the Law does not distinguish between a Protestant Traytor and a Papist Traytor; if he has committed such an Offence, as by the Law is High Treason, the Law does not distinguish, nor may we. And Protestants may serve Papists Designs, though they do not directly intend it. Therefore the Evidence to prove him a Protestant is nothing before you; for the Matter is only whether he be guilty of this Crime or not.

In the Tryal of my Lord Preston, then the Labour was, that My Lord was not the Man that was concerned, as the Bearer of this Pacquet of Letters or Writings wherein the Treason is contained; but then it was Mr. Ashton, the Pacquets were found about him; but now it is not Mr. Ashton, but my Lord Preston, and this is now the Question before you, that he stands upon.

But if so be they were all concerned in the Carriage and transporting of this Business, then they are all alike guilty of Treason, and therefore they cannot shuffle it from one to another.

Now there appears some Reason why they would not all agree to be tryed together; for now it is but turning it from My Lord Preston upon Ashton, and Mr. Ashton upon my Lord Preston, and Ellyot upon either of them, and so by this means all might escape, if this were sufficient to serve their turn.

But the Question before you, is, whether all these Persons are not all in all equally concerned, and 'tis the Evidence that must be your Guide and ours; for it is not Mr. Ashton's Affirmation, that he had Business to go into France, and he happened unluckily to fall into these Mens Company, that will be a sufficient Excuse, unless he prove it.

It had been an easie matter for him to have proved, if he had been going into France upon Business for Colonel Worden; but at length that is turned off, and then the pretence for going is, to recover some Money he had owing to him there, and that he had payed for another Person. Had he Papers of Instructions of this kind? Had he any one Witness of this thing?

The Merchandize that he carryed out with him is of another import. Where were the Notes or Bonds that he was to recover? Where is the Accompt that he had to make up with any body beyond Sea? There is no manner of Evidence of any such thing.

Next Gentlemen, do but consider, if the Man were so innocent as he would insinuate, as if he had not gone with the rest upon this Errand, how came the Man to have so heavy a Concern upon him? Why should he go to take up these Papers, if they were not his Brats? Why should he clap them into his Bosom, if he knew nothing what was in them? Why was his concern so great to have them thrown overboard?

Gentlemen, if you expect that the Hearts of Men should be proved otherwise, than as Men guess by one anothers meanings by their Actions, 'tis impossible to convict any Man of a Crime; for if his own Affirmation shall be a Defence, he will never want a Defence to keep himself from being convicted: But that is not what the Law gives credit to; it must be Proof and Evidence that you are to judg upon. But of all he pretends to, he proves nothing.

How came he acquainted with my Lord Preston? Sure he was a Man sufficiently known in the World? Why should he go with him and Mr. Ellyot? Are they not all known? Are they not Persons of the same Disposition, and much in the same Employment?

He had been taken a little before, he says himself, and was hindred from going; and he had strange ill luck, if there was nothing else in the business than what he pretends.

Gentlemen, in short, if you do find by the Evidence, that he was going upon a good and an honest honest design, and that he knew nothing of the Danger that was in these Papers, and that these Persons were in; by reason of these Papers, and yet would go about to have these Papers concealed, and endeavour to have them thrown away, without knowing what was in them: These are Evidences that will be good for you to go by, if you have any such; but to take his Affirmation, because he says it, when he proves nothing, that is no Evidence to go by.

I leave it to you, as my Lord has done. If you are satisfied upon the Evidence that he is guilty; I doubt not you know and will do your Duty, and will find him so; and if you have no such Evidence, or any to prove the contrary, that he is not guilty, then you ought to find him so too.

Mr. Ashton. I beg you pardon for one word.

L. C. J. Holt. What would you say?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I shall reckon it a particular Favor, if you will pardon me one word, after your Lordship has given the Charge.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what say you?

Mr. Ashton. I think, with Submission, that there is no proof I knew or was privy to the Contents of any of these Papers.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray Mr. Ashton, shew any Man any Reason, if you can, why did you go down and catch up these Papers, if you did not know what was in them; they might be for your Advantage to be shewn, for any thing you pretend to know.

Mr. Ashton. I did it for my L. Preston's Sake, whose Hand was proved, and he stands convicted as the Bearer of those Papers.

Mr. J. Eyres. But you forget one thing that was plainly proved, Mr. Ashton, that when you importun'd Capt. Billop to throw away the Papers, you used this as an Argument, It would do him no good to injure three honest Gentlemen.

Mr. Ashton. I did not say so, my Lord, that I know of, tho indeed he has sworn it.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Ashton, you have been heard as long as you did desire to speak, and were askt over and over again, whether you had any more: You are not now saying any new Matter; if you could urge any thing that had been omitted, which made for your Advantage, I believe the Court would indulge you, tho it be against the Course.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I say there is nothing under my Hand, there is no Privy proved; does Supposition condemn a Man? And is there any thing but Supposition against me? There is not my Hand proved in any of the Papers. I beseech your Lordship and the Jury to observe that.

L. C. J. Holt. Your being in the Company, and being so concerned, and importunately endeavouring to have them thrown overboard; the hiring the Vessel to go with these Treasonable Papers to an Enemies Country, and the Papers found about you, is Fact proved, and is left to the Gentlemen of the Jury to consider of.

Mr. Ashton. But does all this amount to more than Suspicion?

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Ashton, if you speak after we have charged the Jury, you will give us an Occasion of speaking to answer you; the Gentlemen of the Jury are Men of Understanding, they have very well observed the Evidence, and I perceive they have been very extraordinary intent upon it, they will be able to make a right Judgment, no Question of it.

Vol. III.

Mr. Ashton. All that I desire, is; there is nothing proved upon me, of my knowing what was in these Papers.

Mr. J. Eyres. And there is that which is very considerable too, that 'tis plain, what you say about Col. Worden's Account, is but a Pretence, for when you were searcht, there was not one Paper, nor one bit of Account found about you, nothing but this Bundle of Treasonable Papers and Letters.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I humbly beg you will observe what is for me, as well as what is against me.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, do you think you shall stay out any time, the Court desires to know it, because they will order themselves accordingly.

Juryman. My Lord we do not know till we come together.

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, take your own Time, only the Court would comply with your convenience in the Adjournment.

Then the Jury withdrew, and the Court adjourn'd for half an Hour, and when they were returned, the Jury came in to give their Verdict, and being called over, answered to their Names.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. John Ashton hold up thy hand.

Which he did. Look upon the Prisoner; How say you? Is he Guilty of the High Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels? &c.

Foreman. None that we know of.

Maj. Richardson. Look to him, he is found guilty of High Treason.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it. You say that John Ashton is guilty of the High Treason whereof he stands Indicted, but that he had no Lands nor Tenements. Goods nor Chattels, at the time of the High Treason committed, nor at any time since to your knowledge, and so you say all?

Jury. Yes.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Gentlemen, I think truly you have gone according to your Evidence, which the Law requires you to do, and that it is which will preserve us all: And tho it be truly a thing that falls hard upon the particular Men that are concerned in such things; yet notwithstanding, we must have more consideration of the general Good, and Preservation, and the Support of the Government, and that the Law have its due Course, than of any particular Man's Case, as to the hard Point of it: We must look to these things, or there will be no living in the World.

Sir W. Hedges. My Lord, we humbly desire of your Lordship that we may be dismiss from further attendance this Sessions.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Ay.

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen, you are dismiss, and the Court thanks you for your Service.

Then the Court adjourned for an Hour, and then the Lord Mayor and Deputy Recorder, with several of the Justices and Aldermen returned into the Court, and after Proclamation for Silence, Order was given to bring the Lord Preston, and Mr. Ashton to the Bar. Which was done.

C c c c c c 2

The

The Lord Preston standing without the Bar, and Mr. Ashton within.

Cl. of Arr. Sir Richard Grahme, hold up your hand. Which he did.

John Ashton; hold up your hand. Which he did.

My Lord Preston, You stand convicted of high Treason, for conspiring the Death of the King and Queens Majesties, for adhering to the King's Enemies, and endeavouring to subvert the Government: What can you say for your self, why the Court should not proceed to give Judgment against you of Death according to the Law?

Lord Preston. 'Tis true, my Lord, the Jury have found me guilty of the Treason assigned in the Indictment. My Lord, it is a Treason of a very heavy and black Nature, 'tis of such a Nature, that if I had been conscious to my self to have deserved, I should be very willing to undergo, that Judgment that is like presently to pass upon me. It is to endeavour to bring in the King of France to Conquer and Invade this Kingdom; 'tis a thought I always abhorred; I love my Religion, my Family, my Country too well to attempt or endeavour any such thing; I must appeal to your Lordship, though now perhaps it is too late, whether the Treason that is laid against me has been perfectly proved; for in the Case of proving Hands, and particularly in the Case of Colonel Sydney, It was disallowed that comparifon of Hands should be Evidence; there ought to be at least one if not two Evidences to prove the writing of it. My Lord, I know this is too late, I should have offered this to the Jury before, but being in the Crowd and in great disorder by standing so long, I had not strength or ability enough to urge it as I should. I have nothing more to say in the Case but submit to that Judgment that the Law has assigned.

Mr. D. Recorder. My Lord Preston, Your Lordship knows the proceedings of the Law in such Cases; there is no averring against the Verdict of the Jury, they have found your Lordship guilty, and the Law says, that Judgment must be given upon you according to that Verdict.

Lord Preston. Mr. Recorder, I do not aver against the Verdict. I own it is too late, I should have offered it before, and I must submit to the Judgment of the Law.

Cl. of Arr. John Ashton, hold up thy hand. Which he did.

You are in the same Case with the Prisoner last before you. What can you say for your self, why Judgment should not be given against you, to die according to Law?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I would humbly desire I might have a sight of my Indictment; I have some reason perhaps to believe that I am found guilty upon an Erroneous Indictment, and if it be so, I would desire to have Council to argue the Errors of the Indictment.

Mr. D. Recorder. You have heard it twice read in English, and once in Latin, and that is all that is allowed to any one in your Case, I never knew the Record of any Indictment shewn to any Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Ashton. Suppose there be any Error in it.

Mr. D. Recorder. I am not to suppose any such thing, if there is any, it has been read to you, assign it and the Court will consider of it.

Mr. Ashton. If I can assign the Errors in the Indictment, may I have the advantage of it then?

Mr. D. Recorder. If there be Errors, you will have the Advantage of them: If you will assign them; if there be none, you can have none.

Mr. Ashton. Then I say, if there be words in the Indictment that there are no such Words in Nature, then, Sir, I am told it is a Vicious and Erroneous Indictment, and that is enough to viciate the Indictment.

Mr. D. Recorder. No such Words in Nature? It is hard to tell what you mean by that; perhaps there are terms of Art in the Law, which though you are not acquainted with, we are.

Mr. Ashton. Then there are such Words in Nature.

Mr. D. Recorder. That is an insensible Expression, Words in Nature!

Mr. Ashton. I am informed that even a Letter in an Indictment is enough to viciate it, or if it be false Latin, that will make it an Erroneous Indictment.

Mr. D. Recorder. No, that is not so; but if you will tell me what that Letter is, I'll tell you what I say to it; it may, or it may not be material.

Mr. Ashton. We know it was lately disputed in a Case of this Nature at this Place, and I am informed the Court were of Opinion, if it had been in the Body of the Indictment, it had been an Error.

Mr. D. Recorder. If you please to tell me wherein the Error in your Indictment consists, I may be able to give you a good Answer to it, or you will have the advantage of it.

Mr. Ashton. I say it consists in this, the Word Cymba is written with an S in the Indictment, whereas it should be with a C.

Mr. D. Recorder. How do you know it?

Mr. Ashton. It is no matter how I know it, I have some reason to know it, it may be.

Mr. D. Recorder. Mr. Hardesty, look upon the Record.

Mr. Ashton. With Submission, that is an Error, for there is no such word as Cymba with an S.

Cl. of Arr. It is a long Indictment; will you please to ask him where about it is?

Mr. D. Recorder. Mr. Ashton, will you tell me where 'tis written?

Mr. Ashton. In the Indictment when you come to speak of Cymba a Boat.

Mr. D. Recorder. By the Sound I cannot distinguish whether it be S or C.

Mr. Ashton. Sir, I hope you will do me the Justice to examine the Indictment it self.

Mr. D. Recorder. The Clerk is looking upon it; how is it Mr. Hardesty? Is it with an S or a C?

Cl. of Arr. It is with a C.

Mr. D. Recorder. The Clerk has read it, and he certifies me it is in both places with a C, which is true Latin.

Mr. Ashton. Is it in all places with a C?

Cl. of Arr. I have lookt in two places, and 'tis right; I'll look further, if you please.

Mr. Ashton. Pray do. Which he did.

Cl. of Arr. It is with a C in all places.

Mr. D. Recorder. The Clerk tells me it is the same, and right in every place, and he has lookt over all the Indictment, as to the matter.

Mr. Ashton. Then Sir I submit to it.

Mr. D. Recorder. Make Proclamation for Silence; Which was done.

Mr.

Mr. D. Recorder. My Lord Preston, or rather Sir Richard Grabme, and Mr John Ashton, Ye have been Indicted, Arraigned and Convicted of High Treason against their present Majesties King William and Queen Mary, whom God preserve. Ye have had a long, a fair, and favourable Tryal as any Persons that ever have been tryed at this Bar.

The Jury that has passed upon your Lives and Deaths has convicted you; and the Court are now to do their last Act, which is to pronounce that Sentence that the Law does inflict upon such Crimes as ye stand Convicted of.

It is a great trouble to me to pronounce a Judgment that is so heavy upon you; but I must say, the Evidence that has been given against you, was so clear, and I suppose not only convincing to the Twelve Men that tryed you, but to all By-standers, that I can do it with that satisfaction that becomes one who is intrusted with the King's Justice, that the Law may obtain, and that there should be no Interruption of Justice. And the Sentence that the Law has declared should be pronounced in this Case, is this:

That Ye do respectively go to the place from whence Ye came; from thence to be drawn upon a Sledge to the place of Execution, to be there hang'd up by the Neck, to be cut down while Ye are yet alive, to have your Hearts and Bowels taken out before your Faces, and your Members cut off and Burnt, Your Heads severed from your Bodies, Your Bodies divided into four Quarters; Your Heads and Bodies respectively to be disposed of according to the King's Will and Pleasure; and the Lord have mercy upon your Souls.

Then the Prisoners were convey'd away to Newgate, the Place from whence they came.

The Tryal of Henry Harrison, Gent.

Die Mercurii Sexto die Aprilis, Anno Regni Domini Gulielmi & Dominae Mariae Regis & Reginae Angliae, &c. Quarto.

Judges present } Lord Chief Justice Holt.
 } Lord Chief-Baron Atkins.
 } Mr Justice Nevil.

THE Keeper of the Prison of Newgate did, according to Order of the Court being then late, bring up the Body of Henry Harrison, Gent. to the Sessions-House in the Old-Bailly, London, who being at the Bar, was Arraigned upon an Indictment of Felony and Murther, found that Day by the Grand-Jury for the City of London, in manner following:

Ch. of Arr.

Henry Harrison, hold up thy Hand. Which he did. You stand Indicted by the Name of Henry Harrison, late of London, Gent. for that you not having the fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the Fourth Day of January, in the Third Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord and Lady, King William and Queen Mary, of England, &c. about Eleven of the Clock in the Night of the same Day, with Force and Arms, &c. at London, viz. in the Parish of St Peter Cornhil, in the Ward of Limestreet in London aforesaid, being in a certain Coach with one Andrew Clenche Doctor of Physick, and a certain Man yet unknown, in and upon the said Andrew Clenche in the Peace of God, and of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, then and there being, Violently, Feloniously and of your Malice before-thought, did make an Assault. And that you the said Henry Harrison, with the Help and Assistance of the said Man unknown, with a Pocket Handkerchief with a Coal in the same, being put, of the value of Two Pence, about the Neck of him the said Andrew Clenche; then and there Feloniously, Voluntarily and of your Malice before-thought did put, fasten and bind; and that you the said Henry Harrison with the said Handkerchief with the Coal aforesaid in it, by you the said Henry Harrison with the Help and Assistance of the aforesaid Man unknown about the Neck of the said Andrew Clenche then as aforesaid, put fastened and bound him the said Andrew Clenche then and there with Force of Arms, &c. Feloniously, Voluntarily and of your Malice before-thought did choak and strangle, by Reason of which choaking and strangling of the said Andrew Clenche by you the said Henry Harrison, with the Handkerchief aforesaid, with the Coal as aforesaid put in it, he the said Andrew Clenche instantly died: So that you the said Henry Harrison with the Help and Assistance of the said Man unknown, him the said Andrew Clenche the said Fourth Day of January in the Year aforesaid at the Parish and Ward aforesaid in manner and form aforesaid, Feloniously, Voluntarily and of your Malice before-thought, did Kill and Murther against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen now, their Crown and Dignity.

How say you, Henry Harrison, are you Guilty of this Felony and Murther whereof you stand Indicted, or not Guilty?

Mr. Harrison. Not Guilty in Thought, Word nor Deed.

Ch. of Ar. Culpresst, How will you be Tryed?

Mr. Harrison. By God and my Country.

Ch. of Ar. God send you a good Deliverance!

Then the said Mr Harrison was taken away from the Bar by the Keeper of Newgate.

And afterwards the same Day, about Eleven of the Clock in the Morning, the said Henry Harrison was brought to the Bar, and he desired the Court that he might then be Tryed, which was granted, and those Persons who were return'd upon the Jury were called over twice, and their Appearances recorded.

Cl. of Arr. You Henry Harrison, These Men that you shall hear call'd, and personally do appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, and you upon Tryal of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they be Sworn.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Harrison, you may challenge such of the Jury as you shall think fit before they be Sworn.

Then the Jury was called and sworn, and then were counted; and the Twelve sworn were these whose Names follow:

J U R O R S.

John Roll	}	John Lawford
Nathaniel Houlton		Nicholas Wildeboare
Michael Pindar		Robert Williamson
James Hulbert		William Merriden
Joseph Howe		Thomas Simpson
Richard Chewne		Thomas Pakeman

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made as is usual.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, I have made no Challenges, because I do believe the Jury to be honest Men.

Cl. of Arr.—Henry Harrison, Hold up thy Hand.

(Which he did.)

Gentlemen, you that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of Henry Harrison, late of London, Gent. &c. [he reads the Indictment.] Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded not Guilty; and for his Tryal hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to inquire whether he be Guilty of this Felony and Murder whereof he stands Indicted, or not Guilty. If you find that he is Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the time of the Felony and Murder committed, or at any time since. If you find him not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you found him Guilty. If you find him not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Darnell,—My Lord, Mr. Harrison's Agents or Friends have, since the last Sessions, made or conveyed away a young Man that was a Principal Evidence against him.

L. C. J. That is a very ill thing, and if it be prov'd, it will no way conduce to Mr Harrison's Advantage.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, I know nothing of it. But my Lord, one of my Witnesses that would have been material for me, is lately dead, Sir Edward Hungerford's Son.

Mr. Darnell. May it please your Lordships, and you Gentlemen that are sworn. I am of Council for the King and Queen against the Prisoner at the Bar, who stands Indicted for the Murther of Dr Andrew Clenche, which was as barbarous a Murder as any that hath been committed in this Age. And considering it was done in the Dark, I think there will be given as clear an Evidence of it against Mr. Harrison the Prisoner, as can be expected. And that is was upon this occasion; one Mrs Vanwicke a Widow (between whom and Mr. Harrison there was a great Kindness) prevailed with Dr Clenche, to whom she was indebted twenty Pounds, to lend her so much more as would make it up one hundred and twenty Pounds, and to take a Mortgage of a House of hers in Buckingham Court near Charing-Cross for his Security; and Mr. Harrison was present with Mrs Vanwicke at the lending of the rest of the Money, and executing of the Mortgage, as he was wont to be at the Management of her Affairs; but when the time came that it was to be repaid, the Dr could not get his Money. and Mrs Vanwicke having but an Estate for Life in the House, and having long delayed the Doctor, he brought an Ejectment for the recovering of the House, upon which the Prisoner came to Dr Clenche, and abused him with very scurrilous Language, and his Passion growing higher, he laid his hand upon his Sword, and would have drawn it, and if it had not been for one Mr. Johnson, 'twas thought he would have kill'd the Doctor at that time; so that the Doctor desired Mr. Johnson to take the business upon himself, and to act in his own Name, he was so much afraid of him. And it will be proved further to you, that at another time the Prisoner said, That Dr Clenche was a Rogue and a Villain, and deserved to have his Throat cut. And sometime after this, Mrs Vanwicke would have borrowed some more Money of the Doctor, but he refused to lend it her, whereupon she acquainting the Prisoner with it, he said, leave him to me (Madam) I'll warrant you, I'll manage him, he is a Rogue, and deserves to have his Throat cut. And afterwards about St. Thomas's day last, the Prisoner went to Mrs West the Tennant, who dwelt in the House mortgaged to Dr Clenche, and desired of Mrs West to have some Money for Mrs Vanwicke, and it should be discounted in part of the then next Christmas Rent. But the said Mrs West refused to pay him any, telling him that she and her Husband were forbid by Dr Clenche and the Ground Land Lord, to pay any more to Mrs Vanwicke, and thereupon the Prisoner expressed his further Malice against the Doctor, and said he is a great Rogue, and a Villain, and deserves to have his Throat cut, and will not dye in his Bed. And, Gentlemen, soon after the Prisoner began to put his malicious Design against the Doctor in Execution, and the Method he took was first to change his Lodgings, for on the day before Christmas Eve last, he took new Lodgings at one Mr. Garways in Thread-Needle-street, near the Old Exchange, attended by a Foot-boy, pretending himself to be a Parliament Man, and that he was just then come out of the Country, and lay in his Lodging there every Night, until the first day of January following, but lay out that Night, and the two next Nights following. And whilst he lodged at this Mr. Garways this matter hapned, which does conduce somewhat towards the discovery of this Murther. One Even-

Evening the Prisoner being in his Chamber there, and one Mrs Jackson, the Daughter of Mrs Garway, making a Fire for him, he did take out his Handkerchief, and held it before the Fire to dry it, which she took great notice of, because it was coarse and dirty, and not fit for his Quality (as she thought) it being made of ordinary Indian stuff, like her Mothers Maids Apron. And, Gentlemen, this very Handkerchief was the same with which the Murder was committed, and this Mrs Jackson will swear it to be the same, for it is a very remarkable one, and it will be produced to you. And we shall shew you further, that on the Third Day of January (being the Day before this Murder was committed) he caused a sham Letter to be left for him at his Lodgings at this Mr. Garway's, as written from a Friend of his that was Sick in the Country, earnestly pressing him to come quickly down to him: And we shall prove that the same Evening he being with Mrs Vanwick in Woodstreet-Counter, did again threaten Dr. Clenche, and said that he was a Rogue, and he would have his Blood. And upon the Fourth Day of January last he again changed his Lodgings, and took new ones at one Mr Jones's a Cane Chair-maker in St Paul's Church-yard, and there he pretended himself to be a Country Gentleman, just then come out of Cumberland, and brought in a Portmanteau Trunk thither. And the same Day he sent a Letter to Mrs Garway where he had lodged before, acquainting her that he was gone out of Town for a Week or ten Days. And, to give you farther Satisfaction, we shall prove that upon the same Fourth Day of January in the Night of which this unfortunate Gentleman was Murder'd, the Prisoner was at one Mr. Robert Humston's Lodgings at the Golden Key in Fleetstreet over against Fetter-lane End, at near Nine of the Clock at Night, and being ask'd by Mr. Humston to stay and Sup with him, he said he could not, for he had been about earnest Business that Day, which was to be done that Night, and that a Gentleman stayed for him in the Street to go with him about it, and so he went away. And soon after, about Nine of the Clock the same Night, two Men standing in Fleetstreet at Fetter lane End, call'd for a Coach, and ask'd the Coachman if he knew Dr. Clenche who dwelt in Brownlow-street in Holborn; and the Coachman reply'd, he did know the Street, but not the Doctor, whereupon they went into the Coach, and ordered him to drive to the End of Brownlowstreet, and when they came thither, one of them called to the Coachman and bad him go to Dr. Clenche's and tell him, that two Gentlemen in a Coach at the End of the Street desired him to go with them to a Patient that was very Sick, which the Coachman did. And he found the Doctor, in his Night-Gown and Slippers, and just a going to Bed; but he immediately dressed himself, and went to them into the Coach. And it fell out very happily for the further Discovery of this Murther, that while this Coach stood at the End of Brownlowstreet, a Young Gentlewoman standing at her own Door near it, and fancying that while the Coachman went on the Errand, the Gentlemen would slip out of the Coach (I think they call it Bilking) she watch'd them. And a Lamp that lighted cross Holborn over against Brownlowstreet End, and another about the middle of Brownlowstreet, gave such a light into the Coach that she plainly saw one of the Men that sat in it, and see him look out of the Coach after the Coachman, and heard him swear at the Coachman, because he made no more haste in going to the Doctor's House, and she is very certain that the Prisoner at the Bar is the same Person that look'd out of the Coach, and that did swear at the Coachman, and is more confident of it from the remarkable-ness of his Voice. For the hearing of this Murther and remembering these Circumstances, she went to Newgate to see the Prisoner, and hearing his Voice in another Room, before she saw him, she declar'd to the Persons that were then with her, that the Voice she then heard was the Persons Voice that she saw look out of the Coach, and that did swear at the Coachman; and afterwards when she came into the Room where the Prisoner was, though with several other Men, she pointed to him as the Person, and she hearing him then speak again, declared to the Persons with her, that both by his Voice and by his Countenance she knew him to be the same Man. And, my Lord, after those Gentlemen had gotten the Doctor into the Coach, one of them called to the Coachman, and bad him make haste and drive them to Leaden Hall Market, and when they were come within Holbourn-Bars, one of them called to the Coachman, and bad him drive faster; whereupon the Coachman drove them very fast through Holbourn to Leaden-Hall-Market-Gate, and when he came there, one of them bad him drive to the Pye without Aldgate (before which time, without doubt, the Murther was committed upon the Doctor, for his Hat was found next Morning in Holborn near Fetter-lane End, but the driving so long about after is supposed to be done least the Doctor might recover) and when they were come without Aldgate, one of them ordered the Coachman to ask there for one Hunt a Chyrurgeon; which he did, and being answered that no such Person was there, he ordered the Coachman to drive back again to Leaden Hall, and when they came there, one of them called the Coachman and gave him three Shillings and Six Pence, and bad him go into the Market there to one Hunt's a Poulterer, and buy them a couple of Fowls, but the Coachman could not find any Hunt a Poulterer, but however he bought a couple of Fowls for three Shillings, and when he came with them to his Coach, the two Gentlemen were gone and the Doctor left in the Coach murder'd with a Handkerchief tied fast about his Neck with a Coal in it (which will be proved to be the Prisoner's Handkerchief.) Besides, there was a Boy in the Street there who took notice of the Coachman's being sent of an Errand, and saw the two Persons come out of the Coach in great haste, and he going towards the Coach before they went out of it, one of them did swear at him to be gone, and of him the Boy took most notice, and was as positive as any Man can be to the Person of one that he never saw before, that the Prisoner now at the Bar was one of them, and was the Person that did then swear at him. But this Witness is spirited away, and cannot be heard of, although he hath been described in the Gazette, and diligent search and inquiry has been made after him. But we have his Examination upon Oath before the Coroner; and we must submit to the Court how far that shall be admitted as Evidence.

Gentlemen, We will call our Witnesses, and if they prove all this matter, I believe every Man here will be satisfied that the Prisoner at the Bar is guilty of this base murther.

Mr.

Mr. Darnell. Pray call and swear Mr. George Wigmore. (Who was sworn with others.)

Mr. Darnell. Pray Mr. Wigmore tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of any Money that was lent by Dr. Clenche, and to whom.

Mr. George Wigmore. May it please your Lordship, there was a Draught of a Mortgage from Mrs. Vanwicke to Dr. Clenche, made by a Gentleman of Grays-Inn for the Sum of one hundred and twenty Pounds, and I ingross'd it; and I paid by the Doctor's Order above threescore Pounds of the Money, and the rest of it was satisfied before; and upon sealing of the Mortgage for the Money, Mr. Harrifon, and one Mr. Rowe fell out about their Dividend of the Money, and called one another ill Names; and Mr. Rowe produced a Bill of what he had done and laid out for Coach-hire and other things for Mrs. Vanwicke, and Mr. Harrifon and he had high words about it, and called one another Rogues; so I told them if they could not agree, I would put the Money up again, and carry it home; but Mrs. Vanwicke and they did agree at last, and sealed the Mortgage, and I paid the Money; and Mrs. Vanwicke and Mr. Harrifon took out twenty Pounds of the Money, and paid it to Mr. Rowe; and after Mr. Rowe was gone, they desired me to go with them to the Young Devil Tavern, and they both used hard Expressions there against Mr. Rowe.

L. C. J. Who was the Mortgage made to?

Mr. Wigmore. My Lord, it was made to Dr. Clenche for one hundred and twenty Pounds.

Mr. Harrifon. Pray, Sir will you tell the Jury how much Money the Gentlewoman had, and if Mr. Rowe had not stept between me and her, I had not been in Question.

Mr. Wigmore. Mrs. Vanwicke acknowledged that the Money I paid her, made up one hundred and twenty Pounds.

L. C. J. What did you hear the Prisoner say against Dr. Clenche?

Mr. Wigmore. My Lord, I do say that he was very troublesome to the Doctor.

L. C. J. Were there any Reproaches cast upon the Doctor at that time?

Mr. Wigmore. No my Lord, only upon Rowe, because he was a Trustee.

Mr. Darnell. Did you hear him say any thing against the Doctor?

Mr. Wigmore. Indeed I cannot particularly say.

L. C. J. He is upon his Oath, and he is sensible and understands the Question.

Mr. Wigmore. He did say very ugly Words, and when I met him afterwards in the High-way, he was very huffy, and I thought he would have drawn his Sword upon me.

L. C. J. What did he say of the Doctor?

Mr. Wigmore. I cannot say particularly what he said.

L. C. J. Stand down.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Thomas Johnson. (Who was sworn and stood up.)

Mr. Darnell. Sir, Pray give the Court an account what you know concerning this Matter.

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, I believe I shall say nothing that Mr. Harrifon will contradict, I was Attorney for Dr. Clenche between him and Mrs. Vanwicke, and I sued Mr. Rowe that was bound with Mrs. Vanwicke in a Bond to perform Covenants for re-payment of the Money lent her by Dr. Clenche upon Mortgage; and I advised the Dr. and told him, don't let us trouble the Tenant, but let us take Rowe first; and I sued Rowe, and had him arrested, and after some time, I saw that the Mortgage must do our business, for Rowe could not pay the Money, whereupon I caused a Declaration in Ejectment to be delivered against Mrs. Vanwicke's Tenant of the House Mortgaged by her to Dr. Clenche, and then Mr. Harrifon came to me, and he expressed himself against the Doctor after a strange rate, and laid his Hand upon his Sword; so my Lord I said to him, what a Fool do you make of your self? must none go to Law, but they must ask you leave, I suppose Mr. Harrifon cannot deny this. Then Mr. Harrifon preferred a Petition to the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal for Mrs. Vanwicke, and thereby suggested to their Lordships that she was wronged in the Purchase and in the Mortgage Money, and that twenty Pounds of it was a former debt of her Husbands; and he finding she could have no Relief before them without payment of the Mortgage Money, he grew troublesome; yet says I, Mr. Harrifon, What she hath done, I cannot help, but if she would pay the rest, I told him I would abate her twenty Pounds, and the Interest Money also.

Mr. Darnell. Pray, Sir, did the Doctor desire you to act for him in your own Name, because he had no mind to meet with Mrs. Vanwicke and the Prisoner?

Mr. Johnson. The Doctor did find himself too deeply concerned with them, and he did not care to have to do with them, whether it was that he was afraid of his Life, I cannot say; but he said to me, Pray, Sir, go on, I will put all into your Hands, and I will trust you with all the Affair, and let them come to you, and not trouble me, own it to be your own; and I told him, I feared none of them, and the Doctor gave out that he had made over all to me, although he had not, and upon this I fear, comes this unfortunate Business, and the Doctor's Lady must look after it her self.

L. C. J. What did he say when he had laid his Hand upon his Sword in your Study?

Mr. Johnson. He said the Dr. had cheated the Widow, and he said that he would be revenged on him, as near as my Memory will serve me, I suppose he will not deny it; whether he did this in a Passion, or to affright the Doctor or no, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Was that before you offered to abate the twenty Pounds?

Mr. Johnson. It was before I offered to abate it.

Mr. Harrifon. How long was it before Dr. Clenche was murdered?

Mr. Johnson. I think it was about a Fortnight or three Weeks, or a little more.

Mr. Harrifon. I never threatned the Doctor in my Life, but I said Rowe had been a Villain and a Cheat, and he and Rowe were the Men, and I shall make it appear that the Dr. never wrong'd the Widow.

L. C. J. How came Rowe to be intrusted or concerned with the Money?

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, Mr. Cornelius Vandianker, a Merchant, gave a Legacy of five hundred Pounds to the Widow Vanwicke and her Children, and Mr. Rowe was a Trustee on the Purchase, and had by that the management of the Affair.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. George Howard. (Who being Sworn stood up.)

Mr. Darnell. Mr. Howard, Give the Court an account of what you know concerning the Prisoner's threatening Dr. Clenche.

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I was at Joe's Coffee-house near Warwick-House in Holbourn, some considerable time before Dr. Clenche was murdered, where Mr. Harrison used several very virulent Expressions against Dr. Clenche; amongst others, one was, That he was a Rogue and a Rascal, and deserved to have his Throat cut. Mrs. Vanwick was then in Company, and they both said, That they then came from Dr. Clenche's.

Mr. Darnell. You are sure he said that Dr. Clenche deserved to have his Throat cut.

Mr. Howard. Yes: He said, That Dr. Clenche deserved to have his Throat cut.

Mr. Harrison. Who was I talking to?

Mr. Howard. You were talking to Mrs. Mary Sheriff.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Mary Sheriff.

(Who was sworn and stood up)

Mrs. Sheriff. My Lord, Mrs. Vanwick came to my House with Mr. Harrison, and desired me to go with her to Dr. Clenche's House; and when we came there, she desired him to let her have Twenty Pounds more; and he said, no. If his House were full of Money, he would not lend her any more, so long as she kept Mr. Harrison Company, for he would spend it; and he advised her to be a Gentleman's House-keeper, and he would help her to a Place; and told her withal, That she owed him one hundred and twenty Pounds, for which he would take one hundred Pounds; and we left Mr. Harrison behind us at my House, and did not take him with us, because we were afraid he might anger the Doctor, and fall out with him; so when we came back, Mr. Harrison asked Mrs. Vanwick, what Dr. Clenche said; Why, says she, he saith, That he will not lend me any more Money while I keep you Company, for you will spend it, and that I must go to Service. To Service! said Mr. Harrison. God damn him, have a Person of your Quality go to Service! he deserves to have his Throat cut; let me alone, I'll manage him as never any Man was managed, and so away they went together.

Mr. Harrison. Did not you say, that as you hop'd to be sav'd, that I was innocent of the Thing?

L. C. J. She does not accuse you of doing the Fact, but gives an account of some Expressions that passed from you.

Mrs. Sheriff. You were always talking against Dr. Clenche, and you said, God damn him, he was an old Rogue, and that Mrs. Vanwick was almost starved to Death.

Mr. Harrison. Rowe, Rowe, I meant, my Lord.

(The Prisoner being then in a Passion.)

L. C. J. Mr. Harrison, do not fall into a Passion, it may be more to your advantage, in the making your Defence, if you keep your Temper.

L. C. J. Witness, What were the Words that he said against Doctor Clenche?

Mrs. Sheriff. Why, he speaking of Doctor Clenche, said to Mrs. Vanwick, God damn him, would he have a Person of your Quality go to Service! he deserves to have his Throat cut; well, Madam, says he, be contented, I'll manage him as never any Man was managed.

Mr. Harrison. What had you for your Swearing?

Coroner for the King and Queen. Witness, he asketh you, if you had any thing for your swearing against him.

Mrs. Sheriff. No, I had nothing, neither have I need of any thing; I had not so much as my Coach hire.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Elizabeth West.

(Who was sworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Mistress, give an account to the Court, what you know about the Prisoner's coming to demand Rent of you, and what passed.

Mrs. West. May it please your Lordship, this Gentleman, the Prisoner, came to me two or three Days before St. Thomas's Day last, and desired me to give him some Rent for Mrs. Vanwick, and I told him, I had no Power to pay him, because I was warned by Dr. Clenche, to pay no more; says he to me again, Dr. Clenche and Rowe, are great Rogues and great Villains. Sir, says I to him again, I believe that the Doctor is a very honest Man: No, says Mr. Harrison, he is a great Villain, and he will never die in his Bed; which of them he meant, Mr. Rowe or Dr. Clenche, I cannot tell. And Mrs. Vanwick, and Mr. Harrison, a little time before that, pressed me, to let them have some Shop Goods in part of her Rent, to grow due, and she made great Complaint, that her Children were ready to starve, and I then told them, that Mr. Johnson had fore warned me to pay any more Rent to Mrs. Vanwick, and if I did, I should pay it again; and therefore I would not pay any more Rent to her, or deliver her any Goods, until she had agreed with Mr. Johnson, and then Mr. Harrison said, that Mr. Johnson was a great Villain, and a great Rogue, and that they had all combined together to cheat the Widdow. And Mr. Johnson being at my House, Mrs. Vanwick fell upon him in a great Rage, and said she would tear his Throat out, and laid hold on him, and Mr. Johnson got from her, and went away in great haste. And the last time I saw Dr. Clenche, I pressed very hard upon him, to let Mrs. Vanwick have more Money; and the Doctor said, that she would never do any good with it, for she spent it all upon Mr. Harrison; and I wished him to let her have twenty Pounds more, and he said, that he advised her to go to Service, and that he had wished her to a Service of Twenty Pounds a Year, and she abused him for it.

L. C. J. What Cloaths had the Prisoner on?

Mrs. West. My Lord, he had an old Threadbare black Cloth Suit of Cloaths on, which looked very shabby.

Mr. Harrison. What Religion are you of, Mistress?

Mrs. West. I was born and bred a Protestant.

Mr. Harrison. I believe you are a Papist, and will Swear any thing, you keep Roman Catholicks in your House, they have murdered Dr. Clenche, for ought I know.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Harrison ever lodge in your House?

Mrs. West. No, my Lord, I have none but Persons of Quality lodge in my House, and they belong to the present Government.

Mr. Darnell. Call Ann Watson.

(Who was sworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know of Mr. Harrison's taking of Lodgings at Mr. Garway's House, and when it was?

Ann

Anne Watson. He came about six a Clock at Night, the Day before Christmas-Eve last, to my Master's, Mr. Garway's House, and told us, that he was newly come out of the Countrey; and lodged there that Night, and so he did until, and upon the last Night of December; and on the first Day of January, he went out, and staid out that Night; and on the Sunday, the third of January last, at Night, he came again with a Person with him, and fetch'd away his Portmanteau-Trunk and things, and paid for his Lodging; and in his absence, there was a Letter left for him, which I gave him, and he said, it came out of the Countrey, and that he had a Friend sick in the Countrey, and did intend to go down to see him, being one from whom he expected a Legacy, and he left that Letter on the Kitchen Window, and on the Monday after, being the fourth Day of January last, he sent a Letter, signifying he was gone out of Town.

(Then the Letter was produced, Marked with the Penny-Pist Mark.)

Mr. Darnell. Who knows Mr. Harrifon's Hand? Mr. Johnson, take that Letter and look upon it, and tell the Court if you think it to be Mr. Harrifon's Hand.

(Mr. Johnson takes the Letter and looks upon it.)

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, I believe it to be Mr. Harrifon's Hand.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I desire that the Letter may be read.

L. C. J. Mr. Clerk of the Peace, read the Letter; and the Subscription first.

(Clerk of the Peace reads.)

To Mrs. Garraway, at the Hand and Apple in Thread-Needle-Street, near the Royal-Exchange, Present.

Mrs. Garraway,
I am sorry it should be such an inconveniency to you, as it is. I have left with your Maid, Three Half Crowns, and if it is not enough, I will give you more. I am gone out of Town, for a Week or Ten Days, and as soon as I come again, I will wait on you, which is all till I see you, from 4th of Jan. 1691.

Your Friend,

and Servant,

H. Harrifon.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Henry Garway and his Wife.

(Who were called and sworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Mrs. Garway, take that Letter, and look upon it, and tell the Court, when you received it.

(Then she takes the Letter, which was produced and read as before, and looked upon it.)

Mrs. Garway. My Lord, I received this Letter on Monday the 4th Day of January last.

L. C. J. Watson, when did he leave the Lodgings, say you?

Anne Watson. He went away the first of January last, about nine a Clock in the Morning, and returned not that Night, but on the second of January last, he was at my Mistress's Shop again (as my Mistress told me) and he came about five a Clock on the next Sunday Night (being the third of January last) with a Person with him, to my Master's House, and fetch'd away his Portmanteau-Trunk and things, and left three Half Crowns with me for his Lodgings, which I gave to my Mistress.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Catharine Jackson.

(Who was sworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know concerning Mr. Harrifon's coming to lodge at Mr. Garway's, and when he went away, and what you know of any Handkerchief he had.

Mrs. Jackson. He came on the Day before Christmas-Eve, to lodge at my Father's, Mr. Garway's House, and lodged there several Nights, and went away the third of January at Night, with his things, but was absent some Nights between his coming and going away, and whilst he lodged there, I observed a Handkerchief in his Hand, as I was making a Fire for him in his Chamber, and the more, because he had said, he was a Parliament Man, and I thought it more like a Sea man's Handkerchief, than a Parliament man's, and our Maid had an Apron of the same kind of Stuff.

(Then the Handkerchief was produced in Court, by the Coroner, and the Coal in it, wherewith Dr. Clenche was strangled.)

Mr. Darnell. Mrs. Jackson, I desire that you would look upon that Handkerchief, and tell the Court what you know of it.

Mrs. Jackson. This is the Handkerchief that I saw Mr. Harrifon hold to the Fire, when I was making of it in his Chamber, or very like that Handkerchief, for I observed it to be very like my Mother's Maid's Apron.

(Then a piece of the Maid's Apron was produced, and they being compared, were very like.)

Mr. Harrifon. Did you hear me say, I was a Parliament Man.

Mrs. Jackson. Yes, I heard you say so.

Mr. Harrifon. Perhaps, you might hear my Boy say so.

Mrs. Jackson. Your Foot-Boy said, you were a Parliament Man: And you said so your self.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Garway again.

(He appeared.)

Mr. Darnell. Where is the Letter you receiv'd from Mr. Harrifon, since he was a Prisoner?

L. C. J. What do you say about a Letter that came to your House from the Prisoner?

Mr. Garway. My Lord, I had this Letter from him last Saturday, directed to my Wife, and I believe it to be his Hand.

(He produceth the Letter.)

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I desire that the Letter may be read.

L. C. J. Read the Letter, Mr. Tanner.

(Clerk Peace reads.)

To Mrs. Garway, at the Hand and Apple in Thread-Needle-street, behind the Royal Exchange, Present.

Mrs. Garway,
I was informed Yesterday, that you are to appear against me, at next Sessions. I am sure, you never heard me mention Dr. Clenche, in all your Life; and if you do, it will look like Malice. My Lord Chief Justice is sensible of the Wrong done me. This is all from

Your Servant,

Henry Harrifon.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Mr. Harrifon, Did I ever tell you, That I was fenfible of it?

(To which he made no Reply.)

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. John Cartwright.
(Who was fworn.)

Mr. Darnell. I would have you declare, what you heard Mr. Harrifon fay, concerning Doctor Clenche.

Mr. Cartwright. My Lord, upon the Third of January laft, Mr. Harrifon came to Woodftreet Compter; it was on a Sunday in the Evening, about Five or Six a Clock, I was ftanding in the Gate, and I let him in. Afoon as he came in, he asked, how poor Mrs. Vanwick did; fays he, ſhe hath been wronged of Five Hundred Pounds within this 12 Months: Then I let him into the Court, and he went into her Chamber; and about half an hour after, I was ſent by my Maſter, to require ſome Chamber-rent of Mrs. Vanwick, and I heard Mr. Harrifon and ſhe at high Words, and in a great Paſſion, and I heard Mr. Harrifon ſwear, God damn his Blood, he would be reveng'd of that Rogue, and named Clenche or Winch, I cannot tell which, and he would have his Blood, e're it were long.

Mr. Harrifon. Where were you?

J. Cartwright. My Lord, I was at the Chamber-door, and there was no Body on that ſide of the Houſe, but Mr. Harrifon, Mrs. Vanwick, and my ſelf.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Mary Jones.
(Who was fworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Now, my Lord, I will call one to prove, where he took a new Lodging, the very Day the Murther was done.

L. C. J. Cartwright, was that in Mrs. Vanwick's Chamber that you heard him ſwear ſo?

Mr. Cartwright. Yes, my Lord, in her Chamber, and none was with her, but he only.

Mr. Darnell. You, the laſt Witneſs Mrs. Jones, when did Mr. Harrifon come to Lodge at your Houſe?

Mrs. Jones. He came on a Monday.

Mr. Darnell. What Day of the Month was it?

Mrs. Jones. I can't tell what Day of the Month, for I did not ſet it down.

Mr. Darnell. Was it the Monday before he was taken?

Mrs. Jones. Yes, it was the Monday before;

Mr. Darnell. Whence did he pretend to come?

Mrs. Jones. He ſaid, that he was come out of the Country, and had formerly lodged in Fleet-ſtreet, and that where he had lodged formerly, they had left off Houſe-keeping, and were gone into the Country.

L. C. J. Where is your Houſe?

Mrs. Jones. In St. Paul's Church-Yard, at the Sign of the Golden Ball.

Mr. Darnell. Call James Howſeman.
(Who was fworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Do you tell what you know, about Mr. Harrifon's being at Mr. Jones's Houſe.

Howſeman. My Lord, he came in about Eight a Clock at Night, and brought a Porter with him, and a Portmanteau Trunk; and after that, the Porter went out a little before him, and then he followed him, and went out after.

Mr. Darnell. Did you hear him ſay, from whence he came?

Howſeman. No, I did not.

Mr. Darnell. Call Anne Evans.
(Who did not appear.)

Mr. Darnell. Then Call Mr. Robert Humſton.
(Who was fworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Mr. Humſton, I deſire you will give the Court an Account of Mr. Harrifon's being at your Houſe, that Night Dr. Clenche was murdered.

Mr. Humſton. My Lord, I met Mr. Harrifon on Monday the 4th of January laſt, and he told me, he was going to the Compter, to a Gentlewoman that was much oppreſſed, and that he wanted Money to get her releaſed; upon which, I gave him ſome Money, and after ſome Diſcourſe, I deſired him to bring home my Gown, that I formerly lent him, and ſeemed angry with him, for that he had ſeveral times promiſed me to bring it home, but had failed therein; and thereupon he promiſed, that I ſhould have it that Night: And that Evening about Nine of the Clock, he came to my Lodgings, and brought home my Gown, and when he came, I aſked him, if he had gotten Mrs. Vanwick Releaſed: And Mr. Harrifon answered, No. Upon which, I blamed him for neglecting an old Friend, and Mr. Harrifon excuſed it; telling me, that he had met with ſome Perſons upon earneſt Buſineſs which prevented him. And then I aſked Mr. Harrifon to ſtay and Sup with me, but he refuſed it, ſaying, that he had been about extraordinary Buſineſs that Day, which muſt be done that Night, and that a Gentleman ſtayed in the Street for him, and they two were going to do it.

L. C. J. Where do you live? And how long ſtayed he at your Houſe?

Mr. Humſton. I lodged then at the Golden Key in Fleet-ſtreet, over againſt Fetter-lane End: He came to my Lodgings about Nine of the Clock at Night, and ſtayed there but a little time.

L. C. J. What manner of Cloaths had he on?

Mr. Humſton. My Lord, he had a Cloak on, but I cannot tell what Cloaths he had under it, he brought my Gown up under his Cloak.

Mr. Darnell. Swear Eſther King.
(Who was fworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Do you know what time Mr. Harrifon was at Mr. Humſton's Lodgings.

Eſther King. It was on Monday the Fourth day of January laſt, about Nine of the Clock at Night, as near as I can gueſs, the Shop was ſhut up, and I let him out.

Mr. Darnell. Where was it?

Eſther King. At the Golden Key in Fleet-ſtreet over againſt Fetter lane End.

Mr. Darnell. What Cloaths had he on?

Eſther King. I cannot tell well, but he had a Cloak on, I do not know what Cloaths he had on beſides.

Mr. Harrifon. Was it Eight or Nine a Clock.

Eſther King. It was near Nine, as near as I can gueſs.

Mr. Darnell. Swear John Sikes the Coachman.
(Which was done.)

Mr. Darnell. Give an Account to the Court, what you know about carrying two Men in your Coach, and how you found Dr. Clenche murdered.

John Sikes. My Lord, on the 4th of January laſt, being Monday, I was at the Play-Houſe, and there I took up a Man and a Woman, and carried them into the City; ſo I brought the Gentleman back again, to the Green Dragon Tavern in Fleet-ſtreet; and then, he ſaid, he would pay me by the hour; he ſaid, that it was but much about nine a Clock. Then I left him, and was driving up the Street towards the Temple, and two Men stood in Fleet-street about Fetter-lane End, and they asked me, if I knew Dr. Clenche, who dwelt in Brownlow-street in Holbourne: I told them, that I did not know Dr. Clenche, but I knew the Street. So they went into my Coach, and one of them bad me drive thither, and I did, and stopt at the Streets End; because the Gate at the other End was shut, so that I could not turn my Coach: And one of them bid me go and tell the Dr. That there were two Gentlemen in a Coach at the Streets End, that would desire him, to go with them, to see one that was not well. The Doctor asked me, if I could tell, Who they were? Or, who it was, that he was to go to? I told him, that I could not tell. The Doctor was in his Night Gown and Slippers, and he dressed himself: And when he came to the Coach, one of them removed from his Place, and gave him the hinder part of the Coach, and told him, That they had a Friend, that was not Well: And one of them bad me Drive to Leaden Hall Market; and when I came about Holbourn Bars, one of them called to me, and asked me, Why I drove so slowly? And bid me drive faster; so I drove fast, and came to Leaden Hall. And then one of them, bid me drive to the Pye Tavern without Aldgate, and there Ordered me to stop. And when I had stopped there, one of them called to me, and told me, that I need not stir out of my Coach Box; but call to the Boy at the Tavern, and ask for one Hunt a Chyrurgeon, which I did do: And when the Boy came to me again, he said, there was no such Man. Then one of them bad me drive back again to Leaden-hall; and in the time I stay-ed there, and turned my Coach, Aldgate was shut; and when I came to the Gate, one of them gave Six Pence to the Watch, and the Gate was opened, and I drove to Leaden-hall Gate. And when I came there, I stopped again, and one of them gave me Half a Crown, and bad me go and buy a Fowl of one Hunt a Poulterer; but after I had gone a little way from the Coach, he called me again, and said, here Coachman, you had as good take another Shilling, and buy a Couple: so I went, and bought a couple of Fowls, but could find no such Poulterer as Hunt, so I bought them of another, and I gave three Shillings for them. And when I came back to the Coach side, I found Dr. Clenche, (as I thought) sitting against the Fore-seat, with his Head against the Cushion: I pull'd him and cried, Master, Master, for I thought he had been in Drink; but I could not get one word from him; and then I went to the Watch, who were near; and when they came, we found him Strangled with a Handkerchief about his Neck, and a Coal in it, plac'd just upon his Wind Pipe, but the other two Men were gone.

L. C. J. Had one of the two Men a Cloak on?

J. Sikes. I cannot remember that.

L. C. J. What kind of Habit had he? Had he black Cloaths on?

J. Sikes. My Lord, I cannot tell justly, what Cloaths he had.

L. C. J. You have heard him speak. What said he?

J. Sikes. My Lord, he never spoke to me; it was the other Man.

Mr. Harrifon. What kind of Man was the other? Was he less than I, or taller?

J. Sykes. He was taller than you, with his own Hair.

Mr. Darnell. Can you be positive, that the Prisoner at the Bar is one of those two Persons?

J. Sykes. My Lord, one of those two Persons, had a Perriwig on, of a Light coloured Hair: And I do verily believe, that the Prisoner at the Bar, is the same Person; I cannot be positive he is one of them, but as near as I can judge of a Man, whom I have seen but once, he is one of them.

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, I desire your Lordship to observe the time, that he took the two Men up, and what time it was they ran out of the Coach.

L. C. J. Coachman, what time was it, that they left your Coach?

J. Sykes. About half an hour past Ten, and it was about a quarter of an hour past Nine, when I took them up.

Mr. Darnell. Pray let's ask the Coachman one thing more. Coachman, Look upon that Handkerchief, do you know it, and where did you see it?

The Handkerchief was produced by the Coroner.

J. Sykes. I do believe that it is the same Handkerchief, that was about Dr. Clenche's Neck, when he was found Murdered.

L. C. J. Call the Coachman again. Hark you, In what Posture did you find Dr. Clenche, when you came back to your Coach?

J. Sykes. My Lord, he was sat in the Bottom of the Coach, leaning on one side, with his head against the Cushion.

L. C. J. Was a Handkerchief then about his Neck?

J. Sykes. Yes, my Lord, I untied this Handkerchief, and this is the same; and here is the Coal that was lapt in it: it was lapt in the middle of it, and it laid just against the Doctor's Wind Pipe.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Rebone and Mr. Marriot.

Who were Sworn.

Mr. Darnell. Mr. Rebone, tell what you know, concerning the Handkerchief, and how you found the Doctor.

He takes the Handkerchief, and looks on it.

Mr. Rebone. This Handkerchief was about the Doctor's Neck, and the Coal in it, and it lay just upon his Wind Pipe, when I saw him Dead in the Coach. The Coachman came to Mr. Marriot's House, and ask'd for a Constable, and we went to the Coach side, and there we found him laying along; and we took him, and carried him to the Bull Inn, and there he was let Blood on the Arms, and the Chyrurgeon took about half a Spoonful of Blood out of his Right Arm; and he was let Blood on the other Arm, but that did but just trickle down, and we could not get him to life again; and we found a Silver Ink horn in his Pocket, and that, and the rest of his things, were secured. That is all I can say to the Matter.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Elianor Ashbolt.

Who was Sworn.

Mr. Darnell. Pray tell my Lord, and the Court, what you know of any Persons you saw in a Coach at Brownlow-street End, that Night Dr. Clenche was Murdered.

Mrs. Ashbolt. May it please your Lordship, I went out of an Errand for one Madam Anwell, a Gentlewoman who Lodges at my Mothers house, house; and coming home again, I saw a Coach stop at Brownlowe-street End, between Nine and Ten a Clock at Night, and the Coachman went to the side of the Coach: And one in the Coach bad him go to Dr. Clenche's, and tell him, That there were two Gentlemen stayed for him in a Coach; and as he went up the Street, he went slowly, and looked back two or three times: Whereupon, one of the Persons leaned out of the Coach, and did Swear at the Coachman to make hast, and I went round the Coach, and could discern Mr. Harrifon's Face; and I stayed, and saw Dr. Clenche go into the Coach, and one of them gave his Place to the Doctor.

Mr. Darnell. Why were you so curious, Mistress, and what did you observe further?

Mrs. Ashbolt. I thought they might give the Coachman a flip. I well observed Mr. Harrifon, but do not know the other Man; there were two Lamps burning; one in Brownlow-street, and the other in Holbourn, over against the End of Brownlow-street; and they lighted quite through the Coach, and the Men pulled themselves backwards, when they saw me look on them; it was that Night that the Doctor was Murdered. I went to Newgate afterwards, Madam Clenche desired me to go and see Mr. Harrifon; and when I came to Newgate, it seems, he was writing Letters, so I staid before I went into the Room; and there were two Men with me, and Mr. Harrifon was talking very loud, said they to me, Who is that speaks now? Why, says I, it is one of the Persons that was in the Coach when Dr. Clenche was Murdered.

L. C. J. Who are those two Men that were with you?

Mrs. Ashbolt. One of them was one Mr. Jones, a Coachmaker in Holbourn, and the other was Madam Clenche's Coachman.

L. C. J. Did you know the Prisoner, when you saw him in Newgate, to be one of them that were in the Coach?

Mrs. Ashbolt. Yes, I did, I knew him to be the same Man, as soon as I saw him, and he changed Countenance as soon as he saw me.

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, this Woman is certainly hired by the Villains that are against me. Pray, ask her, my Lord, Why she did not make a Discovery sooner?

L. C. J. Mistress, What say you to that?

Mrs. Ashbolt. I acquainted Madam Anwell, what I had seen and observed, and she told Madam Clenche, after last Sessions, and then she desired me to go to Newgate, to see Mr. Harrifon, and I went accordingly; and I would have told it to Madam Clenche sooner, but my Mother was loath I should be concerned about such a thing.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, we have some Witnesses who can give your Lordship an Account, that one of our Witnesses, whom I mentioned to your Lordship before, is spirited, or withdrawn from us, by a Gentleman that said he came to him from the Prisoner, and desired him to be kind to the Prisoner, which Witness is since absent, and not be found; his Name was Andrew Bowfell, a Youth, and an Apprentice to one Mr. Tims, a Shoo-maker.

L. C. J. You must prove upon him, that he made him keep away.

Mr. Darnell. Call Barnabas Smith.

Who was Sworn.

Mr. Darnell. Give my Lord, and the Court an Account, what you know of this matter.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, this Andrew Bowfell, which the Council for the King speaks of, was sent to Leaden-Hall-Street, of an Errand, to the Bull-head Ale-house there, and as he was going along, a Gentleman met him, and asked him, if he was not an Evidence against Mr. Harrifon, and being told by the Boy that he was, he desired him to be kind to him, and pull'd out a piece of Money; and offered it him, desiring him to be kind to Mr. Harrifon, upon which the Youth replied, That he owed him nothing, and nothing he would take; then the Gentleman told him, That he would come again another time, and send for him near to his Master's; so the Boy said, and told me: And said further, That if he could have gotten him to have gone to the Bull-head Ale-house, he would have seized him.

Mr. Darnell. What is become of the Boy?

Mr. Smith. Truly, we do not know what is become of him, we never heard of him since the Sixth Day of March last.

Mr. Darnell. Call his Master; Mr. Richard Tims.

Who was Sworn.

Mr. Darnell. Tell my Lord, and the Court, what you know of this matter, and what is become of your Apprentice, Andrew Bowfell.

Mr. Tims. My Lord, he went away from me on the Sixth Day of March last, he was enticed away by three Soldiers that Night, and on the morrow Morning, one of them came and demanded his Coats, Shirts and Neckcloths; says I to him, who sent you, and who is your Captain? and he answered, why, Captain Harris; he huffed and said, That if I would not give him the Cloaths, he would send his Officer; and then I told the Soldier, I would have him before a Justice of the Peace; so he went away, and never came to me again; and I could never hear of my Apprentice since, tho' I have made great Inquiry after him.

L. C. J. Did your Servant tell you of any Money that had been offered him by the before mentioned Gentleman?

Mr. Tims. No, my Lord; he did not tell me, but he told Mr. Smith, the Witness that was last Examined, as he told me.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I desire that Andrew Bowfell's Examinations before Mr. John Brown, the Coroner of London, upon Oath, may be read.

Which being proved by the Coroner, were directed to be read.

Clerk of the Peace Reads. 12. Januarii, 1691.

Andrew Bowfell, Servant to Richard Tims Shooemaker, Sworn and Examined touching the Death of Andrew Clenche Doctor in Physick, deceased; saith, that he, this Informant being sent to Mr. Parker's at the Bull-head Ale-house in Leaden-hall-street, on Monday last was Seven night, being the fourth of this instant January, between the hours of Ten and Eleven of the Clock in the Evening, saw a Coach standing against Leaden-hall Market, and heard some Person that was in the Coach say, make hast. And this Informant says, that according to the best of his remembrance he heard him talk of a Poulterers; and this Informant says, that soon after the Coachman was gone into the Market, this Informant saw two Persons go out of the Coach, one whereof had, as this Informant believes, a black Coat on; and that this Informant saw the same Person as soon as he came out of the Coach sling a Cloak over him, and then both the Persons went through the the Market on the West part. And this Informant saith, that this Informant going to look into the Coach, the Person that had the Cloak on him, cry'd Dam him; and this Informant saith, that he, this Informant, thereupon going away, went to Mr. Parker's, and told them that two Persons had cheated a Coachman, or to that effect.

And, Bowseil being further Examined the 23^d day of January, 1691. touching the Death of Andrew Clenche, saith, that he hath seen Hen. Harrifon, now a Prisoner in Their Majesties Goal of Newgate, and belives he was one of the Persons that came out of the Coach at Leaden-hall, a little after ten of the Clock at Night, on Munday the 4th of this Instant January; and believes he knows him by his Voice. And soon after, this Informant understood that the said Andrew Clenche was murder'd in a Coach, being the same Coach which the said Harrifon, and another Person unknown a little before went out of.

L. C. J. Mr. Harrifon, What have you to say against that which hath been proved against you, what defence can you make?

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, I did attend Dr. Clenche about a Mortgage that was made him by Mrs. Vanwick, and Dr. Clenche did pay one Hundred Pounds, but this Gentlewoman would pay or allow Rowe but Fifteen Pounds, and we did not know how to get the Money from Rowe, so we Petition'd the Lords Commissioners about it, which was above Six Months before Doctor Clenche was Murder'd; and Mr. Fairbeard wonder'd that I would put Doctor Clenche's Name into a Petition with such a Rogue as Rowe; and I do positively say, that I had not seen Doctor Clenche in a Month before, and if Doctor Clenche had died in his Bed, it had been the same thing to me; and, my Lord, Mr. Johnson and I had never any angry words between us; and I have the Report in Chancery which I had from Sir John Hoskins, which I will read, if your Lordship pleases.

L. C. J. Let's see it.

Which was handed to the Lord Chief Justice sitting on the Bench.

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, that is the Original, which if your Lordship pleases to remember, I had Rowe before you twice about it, and it is Rowe that hath been the Rogue, and therefore what occasion had we to be angry with Doctor Clenche?

Then the Report was perus'd by the Lord Chief Justice, and return'd to him.

L. C. J. Mr. Harrifon, this will do you no good, not being to the present purpose, therefore proceed in your defence.

Mr. Harrifon. Now, my Lord, I have some Witnesses to prove where I was at the time that the Coachman says the Murder was done. Cryer, call Thomas Turner a Porter, and Mr. Maccaffee.

Who appeared, but were not Sworn, and Examined apart, at the Request of Mr. Darnell, the Kings and Queens Council.

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, I shall prove by these Witnesses, that I was elsewhere when the Coachman said he took up those two Men, a little after Nine a Clock. Pray Mr. Turner, give an Account to the Court, what time it was I called you to carry my Trunk.

Tho. Turner. My Lord, I was, about Seven of the Clock in the Evening, the 4th Day of January last, at the Two Kings and Key in Fleet-street, over against Salisbury-Court; and I was told, that a Gentleman at Joe's Coffee-house in Salisbury-Court wanted a Porter; and I presently went to him thither, and it was this Mr. Harrifon: and he bad me take up his Trunk, which I did, and carried it to the Two Kings and Key, and he went with me: And he asked me to get some Linnen wash'd for him against the next Day at Noon: and he gave me some Linnen, which I carried to my Wife to Wash for him, and return'd to him again presently; and I went with him from thence, and carry'd his Trunk to his Lodgings in Paul's Church Yard; and when I had deliver'd his Trunk, I left him there; and then it was about Eight of the Clock at Night.

L. C. J. At whose House was it you deliver'd the Trunk?

Thomas Turner. My Lord, it was at Mr. Jones's House in Paul's Church Yard.

L. C. J. And did he stay within?

Thomas Turner. No, my Lord, he went out presently after me.

L. C. J. Were you any where else with him that Night, besides at the places you have mentioned?

Tho. Turner. No, my Lord.

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, I will prove that Mr. Humfston mistakes an Hour.

Mr. Humfston. I cannot mistake an Hour, because the Shop is shut up about Nine a Clock, and it was shut when you came first to my Lodgings.

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, there stands in Court one Thomas Johnson, Apprentice to Mr. Pemmel; he can tell what time a night it was I came to Mr. Humfston's, he let me in; I desire he may be call'd.

Mr. Darnell. Swear Thomas Johnson.
Who was Sworn.

L. C. J. What time of the Night was it that Mr. Harrifon came to speak with Mr. Humfston, on that Night Dr. Clenche was murder'd?

Tho. Johnson. My Lord, on the 4th of January last at Night, Mr. Harrifon came to my Master's House, and knock'd at the Door; and I went to the Door, and open'd it, for I had shut up the Shop; and he ask'd me if Mr. Humfston was within? And I told him, he was: And he came in, and went up to Mr. Humfston's Chamber; and it was then about Nine of the Clock, as near as I can guess.

L. C. J. Where is your Master's House?

Tho. Johnson. My Lord, it is the Golden Key in Fleet-street, over against Fetter-lane end.

Mr. Harrifon. Pray call Adam Maccaffee, Mr. White, Mr. Carden, and John Allen.

Who appear'd. And Mr. Maccaffee stood up.

Mr. Maccaffee. Upon Monday the 4th Day of January last, the Prisoner was at my House, and stay'd from Nine a Clock till past Eleven, and play'd at Cards with one Mr. Baker, and one Mr. White and his Wife; and he stay'd till it had struck Eleven a Clock.

L. C. J. Where is your House, Sir?

Mr. Maccaffee. My House is in Chancery Lane, over against Serjeant's-Inn.

L. C. J. Did he tell you where he had been before?

Mr. Maccaffee. He said, that he had been towards the City, and was very cold.

L. C. J. Did he say any thing of Mr. Humfston?

Mr. Maccaffee. No, my Lord.

Mr.

Mr. Darnell. Pray, what Room were you in?
Did you play at Cards in the Kitchen?

Mr. Maccaffee. Yes.

Mr. Darnell. Where they up Stairs?

Mr. Maccaffee. No, my Lord.

Lord Mayor. At what time a night did they come in?

Mr. Maccaffee. Betwixt Nine and Ten a Clock, my Lord.

L. C. J. What made you take notice of the Day of the Month, and Hour of the Day?

Mr. Maccaffee. My Lord, I heard that Doctor Clenche was murder'd, and that Mr. Harrison was taxed with it; and that made me take notice of the Day.

L. C. J. Call Mrs. Maccaffee. Who stood up.

L. C. J. Mistress what time did Mr. Harrison come to your House on the 4th of January last at Night?

Mrs. Maccaffee. My Lord, it was near Nine a Clock as any thing can be, when he came in first.

L. C. J. How long did he stay there?

Mrs. Maccaffee. I cannot tell how long he stay'd, but there were two Accidents happen'd; one was, our Playing at Cards; and the other was, that there was a Pick-Pocket carried by to be pump'd at Lincolns-Inn; it was from Nine to Eleven before he went away, and there were Mrs. White, Mr. Baker, and one Mrs. Fairleffe.

L. C. J. Did any one come with the Prisoner, to your House; in what Humour did he seem to be?

Mrs. Maccaffee. No, my Lord, there was no one came with him, and he never stirr'd out, neither did he seem to be disorder'd; he was neither too merry, nor too melancholy.

L. C. J. Where did he say he had been?

Mrs. Maccaffee. He said, that he had been in the City.

L. C. J. Did he use to frequent your House?

Mrs. Maccaffee. Formerly he did; but I had not seen him in half a Year before.

Mr. Darnell. How many were there, do you say?

Mrs. Maccaffee. There was one Mrs. Fairleffe, and one Mrs. White, and my self, and my Husband was upon the Bed, and Mr. White came for his Wife about Ten a Clock, to come home.

Mr. Darnell. Do you remember that Mr. Baker was there?

Mrs. Maccaffee. Yes, he was there.

L. C. J. Pray, Mistress, did Mr. Harrison come in, and find them at Cards?

Mrs. Maccaffee. No, we went to Cards, afterwards.

L. C. J. Where was your Husband?

Mrs. Maccaffee. He was upon the Bed in the Kitchen.

L. C. J. Call Mr. Baker. [Who stood up.]

Mr. Baker. This Gentleman the Prisoner, is a Stranger to me; but here is a Letter that he sent me two or three Days afterwards. I came into Mrs. Maccaffee's House about half an Hour after Nine a Clock, with two Women more: Mrs. Maccaffee owed me Money, and I had been in Lincolns-Inn; for I do some Work there for Sir Thomas Cook, and the Women ask'd me to play at Cards; and I said, that I did not care to Play, because I had been abroad, and could not get any Money, which made me out of humour. My Lord, I never saw the Man in my Life before.

L. C. J. Who were they that play'd at Cards?

Mr. Baker. It was one Mrs. Fairleffe, the Woman of the House, and Mr. Harrison, and my self.

L. C. J. Who were together?

Mr. Baker. Mrs. Fairleffe and I, and the Woman of the House and Mr. Harrison the Prisoner, and we play'd for a Penny a Corner, I cannot say any more to it, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long did he stay?

Mr. Baker. I left him there after Ten a Clock, and as I hope for mercy, I never saw him but once before, and I had not known him again, but by a particular Token.

Mr. Harrison. Were there not some Accidents happen'd at that time?

Mr. Baker. Yes, there came a Vintner's Boy to ask for a Woman, one Mrs. Frances, and he was in great haste, and a Pick pocket was carried up the Lane to be Pump'd at Lincolns-Inn Pump.

Mr. Harrison. Call Mrs. Fairleffe, call Mrs. Whipple. [neither of which appear'd]

Call Mr. Sutton. [Who appeared.]

L. C. J. Where do you live, and what is your Name?

Mr. Sutton. My Lord, my Name is Sutton, and I live in Stone custer street.

Mr. Harrison. Mr. Sutton, what time was it that I was coming by, when one Mr. Russel and you were Drinking?

Mr. Sutton. My Lord, it was about Eleven a Clock at Night, at the King's Head-Tavern at Chancery-Lane end.

Mr. Harrison. What had I on, a Cloak and a Muff?

Mr. Sutton. Yes, I think you had a Cloak on.

Mr. Darnell. What time was it before or after Eleven a Clock?

Mr. Sutton. It was about a quarter before Eleven.

Lord Mayor. What day of the Month was it?

Mr. Sutton. It was the fourth of January.

L. C. J. Where was he going, which way went he?

Mr. Sutton. He was going towards Fleet-Bridge, my Lord, and I called after him, but could not make him hear me at first, but afterwards he came to us.

Mr. Harrison. Pray call Mr. Russel.

[who appeared.]

Mr. Russel. I can't hear, my Lord, but if you please to permit Mr. Sutton to speak to me, I can hear his Voice better than any Man's.

L. C. J. Speak as loud as you can, Sir, and we will let you hear us, Mr. Sutton must not speak for you.

Mr. Harrison. Pray Mr. Russel what time of Night was that you saw me go by you, when you were drinking at the King's-Head-Tavern?

Mr. Russel. I can't tell, my Lord, I have not heard a Clock these three years.

L. C. J. Where were you going at that time of Night?

Mr. Russel. I was going to Wild-street, to the Chyrurgeon's-Arms, to Receive some money.

L. C. J. How came Mr. Sutton to go with you?

Mr. Russel. He had been with me all that day, and I desired him to go with me; and, my Lord, I did expect that the money would have been brought to me, but it was not, so I went for it.

L. C. J. Well, and what then?

Mr. Russel. While we staid at the King's-Head-Tavern

Tavern door to drink Wine, Mr. Sutton sent the Drawer to call Mr. Harrifon.

L. C. J. What had you been doing before that time?

Mr. Ruffel. We had (I fuppose) been drinking together.

L. C. J. Where had you been before you came to the King's Head Tavern.

Mr. Ruffel. We had been at the Horfeshoe Tavern in Chancery-Lane.

L. C. J. Did you request Mr. Sutton to go with you?

Mr. Ruffel. Yes, I did, my Lord.

L. C. J. You fay your business was to go to Wild-street, to receive some money?

Mr. Ruffel. Yes, it was, my Lord, and I did receive it.

L. C. J. When was it that you met Mr. Harrifon, the Prisoner?

Mr. Ruffel. My Lord, I can't pofitively fay, but by computation of the Night, I believe it was about Eleven a Clock.

L. C. J. Did you meet Mr. Harrifon before you went to the Horfeshoe-Tavern, or after?

Mr. Ruffel. Afterwards, my Lord, I saw Mr. Harrifon turn at the Corner of Fleet-street, towards Fleet-Bridge.

L. C. J. At the time when Mr. Sutton and you went first out, did you agree of your going to the Horfeshoe-Tavern?

Mr. Ruffel. We went thither to fend for the Gentleman out of Wild-Street.

L. C. J. When you had been Drinking all the Afternoon, how came you to stop your Coach at the King's-Head?

Mr. Ruffel. We ftopt there, whilst Mr. Sutton fent for fome body to come to him.

L. C. J. You fald juft now that Mr. Sutton fent for Mr. Harrifon.

Mr. Ruffel. No, my Lord, I do not remember that, but Mr. Sutton fald Harry, or Harrifon, where art thou going, when he went by us.

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, this Man is a ftranger to me. Call John Allen, Drawer at the King's-Head Tavern. [Who appeared.]

Mr. Harrifon. John Allen, what time of Night was it that Mr. Sutton and Mr. Ruffel came to your Houfe in a Coach?

J. Allen. I believe it was about Eleven a Clock.

L. C. J. How much Wine had they?

J. Allen. Two Half Pints of Canary.

L. C. J. What Night was it? what Day of the Month was it?

J. Allen. My Lord, I can't remember what Day of the Month, but it was that Night that Doctor Clench was murther'd.

L. C. J. Did you fee Mr. Harrifon there?

J. Allen. I can't tell that, I never faw him, till I faw him in Prifon.

Mr. Harrifon. Did not you go to Mr. Maccaffee's Houfe?

J. Allen. Yes, I did.

Mr. Harrifon. Did not one ftrike you with a Muff?

J. Allen. Yes, but I can't remember who it was.

Lord Mayor. Look upon that Man, do you know him to be the Perfon?

J. Allen. No, my Lord, I do not know him to be the Perfon.

Mr. Darnell. Who fent you to Crown-Court?

J. Allen. Mr. Ruffel.

Mr. Darnell. For what?

J. Allen. For a Servant Maid, and he bid me tell her that he had a defire to fpeak with her.

Mr. Darnell. How long did you tarry at the Houfe?

J. Allen. I did not ftay at all.

Mr. Harrifon. Call Mr. Carden, Drawer at the King's-Head Tavern. [Who appeared.]

Mr. Harrifon. What time did Mr. Sutton come to your Houfe, did you fee any one ftand at the Coach fide? and what Cloaths had he on?

Carden. I faw one ftand at the Coach fide, and he had a Hanging-Coat or a Cloak on, it was about the Hour of Eleven, to the beft of my knowledge, and I faw a Man go into the Coach, and come out again.

Mr. Coroner. What time of Night do you fhut your Doors, efpecially on Monday Nights; and were they fhut when Mr. Sutton called in the Coach?

Carden. We fhut them commonly about Eleven a Clock at Night, but on Monday Nights ufually later; they were fhut when Mr. Sutton called, and I opened them for him.

L. C. J. Can you fay that the Prisoner was the Man that drank with Mr. Sutton?

Carden. To the beft of my knowledge (looking on the Prisoner) that is the Man, I can't be pofitive, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more Witneffes?

Mr. Harrifon. No, my Lord, unlefs Mr. Effington be here, he promifed to be here to give an account of me. My Lord, there is a Gentleman that is in the Preff-Yard, one Mr. Butler, I defire he may be fent for, if your Lord- fhip please.

L. C. J. Let him be fetch'd down.
[Which was done.]

L. C. J. But, in the mean time, it behoves you to give an account of thefe things. Firft, why did you fay that you were a Parliament-Man. Secondly, why did you leave your Lodgings and take other Lodgings in Paul's-Church-Yard? Thirdly, why did you fay that you had extraordinary business? Give fome account what your business was, and who that Gentleman was, that ftaid for you in the Street, when Mr. Humfton defired you to ftay and Sup with him, what hinder'd you from accepting his Invitation? Now we would have you to Confider of thefe things, and give an answer to them, for it much concerns you fo to do.

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, firft as to the firft, I do declare that I never went for a Parliament Man, nor never fald fo: Secondly, that Night I was to go out of Town, I had left word at feveral Coffee-Houfes that I was going out of Town upon earneft Business, and with above twenty People besides, that I was going out of Town, and I was about to go to Bafing-Stoke, to a Gentleman that owed me Money, one Mr. Bulling, but I could not get money to go.

L. C. J. Prove that you were to go into the Country.

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, I can't prove that now, except I could have fent to Bafing-Stoke.

L. C. J. That you fhould have done before now; why did you not ftay with Mr. Humfton, when he Invited you to Sup with him? You might have been better entertained there, than by going among ftrangers to Play at Cards for a Penny a Corner, at an Ale-houfe.

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, I was unwilling to ftay, becaufe he had Strangers with him.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What if he had, you are not such a bathful man, that you could not Sup with Strangers.

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, Mr. Rowe was accused with me.

L. C. J. What if he was? he was under some Suspicion, and he hath made it appear where he was at the time the Fact was Committed, and now he is Discharged.

Then Mr. Butler was brought into Court from Newgate, attended by a Keeper.

Mr. Harrifon. Mr. Butler, Pray tell the Court what Mr. Fairbeard said to you about me?

Mr. Butler. My Lord, Mr. Fairbeard asked me what I could say about what Mr. Harrifon had said to me concerning the Murder of Doctor Clenche? I told him I could not tell what to make of his broken and rambling Speeches and Discourses, they being most of them spoken when he was in his Drink. This is all that I know, my Lord.

L. C. J. This is not a Witness for your turn.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs Anwell.

Who was sent for from her Lodgings in Brownlow-Street in Holborn, and appeared, and was Sworn.

Mr. Darnell. Madam, pray give an account what Mrs. Ashbolt told you concerning any Man's being in a Coach at Brownlow-Street end?

Mrs. Anwell. I know nothing of my own Knowledge, but the Night that Doctor Clenche was Murthered, I sent Mrs Ashbolt of an Errand, and at her return, I blam'd her for staying so long; and she told me, that as she was returning home, a Coach stop'd at Brownlow-Street end, with two Men with Cloaks on in it, and that one of them bad the Coachman go for Doctor Clenche, and desire him to come to them, and in his going several times look'd back as if he suspected the men would leave the Coach, and so she stayed until Doctor Clenche came and went into the Coach, and that one of the men gave the Doctor his Place; and that one of them had a fair Perriwig and a sanguine Complexion.

Mr. Darnell. What discourse had you with her when you heard that those men had murdered Doctor Clenche?

Mrs. Anwell. She told me that one of those men had a fair Perriwig and a sanguine Complexion, and that one of them had a Cloak on.

L. C. J. Did she say that she observed either of their Faces?

Mrs. Anwell. Yes, my Lord, she said that one of them had a round Face, and a big Voice.

L. C. J. Did she say, she could know him again?

Mrs. Anwell. No, my Lord, she did not say so, but she said that she could know his Voice again. And after the last Sessions I told Mrs. Clenche of it, and that if she would send for the young Woman, she would inform her further of it.

L. C. J. Madam, Pray what was the reason, that she did not discover it sooner to Mrs. Clenche?

Mrs. Anwell. Why truly because Mrs. Ashbolt, her Mother, was unwilling she should concern her self in such a matter.

Mr. Darnell. Call another Witness, Mr. Jones, Coach-maker. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Harrifon. Pray, my Lord, take notice, that now she says that those Gentlemen had Cloaks on, that came in the Coach to Brownlow-Street-end.

L. C. J. Yes, we heard her what she said.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I will ask this Witness, Mr. Jones, a Question.

Mr. Darnell. Pray Sir, tell my Lord and the Jury, what Mrs. Ashbolt did at Newgate?

Mr. Jones. My Lord, I went with her to Newgate, together with Doctor Clenche his Coachman, and when she came to Newgate, before she saw Mr. Harrifon (only stood at the Chamber Door and heard him speak) she said, that to the best of her Thoughts, he was the Man that put his Head out of the Coach to look after the Coachman, and swore at him, for she knew his Voice. And when she came to see him, she said that she knew his Face, and declared that was the Man that put his Head out of the Coach.

L. C. J. Did he look out of the Coach, Mrs. Ashbolt?

Mrs. Ashbolt. Yes, my Lord, he put his head out of the Coach, and look'd after the Coachman, to see if he went right to Doctor Clenche's Door, and did swear at him, because he went no faster.

L. C. J. How could you discern his Face?

Mrs. Ashbolt. By the Light of two Lamps, that were near, which did shine into the Coach.

L. C. J. Can you take it upon your Oath that the Prisoner is the same Person?

Mrs. Ashbolt. Yes, my Lord, I can both by his Voice and Face.

Mr. Darnell. Now, my Lord, we shall shew your Lordship somewhat in Relation to the Credit of those Witnesses, that the Prisoner hath brought here; particularly, as to Mr. Baker, we shall prove that he hath been convicted for a Cheat. And as for Maccaffee, he keeps a very disorderly House, where ill People commonly resort.

Mr. Darnell. Cryer, call Mrs. Martha Wheelstead, and Mr. Thomas Cole.

L. C. J. Mrs. Jones, what time did Mr. Harrifon come to your House, to his Lodging that Night that the murder was committed?

Mrs. Jones. I think it was about eleven a Clock, or a little before eleven.

L. C. J. What time on the Monday did he hire the Lodging of you?

Mrs. Jones. It was sometime after Dinner.

L. C. J. It was before Night, was it not?

Mrs. Jones. Yes, my Lord, it was before Night.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I desire that Mr. Tanner may read the Record against Mr. Baker, whereby it will appear that he was indicted and convicted at Hicks's-Hall, for cheating the Parish of St. Giles in Middlesex, when he was Scavenger there, by altering the Figures in the Book, and rateing the Sums of Money higher upon divers of the Parishioners, than they were in the Parish Book, and then collecting and extorting the Money, so by him increased, from them.

Mr. Tanner reads the Indictment aforesaid, by which it did appear to the Court, and to the Jury, that the said Mr. Baker was indicted for the Offence aforesaid, and confessed the Indictment, and was fined for it twenty Shillings.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, I was wrongfully indicted, and traversed the Indictment, and was acquitted.

L. C. J. Mr Tanner, give me the Record.

(Lord Chief Justice peruses the Record.)

Mr. Baker, I have read the material parts of the Record, and do find that you were indicted for that Offence, and that you confessed the Indictment, and were fined for it.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, I was acquitted of it, and can prove it by Captain Cannon, who knows me, and my Reputation, and he is in Court.

L. C. J. Mr. Baker, the Record testifieth the Truth, and cannot err, therefore you have great Confidence to aver against it, yet I will hear what Captain Cannon saith.

Mr. Baker. Call Captain Cannon.

(Who appeared.)

L. C. J. Captain Cannon, do you know this Mr. Baker?

Captain Cannon. Yes, my Lord, very well.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I desire that Captain Cannon may be sworn.

L. C. J. Mr. Tanner, swear Captain Cannon.

(Who was sworn.)

L. C. J. Sir, do you know that Mr. Baker was indicted for falsifying of the Scavenger's Book when he was Scavenger, and acquitted or convicted, and what do you know about it?

Captain Cannon. My Lord, I am an Inhabitant of the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields, and so I was when Mr. Baker was Scavenger, and do well remember that some of the Inhabitants of that Division where he was Scavenger, were troubled and complained, that they were charged more than usually they had been to the Scavenger's Rate; and it was discover'd that several Figures of the Book by which Mr. Baker collected the Money to the Scavenger's Rate, were blotted and altered, and did not agree with the Parish Ledger-Book, but the Sums in his Book so blotted and altered were rased; whereupon it was ordered that he should be indicted for it, and it was done accordingly, and he was fined for it, and to the best of my Remembrance he confessed that Indictment.

L. C. J. Captain Cannon, Pray tell the Court and the Jury, of what Reputation Mr. Baker is now.

Captain Cannon. My Lord, he is now of none of the clearest Reputations.

Captain James Partrich, of the same Parish, being in Court, offered himself, and gave the same account of Mr. Baker that Captain Cannon did.

Mr. Darnell. Cryer, call Mr. Francis Brampton, Mrs. Martha Whelstead, and Mr. Thomas Cole.

(And Mrs. Whelstead and Mr. Cole appeared, and were sworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Mrs. Whelstead, pray give the Court and Jury an account what disorderly House Mr. Maccaffee keeps?

Mrs. Whelstead. My Lord, I dwell in Crown-Court in Chancery-lane, over against Mr. Maccaffee's House; and he and she are very ill People; and keep a very evil and scandalous House, and such as are reputed to be House-breakers, Pick-Pockets, and Lewd Women, do use and frequent the House; and there is commonly at late hours in the Night, Persons calling out murder, and Whore and Rogue, and such sort of Language, disturbing their Neighbours; and their House hath been several times searched by several Constables for stolen Goods, and for the Persons that have stolen them; and upon such Searches, there have been stolen Goods found there: And I have seen great Lewdness there between Men and Women; and the Neighbours do account it a House of an ill Fame, and do avoid going thither.

Mr. Tho. Cole. My Lord, I do know Mr. Maccaffee and his Wife; I do dwell over against his House, and they are reputed to keep an ill House, and most Persons that frequent it, are reputed to be Persons of lewd and evil Lives and Conversations; and it is amongst the Neighbourhood noted for a scandalous House, and several Constables have several times searched there for stolen Goods.

L. C. J. What have you more to say, Mr. Harrisson?

Mr. Harrisson. I cannot say any thing more; you may deal with me according to my Deserts in this matter.

L. C. J. You may assure your self, that we will do you no wrong; have you any more to say?

(He made no Reply.)

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, we have another Witness come now, who was not here before: Cryer, call Mr. Charles Whitfield.

(Who was sworn.)

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, this Gentleman can give your Lordship an account what the Prisoner said of his being just come out of the Country, upon the fifth of January last. Pray tell my Lord what you know, Sir.

Mr. Charles Whitfield. My Lord, upon the fifth day of January last, being the Day day after Dr. Clenche was murdered, I went to Joe's Coffee-house in Salisbury-Court, and there Mr. Harrisson, sitting by the Fireside, says I to Mr. Harrisson, where have you been for a long time that I have not seen you? Says he, I have been in the Country: Where says I? Says he, about twenty Miles off, in Kent; and I want a Landress, and a Lodging. Says I, do you hear the News, Sir? What News, says he? Why, said I, of Dr. Clench's being murdered: I cannot tell the Occasion, said I, but he was found dead in a Coach last night in Leadenhall-street. Then, says he, I did love him very well once, but of late he hath been a barbarous Rogue to a Gentlewoman, a Friend of mine, and she is in the Compter now: And Mr. Harrisson said it was a just Judgment of God upon the Doctor for being so great a Villain to the Gentlewoman; therefore I will write to her presently, and give her an account of his Death. And my Lord, the Contents of his Letter were these, as near as I can remember.

Madam,

I Am just now going to Lambeth, but hearing of Dr. Clench's murder, I do hereby give you an account of it, and can impute it to no less than a just Judgment of God upon him for his Baseness shewed to you. And if you think fit to send to Madam Clenche, it may be she may send somewhat towards your Relief, she now being a Widow as well as you.

Madam,

I am yours to command,

Henry Harrisson,

My

My Lord, after this came into the same Coffee-House another Person one Mr. Ravenscroft, of whom Mr. Harrifon asked some Question about Dr. Clenche; who reply'd, That he heard that Dr. Clenche was murdered, and that it was committed by a Bully of the Town that belonged to a Gentlewoman in the Compter who was laid in there upon Dr. Clenche's account; at which, he was much startled: Says he again, There is no Person familiar with that Gentlewoman but my self; for I know, and am concerned in all her Affairs: Perhaps then I may be taken up about it: Or, my Lord, he used Words to that effect.

Mr. Harrifon. My Lord, this Woman was not in the Compter upon Dr. Clenche's account.

L. C. J. No, the Witnels don't say so; but that it was the Discourse of the Town that she was, and the Town did suppose her so to be. What did he say further, Sir?

Mr. Whitfield. My Lord, he said that he had been in Kent about twenty Miles off; and he said, that he wanted a Landress, because he had some foul Linnen to wash; which he produced. This was on the Tuesday, and the Murder was committed on the Monday-night before: And, my Lord, there were two more Gentlemen that heard him as well as I, that he said, That he had been about twenty Miles off in Kent, and that he was newly come to Town. Now, my Lord, I could not imagine for what Reason this Man should say, that he had been out of Town about a Fortnight or three Weeks, when he was in that House but the Monday night before; that is, the Night the Murder was committed.

Mr. Darnell. Cryer, call Mr. Bishop.

(Who appeared and was sworn.)

Mr. Bishop. About three Years ago the Prisoner came to my Master's Shop to cheapen some Linnen, and when —

L. C. J. Hold, what are you doing now? Are you going to arraign his whole Life? Away, away, that ought not to be; that is nothing to the matter. Have you done, Prisoner?

Mr. Harrifon. Yes, my Lord, I have done, I refer my Cause to your Lordship.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury; The Prisoner at the Bar, Henry Harrifon, stands indicted for the wilful murder of Dr. Andrew Clenche, who was barbarously murdered on the fourth day of January last: You have heard the Witneses that have been sworn; and upon their Testimony, it doth appear that two Persons came to Brownlow-street End in a Coach after nine a Clock at Night, and sent the Coachman to the Doctor's House, under pretence to get him to a Patient, a Friend of theirs, that was sick. By this Contrivance, they got him into their Coach, which they had brought for that purpose, and then they ordered the Coachman to drive to Leadenball-street; and when they came about Holbourn-Bars, one of them ask'd the Coachman why he drove so slow, and bad him drive faster. When they came to Leadenball-street, then they bad him drive to the Pye-Tavern without Aldgate; where one of them bad the Coachman ask for one Hunt; but he not being there, one of them bad the Coachman return back, and gave six Pence to the Watch to come through the Gate, which was shut in the mean time; and when they came to Leadenball-Market, one of them gave the Coachman three Shillings and six Pence, and sent him to buy a couple of Fowls; which the Coachman did buy, and brought them to the Coach; but when he came back, he found the Doctor in the body of the Coach leaning against the fore Seat of the Coach, a Handkerchief being tied about his Neck with a Coal in it, placed upon his Wind-pipe; which Handkerchief and Coal have been produced in Court.

The Question is, Gentlemen, Whether the Prisoner at the Bar be guilty of this base and barbarous Murder? To prove which, there hath been a very long Evidence given, some Positive, some Circumstantial. It has been proved that Dr. Clenche had some Dealings with a Woman named Vanwicke, and had lent her one hundred and twenty Pounds, and had taken a Mortgage for it. This Prisoner, Mr. Harrifon, was a great Acquaintance, and very intimate with this Woman; and did concern himself in the Management of her Affairs: and because Dr. Clenche did refuse to lend the Woman more Money, therefore he had an Animosity against Dr. Clenche. The Money not being paid to the Doctor as he did expect, he did call it in; and therefore this Gentlewoman did oftentimes repair to Dr. Clenche to desire farther Time or Forbearance, because she could not raise or procure the Money elsewhere. That about Michaelmas last it seems she came to a Coffee-house near Watwick-house in Holborn, and there was Mr. Harrifon; where they consulted what to do. And it was agreed, that the Mistress of the House and Mrs. Vanwicke should go to Dr. Clenche's; but Mr. Harrifon should stay behind, for it was not thought convenient that he should go, lest he should provoke the Doctor. When they came to the Doctor, Mrs. Vanwicke was very importunate to have more Money; but the Doctor would lend her no more. And when they returned to the Coffee-House again, Mr. Harrifon enquired what passed between the Doctor and Mrs. Vanwicke. She told him, that the Doctor would not furnish her with any more Money, although she had pressed him to do it, and urged her great Necessities, but advised her to go to Service. Damn him, says Harrifon, does he say that a Woman of your Quality should go to Service? He is a great Rogue, and deserves to have his Throat cut, but let me alone, I will manage him.

At another place there was a Discourse betwixt Mr. Harrifon and one Mr. Johnson; and that the Prisoner did then speak very hard and ill Words of Dr. Clenche: And that Mr. Harrifon came frequently to him; and one time laid his hand upon his Sword, using some menacing Words, but what they were he cannot tell: But he likewise says, that at several times he did expostulate with him, and told him, That he would not do any good with such Discourses as these are, &c. That the Mortgage-money not being paid, it was thought fit, That there should be a Prosecution made to get Possession of the mortgaged Estate, and that the Tenants should be forbid to pay their Rents. And Mr. Harrifon went to Mrs. West the Tenant, some few days before St. Thomas's Day last, and demanded the Rent of her. To which she made answer, That Dr. Clenche had forbid the Payment of the Rent to Mrs. Vanwicke. Thereupon Mr. Harrifon grew very angry, and answered, That Dr. Clenche was a Rogue and a Villain, and bid her that she should not pay him any Rent. And the Witness saith further, That the Doctor being prest to let her have some more Money, refused to do it, because she would spend it all upon Harrison.

Then the Council for the King called some Witnesses, who gave you account of the Prisoner's shifting his Lodgings the day before the murder was done. He takes a Lodging at Mr. Garway's in Threadneedle street, on the twenty third day of December, and there he continued till about the first of January. The second of January he was at Garway's Shop; and on the Sunday night he came and fetcht away his Things. The Monday after, being the day that this barbarous Fact was committed, he sent a Letter to Mrs. Garway, to acquaint her that he was gone out of Town; but he left three Half Crowns with her Maid to pay for his Lodging. But as to his going out of Town, it was false, for he never went into the Country, but took a Lodging at Mr. Jones's in St. Paul's Church yard. It's observable also, that he went for a Parliament-man when he lodged at Mr. Garway's, and had his Footman to attend upon him, &c. There it was that he was seen to have an ordinary Handkerchief, and to hold it to the Fire; which was taken notice of by Mrs. Jackson, the Daughter of Mrs. Garway, which was not suitable, as she thought, to a Parliament-man's Quality, but rather fit for a Seaman, for it was like the Apron of the Maid in the House: which hath been shewed in Court, and compared with the Handkerchief that was tied about Dr. Clenche's Neck. She saith it is the same, or very like that which she did see Mr. Harrison hold in his hand.

Cartwright the Officer at the Compter, he tells you, that the Sunday night, the day before the murder, Mr. Harrison came to Woodstreet Compter, and enquired for Mrs. Vanwicke, and that he only was in her Chamber, and no other Body on that side of the House but Mrs. Vanwicke, the Prisoner, and this Cartwright the Keeper, who stood at the Door, and heard Harrison say, That he would have the Blood of that Rogue, and named Clenche or Winch.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, he was not in the Room.

L. C. J. No, he was not; but there were none on that side the House but you, Cartwright, and Mrs. Vanwicke.

Now, on the Monday on which this Fact was committed, he having taken a Lodging at Jones his House, he came thither with a Porter, who brought his Portmantua-Trunk about eight a Clock at night; and after he had been there a little while, he went away.

And you are told, by a Gentleman that lodges at the Golden-Key against Fetter-lane end; That he had some Acquaintance with the Prisoner, that he had lent him a Morning-Gown; and that about nine a Clock that very night, he came to his Lodging in a Cloak; and then the Gentleman asked him for his Gown; and he told him, that he had brought it with him. Thereupon the Gentleman invites Mr. Harrison to stay and sup with him. Mr. Harrison said, he could not stay, for he was engaged; he must be gone, for that a Gentleman staid in the Street for him to go about extraordinary Business.

The Coachman tells you, That near about that time two Men in Fleet street, near Fetter-lane end, hired his Coach of him to go to Brownlow- street to Dr. Clenche's; but he can't positively say, that the Prisoner at the Bar was one of them, but he swears, he does verily believe that he was one of them.

Mr. Harrison. He said before your Lordship, That he could not remember what I had on.

L. C. J. Well, well, he doth not remember it now; but being hired to go to Dr. Clenche's, he drove to the Street end and no further, because the Gate at the lower end was shut up, and he could not turn his Coach in the Street; but he was sent by them to the Doctor's, to desire the Doctor to come out to them, and they sat in the Coach in the mean time. The Doctor made haste, and went to them immediately, and they drove away to Leaden-hall, and then to Aldgate; and they called at the Pj Tavern, and enquired for one Mr. Hunt a Chirurgeon, as I mentioned to you before: He not being there, they returned to drive through Aldgate, gave the Watch sixpence, and passed through the Gate without any manner of notice taken: but if the Watch had done their Duty, it might have been better discovered. But further, the Coachman tells you, that when he came to Leaden hall Street, they called to him, and directed him to buy one Fowl; and after that he had been gone a little way from the Coach, they called him back, and bad him take some more Money and buy two Fowls. So he went and bought the Fowls; but when he came back, the two Gentlemen were gone, and he found the Doctor still in the Coach; and he not stirring, he thought he had been in Drink: but upon further Examination, and calling the Watchman with his Candle, it appeared that the Doctor was strangled with a Handkerchief and a Coal.

There is one Mrs. Elianor Ashbolt, who lives in Brownlow street with her Mother, and had been sent of an Errand; and between nine and ten of the Clock at Night, she saw the Coachman in Brownlow street, and thought that those men in the Coach might have put a Trick upon him, by going away without paying him his Fare. And she says further, That by the help of the Lamps she did discern the Face of this Harrison in the Coach; he had a Cloak on, with a light Perriwig, and looked out of the Coach, and did swear at the Coachman; and by this means she knew him when she saw him again, to be the same Man, both by his Face and Voice. This Woman indeed was not before the Coroner, and she gives you this reason for it, because her Mother was not willing she should be concerned in such a matter as this was; and what she could say, was not known to Mrs. Clenche until after the second Sessions: And when he was in Newgate, she saw him there, and declared he was the same Man.

There was another piece of Evidence. viz. That of the Boy's, who does not appear, he was examined before the Coroner. There has been Evidence given of ill practice to take him out of the way, and therefore his Affidavit is read for Evidence: He swears he saw two Gentlemen come out of the Coach when it stood in Leaden hall street, and that having seen the Prisoner in Newgate since, doth believe him to be one. This, Gentlemen, is the sum and substance of the Evidence for the King, to prove that the Prisoner was one of those that committed the Murder.

You have heard likewise what the Prisoner says for himself; he does undertake to prove that he was in another place, (that is) that he should come into Maccaffee's House in Crown-Court over against Serjeants-Inn in Chancery-lane: and Maccaffee, he tells you, that there were some other Company there, and that Harrifon came in very cold, and that they went to Cards, and plaid for one Penny a Corner at Whisk; and that he did continue there from nine till eleven a Clock; and if he was there then, it is impossible he should be guilty of this Fact, for the Fact was done between the same Hours.

Maccaffee's Wife tells you the same, and they both tell you who were there besides, and who plaid together, and are positive that the Prisoner was there.

Baker says, That he went away about half an hour after ten at Night, and left Harrifon behind him. To confirm this Evidence, they have called two other Witnesses besides the Drawers at the King's-Head Tavern, viz. Mr. Sutton the Surgeon, who lives in Stone-Cutter's street, and Mr. Ruffel: Mr. Sutton says, they had been at the Horse-Shoe-Tavern in Chancery-lane, and called for half a Pint of Sack at the King's-Head-Tavern when they came by: and as they sat in the Coach, Mr. Harrifon came by accidentally, and one of them looking out of the Coach, cries Harry, or Harrifon; and he went to them, and they drank together another half Pint of Sack.

As to their meeting with Harrifon, and as to other Passages there, Ruffel says the same; but as to the time of night he is not positive. And they sent one of the Drawers to a House in Crown Court to enquire for some body there.

The Drawers of the King's-Head-Tavern, say, That Mr. Sutton and Mr. Ruffel did call there about that time; and that they drank two half Pints of Wine: and that when they were drinking, a Man came by with a Hanging-Coat or Cloak on, and drank with them. And one of the Drawers went to call some Body in Crown-Court; and one of the Company up with his Muff and gave him a slap in the Face.

Now this is the Sum and Substance of the Evidence that you have heard on the behalf of the Prisoner, to induce you to believe that he was not the Person that was concerned in the Murder of Doctor Clenche.

To which Evidence an answer hath been offered;

First, As to those Witnesses, Maccaffee and his Wife, divers Witnesses have been produced to prove, that they are People of doubtful Credit; it seems they keep an House of ill Fame.

Mr. Harrifon. I am glad, my Lord, that I was there.

L. C. J. Well, well. Gentlemen, the People of the House are not of very good Reputation, they keep a naughty and a disorderly House, (if you believe the Witnesses) you may consider of their Credit.

And as to Mr. Baker; about nine Years since he was convicted of an arrant Cheat, which is no less than Forgery, for altering the Scavenger's Rate for St. Giles's Parish, and therefore the less Credit is to be given to his Evidence; for now it appears that he is a Knave upon Record: and the very Record it self was produced against him, which is true without doubt, notwithstanding his pretence of Innocency. What is said by

Mr. Ruffel and Mr. Sutton, I must leave to your Consideration; they had been a drinking, and the Drawer says they were at the King's-Head Tavern at eleven of the Clock at Night. Mr. Harrifon the next day after the Murder, met a Gentleman at Joe's Coffee-House in Salisbury-Court; and though he had taken a Lodging in Paul's Church-Yard, yet he said that he was newly come to Town, and had been in Kent, and had remained there about three Weeks; and that he wanted a Laundress and a Lodging, although he had not been out of Town, and had taken a Lodging but the day before: And then he told the Witness who discoursed with him about the Death of Dr. Clenche, That he had formerly loved him, but he said he had been of late a barbarous Rogue to a poor Gentlewoman a Friend of his; and that the just Judgment of God had fallen upon him for so doing, and that he would write to her to give her an account of it; and advise her to write to Mrs. Clenche, and to tell her that she was a Widow now as well as Mrs. Vanwicke; and he thought by that means to move Mrs. Clenche to pity her, being a Widow as well as her self: And that whilst they were talking thus, one Mr. Ravenscroft tells him, that Dr. Clenche was murdered, and that a Bully of the Town, that belonged to a Gentlewoman in the Compter, one Mrs. Vanwicke, was suspected. At which Mr. Harrifon was much startled, and said, That no one was concerned with that Gentlewoman but himself; and for ought he knew, he might be taken up for it. This is that which he said.

Now what said Mr. Harrifon farther for himself? Why, says he, this Gentlewoman is not in Prison at the Prosecution of Dr. Clenche, and was not so affirmed, but so reported; and whether it were so or no is no great matter. Gentlemen, you ought to consider of the Evidence that you have heard against him, and also to weigh well the Evidence he hath brought for himself.

It is most plain, if you believe the Witnesses, that Mr. Harrifon was concerned for this Woman Vanwick, and hath threatened Dr. Clenche, called him Rogue and Rascal, and said, that he deserved to have his Throat cut; that Harrifon went under a Disguise for some time before the Murder. You have had an Account of the Handkerchief, what kind of Handkerchief Harrifon had, and what Handkerchief was taken about Dr. Clenche's Neck, you have seen: And you heard what Evidence was given by Mr. Humston; how the Prisoner was with him about nine a Clock that Night; and how he refused to stay and sup with Mr. Humston. If Mr. Harrifon had no earnest business, one would have thought he might have staid with Mr. Humston better than to have gone to an Ale-House in Crown-Court, and plaid at Cards at one Penny a piece a Corner; he might have had better Fare no doubt.

The Witnesses for the Prisoner say for him; That he came to Maccaffee's House about 9 a Clock at night, and staid till eleven: That is contrary to that Evidence given for the King, viz. That he was in the Coach at Brownlow-street End; for if he was at Maccaffee's House all the time they mention, it is impossible he should be guilty. All these things are under your serious Consideration. You had best go together, and if you are not satisfied upon the Evidence you have heard, that he is guilty, then you ought to acquit him; but if you are satisfied that he did not commit this Murder, then you ought not to find him guilty.

Then the Jury withdrew, and the Court adjourned for half an hour; and when they were returned, the Jury came to give their Verdict; and being called over, answered to their Names; and Mr. Harrison was brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Arraign. Gentlemen, Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. — Yes.

Cl. of Arraign. Who shall say for you?

Jury. — Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arraign. Henry Harrison, Hold up thy Hand.

[Which he did.]

Look upon the Prisoner; How say you? Is he guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty of wilful Murder.

Cl. of Arraign. What Goods or Chattels? &c.

Foreman. None that we know of.

Major Richardson Look to him, he is found guilty of wilful Murder.

Cl. of Arraign. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court hath recorded it.

You say that Henry Harrison is guilty of the Felony and Murder, whereof he stands indicted, but that he had no Lands, nor Tenements, Goods nor Chattels, at the time of the Felony and Murder committed, nor at any time since to your Knowledge: and so you say all?

Jury. — Yes.

Then the Prisoner was remanded to Newgate untill the last Day of the Sessions, and then he was brought to the Bar to receive Sentence of Death.

Cl. of Arraign. Henry Harrison, Hold up thy Hand.

[Which he did.]

Henry Harrison, You stand convicted of Felony and Murder, for the Murder of Dr. Andrew Clench: What can you say for your self why Judgment should not be given against you, to die according to Law?

Mr. D. Recorder. Mr. Harrison, You have been Indicted, Arraign'd and Convicted of Felony and Murder, for the Murder of Dr. Andrew Clenche. You have had a long, and a fair and favourable Tryal, as any Person that ever hath been Tried at this Bar.

The Jury that has passed upon your Life and Death hath Convicted you, and the Court are now ready to do their last Act, which is to pronounce that Sentence that the Law does inflict upon such Crimes as you stand Convicted of.

Mr. Harrison. I expect no Mercy here, therefore I humbly desire you would interceed to the Queen, that I may have twelve Days allowed me, in order to my better Preparation for Death.

Mr. D. Recorder. — Well.

Mr. Harrison. I must needs acknowledg, that I was Tried before the best of Judges, my Lord-Chief-Justice Holt, but one thing I think strange, that my Witnesses should be examin'd singly, and not the King's.

Mr. D. Recorder. That is no more than what is usual, the Council for the King and Queen requested it, and you did not.

Mr. Harrison. I beg'd that I might have timely notice of my Tryal, and I had not; there were seven People in my Company at that time when this black and bloody Murder was done, and I could not get them to be here.

Mr. D. Recorder. You have had a long time to get them ready, and you pressed on your own Tryal, which you should not have done if you had not been ready.

Mr. Harrison. I humbly submit.

Then the usual Sentence of Death was pronounc'd against him, and he was Remanded to Newgate.

The Examination of Henry Harrison this 6th. Day of January, 1691.

THIS Examinant being ask'd where his Lodgings are, answereth, That he Lodgeth at the Golden-Ball in Paul's Church-Yard, and came to Lodge there on Monday Night about Eleven of the Clock or half an hour after, but took the Lodgings in the Morning, the Master of the House being one Mr. Jones a Cane-Chair-Seller; and before that time this Examinant lodged at the Hand and Apple near the Exchange, which said Lodging he left on Saturday last in the Morning, and paid for them on Sunday Afternoon. And this Examinant saith, That on Saturday Night last he lodg'd at the White Balcony in Old Southampton-Buildings, the Mistress of the House being one Mistress Pitts: And this Examinant Lodged there on Sunday Night also. And this Examinant saith, That he was at the King's Head in Crown-Court in Chancery-Lane upon Monday last, from between Seven and Eight of the Clock at Night, and stayed there until Eleven, playing at Cards with the Man and Woman of the House, and other Persons unknown. And being ask'd where he Dined on Monday, and how he spent his Time on Monday in the Afternoon, he saith, he cannot give an Account. And this Examinant saith, that on Tuesday last Mr. Hartly of Old Southampton-Buildings, discoursing concerning the Murder of Doctor Clench, said, That this Examinant was suspected to be guilty of that Murder. And this Examinant further saith, That he wore the same Cloaths he hath now on upon Monday last, and hath worn them a great while having no other Clothes to wear.

The Tryal of John Cole, 4 W. & M.

At the Sessions of Goal-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London, at Justice-Hall in the Old-Bayly, on the 31st day of August, and on the first and second days of September, in the Fourth Year of their Majesties Reign.

Judges present { Mr. Justice Dolben, and
Mr. Justice Powel.

THe Keeper of Newgate did, according to Order of the Court being fate, on Friday the 2d day of September, bring up the Body of John Cole to the Sessions House in the Old-Bayly, London; who being at the Bar, was Arraigned upon an Indictment of Felony and Murther, found against him by the Grand-Jury of the City of London, for the Murther of Dr. Andrew Clenche.

Cl. of Arraignment.

Obn Cole, hold up thy Hand.

(Which he did.)

You stand indicted by the Name of John Cole, of London, Labourer, for the Murther of Dr. Andrew Clenche, &c. and the Indictment is in such manner as that against Mr. Henry Harrison.

How say you, John Cole, are you guilty of the Felony and Murther whereof you stand indicted, or not guilty?

John Cole. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprist. How will you be tryed?

John Cole. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God send you a good Deliverance.

And afterwards the said John Cole was brought to the Bar upon his Tryal; and those Persons who were returned upon the Jury, were called over twice, and their Appearances recorded.

Cl. of Ar. You, John Cole, These Men that you shall hear call'd, and personally do appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, and you upon Tryal of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they be Sworn.

Then the Jury were call'd and Sworn, and then were counted; and the Twelve Sworn were these whose names follow.

John Clay
Edward Sherlock
John Ruddyer
Benj. Evans
George Bestow
Archibauld Wilson

{ Cuthbert Lee
Thomas Watson
Thomas Milburne
Thomas Applebury
Nicholas Harris
Ralph Cates.

Then Proclamation was made for Information and Evidence as usual.

Cl. of Ar. John Cole, Hold up thy Hand.
(Which he did.)

Gentlemen, You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of John Cole, late of London, Labourer, &c. as in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded not guilty; and for his Tryal hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether he be guilty of this Felony and Murther whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty. If you find that he is guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the time of the Felony and Murther committed, or at any time since. If you find him not guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels as if you found him guilty; if you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, Call Mary Milward, Joseph Dudley, John Dudley, Jane Warren, Sarah Dudley, Anne Gunn, Anne Giffon, Anne Warren, Elizabeth Harper, Mary Edwards, John Gamble, John Sikes, Robert Rebone, Richard Eades, Richard Marriot, Samuel Revet, Henry Milward, Squire Dalley, William Brown, Francis Hobbs. Who were all sworn.

Cl. of Ar. Set Mary Milward up.

Mr. Justice Dolben. What have you to say, Woman, against Cole the Prisoner, concerning the Murther of Dr. Clenche?

Mrs. Milward. My Lord, my Husband declar'd to me, that he and Mr. Cole were in the Coach with Dr. Clenche, and that they two kill'd Dr. Clenche.

Mr. Justice Dolben. That's no Evidence at all what your Husband told you; that won't be good Evidence if you don't know somewhat of your own Knowledge.

Mrs. Milward. My Lord, I have a great deal more that my Husband told me, to declare.

Mr. Justice Dolben. That won't do; what if your Husband had told you that I kill'd Dr. Clenche, what then? That will stand for no Evidence in Law: We ought by the Law to have no Man call'd in question, but upon very good Grounds and good Evidence, upon Oath, and that upon the Verdict of Twelve good Men. Have

Have you any body that can prove any thing against Cole, or does it all arise barely from your Husband's Report?

Mrs. Milward. My Husband declared that he and Mr. Cole were to go under a pretence to rob the Doctor, and so to take their Opportunity to kill him; and the first time they call'd at Doctor Clenche's, he was not within, but the second time they went he was within, and then they did the Murther.

Mr. Just. Powell. When dy'd your Husband Mistrils?

Mrs. Milward. The 23^d of May last, Sir,

Mr. Just. Dolben. Here hath been two or three Sessions since that time, why did not you take up Cole about it before now?

Mrs. Milward. I did not know where to find him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Why, then you should have gone to a Magistrate, and told him of it, and taken some advice about it.

Mrs. Milward. I did as soon as I had found Mr. Cole

Mr. Just. Dolben. Your business had been to have discover'd this to Mrs. Clenche, and she should have look'd after Cole; is Mrs. Clenche here?

Sir William Ashurst. Here is her Brother-in-Law.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Do you prosecute Cole upon this Indictment?

Mr. Wise. No, my Lord, I do not. Mrs. Milward is the Prosecutor, and she charged Mr. Cole with the Murther of my Brother Dr. Clenche; and she told my Sister Clenche, that Mr. Milward her Husband confessed and said sometime before his Death, that he and Mr. Cole murder'd Dr. Clenche in a Coach; and Mrs. Milward said, That she had sufficient Evidence against Mr. Cole for it, and my Sister Clenche told Mrs. Milward that Mr. Harrison murder'd Doctor Clenche in a Coach, together with another Person, which my Sister Clenche said, she believed was the said Mr. Milward, Husband of the said Mrs. Milward; and that she had a Warrant against him, the said Mr. Milward, upon Suspicion for it, but could not take him, and that she suspected that there were other Persons contrivers or concerned in it; who were set down at the Blue-Boars-Head Ale-House near Clements Inn, by Mr. Gamble a Coachman out of his Coach, together with the said Mr. Milward in their return from Dr. Clenche's House that Night he was murder'd; and my Lord, by my Sister Clenche's Order, I went with Mrs. Milward to all her Witnesses, and took Notes of their Evidence, and I went with several of them to my Lord Chief Justice Holt's Chamber, before whom they gave in their Informations upon Oath about it, and when I had done it, I told Mrs. Milward I could find no Evidence that she had against Mr. Cole, more than that he was at Dr. Clenche's House, and at the said Blue-Boars-Head Ale-house with Mr. Milward, and another Person, that night Dr. Clenche was murdered, and so he might be concern'd in the contrivance of it; whereupon Mrs. Milward was dissatisfied, and said, she was not able to Prosecute him for it; so my Sister said to Mrs. Milward, that she might if she would prefer an Indictment against him for it, and that she would pay for it, and other Charges about it, which she did; and Mrs. Milward hath a Note of the Names of all her Witnesses, and may call them.

Sir Rob. Clayton. Did not you lie at Cole's House, Mistress?

Mrs. Milward. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Why did not you take him then?

Mrs. Milward. Because he absconded himself, and gave out that he was gone to Sea.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was there no Quarrel betwixt Cole and you about your Goods?

Mrs. Milward. No, my Lord, I had no Quarrel with him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Because you did not do it sooner, have you not been troubled with your Husbands Ghost? Tell the Jury the Story; we have heard on't, but I am afraid they will Laugh at you.

Mrs. Milward. That was very true, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Well if you have any thing else to say, that is material, speak: otherwise my Brother and I are of Opinion, that what you have already offer'd is no Evidence.

Mrs. Milward. My Lord, here is a Coachman or two, that can acquaint your Lordship of the matter of Fact, better than I can.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, call John Gamble the Coachman. (Who stood up.)

Mr. Just. Dolben. You, Coachman, do you know the Prisoner?

Mr. Gamble. No, my Lord, I do not know him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Look upon him, do you know him or no?

Mr. Gamble. No truly, my Lord, I do not know him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Why! Look you, Woman, he does not know him; you Coachman, the Story is well known, therefore I ask you again upon your Oath, if that Prisoner at the Bar be one of the three Persons, that you carried to the Blue-Boar's-Head on the back-side of St. Clements, that Night Dr. Clenche was murder'd.

Mr. Gamble. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot be positive whether he be one of them or no. I took up in Cheapside three Men into my Coach, and set one of them down at Grays-Inn, and drove the other two to Dr. Clenche's House that Night he was murder'd, and he was not at home, and afterwards the Man I had set down, came in again, and I set them all down at the Blue-Boar's-Head Ale house near Clement's-Inn-Gate, about Eight a Clock at Night.

Cl. of Ar. Set up William Brown, Servant at the Blue Boars Head.

Mr. J. Dolben. Hark you, is this one of the three Men that the Coachman set down at your Master's House that night Dr. Clenche was murder'd?

Will. Brown. Yes, my Lord, it is.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What time did they come to your House?

Will. Brown. They came about Eight a Clock at Night, and this Man and the other stay'd till after a Eleven a Clock; only Milward went out and returned presently, and then immediately he went out again, which was before Nine a Clock, and return'd not until Eleven a Clock after.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What time was Dr. Clenche kill'd?

Will. Brown. About Ten a Clock, or betwixt Ten and Eleven as I think.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Who went out first, only Milward?

Will. Brown. Only Mr. Milward, my Lord, but this Man stay'd all the time, till Eleven a Clock at Night, and another who went by the Name of Harper, as I am since informed.

Mr.

Mr. J. Dolben. Why then this Man could not be in the Coach when Dr. Clenche was Murdred, so Harrison and Milward kill'd the Doctor in all probability, for he says, this Man at the Bar, and another, stay'd at his Masters House till after Eleven a Clock.

Will. Brown. My Lord, when Milward came back he brought a Couple of Men with him in Soldiers Habit about Eleven of the Clock at Night.

Mrs. Milward. My Husband told me, that Mr. Cole and he went out of the House, and left Mr. Harper behind.

Mr. J. Dolben. But this Man Swears, that the Prisoner did not go out of the House till Eleven a Clock at Night, and they were set down about Eight of the Clock, and Dr. Clenche was found kill'd a little after Ten at Night, and that Milward went out, and then came in again about Eleven a Clock, and brought two men with him; 'tis to be fear'd he had been killing Dr. Clenche in that time; have you any more to say? If this man says true, nothing can be said more.

Mrs. Milward. Speak what was done, when they came to drink the Pot of Ale, Mr. Brown.

Mr. J. Dolben. I would fain know, Mistress, who set you upon this business? Is there not some Money promis'd you? It was not the fear of your Husband's Ghost that put you upon it, I am afraid.

Mrs. Milward. I am much wronged, my Lord, I know nothing of any Money offer'd me.

Mr. J. Dolben. What say you more?

Will. Brown. My Lord, Mr. Milward being at my Master's House that Night Dr. Clenche was kill'd; desired me to make a Fire in the same Room the next morning, and that he would come again then; and I made a Fire accordingly, but he came not then, nor afterwards at any time to my knowledge, but on a Sunday Night about a Fortnight after came the Two Persons, that came with Mr. Milward in the Coach to my Masters House that Night Dr. Clenche was Murdred, and my Master being above stairs, I sent him word, that the Two men were there who were there that Night that the Doctor was Murdred, and they Inquired for Mr. Milward, saying he promised to meet them there, and he not being there, before my Master could come down, they paid for the Pot of Drink and went away.

Mr. J. Dolben. When they came together to the Blue-Boar's-head they had some evil design, no doubt, but if it be true that those Two men staid from Eight a Clock till Eleven, then it could not be this Man that Murder'd Dr. Clenche; but hark ye, Fellow, you say, there were Three Persons, whereof Cole was one, and Milward the other, who was the Third?

Will. Brown. I do not know his Name, my Lord, otherwise than as I have since heard.

Mrs. Milward. The other Man's Name was Harper.

Mr. J. Dolben. You know nothing but what your Husband told you, and 'tis most probable that Harrison and he did the Murder, for that it appears that the Prisoner at the Bar is not the Man that Kill'd the Doctor, that's plain. Have you any more?

Mrs. Milward. About a Fortnight after the Murder was done, they came to inquire for my Husband at the Blue Boar's-head, and whilst the Tapster went to tell his Master, they left their Money for the Drink and went away, and would not be seen.

Mr. J. Dolben. What if they had run away, what then? If they were at the Blue Boar when Dr. Clenche was Kill'd, they could not Kill him.

Mrs. Milward. His Master says, that they were in the House, and out of the House, very often. Call Mr. Dalley the Master. Who appear'd and stood up.

Mr. Dalley. My Lord, Two of them were not out of the House all the Night, I am not positive that this is the Man that came in with Milward, but those Two Men that came in with him, never went out at all until after Eleven a Clock at Night, but only Milward went out between Eight and Nine, and returned about Eleven a Clock.

Mr. J. Dolben. What do you say to this, Woman? your Husband told you that the Prisoner was one of the Two, this Witness cannot say he was one, but says positively those Two men never went out till Eleven a Clock, and from Sr. Clement Danes to Leaden ball street is not to go in and out, they must take a great deal of time to go thither and back again. Hark you, Mr. Dalley, you say that those Two men that Milward left, never went out of your House till after Eleven a Clock, you are sure on't.

Mr. Dalley. No, my Lord, they did not go out.

Mr. Wife. Mrs. Milward hath two Witnesses that can tell somewhat more of the matter, concerning her Husband's being concern'd in the Murder.

Mrs. Milward. My Husband told me, that the Coach-man took them up not far from Chancery Lane end, and that Mr. Cole laid hands upon the Dr. in the middle of Holbourn.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, Call John Sykes the Coachman; who stood up.

Mr. Sykes. My Lord, I took up Two men in Fleet Street, about Fetter Lane end.

Mr. J. Dolben. What manner of men were they? What Cloths had they on?

Mr. Sykes. My Lord, one of them had a Light Coloured Periwig on, and the other was in Sad Colour'd Cloths, and Lank Hair, but I cannot be positive that this is one of them; They Asked me if I knew Dr. Clenche of Brownlow street? I told them, that I did not know the Dr. but I knew the Street; and they bid me Drive thither; and when I came to the Street's end, they sent me to the Doctor's House and bid me tell him, that Two Gentlemen were at the Street's end in a Coach, who desired him to go with them to one that was not well, so the Doctor came presently after me, and when he was in the Coach, they bid me Drive to Leaden-ball-street, and when I came about Holbourn-Bar they bid me Drive faster, and when I came to Leaden-ball-market, they bid me Drive to Aldgate, and I drove through the Gate to the Pye-Tavern, and when I had turned my Coach, they bid me ask for one Hunt a Chyrurgeon, but he was not there; and then I told them the Gate was shut, and one of them put his Hand out of the Coach and gave the Watch-man Six Pence to open the Gate, and then I drove back again to Leaden-ball-market, and theré they bid me stop again, and one of them gave me Half a Crown to Buy a Fowl, and I went a little way from the Coach, and one of them call'd me back again, and gavé me a Shilling more, and bid me bring a Couple, and he bid me Ask for one Hunt a Poulterer; I went all over the Market, but I could find no such man, so at length I bought the Fowls of another man, and would have had the man gone with me to my Coach, but he would not; then I came to my Coach side, and found the Door open, and I found the Doctor sitting at the bottom of the Coach with his Head against the Cushion, and the Two men gone, and one of them seemed to be in drink when I took them up, and I thought him to be that man fallen asleep, and that the Doctor and the sober man were gone to the Person that was not well, so then I call'd the Watch, and found the Doctor dead, and then it was about half an Hour after Ten a Clock at Night.

Mr. J. Dolben. Then I Ask you, was that one of the men?

Mr. Sykes. I cannot say it, my Lord, I don't know him.

Mr. J. Dolben. What time of Night was it that you took them up at Fetter-Lane end?

Mr. Sykes. It was about Nine a Clock, somewhat after.

Mr. J. Dolben. Why then, they say, that this man never stir'd out of the House from Eight a Clock till Eleven, this man can't be concern'd.

Ch. of Ar. Set up John Dudley, which was done.

Mrs. Milward. Mr. Dudley, What did my Husband say concerning the Doctor to you in the Country?

Mr. Dudley. He came into the Country presently after the death of the Doctor, and he sent for me, and was very much concerned, I Ask'd him what was the matter with him, and he told me, that he was come out of Town about the Murder of Dr. Clenche; I told him, that I hoped he was not concerned in it; he told me, No, but there was a Warrant out against him upon account that he Quarrell'd with the Coachman that Night that he carried him to Dr. Clenche's; and he said, that Mr. Harrison had sent to him from Newgate, and told him, that he would give him Twenty Pounds, if he could make his Tryal easie.

Mr. J. Dolben. Mistrifs, this makes it out, that he told you one Story, and to this Witness another, which contradicts your Story fully; he told him, that he came away for fear, and that he was Innocent of the Murder; and since that he told you, that he was Guilty. Well, what else did he say to you, Mr. Dudley?

Mr. Dudley. He was much concerned to enquire after the Gazettes, and Letters, if he were in them, about the Doctor's Murther, and to enquire if Mr. Cole and Mr. Harper were taken up about it.

Mr. J. Dolben. You hear what is said against you; what do you say to it Mr. Cole?

Mr. Cole. My Lord I know nothing of it.

Mr. J. Dolben. No, I doubt you do, you were one of the Three that was set down on the backside of St. Clement's Church, at the Blue-Boar's-head, where all things were Consulted.

Mr. Cole. My Lord, there was not one word spoke about Killing of Dr. Clenche in my Company.

Mr. J. Dolben. Were not you Acquainted with Milward?

Mr. Cole. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. J. Dolben. Were you not with Harrison?

Mr. Cole. No, my Lord, I never saw him with my Eyes.

Mr. J. Dolben. Well, have you any more to say?

Mrs. Milward. Call Mr. Hobbs, who stood up.

Mr. Hobbs. I met Mr. Milward in York Buildings, and he Asked me how I did, and he went from me a little way, and then came to me again, and ask'd me if I would drink. So we went to the George in York-Buildings and there we drank a Pot or Two; and he ask'd me if I heard that he was accused about the Murder of Dr. Clenche; I told him, No, but he never told me any thing of this Man at the Barr.

Mr. J. Dolben. What was Milward?

Mr. Hobbs. I do not know how he got his Living.

Mr. J. Dolben. Have you any Body else, Mistrifs?

Mrs. Milward. No, my Lord, I know no more.

Mr. J. Dolben. Gentlemen of the Jury, Cole the Prisoner at the Bar stands Indicted for Murthering Dr. Clenche, who, as it now appears, was Murther'd in a Coach by two Persons that were therein together with the Doctor. The question now before you is, whether Cole was one of these two?

Gamble, the Coachman, swears, That the Night Doctor Clenche was killed, he took up Three Men in Cheapside, set one of them down at Gray's-Inn, and drove on to Doctor Clenche's House, the Doctor was not at home, then the third Man came in again to the Coach and he drove to the Blew-Boar's-Head an Alehouse by Clement's-Inn, and set those Three Men down there, and 'twas then about Eight of the Clock.

Sykes the Coachman, swears, he took up Two Men at Fetter-lane End in Fleetstreet, and by their directions drove to Brownlow-street, where the Doctor lived, whom they got into the Coach, and he drove as far as Aldgate, and through the Gate, and then came back to Leaden-Hall, was sent by the Two Men in the Coach to buy a Fowl, when he returned they were gone, but the Doctor found Dead in the Coach; and 'twas now half an hour past Ten.

The Question now, as I said before, is whether Cole the Prisoner at the Bar, was one of these two men.

The Woman tells you, Milward her Husband told her, that he and Cole were in the Coach with Doctor Clenche, and that they Two Kill'd Doctor Clenche.

She likewise tells you, her Husband told her, that Cole and her Husband went out from the Blew-Boars-Head near Clement's Inn, and left only Harper behind.

The Court hath already declar'd to you, that her Evidence, being only what her Husband told her, is no Evidence in Law to take away a Man's Life, especially when it is single without any Circumstance to confirm it, as here 'tis. But that is not all, there is a very great Evidence, that what she says her Husband told her, is false.

He told her, she says, that he and Cole went from the Blew-Boars-Head and Kill'd the Doctor, leaving only Harper behind.

The Master of the House and his Servant (Witnesses which she produceth) both swear, That her Husband went out alone, and left Two Men behind, who both staid in the House till Milward return'd, which was about Eleven of the the Clock. The Master, 'tis true, cannot say that Cole is one of the two, but the Servant is very positive he is, and both are positive, that two Men, that Milward left behind, continued in the House till Milward returned at Eleven of the Clock. These Two Mens Depositions do plainly contradict her Story, and if they swear true, Cole the Prisoner was not one of the Persons that Kill'd the Doctor.

You have all heard, I am sure, that one Harrison hath been Convicted by a Jury in this Place for the Murther of Doctor Clenche: If he was one of the two, then Milward by his own Confession (if his Wife swear true) was the other; but this you cannot take notice of, the Record is not produced, neither hath the Prisoner taken notice of it. The Question is only whether Cole be Guilty of the Murther? which I leave to you upon the Evidence you have heard.

*The Jury having consider'd their Verdict, returned,
That the Prisoner was not Guilty.*

The Tryal of Charles Lord Mohun for the Murder of William Mountford, 1692. 4 W. & M. Published by Authority.

Then his Grace remov'd from the Wooll-Pack to the Chair, which was placed upon an Ascent just before the uppermost step of the Throne, and Seated himself in the Chair.

Cl. of Cr. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant. Oyez.

Cl. of Cr. Chief Governor of the Tower of London, return the Precept to you directed, together with the Body of Charles Lord Mohun your Prisoner forthwith into the Court, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

Then the Deputy Governor of the Tower, brought the Lord Mohun to the Bar, having the Ax carried before him by the Gentleman Jaylor of the Tower, who stood with it at the Bar, on the Right Hand of the Prisoner, turning the Edge from him.

The Prisoner at his Approach to the Bar, made three Bows, one to his Grace the Lord High Steward, the other to the Peers on each Hand, and his Grace and all the Peers returned the Salute to him.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, my Voice will not serve to speak at such a Distance, so as to be heard, and therefore I must beg leave of your Lordships to come down to the Wooll-Pack again.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then his Grace came down, and Seated himself on the Wooll-Pack.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Mohun, I am to let your Lordship know, you are not to hold up your Hand upon your Arraignment; and I am to let you that are Council at the Bar likewise know, that both you and the Witnesses, are to Direct your selves to the Court, in the Style of my Lords, speaking to the Court.

Then there was a little Pause, after which his Grace Addressed himself to the Prisoner thus.

Lord High Steward. My Lord, you are brought here before this Supream Court in Order to your Tryal.

The Charge against you is, for the Murther of one of the Kings Subjects, which is a Crime the King will at no time pass over in the meanest Mans Case, without making a strict inquiry into the Offence, and causing due Punishment to be inflicted on the Offender.

This my Lord is charged upon you, not by any slight Information; but by the Grand Inquest of this County, made up of Gentlemen of good Worth and Consideration. It is true, that this Inquest does not amount to much more than a bare Accusation; and therefore it ought not to be made any use of, so as to prejudice your Lordships Tryal; but it is that which is the Ground of presenting this Black Crime before my Lords your Peers, who cannot receive it without some trouble, to find any one of their Body suspected to be Guilty of an Action so Dishonourable as this is represented to their Lordships.

My Lord, you are a very young Man, and therefore it is to be hoped, you cannot so early have had your Hands in Blood. And the same Reason, because you are so young, may perhaps make you conceive, that you are under some greater Disadvantage in making your Defence, than you would be if your Experience had been longer.

But to remove any Misapprehension you can have of that kind, it is very proper to put your Lordship in mind, that you have the good Fortune now, to be Tryed for this Fact in full Parliament, where no Evidence will be received, but such as must be manifest and plain, beyond all Contradiction; so that you have nothing to fear here, but your own Guilt.

In the next place, My Lord, you need not be discourag'd for the want of Council, for the Honour of this Court is such, as will take Care to inform you of any Advantage that the Law can give you. And you may be farther assured, that no Art or Skill in Arguing, can take any place here, either against your Innocency, or to Divert my Lords from doing you exact Justice. Nay, I dare presume to say on the part of my Lords, that if there be room for any Abatement of Severity, you may reasonably expect to find it from their Lordships.

These Considerations, my Lord, cannot but give you great Consolation under your unhappy Circumstances, it being most certain, that nothing but your own Crimes can hurt you.

But

But at the same time I must tell you, that your Lordship is not to flatter your self with an Expectation or Hope, that any Favour will be shewed you beyond what Honour and Justice can allow: And I hope you have well considered, that it is no less than your Life, your Honour, and your Estate, that you are now to Defend, insomuch, that I cannot doubt but your Lordship has recollected and prepar'd your self, for the Defence of what so very much concerns you.

I will not therefore detain you any longer than to give you some Directions in the Order and Method of your Tryal; and those are, that your Lordship do give Attention carefully to the Reading of your Indictment. That you give no Interruption to the Council or Witnesses when they speak against you; and when the proper time shall come for your Witnesses to be Examined, and that you are to be heard in your own Defence, I will give you due notice of it.

Your Lordship may also be certain that when it shall come to your turn to speak, you shall be heard with all the Patience and Favour that the Matter will bear; and at last, when all hath been heard that can be said on both sides, your Lordship needs not doubt, but that My Lords will give such a Judgment as will be Suitable to the Honour, Justice and Equity of this great Court. Clerk Read the Indictment to my Lord.

Clerk of the Crown Charles Lord Mohun, You stand Indicted by the Name of Charles Lord Mohun, of the Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex, For that you together with one Richard Hill of the same Parish and County Gentleman, who is fled, and withdrawn from Justice, not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the 9th Day of December, in the 4th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord and Lady William and Mary, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King and Queen, Defenders of the Faith, &c. with Force and Arms, &c. at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, in and upon one William Mountford Gent. in the Peace of God, and our said Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, then and there being, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did make an Assault. And that he the said Richard Hill, with a certain Rapier made of Iron and Steel, of the Value of 5s. which he the said Richard Hill, in his Right Hand then and there had and held drawn, the said William Mountford, in and upon the Right side of the Body of him the said William Mountford, near the Right Pap of him the said William, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought, did strike and thrust, giving unto him the said William Mountford then and there, with the Sword drawn aforesaid, in and upon the aforesaid Right side of the Body of him the said William Mountford, near the said Right Pap of the said William, one Mortal Wound of the breadth of one Inch, and of the depth of twenty Inches, of which said Mortal Wound the aforesaid William Mountford, from the aforesaid ninth Day of December, in the Year aforesaid, unto the tenth Day of the same Month of December, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid in the County aforesaid, did languish, and languishing did live, on which said tenth Day of December in the Year aforesaid, the aforesaid William Mountford of the Mortal Wound aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, died. And that you the said Charles Lord Mohun, at the time of the Felony and Murder aforesaid, by the aforesaid Richard Hill, in manner and form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully; and of his Malice aforethought done and committed, then and there feloniously, willfully, and of your Malice aforethought, were present, aiding, abetting, comforting, assisting and maintaining the aforesaid Richard Hill, the said William Mountford in form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice aforethought to kill and murder. And so that you the said Charles Lord Mohun, and the said Richard Hill, the said William Mountford in manner and form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did Kill and Murder, against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, their Crown and Dignity.

How say you Charles Lord Mohun, Are you Guilty of this Felony and Murder, or not Guilty? Lord Mohun. Not Guilty, my Lords.

Clerk of the Crown. How will your Lordship be Tried?

Lord Mohun. By God and my Peers.

Clerk of the Crown. God send your Lordship a good Deliverance.

Lord High Steward. Will your Lordships please, that the Judges may be Covered?

Lord Ay, Ay.

Then the Judges put on their Caps.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms make Proclamation.

Serj. O Yes.

Clerk of the Crown. If any one will give Evidence on the behalf of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queens Majesties, against Charles Lord Mohun the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and they shall be heard, for now he stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

Lord High Steward. You Gentlemen that are of the Kings Council, will you begin.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. May it please your Lordships, I am of Council for the King and Queen, against my Lord Mohun the Prisoner at the Bar, who stands Indicted for the Murder of one William Mountford.

Lord Mohun. My Lords.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Mohun, what does your Lordship say?

Lord Mohun. Do not your Lordships think it proper, that I should have Pen, Ink and Paper?

Lords. Ay, by all means.

Lord High Steward. Yes, give my Lord Pen, Ink and Paper?

Which was carryed to him by one of the Clerks.

Lord High Steward. Go on Sir now.

Mr. Serj. Thomson. My Lord Mohun stands Indicted here before your Lordships, for the Murder of one William Mountford, and the Indictment sets forth, that one Richard Hill, who is since fled from Justice, did upon the 9th. of December last, make an Assault upon this same William Mountford, and that the said Lord Mohun, did likewise make that Assault. The Indictment particularly sets forth, that this Hill by a Sword or Rapier which he had in his Hand, did give this William Mountford a Wound on his Right Side, and that Mountford did Languish of that Wound till the next Day, which was the 10th. of December, when he Dyed; and that at the time of the giving the Wound, Wound, My Lord Mohun was present, and was Aiding, Abetting, Assisting and Comforting of Hill; and thereupon we do say, he is Guilty of this Murder, and for this he stands Indicted. It is my Duty to open the Indictment to your Lordships, we shall call our Proofs, and give you the Evidence, and then leave it to your Lordships Judgment.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, the Indictment has been opened, and by that your Lordships see, the Noble Lord at the Bar stands Charged with the High Crime of Murder.

My Lords, his Peerage gives him a Right to be Tryed in this Great and Noble Court; and as my Lord has Just Reason to put a High Value upon this Privilege, so on the other Hand, their Majesties who are making Inquisition for the Blood of one of their Subjects have a full Assurance, that no Compassion for my Lords Youth, no Consideration of his Quality, or Regard for one of your own Order, will make your Lordships unmindful of the Heinous Nature of the Crime, or cause any Variation in the Steadiness of your Justice.

It is true, my Lords the difference between the Tryal of a Peer and a Commoner is very great, but there is no difference in the Crime, whether committed by one or the other: It is the same Law by which they must be Tryed and Judged; and that Fact which would be Murder in the meanest Subject, is no less than Murder if committed by the greatest Peer.

My Lords, it is not insisted upon, that the Noble Lord at the Bar gave the Mortal Stroke with his own Hand; Nor is it so alledged in the Indictment: The Indictment findeth the Wound to have been given by the Hand of Richard Hill; but if my Lord the Prisoner was of his Party, if he Concurr'd with him in the Thing, if he was Present and Abetting to the Fact, though he did not strike a stroke, though he was no more than a looker-on, when the thing was done, the Law saith, he is a Principal in the Murder.

Whether my Lords Case will fall within this Rule, is the Point for your Lordships to Determine, when the Witnesses are heard.

My Lords, it is my part to give an Account of the Nature of the Evidence, to the end, that your Lordships may more easily go along with the Witnesses, as they are Examined, and more readily make your Observations upon what they say.

This I shall do as shortly, and as exactly as I can without pretending to Aggravate any thing, which I could never think did become any one in my Station; and I am sure, would be to very little purpose before such a Judicature as this; for after all, your Lordships will found your Judgments upon the Fact, not as it is Represented by us, but as it appears upon the Oaths of the Witnesses.

The time when the Fact for which my Lord is to be Tryed was Committed, was the 9th. Day of December last.

The Occasion of it, was this.

Captain Hill, the Person mentioned in the Indictment, had for some time before made Addresses of Courtship in the way of Marriage, to one Mrs Bracegirdle, an Actress in the Play-House; But these Proposals were totally Rejected. This put Mr. Hill in a very great Rage, and he Declared, that Mr. Mountford (the Person Slain) was the only Man that stood in his way, and with man Execrations, expressed his Resolution to be Revenged upon him: This he did at several times, and before several Persons.

The same Day the Fact was Committed, in the Morning; My Lord who is now at the Bar, and Captain Hill went together to Hire a Coach to go to Totteridge, and Directed the Coachman to have six Horses Ready, but to be waiting for them in Drury-Lane near the Play-House, with only two Horses in his Coach, about nine a Clock the same Night. My Lord and Captain Hill Dined together that Day, at a Tavern in Covent Garden; and there much of their Discourse was about Mrs. Bracegirdle; and both of them did freely declare their Opinion, that Mr. Mountford lay with her. But the Principal of their Discourse, was in Relation to a Design which they had formed for the Seizing upon Mrs Bracegirdle, and forcing her into a Coach, and carrying her away some where into the Country.

This was to be executed that Night; and accordingly they were then providing Arms for that purpose, Mr. Hill did acquaint my Lord, that the Soldiers would be ready by the time; and my Lord took notice, that the carrying her off, would stand Mr. Hill in 50*l.* at least. Thereupon (as your Lordships will hear from the Evidence) Mr. Hill used this Expression, If the Villain Resist, I will Stab him; and then my Lord was pleased to say, That he would stand by his Friend.

After they had Continued there some time, being about to part, Mr. Hill told my Lord, that unless he was at the Play-House by six a Clock, the thing could not be Effected, and he should be undone: But my Lord promised to be there at the time.

Accordingly they both met at the Play House, and after they had been behind the Scenes, and informed themselves that Mrs. Bracegirdle would not be there that Night, they left the Play-House.

But it seems they had got Intelligence, that she was to Sup that Night at one Mr. Page's House in Drury-Lane; and therefore they planed themselves with their Soldiers near that place, over against my Lord Cravens House.

Lord High Steward. They; who do you mean?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord the Prisoner at the Bar and Mr. Hill. After they had continued there for a Considerable time (I think till towards Nine a Clock) they began to have a Jealousie, that they might be under some misinformation; and therefore ordered the Coachman to Drive them into Howard-Street, the place where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, and observing some Persons Walking near her Lodging, they said, they doubted they were deceived, and had been betrayed.

But they soon came back again to Drury Lane; and fixed themselves in their former Station. About Ten a Clock, Mrs. Bracegirdle accompanied with Mr. Page (at whose House she had been) and with her Mother, and (I think) her Brother going Home; when they came to the Place where the Coach stood, with the Door open, and my Lord at the Bar placed in the Coach; and several Cases of Pistols by him, the Soldiers together with Captain Hill, came up to Mrs. Bracegirdle, Seized upon her, and would have forced her into the Coach: Mr. Hill endeavoured with Violence, to force away Mr. Page, who was then leading her, and struck him; but Mrs.

Brace-

Bracegirdle's Mother holding her about the middle, they could not readily get her into the Coach, and during this struggle, there was an Opportunity given to Mr. Page to call for help, and several Persons coming presently from the Houses near, and the People in the street beginning to rise upon them, they found it impracticable to effect their Design at that time.

Thereupon the Soldiers were Dismissed; but my Lord and Mr. Hill, would not be denied the Liberty to wait upon Mrs. Bracegirdle to her Lodging, and accordingly together with Mr. Page and her Mother and other Persons, they went together to Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging, at one Mrs. Brownes House in Howard Street. Mr. Mountford's House was in Norfolk Street below Howard Street. Howard Street is a Cross Street, which leads from Arundel Street, and through Norfolk Street to Surry-Street; and so it was not possible for Mountford to come to his own House, but whoever should fix themselves in Howard Street must have the Opportunity of seeing him.

As they were going along, Hill swore he would be Reveng'd; but nam'd no Body.

After that Mrs. Bracegirdle and the Company were come to her Lodging, she and her Mother, and Page went into the House: My Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill staid in Howard street, and there continued for near two Hours together, and for the most part of that Time, with their Swords drawn.

Mr. Mountford, as it hapned, did not come Home till late that Night; so that their Stay being long, my Lord and Mr. Hill thought fit to send for Wine, and had one or two Bottles, which they drank in the Street, near Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings.

During this Time, they were heard to say (that is, one of them was; but which of them, by reason of the Darkeness, we cannot tell) that if he could not be revenged that Night, he would the next Morning; upon which, a Boy, who was there with them; (but who the Boy was we cannot discover) said, good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Resolution. I did observe before, that Mrs. Bracegirdle Supped that Night at Mr. Pages House, and Mrs. Page having heard of the great Outrage and Tumult in the Street, and that her Husband was gone home with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and being under a great Concern for his Safety, thought fit to follow him thither. As she entred into the House, she saw my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill near the Door; and presently after, before she could have a full Relation of what had happened in Drury Lane, Mrs. Brown, the Owner of the House where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, came into the Room, and told them, that my Lord Mohun and Hill were waiting for Mr. Mountford, and that she was apprehensive it was with no good intention. Thereupon Mrs. Page thought it requisite to go to Mrs. Mountford's House, to give her Notice of it, and to desire her to find out where her Husband was, and to caution him not to come Home, unless he brought a good Guard with him.

As she went out, she saw them both with their Swords drawn, and she acquainted Mrs. Mountford with it, who sent to several Places in search of her Husband, but she was so unfortunate, that the Messengers could not find him.

Whilst this was doing, the Watch came into Howard-Street, being allarm'd at the Report that two Gentlemen were Drinking in the Street, and walking there with their naked Swords. The Watch demanded of my Lord Mohun, why he had his Sword drawn. My Lord was pleased to return them this Answer, That he was a Peer of the Realm, and bid them touch him if they durst. They then asked Hill why his Sword was out, and my Lord made the Excuse for him, That Hill had lost his Scabbord.

The Watch observing the Drawer who attended upon them, and knowing that he lived at a Tavern in Surry-Street, went to inform themselves, who these Persons should be, that were walking in such a Manner at that time of Night. But they were hardly got into the House before they heard the Cry of Murder.

The Witnesses will inform your Lordships, that as Mr. Mountford, about 12 a Clock, was coming Home, my Lord Mohun met him, and saluted him. Mr. Mountford said, My Lord Mohun, What does your Lordship do here at this time of Night? And my Lord made answer, He supposed Mr. Mountford had been sent for. No, No, says Mountford, I came by chance. My Lord said to him again, I suppose you have heard about the Lady. Mr. Mountford answered, I hope my Wife has given your Lordship no Offence. No, says my Lord Mohun, It's Mrs. Bracegirdle I mean. To this, the Reply of Mr. Mountford was, Mrs. Bracegirdle is no concern of mine, but I hope your Lordship does not countenance any ill Action of Mr. Hill.

Upon this Hill came up to them, and said to my Lord, it was not a time to discourse of those Matters; and as my Lord continued to talk with Mountford, Hill struck Mountford first, and in a manner, at the same instant made a Pass at him, and run him clean through the Body, and this before Mr. Mountford's Sword was drawn. Immediately upon this there was a Cry of Murder, and the Watch came with what haste they could, and took my Lord Mohun, but Hill was fled; when my Lord was taken, his Sword was not drawn.

As soon as my Lord Mohun was taken, the first Question he asked was, if Hill was apprehended; and when he was told he was not, he said he was glad of it, and he did not care if he were hang'd for him. And he said, adding at the same time, That he was sorry that Mr. Hill had so little Money about him, and wished him all that he had in his own Pocket; and he did then also own to the Watch, that he had changed Coats with Mr. Hill, and had Hill's Coat on him at that time.

My Lords, this is the Substance of the Evidence, and in this Order, with your Lordships Leave, we shall offer the Proofs to your Lordships; I do not doubt, but your Lordships will attend to the Evidence with all Care, and will determine upon it according to Justice and Honour. I will detain your Lordships no longer, but proceed to call the Witnesses to prove what I have opened.

L. H. Steward. Pray call your Witnesses together, and let me know who you begin with.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We do not know what Place is designed for the Witnesses; but if they are to be on the other side, and this Croud do interpose between us and them, it will be impossible for us, who are the King's Council, to hear what they say, or know how to proceed.

L. H. Steward. There must be Room made there there for the Witnesses, where are your Witnesses Mr. Attorney?

Clerk of the Crown. If you please to name them Sir, we will call them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. John Hudson, and Mr. George Powell.

Lord High Steward. I know not how this is ordered, but way must be made there by the Bar, that the Prisoner may see the Witnesses, and they him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes my Lord, by all means.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. If your Lordships please, the Witnesses will be most conveniently heard if they come and stand by us.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordships please, it will not be possible either for my Lord at the Bar, or for us to hear what the Witnesses say, unless they be brought into this place to stand between us.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Great Chamberlain, be pleased to give order for them to be brought in thither.

Then the Lord Great Chamberlain went down to the Bar.

L. Gr. Cham. The Witnesses must be brought to this place.

And accordingly, way was made for the Witnesses, as called to stand at the Bar between the Prisoner and the Kings Council.

L. H. Stew. Give me the Name of him that you begin with.

Mr. Att. G. We begin my Lords, with Mr. John Hudson. Who came to the Bar, and one of the Clerks held the Book to him, upon which he laid his Hand.

Cl. of the Cr. Hearken to your Oath Sir, the Evidence that you shall give on the behalf of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queens Majesties, against Charles Lord Mohun the Prisoner at the Bar, shall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth: So help you God.

Then he kissed the Book.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Hudson, Do you give my Lords an account what you know of any Applications of Courtship made to Mrs Bracegirdle by Mr. Hill, and what became of it; and what you heard Hill say about her, or about any one else relating to that matter.

Hudson. My Lord, I had the Honour to be invited to Supper with my Lord Mohun, at the Rose-Tavern in Covent-Garden, where I found Captain Hill with his Lordship.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was this Sir? tell the time.

Hud. This was three Nights before this unfortunate Accident happen'd, there I found Captain Hill, and we supped together; and after Supper, Captain Hill rais'd a Discourse of Mrs. Bracegirdle and Mr. Mountford, says He, I should not doubt the Success of my Amour with Mrs. Bracegirdle, if I were not obstructed by Mountford whom I design to be the Death of: This is Truth upon my Oath. My Lord Mohun was in the Company; but I cannot say that my Lord made any Reply to the thing, or took any notice of it: But this Captain Hill did say, not only then, but several times before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he say it at any other time in your Hearing?

Hud. Yes, several times before.

Mr. Att. G. Do you know any thing more of this matter?

Vol III.

Hud. No more, than that my Lord Mohun that very Night that Mr. Mountford was killed, and Captain Hill came into the Scene Room of the Play-House, and my Lord Mohun had Captain Hill's Coat on, and Captain Hill had my Lord Mohun's Coat on, and they changed their Cloaths in the Play-House. I saw them change their Cloaths; but what their Design was, I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. G. When was that Sir?

Hud. That very Night that the Gentleman that is Dead, Mr. Mountford, was killed.

Mr. Att. G. You say, that my Lord Mohun was present, when that Discourse of Hill was, about Mountford at the Tavern.

Hud. Yes, but I cannot say my Lord took any notice of it, for he made no Reply that I heard.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with this Witnesses?

Mr. Att. G. Yes, my Lord,

Hud. This is all that I know of the matter.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, have you any thing to say to this Witness?

L. Mob. No my Lord.

Mr. Att. G. Then our next Witnesses Name is George Powell.

Who was Sworn in like manner.

Mr. Att. G. Mr. Powell, you have heard the Questions that have been ask'd Mr. Hudson. Pray will you make Answers to them; and give my Lords an Account what you know of this matter.

Powell. May it please Your Lordships, about 5 or 6 days before Mr. Mountford was Wounded, I was in Company with Captain Hill, and he began Mrs Bracegirdles Health. I told him I would pledge it. Says he, I am sure there is no Bar between me and Mrs. Bracegirdle, but Mountford; and I am Resolved to be Revenged on him, one way or another. About 3 Days afterwards I was at Supper with my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill, and another Gentleman, and the same Discourse arose again, and Captain Hill whispered me in the Ear, says he, I am resolved to have the Blood of Mountford. I told him I did not think it fit for him to speak so behind a Gentleman's back, and to me who was his Friend. I said I would acquaint Mr. Mountford what he said, and I did not doubt but he would give him the satisfaction of a Gentleman for any Injury he did him. I heard no farther Discourse at that time, nor do I know more of that matter, till the Night that Mr. Mountford was Wounded, when I saw him lying upon the Parlor Floor, and afterward saw him laid to Bed, and sat up all Night with him, and about four a Clock in the Morning I asked Mr. Mountford how the thing happened. He told me Captain Hill killed him basely; I asked him if his Sword was drawn; Yes, says he, but it was after I had received my Wound, for whilst my Lord Mohun talked to me, Hill run me through.

Mr. Att. G. At that time, when those Words were spoke at Supper, that he designed to be the Death of Mountford, was my Lord present?

Powell. Yes my Lord Mohun was present, but he was talking to Colonel Tredenham.

Mr. Att. G. Did my Lord Mohun say any thing to what Hill said?

Powell. I did not hear him make any Answer to it at all.

Mr. Att. G. Do you know any thing else in relation to this Fact?

G g g g g g

Powell

Powell. Nothing else but that Captain Hill did give a Letter to be delivered to Mrs. Bracegirdle, but I know not whether it was delivered or not, and he often told me he would marry her with all his Heart.

Mr. Att. G. You say you had that Discourse with Mountford, when he lay a Dying.

Powell. It was about four a Clock, and he died about One.

Mr. Att. G. Was there any thing said about my Lord Mobun at that time?

Powell. Nothing but that my Lord Mobun was talking to him, whilst the other ran him through.

L. H. Stew. If I understand you aright, you say nothing against my Lord Mobun, but his being by one time at Supper when Hill said some Words about Mountford; and then the other thing you say is what Mountford told you after he was Wounded: that my Lord was Talking to him, when Hill gave him the Wound.

Powell. Yes, My Lord, That is all that I heard.

L. H. Stew. Has your Lordship any thing to say to this Witness?

L. Mobun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. G. The next Witness that we shall desire to call is Mrs. Knight.

Who was S W O R N.

Mrs. Knight. I have nothing to say to my Lord Mobun; but what I have to say, is to Mr. Hill. About 4 days before Mr. Mountford was Killed, Mr. Hill came to me, and spoke to me about Mrs. Bracegirdle: He told me he was satisfied she hated him. I told him I did not believe she hated any body, or loved any Body: Yes, he said, she did love some body, but he had thought of a way to be even with that Body. Upon the Wednesday Night before Mr. Mountford was killed, he came to me as I was coming out of the Dressing Room; saith he, Mrs. Knight let me speak a Word with you, says he, you are very great with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and I desire you to be so kind, as to speak to her for me, and I would beg of you if you would give me leave to give her this Letter from me: No, said I, Mr. Hill, I beg your Pardon; you say she hateth you, and if she hateth you, she will not love any body that speaketh for you; and I am not fond of creating my self Enemies in the House, knowing I have some already. What Enemies, saith Mr. Hill, Mountford do you mean? And then repeating a great Oath, I shall find a way with him speedily.

L. H. Stew. A way, with what?

Mrs. Knight. A way with him speedily, Hill said it of Mr. Mountford.

L. H. Stew. What do you call this Witness for, Mr. Attorney, what use do you make of her Evidence against my Lord Mobun?

Mr. Att. G. My Lord, the use that we would make of these Witnesses is to give an Account of the whole Fact from the Beginning to the End, Hill's Malice, and what was the Occasion of it, his Design in coming there that Night, and what he did, and to leave it to your Lordships, to judge what influence this will have, how far it will affect my Lord Mobun. The next Witness is Mrs. Sandys.

L. H. Stew. What is this Womans Name?

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Elizabeth Sandys.

She was S W O R N.

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Sandys, give my Lords an Account, whether you were present with my Lord Mobun and Mr. Hill at the Tavern that day, that Mr. Mountford was killed, and what passed there.

Sandys. I Dined with my Lord Mobun and Captain Hill, at the Three Tuns in Shandois-street, and there arose a Discourse about Mrs. Bracegirdle and Hill, and my Lord Mobun asked me, if I thought Mountford had lay with her or no. I said I could not tell; presently after says my Lord Mobun, it will cost Hill 50 Guineas this Design. Saith Mr. Hill, if the Villain offers to resist I will Stab him; saith my Lord Mobun, I will stand by my Friend. When this was done, Mr. Hill desired Mr. Brough to borrow a Case of Pistols of Captain Leister, and he said he would not borrow them himself, for he doubted, if he knew of the Design he would not lend them. When that was done, Captain Hill told me had a Coach and Six Horses in Witch Street, to seize Mrs. Bracegirdle, and carry her away into the Country; and my Lord Mobun said, he would stand by his Friend: And when my Lord Mobun went away, Hill said to him; my Lord, if you be not there by Six a Clock, I am ruined. Saith my Lord Mobun, upon my Word and Honour I will be at the Play-House by Six.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mobun, have you any thing to say to that Witness?

L. Mobun. Yes, my Lord, I desire to have her asked, whether she is a Maid or a married Woman.

L. H. Stew. You hear the Question, but I do not know what use my Lord will make of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You can easily answer, whether you are married or unmarried.

L. H. Stew. That Question is very fair; are you a married Woman, or a single Woman?

Sandys. I am a single Woman, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mrs. Sandys repeat the Words that my Lord Mobun said, when Hill said if the Villain resisted he would Stab him.

Sandys. My Lord Mobun said nothing in the World, but that he would stand by his Friend.

L. H. Stew. Have you any further Questions, Mr. Attorney, to ask this Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. I have nothing more to ask her my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What say you my Lord Mobun; would you ask her any thing else?

L. Mobun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Then withdraw.

(Which she did.)

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witness we call is Mr. Rogers.

(Who was sworn.)

L. H. Stew. What is this Witnesses Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. Rogers, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What is his Christian Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. John. If your Lordships please to remember, that the last Witness Mrs. Sandys said, That Mr. Hill desired my Lord Mobun, not to fail of being at the Play-House by Six a Clock, and that he was undone if he did not come; and my Lord promised upon his Word and Honour that he would come: Now we call this Witness to prove, that they met at the Play-House according to the Appointment on the 9th of December.

Rogers. My Lord, all that I know of this matter was, That my Lord Mobun and Captain Hill were at the Play-House that Night, and that which made me take particular Notice of their being then at the Play-House, tho' they had been been frequently there before together, was, that Captain Hill had my Lord Mohun's Coat on, and my Lord Mohun had Captain Hill's Coat on.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe any thing else, when they were at the Play-House?

Rogers. Nothing but only some Words that passed between Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun, when I went to ask them for the overplus of the Money for coming in, because they came out of the Pit upon the Stage; he said he would not give it me, but if I brought any of our Masters, he would slit their Noses, or something to that Effect.

Rogers. I asked them for Money, that they ought to pay more than the rest that were in the Pit, because they came upon the Stage, and they would not give it me, but he said if I brought any of our Masters, he would slit their Noses, or cut their Faces, or to that Effect.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, will your Lordship ask him any Questions?

L. Mohun. No my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Call another Witness then.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, with your Lordships Favour, the next Witnesses that we shall call, is the Coach-man, William Dixon.

(Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Dixon, do you remember the Day when Mr. Mountford was killed?

Dixon. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lords, what Persons you carryed in your Coach that Day, whether you carryed my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill, and to what place, and where you waited for them.

Dixon. If it please your Lordships, Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun came in a Hackney Coach to my Gate, where I live, and I was just a going to set my Coaches into the Street for Hyre: They Bargained with me for Six Horses, and I was to have Thirty Shillings to set them down at Totteridge on this side Barnet. I ask'd them whether they would have me bring all the Six Horses with the Coach. No they said, a pair would serve to the Play-House, and the other four should stand at the Pounds end. So I went accordingly to the place appointed, over against the Horse-Tavern in Drury Lane, and a Foot-man came, and Mr. Hill and he bid me drive down lower. So I drove to my Lord of Clare's Door, or thereabouts; and there was some Soldiers that would have had me go in, and Smoak and Drink with them: I told them, I did never Smoak, and I did not care for drinking any thing at that time. With that, my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill came into the Coach, and as they bid me, I carry'd them into Norfolk-street, below the Watch house that stood there; they bid me turn about, and stand there; and then they went to the White-Horse-Tavern, so I did turn about, and stay'd as they bid me, and they tarry'd a pretty while before they came again, and then they bid me drive back to the place from whence I came, so I drove into Drury lane, and they bid me stop next to my Lord Craven's House, this was about Ten a Clock, and it being so late, I went Home, and sent a Postillion down, to take care of the Coach, so that what passed afterwards, I cannot tell.

L. H. Stew. What Day or Night, was all this you speak of?

Dixon. Truly my Lord, I cannot tell what Day it was, it was in December, as I take it, the 9th, and it was Friday I believe, I do not know justly.

L. H. Stew. Did you hear of the Death of Mr. Mountford?

Dixon. Yes, I did.

L. H. Stew. Was it the same Day that you heard Mr. Mountford was killed.

Dixon. No, I did not hear it till the next Morning.

Mr. Att. G. You say, you went with my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill into Norfolk-street, and there you stayed for them, whilst they went elsewhere.

Dixon. Yes, I did so.

Mr. Att. G. Do you know to what Houses they went?

Dixon. They went to the White Horse-Tavern, to the hithermost House on this side the Strand, and they went below to a Door on this side of a House that is not finished yet.

Mr. Att. G. Did you hear them use any Expressions there?

Dixon. I heard Hill say to my Lord Mohun, I think there is a Man and a Maid talking, it was at the Corner House; saith Hill, we are Betrayed, Damn me saith he, my Lord, let us go and thresh him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did they do then?

Dixon. I did see them do nothing.

Mr. Att. G. Whither did you carry them from thence?

Dixon. To the place from whence they came, in Drury-lane.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordship say any thing to this Man?

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, whether he had not Orders to go out of Town with us, as soon as Mrs. Bracegirdle was put into the Coach.

Dixon. If it please you, Sir, I had Order thus, that when we were to go out of Town, I must drive down into the Strand, and then round about any way that was readiest and clearest to get to the Pound, that Order I had, and no other Order I had.

L. H. Stew. Who is your next Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, the next Witness we shall call, will give you an Account what was done in Drury-lane, upon their endeavouring to carry her away, and for that we have here Mrs. Bracegirdle her self.

L. H. Stew. What is this Gentlewoman's Name?

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Ann Bracegirdle.

(Then she was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Bracegirdle, Pray give my Lords an account of the whole of your Knowledge of the Attempt that was made upon you in Drury lane, and what followed upon it.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, I was in Prince's-street at Supper at Mr. Page's, and at ten a Clock at Night, Mr. Page went Home with me; and coming down Drury-lane, there stood a Coach by my Lord Craven's Door, and the Boot of the Coach was down, and a great many Men stood by it; and just as I came to the Place where the Coach stood, two Soldiers came and pulled me from Mr. Page, and four or five more came up to them, and they knocked my Mother down almost, for my Mother and my Brother were with me. My Mother recovered, and came and hung about my Neck, so that they could not get me into the Coach, and Mr. Page went to call Company to rescue me. Then Mr. Hill came with his Sword drawn, and struck at Mr.

Page and my Mother; and when they could not get me into the Coach, because Company came in, he said he would see me Home, and he led me by one Hand, and my Mother by the other. And when we came Home, he pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and said, Sir, I would speak with you.

Mr. Att. G. Pray Mrs. Bracegirdle, did you see any Body in the Coach when they pulled you to it?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, my Lord Mohun was in the Coach; when they pulled me to the Coach, I saw my Lord Mohun in the Coach. And when we came Home, Hill pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and he said he would speak with him. As they led me along Drury-lane, my Lord Mohun came out of the Coach, and followed us, and all the Soldiers followed them, but they were dismissed, and, as I said, when we came to our Lodging, then Hill pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and said, he would speak with him. Saith Mr. Page, Mr. Hill, another time will do, to Morrow will serve; with that, when I was within Doors, Mr. Page was pulled into the House, and Mr. Hill walked up and down in the Street with his Sword drawn. He had his Sword drawn when he came along with me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe him to say any thing whilst he was with you?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. As I was going down the Hill he said, as he led me, he would be revenged.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he name of whom he would be revenged?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. He did not name of whom then, but when I was in the House, several Persons went to the Door, and afterwards Mrs. Brown went to the Door, and spoke to them, and asked them what they staid and walked there for; at last, they said, they staid to be revenged of Mr. Mountford, and then Mrs. Brown came in to me, and told me of it.

L. H. Stew. Who said that?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Mr. Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill both together when that was said, that they staid to be revenged of Mr. Mountford?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes they were. And when Mrs. Brown came in and told me, I sent my Brother and the Maid, and all the People we could, out of the House to Mrs. Mountford, to desire her to send, if she knew where her Husband was, to tell him of it, and she did. And when they came in a Doors again, I went to the Door, and the Doors were shut, and I listened to hear if they were there still, and my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill were walking up and down the Street; and by and by, the Watch came up to them, and when the Watch came, they said, Gentlemen, Why do you walk with your Swords drawn? Says my Lord Mohun, I am a Peer of England, touch me if you dare.

L. H. Stew. Repeat that again, for I could not well hear you: Do you speak of what you heard from Mrs. Brown, or what you observed your self?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, I was within Doors, but I was listening at the Door, and heard this my self; they came up to them, and said, Gentlemen, Why do you walk with your Swords drawn?

L. H. Stew. Who asked that Question?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. The Watch, and says my Lord Mohun, I am a Peer of England, touch me if you dare. Then the Watch left them, and they went away, and a little after there was a Cry of Murder, and that is all that I know, my Lord.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire this Witness may be asked, how long after this Passage that she speaketh of, was it that she heard Murder cried in the Street.

L. H. Stew. You hear the Question, Mrs. Bracegirdle, What say you to it?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, I believe it was about a quarter of an Hour after, to the best of my Memory.

L. H. Stew. What do you mean, a quarter of an Hour after, the Watch asked the Question?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, my Lord.

Then the Earl of Mulgrave stood up.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mulgrave.

E. of Mulgrave. My Lord, I desire to ask this Witness a Question. If I heard her aright, I think she said, they threaten'd to be revenged of Mr. Mountford, I desire to know of her, whether my Lord Mohun did threaten him.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. I do not know indeed; but when Mrs. Brown asked them what they staid there for? They said to be revenged of Mr. Mountford. I did not hear them my self, but Mrs. Browne came in and told me so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Bracegirdle, I think, if I did not mistake, you said, when the Watch came came up, they asked them, why their Swords were drawn?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, and my Lord Mohun made answer, he was a Peer of England, and bid them touch him if they durst, and they went away.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the next Witness that we call, shall be Mr. Gawen Page, at whose House Mrs. Bracegirdle supped that Night.

(He was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Page, I suppose you remember the Night, when Mrs. Bracegirdle supped at your House.

Mr. Page. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. I pray give an account of your whole Knowledge about this Matter, what happened that Night.

Mr. Page. About Ten a Clock at Night, on Friday the Ninth of December last, going down Drury-lane, with Mrs. Bracegirdle, whom I led just against my Lord Craven's House.

L. H. Stew. Pray, Sir, speak out, and tell us what time it was.

Mr. Page. About Ten a Clock at Night, on Friday the ninth of December last, going down Drury-lane, and leading Mrs. Bracegirdle, right against my Lord Craven's Door, stood a Coach, where two Soldiers pressed in between me and Mrs. Bracegirdle, and parted us: I asked what that was for? But they took hold of Mrs. Bracegirdle, and immediately they would have forced her into the Coach; Captain Hill, whom I saw there with his Sword drawn, made several Blows at me.

L. H. Stew. Who would have forced her into the Coach?

Mr. Page. The Soldiers would.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray go on, Sir, what follow'd after that?

Mr. Page. I say, Captain Hill made several Blows at me, and cry'd, you Villain, Stand. I received several of them upon my Cane, but there was none that hurt me; then I got help, and they were prevented of carrying Mrs. Bracegirdle away. My Lord Mohun was in the Coach; I saw him in the Coach.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see any Arms in the Coach?

Mr. Page. I saw no Arms, but I saw a Bundle in the Coach, tho' I could not tell what it was; and there was one in the Coach, that I saw was my Lord Mohun. So when we had got Help, we went down the Lane to Convey her Home, and Captain Hill was with us, and my Lord Mohun followed at a distance. Captain Hill said to the Soldiers, Be gone, I have nothing more to do with you now. When we came to the House, and Mrs. Bracegirdle was entring in, Captain Hill pull'd me by the Sleeve, and said he would speak with me. Said I, to Night is not a fit time, to morrow is better, therefore pray stay till to morrow Morning. But said he, God Damn me, you will not go home to Night.

L. H. Stew. You speak so low, that I cannot tell what you say; I did not hear that last that you said.

Mr. Page. My Lord, I say, when Captain Hill pull'd me by the Sleeve, and said he would speak with me, I told him, that Night was not a fit time, to morrow would do better: Well, said he, To Morrow then; but, God Damn me, you will not go out to Night: I went in a Doors, and there my Lord Mohun and he staid for an Hour and a half, as I was told; I saw them not my self: But Mrs. Browne came in and said, that they said, they waited to be revenged.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whom did they mean, your self that they would be revenged of?

Mr. Page. Mrs. Browne said, they waited for Mr. Mountford.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you continue in that House till after the Murder was committed?

Mr. Page. Yes, Sir, I did.

L. H. Stew. How long after you came into the House was the Fact done?

Mr. Page. About an Hour and an half.

L. H. Stew. Did you your self hear or observe any thing to be said or done, from the time you came into the House, to the time the Fact was committed?

Mr. Page. No, my Lord, I was in the Back-Room of the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Page, did you see Mr. Mountford after he was wounded?

Mr. Page. Yes, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then give my Lords an account what passed at that Visir.

Mr. Page. Upon the Out-cry of Murder, I came into the Street, where I found my Lord Mohun just surrendring himself to the Constable; and immediately I went to Mr. Mountford's House, and I found him lying all along in his Blood upon the Floor; he seeing me, desired me to lift him up, which I did, and thinking he had been dying, I ask'd him whether he knew me. He said Yes. Said I to him, Had you time to draw your Sword in your Defence? He said, He was barbarously run through before he could draw it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this all you have to say, Sir?

Mr. Page. Yes.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be ask'd whether my Sword was drawn when I surrendred my self to the Constable.

Mr. Page. No my Lord, your Sword was in the Scabbard when you surrendred your self, but I cannot say that your Sword was drawn before, or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witness that we desire to call, is Mrs. Page.

(She was sworn.)

L. H. Stew. What is the Name of this Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Mary Page. Pray Mrs. Page, do you remember the night when Mrs. Bracegirdle supped at your House, and Mr. Mountford was killed? Acquaint my Lords with all you did observe that night.

Mrs. Page. Mrs. Bracegirdle supped at my Lodging, and my Husband went home with her, and staying something longer than ordinary, I sent my Servant to know what was the reason of it: He brought me word back, that my Husband had like to have been murdered, and Mrs. Bracegirdle carried away. With that I went down my self towards Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings, and there I found my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill walking, Mr. Hill with his Sword drawn before Mrs. Bracegirdle's Door; my Lord Mohun's not. So I went in, into the House; and after I had staid a while there, Mrs. Browne came out to them, and asked them why they staid there? They made answer, they staid for Mr. Mountford.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who made that Answer?

Mrs. Page. Mr. Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was with Mr. Hill at that time?

Mrs. Page. My Lord Mohun.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any body besides those two, that you observ'd?

Mrs. Page. No, there was no body else that I saw.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were their Swords drawn?

Mrs. Page. Mr. Hill's then was, my Lord Mohun's at that present was not: But Mrs. Bracegirdle hearing that they waited for Mr. Mountford, desired me to go over to Mrs. Mountford's House, and speak to her to send to her Husband, and desire him to keep where he was, or come home with a good Guard. Whilst I was telling Mrs. Mountford what I was desired to tell her—But I should have told your Lordships, that when I came out to go to Mrs. Mountford, my Lord Mohun had then his Sword drawn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were they there when you went out of Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings?

Mrs. Page. Yes, they were.

Mr. Att. Gen. And are you sure, that at that time when you went out of Mrs. Bracegirdle's House, my Lord Mohun had his Sword drawn?

Mrs. Page. I am sure of it, that when I went out, my Lord Mohun had then his Sword drawn; that was the second time.

L. H. Stew. Out of whose House was that you went?

Mrs. Page. Out of Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings.

L. H. Stew. Where were they when you saw his Sword drawn?

Mrs. Page. They were walking before Mrs. Bracegirdle's Door, from one end of the Street to the other.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Street is that?

Mrs. Page. Howard-Street.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray describe to my Lords that Street.

Mrs. Page. They that stand in that Street, can see who goeth down to Mr. Mountford's House, and who goeth up Surry-Street.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well now go on.

Mrs.

Mrs. Page. Whilst I was desiring Mrs. Mountford to send away to her Husband, I heard Murder cry'd out; immediately I open'd Mr. Mountford's Door, and he came in, and fell with his Arms round about my Neck to support himself, I suppose, and he said, Hill had Murder'd him. I helped him as far as the Parlor Door, and there down he fell. I went up the Street and called out Murder, and my Lord Mohun came to me, and bid me take notice, he had no hand in the Murder, for his Sword was not Drawn. I told him, I could not tell that, for to my knowledge he had been in Mr. Hill's Company with his naked Sword just before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mrs. Browne.

L. H. Steward. You have nothing to say to that Witness my Lord, have you?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this all you have to say, Mrs. Page?

Mrs. Page. After this, my Lord Mohun resign'd himself up to the Constable, the Constable standing by me, I bid him secure my Lord Mohun, which he did.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire to ask this Witness, whether I Surrendred my self, or made Opposition, or offered to run away?

Mrs. Page. No my Lord, the Constable laid hold on you.

L. H. Steward. What Answer do you make to my Lord's Question?

Mrs. Page. I say, my Lord, the Constable laid hold upon my Lord Mohun.

L. Mohun. I desire to ask her, whether I did not Surrender my self?

Mrs. Page. Not till I had desir'd the Constable to secure your Lordship.

L. Mohun. Did I make any Opposition, or offer to run away?

Mrs. Page. No, for the Constable presently took hold of your Lordship.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether Hill run away.

Mrs. Page. That I know not; I suppose he was gone away out of the Street before I came forth.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mrs. Browne.

Which was done.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Browne, you are upon your Oath, pray declare to my Lords what you know happen'd upon that Night that Mr. Mountford was Killed.

Mrs. Browne. If it please your Lordships, when Mrs. Bracegirdle came Home, I found her Crying; I asked her what was the matter? She said, my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill, had run her into a Coach, with six or seven Soldiers, and lifted her into the Coach, and she said they were at the Door. Upon which, I went to the Door, and saw my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill walking along. Said I, are you the Gentlemen that have used Mrs. Bracegirdle in this manner? my Lord Mohun answered, Madam, said he, I protected her; if it had not been for me, the Rabble would have torn her a pieces; for if we had a mind to carry her away, we had six or seven Pistols Charged in the Coach, and could easily have suppressed the Tumult.

L. H. Steward. I do not hear what the Witness saith, she speaketh so low.

Mrs. Browne. My Lord Mohun said, they had Six or Seven Pistols in the Coach, and could easily have suppressed the Rabble, if they would have carried her away; but he had no Design upon her for his own part, but only to serve his Friend; and that Mr. Hill's design was to take her out of Town, and keep her a Week, and see if he could perswade her to marry him; and saith Mr. Hill, I shall light on this Mountford. Why said I to him, What hurt hath Mr. Mountford done you? Saith he, I have been Abused, and I will be Revenged.

L. H. Steward. That was Hill that said so.

Mrs. Browne. Yes. So I went and told Mrs. Mountford of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lords what my Lord Mohun said to you about this Matter.

Mrs. Browne. My Lord Mohun said, he protected her, for if it had not been for him, the Mob had torn her in pieces; but if they had a mind to carry her off, they could easily have suppressed the Mob, for they had six or seven Pistols in the Coach: But saith my Lord, I had no design upon her my self, but only to serve my Friend. So saith Mr. Hill, I shall light upon this Mountford. Why, said I, what hurt hath Mr. Mountford done you? Saith he, I have been Abused, and I will have my Revenge. So I went and told Mrs. Mountford of it. About half an Hour after, or more, Mr. Mountford came down, and when he came down, I saw him a little before he came to them, and went to him, and would have fain have spoke to him, but he would not stay to let me speak what I had to say to him, but going on, presently he met my Lord Mohun. Saith he, Your Humble Servant, my Lord. Saith my Lord again, Your Servant Mr. Mountford. Saith my Lord, I have a great Respect for you, Mr. Mountford, and would have no Difference between us; but there is a thing fallen out between Mr. Hill and Mrs. Bracegirdle. Saith Mr. Mountford, My Lord, has my Wife disoblighd your Lordship? if she has, she shall ask your Pardon; but as for Mrs. Bracegirdle, she is no concern of mine; and I hope your Lordship will not vindicate such an ill Man as Mr. Hill in such a matter as this. Upon that I heard Mr. Hill bid Mr. Mountford draw, Mr. Mountford said, that I will; and drew his Sword; but whether he received his Wound before he drew his Sword, or after, I cannot tell.

L. H. Steward. Speak that last again.

Mrs. Browne. Mr. Mountford and my Lord met, saith Mr. Mountford, your Servant; my Lord; saith my Lord, Your Servant Mr. Mountford, I have a great respect for you, and would have no difference be between us; but here has been a thing fallen out between Mrs. Bracegirdle and Mr. Hill; saith Mr. Mountford presently again, Has my Wife disoblighd your Lordship? If she has, she shall ask your Pardon. But Mrs. Bracegirdle is no concern of mine: I know nothing of this matter, I come here by accident.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who said they came there by accident?

Mrs. Browne. Mr. Mountford said, I know nothing of this matter, I come here by accident. But, I hope your Lordship will not vindicate Hill in such Actions as these are: Upon that, I heard Mr. Hill bid Mr. Mountford draw, Mr. Mountford said he would, and drew his Sword; but whether he received his Wound before or after, I cannot tell; it was in the Night.

Then the Lord Godolphin stood up.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Godolphin.

L. Godolphin. My Lord Steward, I desire this Witness may be asked, whether my Lord Mohun's Sword was drawn when he talked with Mountford, because the Council opened it before, that the Watch

Watch came to them, and saw them with their Swords drawn when they were walking in the Street.

L. H. Steward. Mrs. you heard my Lord's Question: Was my Lord Mohun's Sword drawn whilst he talked with Mountford, or no?

Mrs. Browne. I do not remember I did see my Lord Mohun's Sword drawn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were they near together?

Mrs. Browne. They were near together.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether I went up the Street to meet Mr. Mountford, or he came down to me?

L. H. Steward. You heard the Question, Mistress, what say you?

Mrs. Browne. Mr. Mountford came down to him.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether she did not go to hinder Mr. Mountford from coming that way?

Mrs. Browne. Yes, I did go to speak to him, but he did not hear me speak, or did not hearken to me; I took him by the Hand, and told him I would speak with him, but he did not hear me, but went on.

Mr. Att. Gen. You did not tell him upon what account you would have spoke with him?

Mrs. Browne. No, I had no time.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, whether Mr. Mountford's Sword was within his Arm, or by his Side.

Mrs. Browne. I believe it was by his Side.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked one Question more, whether he could not have went home, without coming to Mr. Hill and me?

Mrs. Browne. He did come out of his way, his way was not by my House; he did come down the Street towards them.

L. Mohun. I desire your Lordships to take notice, that he came out of his way to me. I desire to ask her: Did he come as if he was going to his own House or yours?

Mrs. Browne. As if he was coming to mine.

L. Mohun. I desire to ask her, whether I had any hand in killing Mr. Mountford, or went to hold him, or meddled with him?

Mrs. Browne. Not that I did see.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more to say to is Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Nor your Lordship?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then the next Witness we desire to call, is Richard Row.

Who was sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Richard Row, where do you live?

Row. In Surry-street.

L. H. Steward. Where doth he Live, saith he?

Mr. Att. Gen. In Surry-Street, my Lord. Pray how near is that to the Place where Mr. Mountford was kill'd?

Row. About ten or twelve Pole.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill that Night, and where were they?

Row. All that I can say to the matter in that Case is, I was in my own House about a quarter after Ten a Clock, and I heard a noise in the Street, and I went out, and saw two Gentlemen and two Lads about the middle of the Channel; one of the Lads had one of the Gentlemen by the Arm, just by the Channel, and said, Pray my Lord, good my Lord, don't do it, alter your Resolution.

There was an Answer made, that they would be revenged that Night, or to Morrow.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know who the Boy was that used that Expression?

Row. No, my Lord, it was very dark.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you not know neither who returned the Answer?

Row. No indeed.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you are sure you heard those words pass?

Row. Yes indeed, and I went to the Door afterwards, whilst they went to the upper end of the Street and returned again; and I saw Captain Hill's Boy following him. My Lord, I knew Capt. Hill, though he was not in the Cloaths he formerly used to come to my House in, and the Boy I knew to be his Boy.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were those Persons together that you heard speaking so?

Row. Yes, all four together, in a Confusion they seemed to be, for they were Pushing to and again, and the Boy had hold of one of the Gentleman's Arms when he bid him alter his Resolution.

Mr. Att. Gen. Repeat those Words again that you heard him say.

Row. Pray my Lord, good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Resolution.

L. H. Steward. Has your Lordship any thing to ask this Witness?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Row. I spoke of this same afterwards, and so they have brought me here to give Evidence: That is all that I can say. I cannot Swear to my Lord Mohun, that he was one, I do not know that ever I saw him to my knowledge in my Life.

E. of Mulgrave. My Lord Steward, I desire he may be asked, whether he knoweth who that Boy was that made that Answer.

Row. There was no answer made by any Boy, but begging and praying, That my Lord would not do it.

E. of Mulgrave. Do you know who that Boy was?

Row. No, I do not know what Boy it was. But when I heard Mr. Mountford was Killed, and my Lord Mohun was concerned, I told what I had heard and seen, and so they bring me here to Evidence it. That is all I can say to the matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we desire next to call some of the Watch, and shall begin with Merry.

Who was sworn.

L. H. Steward. What is his Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. William Merry. Mr. Merry, I think you are Beadle of the Parish.

Merry. Yes, I am.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lords what you observed that Night Mr. Mountford was killed, when you saw my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill, the first time and the second time, when my Lord Mohun was Taken.

Merry. When I first came down the Street, walking the Rounds between Eleven and Twelve a Clock, as I turned at the Corner out of Surry-street into Howard-Street, I saw my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill Walking, that is, upon the Paved Stones; my Lord was walking towards me, and I asked, Who comes there? Saith my Lord, a Friend. Said I, What is the meaning of your Swords being Drawn? Return your Swords, and stand off. With that, he returned his Sword immediately. Saith he, I am a Peer of the Land; here, will you have my Sword? and he proffered me me his Sword; but the Constable was not there then, and I did not take his Sword; but, said I, God Bless your Honour my Lord, I know not what you are, but I hope you are doing no harm; No, saith he. With that, the Constable came immediately, and he proffered the same to him; there were two Candles in some Maids, or Womens hands at a Door hard by, and I went to ask them if they knew the meaning of it; and there being a Neighbours Man leaning with a Bottle and a Glass against the Wall, whom I knew. I think they told me one of them had a Sweet-heart there; and my Lord said, he was drinking a Lady's Health, and as soon as his Bottle was out, he would be gone. That is all I heard of the matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was Mr. Hill there?

Merry. Yes, he was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was his Sword Drawn?

Merry. Yes, his Sword was drawn, and I asked what made that Gentleman with his Sword Drawn? and my Lord Mohun said, he had lost his Scabbard; but seeing this Neighbour's Man stand there, I went to the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were both their Swords drawn at first?

Merry. Both their Swords were Drawn when I came first into the Street; but my Lord put up his Sword, and the other continued Drawn, by reason as they said, he had lost his Scabbard. And so seeing, as I said, my Neighbour's Man standing there, we went to that House to enquire if they knew what their Business was; we were not got into the House, I am sure not a Stone's cast within the House, but Murder was cry'd out, and we came back again, and my Master being nimbler of Foot than I, because he was a younger Man, came first into the Place, and seized my Lord before I came; how the Seizing was I do not know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witness is Thomas Fennell.

Who was Sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Fennell, you was one of the Watch that night when Mr. Mountford was Killed.

Fennell. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give my Lords an account what you observed that Night, in relation to my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill.

Fennell. The Constable and his Watch going the Rounds, divided themselves into two parts; I went down Surrey-Street with one Party; the Constable he went down Strand-Lane with the other Party. We were four or five that came down Surrey-Street, and when we came down, my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill's Swords were both Drawn; my Lord Mohun put up his Sword just as we came down.

L. H. Steward. Speak out Man, that my Lords may all hear you.

Fennell. I say, the Constable and his Party went down Strand-Lane, and another Party down Surrey-Street, four or five of us, and my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill had both their Swords Drawn: When we came down, my Lord put up his Sword just as we came down, but the Constable not being come, I went and called him.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say both their Swords were Drawn when you came down.

Fennell. Yes, but my Lord put up his Sword just as we came down.

Mr. Att. Gen. What time of Night was that?

Fennell. It was between Eleven and Twelve.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long before the Murder was committed?

Fennell. A quarter of an Hour.

L. H. Steward. Do you not say, they put up their Swords as soon as you came down?

Fennell. My Lord Mohun put up his Sword, but Hill said he had never a Scabbard.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ask them why they had their Swords drawn at that time of Night?

Fennell. No, I went to call the Constable.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more to ask of this Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. I have not my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Nor you my Lord?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Pray go on then; whom do you produce next?

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witness is James Bassit. Who was Sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you one of the Watch that Night Mr. Mountford was Killed?

Bassit. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill that Night?

Bassit. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Acquaint my Lords where it was, and in what manner you found them.

Bassit. In Howard-street; I came along with the Constable, and I walked before them that went down Surry-street with my Lanthorn, and there was my Lord Mohun with his Sword Drawn, and Captain Hill with his the like: We asked them, what they did there? They said they were drinking of a Bottle of Wine: Hill said to me, you may knock me down if you please: Nay, said I, we never use to knock any Gentlemen down, unless there be occasion; and then we went into Norfolk street to the Tavern to examine what they were, and what they were doing; and in the mean time the Murder was done.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not ask them why their Swords were drawn?

Bassit. Yes, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did they say?

Bassit. Hill made answer that he had lost his Scabbard.

Mr. Att. Gen. What said my Lord Mohun?

Bassit. My Lord Mohun had put up his Sword by that time we came up to him: That is all I can say to it.

L. H. Steward. If you have nothing more to ask him, call another.

L. Mohun. My Lord I desire he may be asked whether he came with the Constable when I surrendered my self?

Bassit. Yes, and I took hold of your Sleeve, and you shook and quak'd and trembled, as if you would tear it to pieces.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked whether my Sword was in the Scabbard when I surrendered my self.

Bassit. Yes, it was, he surrendered it.

L. H. Steward. That was after the Murder was done.

Mr. Att. Gen. With your Lordship's Favour, I desire he may answer my Lord Mohun's first Question again, so as to be heard by your Lordships; What was that you were saying when my Lord surrendered himself?

Bassit. I took him by the Arm when he surrendered himself up.

Mr. Att. Gen. What then?

Bassit. Then he quaked, and I had him to the Round-House.

L. H. Steward.

L. H. Steward. Hear my Question, you say you took him by the Sleeve, when he surrendred himself; what do you mean by that? is it that he had surrendred himself before you laid hold on him, or afterwards?

Bassit. I took hold of his Arm, when he surrendred himself.

L. H. Steward. But was it before he surrendred himself to the Constable?

Bassit. No, it was afterwards, my Lord; to have him away.

L. H. Steward. Then you did see him surrender himself to the Constable?

Bassit. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then call Mr. Charles Knowles; But he did not appear.

L. H. Steward. Whom do you call next, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we call'd Mr. Charles Knowles; but they say, he is not come, therefore with your Lordships favour, we will call Mrs. Brewer.

[Who was sworn.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Brewer, I think, you live at the next Door to Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging?

Mrs. Brewer. Yes, I do so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lords an account what you saw and heard that Night Mr. Mountford was kill'd.

Mrs. Brewer. I was at Mrs. Bracegirdle's House, and I went to the door with them; and just as I went to the Door, my Lord Mohun came up to me; just as he came to the Door, Mr. Mountford came down the Street, and my Lord went to him, and imbraced him, and said Mr. Mountford, Your humble Servant, I am glad to see you. Who is this said Mr. Mountford, My Lord Mohun? Yes said my Lord. What makes your Lordship here at this time a night, saith Mr. Mountford? Saith my Lord again, I suppose Mr. Mountford you was sent for. Sent for, for what saith he? You have heard of the business of Mrs. Bracegirdle, I suppose, saith my Lord: No my Lord, saith he, I come by chance.

Mrs. Att. Gen. Who said that?

Mrs. Brewer. Mr. Mountford, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, go on and speak aloud.

Mrs. Brewer. My Lord, Mr. Mountford.— And there she hesitated, and seemed to be in a Confusion.

Mr. Att. Gen. She is not used to such publick Examinations: If your Lordships will please to allow her to begin, because she is in some Confusion, she will be the better able to give you what account she can of this matter.

L. H. S. Let her recollect her self, and begin again.

Mrs. Brewer. When Mr. Mountford came down the Street, I stood at the Door, and my Lord Mohun was come to the Door, and my Lord Mohun went to him and said, Mr. Mountford, your Humble Servant, I am glad to see you, and Embraced him. Saith Mr. Mountford, Who is this, my Lord Mohun? Yes, saith he, it is. What makes your Lordship here at this time of night? saith my Lord Mohun, I suppose you are sent for Mr. Mountford. No indeed, said he, I came by chance. Saith my Lord, You have heard of the Business of Mrs. Bracegirdle. With that, after he had said this, Mr. Hill cometh up, and saith, Pray my Lord hold your Tongue, this is not a convenient time to discourse this Business, and would have drawn my Lord away. Saith Mr. Mountford, I am very sorry my Lord, to see that your Lordship should assist Capt.

Hill in so ill an Action as this; pray let me desire your Lordship to forbear. Upon this, as soon as he had said so, Mr. Hill came up and struck Mr. Mountford a Box on the Ear. Saith Mr. Mountford, Damme, what's that for? And with that, he whipped out his Sword and made a Pass at him, and I turned about and cry'd out Murder, Murder.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you say, you saw Hill draw his Sword, and make a Pass at him.

Mrs. Brewer. No, his Sword was drawn before; but he immediately after the Box on the Ear, made a Pass at him, and I turned about and cry'd Murder.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had Mr. Mountford his Sword drawn at that time?

Mrs. Brewer. No, he had not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you sure he had not?

Mrs. Brewer. Yes, I am sure he had not, for as soon as he struck the Blow, he made a Pass at him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was my Lord present at that time?

Mrs. Brewer. He stood just by on the Right-hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. How near to them?

Mrs. Brewer. They were all close together as well as I could discern.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, have you any mind to ask this Witness any Questions?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with her?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord. The next Witness we desire to call is Mr. Davenport, the Constable.

[Who was sworn.]

L. H. Stew. Well, what saith this Man?

Davenport. The Ninth of December last at Night, as I was walking my Rounds between Eleven and Twelve a Clock, I divided my Watch into two Parts, one was to go down one Street, and the other another, and coming into Howard-street, my Beadle happened to be there before me, and he had spied them as he told me, with their Swords drawn: As soon as I came up, my Lord Mohun very Civilly (his Sword not being then drawn) proffered to Surrender his Sword to me, and said, he was a Peer of the Realm. I asked the other Man what he did with his Sword drawn? and he made answer, he had lost his Scabbard in Drury-lane. With that I found them very Civil, and I heard some Women at the Door, and they said they were Serenading them with a Bottle of Wine. There was a Drawer there that I knew, who formerly lived overagainst me, and then lived at the White-Horse Tavern; so I left them, (finding them Civil) and went to the White-Horse Tavern to examin what the Business was; they told me they were there a Drinking, and before I had spoken three words almost to the Man of the House, the Watch was called, and when we came, Mr. Hill had made his Escape, and so I Secured my Lord Mohun.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the occasion of calling the Watch?

Davenport. They cried out Murder in the Street; So I took my Lord Mohun and carried him to the Round-House, where we kept him all Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think you say, when you first came, my Lord Mohun's Sword was not Drawn.

Mr. Davenport. It was put up then, but the Beadle said they were both drawn before.

Mr. Att. Gen. You did not see them so soon as your Beadle.

Davenport. No, he was there before me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then acquaint my Lord what was done, after you had secured my Lord Mohun.

Davenport. After I had taken him, I carried him to the Round House, and when we came there, he asked me if Hill was taken? I said no; and said I, my Lord, this is a bad Misfortune you are happen'd into; and he said, God Damn me, I am glad he is not taken, but I am sorry he has no more Money about him; I wish he had some of mine; and, I do not care a Farthing if I am hang'd for him.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be asked whether I offered to Fly?

Davenport. No, my Lord, I do not say you did, but you know my Lord, you said this to me.

L. H. Steward. But Mr. Davenport, did not my Lord Surrender himself to you?

Davenport. Yes my Lord, mighty Civilly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord say any thing to you about changing of Coats?

Davenport. He said, they had changed Coats three or four several times that day, and at the same time he had Hill's Coat upon his Back; and I asked him if he knew where Hill's Lodging was, and he told me; and I went to his Lodging with my Watch; and when we came there, we searched the House, but did not find him there; but Captain Hill's Boy came in whilst we were there; so with that, I secured the Boy and searched him, and found Gunpowder and Ball about him; and I have Hill's Sword in the Court, and Mr. Mountford's and my Lord's.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, whether Mountford's Sword was not broke in the Street, or whether he carried it away.

Davenport. I took up a piece my self, and a Servant Maid took up another in the Street.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, whether Mr. Mountford's Sword when it was found, was in the Scabbord or not?

Davenport. No, it was not, I saw no Scabbord.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you ask the Questions so fast, that we do not hear the Answers. Was not your first Question, whether Mountford's Sword was not Broken?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. What Answer giveth he to that?

Davenport. I do not know when it was Broken; but by the report of People that were there by, it was said, Mr. Mountford made a Pass, and at the first Pass, his Sword was Broken; and I went with a Lanthorn, and according as they said, I found a piece of a Sword, and I took it up my self.

L. H. Steward. What is your next Question, my Lord?

L. Mohun. I would ask him in what part of the Street he found the piece of the broken Sword.

L. H. Steward. You heard the Question, what say you?

Davenport. It was in the High-way in the Street.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Mohun, what do you mean by that Question?

L. Mohun. Whether it was in the middle of the Street towards Surry-street, or Norfolk-street, or near Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging, or upon the Pavement?

Davenport. It was over against the Door where you stood.

L. Mohun. How far might it be from where I stood? I desire he may be asked that.

L. H. Steward. You hear my Lord's Question, answer it.

Davenport. He was walking up and down when I came to Take him; and I took the piece of the Sword up in the Highway; he was walking on the Pavement, the Broad-Stones.

L. H. Steward. Have you done with that Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord. Is Mr. Charles Knowles come? He did not appear.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we desire to call Mr. Bancroft the Chirurgeon, and Mr. Hunt.

L. H. Stew. Who do you examin first?

Mr. Att. Gen. We begin with Mr. Bancroft. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. You attended upon Mr. Mountford, Mr. Bancroft, when he was wounded.

Bancroft. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lords what you know of this matter.

Bancroft. My Lord, upon the ninth of December last at Night, between the Hours of twelve and one, I was knocked up to go to Mr. Mountford, whose Servant came for me, and told me he was a dying of a Wound he had received. So I came to his House, and found him very desperately wounded; it went in and out by his back-Bone, behind his left Side. I told him what he must expect, that he was a dead Man. I attended him that Night, till about four a Clock in the Morning, and then I took my leave of him, and went home: About eight a Clock in the Morning I came thither again, and met Mr. Hobbs there, and he was of the same Opinion. He lived till about one, and then he died.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse had you with Mr. Mountford?

Mr. Bancroft. About ten a Clock I was sent for by the Constable to come to Hick's-Hall, to be examined there before the Justices; and being then with Mr. Mountford, and some Company being there, Mr. Powell (as I take it) was one; I said to Mr. Mountford, I suppose where I am going, I shall be asked some Questions about what you may have said to me, you are now upon the brink of Eternity, and pray answer me truly, who gave you this Wound, was it Mr. Hill, or my Lord Mohun? Said he, My Lord Mohun offered me no Violence, but whilst I was talking with my Lord Mohun, Hill struck me with his Left-Hand, and with his Right Hand run me through before I could put my Hand to my Sword.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you his Sword was drawn?

Bancroft. He did not say, it was or not, but that Hill struck him with his Left-Hand, and at the same time run him through with his Right, before he could put his Hand to his Sword.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you my Lord Mohun's Sword was drawn?

Bancroft. The words were these as near as I remember, my Lord Mohun offer'd me no Violence, but whilst I was talking with him, Hill with his Left-Hand struck me, and with his Right run me through, before I had time to put my Hand to my Sword.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you he had his Sword drawn at all afterwards?

Bancroft. No, not a word of that, that I heard.
L. H. Stew. My Lord Mobun, have you any thing to say to him?

L. Mobun. No, my Lord.

(Then Mr. William Hunt was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Hunt, you have heard what Mr. Bancroft was examined to, do you give an account what you know in relation to this Business.

Hunt. I was sent for to Mr. Mountford when he lay very ill; and I then asked him the manner of his being hurt, he said, My Lord Mohun spoke to me, but Hill run me through before my Sword was drawn. I asked him, whether he had time to draw his Sword? And he said, Hill was in me and was through me, before my Sword was out; and this he repeated again, about twelve a Clock, about half an Hour before he died the next day.

L. H. Stew. Will you ask him any thing else, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall ask him no more Questions, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Will you ask him any, my Lord Mobun?

L. Mobun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Then have you any more Witnesses?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I do not hear that Mr. Knowles is come yet; and if he be not come, we have no more Witnesses to examin; if he does come, we must beg leave that we may examin him.

L. H. Stew. You know that the Court cannot stay, for after you have done on both Sides, my Lords are to withdraw, and we are not to sit here in Expectation of your Witnesses.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not expect that; if my Lord Mobun please to examin any Witnesses on his part, and it happen that the Witness should come before my Lord has made an end, we hope your Lordships will favour us so far, as that we may examin him.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mobun, if you have any Witnesses to be examined, now is your time to call them.

L. Mobun. I desire first, Mr. Hill's Foot-Boy may be called.

L. H. Stew. Name him. (He came to the Bar.)

L. Mobun. My Lords, if you please, I desire Mr. Brereton may be called first, because I would prove to your Lordships and shew you I had no Malice to Mr. Mountford.

L. H. Stew. I thought you had called that Boy first.

L. Mobun. That was a Mistake, my Lord, this Gentleman Mr. Brereton, I desire may be first examined.

Mr. Brereton. My Lord, I know nothing as to this matter of Fact, for I had not seen my Lord Mobun of two or three days before.

L. H. Stew. What do you examin this Witness to, my Lord?

L. Mobun. To shew that I had no Malice against Mr. Mountford, but spoke kindly of him several times.

Mr. Brereton. I had not seen my Lord Mobun for two or three days before this Fact was committed, and therefore can give no account of what happened then; but the Friday before, the Play of Alexander the Great was acted, and my Lord Mobun and I were at the Play-house, and he and I went to Supper together, and we were talking of the Play, and he said it was a good Play, and commended several Parts in it, and particularly the acting; and he commended Mr. Mountford's acting extremely: I said, I thought he never acted so well in his Life before; but my Lord spoke particularly very kind things of Mr. Mountford, that he thought him a very good Actor. I answered, as to Comedy he did use to act very well, but I thought he would never make so good a Tragedian as Mr. Betterton, or some others. But my Lord before this, had used to commend Mr. Mountford and speak kindly of him: And he said, that several of the Players had been very rude to him, more than their Business did require of them; but Mr. Mountford had been more civil than any of the rest. Upon this my Lord Mobun was pleased to ask me, whether I was acquainted with Mr. Mountford; I told him I never was in his Company but once with Mr. Bludworth. Saith my Lord, I have a great mind to drink a Bottle of Wine with him. Said I, I do not think him worth your Acquaintance, but you may do what you will. Several things more my Lord said, and spoke more kindly of him than of any of the rest of the Players; but there was no time fixt for drinking with him. Upon Tuesday after, my Lord Mobun came to my Lodgings, and told me Mr. Mountford had been very civil to him the Night before at the Play-house, when the rest were very rude to him; and he had a mind to drink a Bottle of Wine with him. Saith he, I am going about some Business to Kensington, but within a day or two you shall certainly hear of me, and we will fix a time for it, and if I do not like his Company, I will never trouble you nor my self more with it.

L. H. Stew. When was this Sir?

Mr. Brereton. This was the Tuesday before, the first Discourse was upon the Friday before.

(Then the Boy was Examined.)

L. Mobun. Was you along with me and Mr. Hill, that Night Mr. Mountford was killed?

L. H. Stew. My Lord, you must propose your Questions to me, and I will ask them.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire to know what the Boy's Name is, and who he is.

L. Mobun. His Name is Thomas Lake, and he was Mr. Hill's Foot-Boy.

L. H. Stew. What do you ask him, my Lord?

L. Mobun. Pray, my Lord, ask him, if he was with Mr. Hill and me that Night that Mr. Mountford was killed.

L. H. Stew. You hear the Question; what say you to it?

Boy. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear you what you say.

Boy. I was with them my Lord, and all I heard was, they had a Design to rake away the Woman, Mrs. Bracegirdle, and they had provided Night-Cloaths and a Coach for her; to go to Totteridge, which was the Place where they design'd to carry her.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear one word this Boy saith.

L. Mobun. My Lord, shall I repeat to your Lordship what the Boy saith?

Lords. No, no, no.

L. H. Stew. No, my Lord, you are not to repeat what your own Witness saith.

Boy. They had a Design to carry away the Woman, Mrs. Bracegirdle.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear one Word. That Boy can speak out if he pleaseth; I warrant him, he would make Noise enough if he was in another Place. Speak out, that my Lords may all hear you.

Boy. I cannot speak any louder than I do; I say, they had a Design to carry away the Woman.

L. H. Stew. I may as well be at the other end of the Town as in this Place, as for hearing what he saith. Some body should repeat what he saith.

L. Mohun. If your Lordship please to allow it, that one of the Officers of the Court may come down to the Bar, and repeat from his Mouth to the Court what he saith.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Walker, Then do you go and stand by him, and tell us what he saith.

Mr. Walker, the Clerk went and stood by the Boy at the Bar, and repeated his Evidence aloud.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, he saith, they had a Design to take away the Woman, and they had Night-Cloaths in the Coach for the Woman to put on, and they enquired at the Woman's Lodging where she was, and there they were told that she was at Mr. Page's at Supper, and her Brother came to the Horshee-Tavern and drank with them, and he was to go to tell them when she came out, and which way she was to go Home; and there was a Man that was to give Notice, and they went down before her, and the Coach stood almost at the lower end of Drury lane, where there were some Soldiers to put her in, and the Soldiers went and took hold of her.

L. H. Stew. Is this my Lord Mohun's Witness?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord; and he saith, when they went to take hold of her to put her in, Mr. Page struggled with them, and would not let them, and she cry'd out, and was very much troubled at it.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be asked whether he was in Howard-street when Mr. Mountford was wounded, and what passed in Howard-street before Mr. Mountford was wounded?

Mr. Walker. He saith, he was in Howard-street, and saw Mr. Mountford come down in Norfolk-street towards them, and turn into Howard-street, but out of his way to his own House; he saith, he came down, and there met my Lord Mohun and his Master, Mr. Mountford did; and he came to my Lord Mohun, and bowed to him, and said, He had a Kindness for his Lordship. And my Lord Mohun replied, He had a Kindness for him. My Lord Mohun said to him, He hoped he was not come to vindicate any thing of Mrs. Bracegirdle. Mr. Mountford said Not, and asked if his Wife had done any thing to him, and said, He was very sorry his Lordship should have any thing to do to vindicate Mr. Hill in such Rudeness. He saith, Captain Hill was at the lower end of the Street, and Captain Hill heard him say so, and came up and said to him, Mr. Mountford, if you have any thing to say to me, I can vindicate my self, and pray now draw; and he went into the Street, and Mr. Mountford drew and met him, and made three or four Passes, and in the Passes, the Sword was broke. He cannot tell which Sword it was that was broke, he supposeth it hit against the Hilt, and snapped in two.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, where I was when they fought?

Mr. Walker. My Lord stood upon the flat Stones, he saith, by the House side all the while, and they were in the middle of the Street.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, whether Mr. Mountford had his Sword by his side, and where it was, and whether I meddled with him?

Mr. Walker. He saith my Lord Mohun did not meddle with him, but stood upon the flat Stones, nor did offer to draw his Sword, and when Mr. Mountford came down, he carried his Sword in his Hand.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be ask'd, whether Mr. Hill did not stay in the Street to ask Mrs. Bracegirdle's Pardon.

Mr. Walker. He saith, he desired to see Mrs. Bracegirdle, and to beg her Pardon, and as soon as he had seen her, he would be gone?

L. H. Stew. How can he tell that? Where was he?

Mr. Walker. He was just by my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill in the Street, and Mr. Hill said, he would but stay and beg Mrs. Bracegirdle's Pardon for what he had done, and he would go Home.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, whether I offer'd to fly when his Master went away?

L. H. Stew. What is it you ask my Lord?

L. Mohun. Whether I offer'd to run away, or make my Escape?

Mr. Walker. He saith, my Lord did not offer to run away, but stood still and said he had done no hurt, nor drawn his Sword.

L. Mohun. I desire to ask him, whether I could not have run away as well as Mr. Hill, if I had had a mind?

Mr. Walker. He saith, he might have run away as well as his Master Mr. Hill, but he stood still a great while, till the Watch came and took him, and he gave himself up.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before the Boy goeth away, I desire to know of him whether he has not been already Examined upon his Oath elsewhere?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord, he was examined at Hick's-Hall, and was kept in Prison two Days.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you examined before the Coroner?

Mr. Walker. He saith, he was examined before the Coroner.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which was the first Place he was examined at?

Mr. Walker. He saith he was examined at Hick's-Hall first.

Mr. Att. Gen. When he was examined before the Coroner, did he give the same Evidence as he does now?

Mr. Walker. He gave the same Evidence before the Coroner that he doth now, as near as he can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you did make Oath before the Coroner, was it read to you what you swore?

Mr. Walker. He saith, his Evidence was not read to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you subscribe the Evidence you gave before the Coroner your self?

Mr. Walker. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you write your Name your self?

Mr. Walker. Yes, he saith.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not know what it was you subscribed your Name to?

Mr. Walker. He saith, it was not read to him afterwards, he knoweth what it was he gave in.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you sure it was not read to you?

Mr. Walker. He saith, he is sure it was not read to him.

L. H. Stew. Was it not read to him before he subscribed it?

Mr. Att. Gen. That I did ask him, my Lord.

Mr. Walker. He doth not remember that it was read to him at all.

L. H. Stew. Can he read himself?

Mr. Att. Gen. He writes a very good Hand my Lord.

Mr. Walker. He saith, they bid him put his Hand to it; and as soon as he had put his Hand to it, they put him out, and bid him call another Woman.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would have him consider of it, before he makes answer; because there are several Persons present here, who were present when it was read to him before he subscribed it.

Mr. Walker. He cannot remember that it was read to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember you swore at that time, that when Mr. Mountford and Mr. Hill were pushing at one another, my Lord Mohun said, he would stand by his Friend, and Mr. Hill was his Friend?

Mr. Walker. He saith, my Lord said, he would not go, he would stay by his Friend, for Mr. Hill was his Friend.

E. of Carlisle. My Lord Steward.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Carlisle.

E. of Carlisle. I desire that he may be asked, whether he was the Boy that said to my Lord Mohun, Pray my Lord, good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Resolution.

L. H. Stew. Call the Boy agen (which was done) was you by when those Words were spoken; Pray my Lord, will you repeat your own Question?

E. of Carlisle. Whether he was the Boy that said to my Lord Mohun, Pray my Lord, good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Resolution, or defer it to another Day.

Boy. No my Lord, I did not hear him.

L. H. Stew. Did not you say so your self?

Boy. I said no such thing, nor heard no such thing said by any body.

L. H. Stew. Do you bring any more Witnesses my Lord?

L. Mohun. Yes my Lord, Mrs. Elizabeth Walker, Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid.

Elizabeth Walker. Here my Lord, I am she.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before my Lord Mohun proceedeth to examine any other Witness, I have one thing humbly to offer to your Lordships.

(Then Proclamation was made for Silence.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Of what Consequence it will be to my Lord Mohun, I must submit to your Lordships; when you have heard it, that is, whether it may not be proper now, since this Boy has given an Evidence, so very different from what he gave upon his Oath before the Coroner, to have his Deposition that he made before the Coroner, read in his Presence.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I think I ought to conclude, and give all my own Evidence before Mr. Attorney maketh his Remarks.

L. H. Stew. Then reserve that till the last, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord is certainly in the right of it, there ought to be no Observations made upon his Evidence, and we shall be sure to keep exactly to the usual method in this matter; but I take it to be the Course of Evidence, where there is an Objection to what the Witness delivers now, which does arise from what the same Witness has sworn before, it is proper to make the Objection, as soon as he has delivered such Evidence, whilst the matter is fresh in your Lordships Memories.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, let the Boy stay, he shall be called upon afterwards; but let my Lord go on now with the rest of his Witnesses.

L. Mohun. Here is Elizabeth Walker, my Lord.

H. H. Stew. What is that Woman's Name?

L. Mohun. Elizabeth Walker, did you live with Mrs. Bracegirdle.

Elizabeth Walker. Yes, I did my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Person has conceal'd herself, we have been endeavouring to find her out all this while, but could not.

L. H. Steward. What do you ask her my Lord?

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, whether she lived with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and what she saw and observed that Night Mr. Mountford was killed.

El. Walker. If it please you, I lived then with her.

L. H. Stew. I cannot hear what she said, Mr. Walker, I think you must go thither agen, speak out Woman.

El. Walker. I was her Servant at that time, when Mr. Mountford was killed. And may it please you my Lord, that Night, old Mrs. Bracegirdle and her Daughter, were invited to Supper at one Mr. Pages in Drury-lane, and coming home about Ten or Eleven a Clock out of Drury-lane, my Mistress desired me to go to Mr. Mountford, to see if Mr. Mountford was come home. I went, and they said, he was not come home: She desired me then to go again, and tell Mrs. Mountford, that if he was not come Home, she should send to see where he was, and desire he would not come Home without a good Guard; for my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill were walking about the Street, and she did not know their Design, by reason Mr. Hill had his Sword drawn in his Hand, out of the Scabbord. I asked the Reason why he had his Sword drawn; and the Answer was made; he had lost the Scabbord in a Skirmish in Drury-lane; but that I know nothing of. Mrs. Mountford said, she would send her Maid to see where her Husband was, and I told her, if my Mistress would give me leave, I would go along with her, to bear her Company. And when I returned to my Mistress, she did give me leave, and I went along with her to several places; but we could not find Mr. Mountford; so coming home, I went to my Mistress, and I saw them two stand at the Door, and they staid there above an Hour, and in the mean time our Landlady Mrs. Brown, heard the Watch come into the Street, and she said, she would go to the Door, and bid the Watch seize them; and she did go out, and I was kept within Doors, and heard her talk to the Watch, but what she said, I cannot tell; but presently the Watch went away and left them. And I stood at the Door, and heard Mrs. Brown say, there cometh Mr. Mountford, and she would go speak with him; and with that, she went as fast as she could to meet meet him, and came to him a good way before he came down to them, and took him by the Arm thus to stay him, and she said, Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun was walking in the Street, and Captain Hill had his Sword in his Hand drawn, and she did not know what their Design was.

L. H. Stew. Indeed she must speak louder, or I cannot tell what she sayeth.

El. Walker. My Lord, I say Mrs. Brown when I was at the Door, said, yonder cometh Mr. Mountford, and she said, she would go and meet him, and away she went as fast as she could towards him; and when she came up to him, she took him by the Arm thus, and desired him, that he would not come down that Street, but go to his own House, for there were Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun walking in the Street, and she did not know what their Design was, but Captain Hill had his Sword drawn in his Hand. If it please you my Lord, Mr. Mountford did not answer her a Word; but pressed forward to meet my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill. If it please you my Lord, they met one another, and my Lord Mohun and Mr. Mountford Complimented one another very lovingly, and said, they were glad to see one another; and Mr. Mountford said to my Lord, he had a great Respect for his Lordship, and my Lord replied to him again, by my Honour, I have the like for you Mr. Mountford, and with that, they embraced one another. I am sure this is the Truth, for I followed Mrs. Brown out, and stood by when it was done. Mr. Mountford told my Lord, it was a Dishonour to him to keep Company with Captain Hill. I will not take my Oath that Captain Hill did hear him say so, but he might have heard him, and it may be he did too; and that might occasion the Quarrel; but I will not take my Oath of that: It came just in my Head after this was said, that our Door was open, and I turned my Back to hear and look who was at our Door, and I heard Mrs. Brown say, that Captain Hill and Mr. Mountford were going to Fight: I saw them Fighting, making Passes at one another, I saw them engaged, I never saw men naked Fighting so in my Life.

At which there was a great Laughter.

El. Walker. My Lord, I do not understand these matters, I tell you as well as I can, they were fighting with naked Swords, Mr. Mountford's Sword was upon Mr. Hill hereabouts, and Mr. Hill's Sword was upon Mr. Mountford hereabouts; and after they had made two or three Pushes at one another, Mr. Mountford said he was kill'd, and threw down his Sword thus, and I took it up, and there was a good piece of the Sword broken off. I turned me about thus, towards our own Hatch at our Door, and there stood two or three People, I cannot say who they were, but I gave them the Sword, and I turned my Face towards Surry Street, and saw Captain Hill making his escape, running up Surry-Street; and if it please you my Lord, Mr. Mountford was the Friend I had most Respect for; and I saw him as fast as he could, going towards his own House, and my Lord Mohun stood in the same place that he was in, when he and Mr. Mountford were embracing one another, and I did not see my Lord Mohun stir from that place; but when they fought, they were engaged in the middle of the pitched Stones, where there was a place made for the Water to run along the Street like a Channel; and to my Knowledge, I did never see my Lord Mohun off of the Paved Stones, on the side. I cannot say he was never off, when my Eye was turned another way; but to my Knowledge, I never saw him off of those Stones. If it please you my Lord, the next thing that I saw, was this, after Captain Hill run up Surry-Street, and Mr. Mountford did go Home, I saw my Lord Mohun walking up to the end of the Street, where the Watch were coming, and when the Watch came, I see him deliver himself up to the Watch; but I think one of the Watch said he must have his Sword; and he did deliver up himself and his Sword to the Watch. And he bid me take notice, bear Witness said he, I have no hand in the Death of Mr. Mountford. Said I, no, my Lord, I think you have not. The next thing I remember, was Mrs. Page came and said, Mr. Mountford was killed, upon which, said my Lord Mohun to her, bear Witness, I had no hand in his Death. Said she, you were in his Company, therefore seize him, and carry him to the Round-House; and the Watch did secure him; and my Lord answered, as he was a Gentleman, he desired to be used like a Gentleman; and they did carry him away to the Round-house. This is the thing that I did say, as near as I can remember, to the Justices; but I have been very much abused and distracted amongst them, and therefore to a Word I cannot say; but as near as I can remember, being abused at the rate I have been, This I did then say, and it is the Truth.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether she was not examined before the Justices at Hick's-Hall, and whether she was not then Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid.

L. H. Steward. Truly, my Lord, I have heard very little of what she has said, but I hope my Lords that have been nearer have observed it.

El. Walker. If it please you, if you ask what was done at Hick's-Hall, I will tell you just as it was, what happened there, and so proceed on to tell you how I have been abused.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, What would you have her asked more?

L. Mohun. I desire to ask her whether she was not Mrs. Bracegirdle's Servant when she was examined at Hick's Hall, and whether she swore the same there as she saith here, and what was done to her since, or what they would have done, and whether they did not try to make her speak what they would, and to put her out.

El. Walker. If it please you my Lord, that next Morning, there came several of the Players to me, to ask me what I knew of the Death of Mr. Mountford, and I told them; but they did not like what I said, and they seemed discontented at me. And when they were to go to Hick's-Hall, they said they had no need of my Evidence, they could do without me. So Mrs. Brown and her Maid they went away, and left me at Home; what they did, or where they staid, I do not know; but about two or three Hours after, a Messenger came and said, my Mistress and I must go to Hick's-Hall to be examined before the Justices; and we went, and when we came there, all were examined, and I was examined in the last Place; where, my Lord, I gave in the same Evidence that I do now, as near as I can speak. I do verily believe it to be the same, but I have had so much Trouble with their abusing me, that I cannot speak to every Word or particular Thing. For my Mistress, Mistress stood before me, and said, they brought Evidences that confounded themselves, and another said, hang her Jade, pull her by the Coat. I turned me to the Justices, and said, I hoped I might speak now I was there; but it may be for fear of my Mistress, I did not then speak all that I have done now, because I have called more since to my Remembrance. And there is one particular thing that I call to mind now, I remember, that in our Parlor, as soon as they came home out of Drury-lane, there was a Discourse between my old Mistress and my young, that Captain Hill waited at the Door to see my Mistress, and that if he might but have leave to see her, and to beg her Pardon, they would be gone thence to their own Lodging; and I said to my Mistress, if she would give me leave, I would go out to them, and demand Captain Hill's Sword, and then he might come in.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether she was not turned away and threatned.

Eliz. Walker. I am going on to tell my Lord what happened in our House that Night. I told my Mistress, if she would give me leave, I would undertake to get Captain Hill's Sword from him, and then she might let him come in and see her, and beg her Pardon, and I thought it would prevent a great deal of Danger that might follow else. And my Mistress said I was a prating Slut, and my young Mistress said, if he begged her Pardon upon his Knees never so, she would never forgive him, nor see him more. My Lord, there was another Discourse in the Street, that Captain Hill had made a Vow that he would kill himself that Night, and that my Lord Mohun, having a Respect for him, watched to prevent him from doing himself a Mischief. That was discoursed in the Street, but I cannot say it was so of my own Knowledge.

Then another Proclamation for Silence was made.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether she was not turned away, and whether she was never threatned.

Eliz. Walker. If it please you, my Lord, that Night that I gave in my Evidence at Hick's-Hall, by their talking, I knew before I went from Home, what a Life I should have with my Mistress, for I knew they did not like my Evidence, and I was afraid of coming Home, and went and staid with my Sister; but notwithstanding I went Home about nine a Clock, and they were very inveterate against me, and I told one of them, I had witnessed the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, and that I would stand by. If it please you, my Lord, the next Morning there was this Ann Jones that lay with me that Night, and she told me that in the Morning they threatned, and intended to fetch me to Mrs. Mountford to rattle me for what Account I had given in, and she giving me this Item, I got up and went to dressing my Dinner, and Mrs. Mountford sent a Man, that I know by sight, I think it was one Roberts, I believe that was his Name; whereupon he came and asked me where was Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid; I said, I was she, and then he said Mrs. Mountford desired me to come to her. I said, I had given in my Evidence where I ought to do it, and I had nothing to do with her; but it was upon this account, not that I had any Antipathy against Mrs. Mountford, but only as Ann Jones had given me that Item of a Design to send me to her, to rattle me for the Evidence I had given in, and I did not know what might come of it, or what their Design might be.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would not interrupt any Witness, but because she speaks of what was said by Jones, and Mrs. Bracegirdle, I desire they may be by to hear what she saith.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire my Witnesses may not be hared.

L. H. Steward. This is not haring of Evidence, my Lord.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire I may go on with my Evidence without Interruption.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, this is no Interruption.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray my Lord let Mrs. Mountford be called in to hear what she saith of her, I desire she may be by.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I have no more to say to her.

Mr. Att. Gen. But then my Lord, before she goeth away, I have two or three Questions to ask her.

L. H. Stew. What do ask her Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. She saith she was examined at Hick's Hall, I desire to know if ever she was examined before the Coroner.

Eliz. Walker. If it please you, my Lord, I was not, and I will give you the reason.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, pray let us hear it.

Eliz. Walker. Why you have not heard how badly they used me after this.

Mr. Att. Gen. But pray Mistress answer my Question.

Eliz. Walker. But, my Lord, if it please you, I went to my Sister, and staid with her till eight or nine, and my Aunt told me there had been a Porter to enquire for me, to go to the Jury; I was sorry I was not at Home, but I took a Neighbour with me to go to Mrs. Mountfords, to see if the Jury were not gone, and I knowing how they had threatned me, I desired him to leave me at a Victualling-house by Temple-Bar, and go and tell them, if the Jury were not gone, I was ready to wait upon them; he went, and I remained at the Victualling-House, and he came again, and told me, Mrs. Mountford said they had done without me; but he was a little surprized.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, she maketh a long Answer to a short Question. I would ask her another Question presently; but by the way, as to this Examination at Hick's-Hall, I would observe that it is a very unusual, and I think, under Favour, a very unwarrantable thing for Justices of the Peace, to take upon them, under a Pretence of considering, in order to Bail a Person charged with Murder, to enter into a particular Examination of every one of the King's Witnesses, as if they were either a Grand Inquest, charged upon Oath for finding a Bill of Indictment, or Coroners to take an Inquisition of the Murder, both the Grand Jury and the Coroner are upon their Oaths to keep the King's Evidence secret; but this is to make it publick by an indirect way by a Justice of Peace's examining, in order to the bailing of an Offender. But I would observe this Woman goeth away from her Mistress, and continueth away, and concealeth her self; she was not to be found to be examined before the Coroner, the proper Officer, nor are we able to tell where she has been; I desire some account may be given, in whose hands she has been all this time.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire your Lordship's Opinion, whether this may be permitted, that he should talk thus.

L. H. Stew. What do you say, my Lord?

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire to know whether he may interrupt me in my Evidence thus: All this matter is foreign to the Business before your Lordships.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you please, I would ask her this one Question.

Lord ———. Under Mr. Attorney's Pardon, I think the Prisoner, or his Witnesses, ought not to be interrupted; but if he have any Remarks upon the Evidence, when they have gone thro', he may call them again, and ask them any Questions, or make any Remarks upon them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would ask her but one Question.

L. H. Stew. What is it, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. If she heard Mrs. Brown say to Mr. Mountford that she would not have him come forward, because my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill were there, and she did not know what their Design was.

Eliz. Walker. If it please you my Lord, I did hear them, and I was just by them; and there was none but she and I.

Mr. Att. Gen. She upon her Oath saith, she did not tell him any thing more, than that she would speak with him; but he did not hear her, or hearken to her: But my Lord, I have no more Questions to ask her.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ask this Witness, my Lord?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Who is your Lordships next? Pray call your next Witness.

L. Mohun. I desire Ann Jones may be examined. (She came to the Bar.)

L. H. Stew. What doth your Lordship examine her to?

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked what she knoweth of what passed that Night Mr. Mountford was hurt, and tell the whole Story.

Jones. First, I saw Mrs. Bracegirdle coming home with her Mother and Mr. Page, about ten a Clock at Night, and there were Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun with them when they came Home, but they did not come in with them, but walked in the Street about an hour and an half; and after they came in, Mrs. Brown sent to Mrs. Mountford, for she said Captain Hill had some Design, and my Lord Mohun upon Mr. Mountford, but Mr. Mountford not being at Home, they sent to all the Taverns thereabouts, but could not find him; they came Home again, and told Mrs. Mountford and Mrs. Bracegirdle they could not find him, and there my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill walked to and fro about the Street for an hour and half in all; about an hour after they had been to look for Mr. Mountford, or about three quarters of an hour Mr. Mountford came down, and I saw my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill at this Door.

L. Mohun. At whose Door I desire she may be asked.

Jones. At this Mrs. Brown's Door, and Mr. Mountford coming down, my Lord Mohun met him, and embraced him, and said he had a great Honour and Friendship for him, and Mr. Mountford said he had a great Honour and Respect for his Lordship. Saith my Lord Mohun, Mr. Mountford, I suppose you are sent for. No not

I, upon my Honour, said he. Upon that he up and told him how they had like to have got Mrs. Bracegirdle into a Coach, and carried her away, but were prevented. Saith Mr. Mountford, as to Mrs. Bracegirdle, I have nothing to do, she is no Concern of mine, if my Wife have offended your Lordship, she shall beg your Pardon. Said Mr. Mountford again, I hope your Lordship will not vindicate Mr. Hill in any such Action as this. With that Captain Hill came up and hit Mr. Mountford a Box on the Ear, and bid him draw. And said Mr. Mountford, Damn ye, What is that for? And thereupon he drew; and I tell you what I saw, they both came off from the paved Stones into the middle of the Highway, and made two or three Passes at one another; at the second Pass Mr. Mountford's Sword broke, and he flung down his Sword, and run away, and said he was a dead Man; Mr. Mountford went one way, and Mr. Hill another.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked if I did meddle with Mr. Mountford at all, or helped Mr. Hill whilst they fought, and where I stood all the while.

L. H. Stew. What say you? Answer all those Questions my Lord asked you.

Jones. If it please your Lordship, he stood upon the Causey, the paved Stones, in the same Place where he was all the time.

L. H. Stew. Did my Lord meddle at all?

Jones. No, I did not see my Lord Mohun meddle.

L. H. Stew. Was my Lords Sword drawn?

Jones. I did not see it drawn.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether I run away, or whether I did not surrender my self to the Watch.

Jones. If it please your Lordship, I did not see my Lord run away. But I did see him surrender himself.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked if she was not examined at Hick's-Hall.

Jones. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. Mohun. And whether she did not there declare the same upon Oath that she doth now.

Jones. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. H. Stew. Have you any thing to say to this Witness, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would only ask her this Question: She saith my Lord Mohun was upon the Pavement, or Causey, as she calleth it, all the while; I desire to know whether the Scuffle did not begin upon the Pavement.

Jones. Yes, it did upon the Causey.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire to know whether she saw any Blood upon that Causey the next day.

Jones. No, I saw none.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether they did not fight in the middle of the Street.

Jones. Yes, and please your Lordship, I did see them make Passes at one another in the Street.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether the Sword was not broken there in the middle of the Street, and whether Mr. Mountford did not then cry out, I am killed.

Jones. His Sword was broken in the middle of the Street; but I did not hear Mr. Mountford say he was killed, but he flung down his Sword, and run away, and said, I am a dead Man.

L. H. Stew.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with this Witness my Lord?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to say to her, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Then who is your next Witness, my Lord Mohun?

L. Mohun. Edward Warrington, my Lord.

(Who came to the Bar.)

L. H. Stew. What say you to him, my Lord?

L. Mohun. I desire to ask him where he liveth, whether he be not a Neighbour to Mrs. Bracegirdle? And what he saw that Night Mr. Mountford was killed? I desire he would give his whole Evidence?

Warrington. I live if it please your Honour, over against Mrs. Bracegirdle's House, at the White-Swan, on the other side of the way.

L. Mohun. I desire he would tell all that he saw that Night.

Warrington. All that I can say, is about nine or ten a Clock, as near as I can guess: I heard a Disturbance at Mrs. Browne's Door, where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodgeth, and looking out, I saw there were two Gentlemen talking to old Mrs. Bracegirdle, and Mrs. Bracegirdle and some People went into the House, and when they were gone into the House, I saw the two Gentlemen walk about the Street, one's Sword I saw was drawn.

L. H. Stew. Whose Sword was that was drawn?

Warrington. Captain Hill's, as they say, for my part, I did not know either of them, they walked there for the space of an Hour and a half, I saw them oppose no Body. But as they came along, I heard them ask a Gentleman that came towards them, whether he would drink a Glass of Wine or not.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, what he saw afterwards of Fighting.

Warrington. For Fighting, I saw Mr. Mountford come down Norfolk-street, and I saw him turn at the Corner with his sword in his Hand in the Scabbord, to the best of my Knowledge, and seeing some People there, as I suppose, went towards them, and came up to them; and I saw my Lord Mohun to the best of my Knowledge, lay his Hand upon his Shoulder, and embraced him, and complimented him; but I cannot be certain what the words were that passed between them.

L. H. Stew. Did you see them Fight?

Warrington. If it please your Honour, I did see their Swords both drawn, Mr. Mountford and he that they said was Captain Hill; there were some Women about them, so that I could not so well discern when they drew their Swords, or who begun the Quarrel. Hill they said, had no Scabbord to put his Sword in, my Lord Mohun stood by, and laid his Hand upon Mountford's Shoulder.

L. H. Stew. Was that before the Fighting, or at the time of the Fighting?

Warrington. It was before their Fighting, at their first meeting.

L. Mohun. I desire your Lordship would please to ask him, in what part of the Street they fought, and whether I was near them then.

Warrington. When first I saw their Swords drawn, it was upon the flat Stones of the Pavement; and I saw Mr. Hill come off of the Stones, and Mr. Mountford with him. Mr. Hill was, I think the first, and they came both up together with their Swords drawn in their Hands, they were not a Swords length off from one another; and they passed at one another, and I run into our House to fetch a Paring-Shovel, with an Intention to part them; but before I could get out of Doors with the Paring-Shovel in my Hands, the one was gone one way, and the other the other way; and I saw no body in the Street to ask any Questions of, but my Lord Mohun at the Corner, three or four Doors above this place. And I came out, and asked which way they were gone, my Lord Mohun turned about, and I was a little afraid of him at first; but said he, here am I, I did not offer to oppose or draw my Sword, you all know it; and immediately if it please your Honour, the Watch came in, that is all I know.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, whether I did not go towards the Watch, and surrender my self.

Warrington. I cannot say that, but the Watch came in a Minute. My Lord turned about, and said, here am I, I did not oppose or draw my Sword, you all know.

L. Mohun. Pray my Lord, let him be asked whether I did offer to fly. And whether I had not as much time to fly, as Mr. Hill.

Warrington. I cannot say that my Lord, I suppose he might have gone away as well as Mr. Hill, for they were both together.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be asked another Question, whether when Mr. Mountford came into Howard-street, he did not come out of his way to his own House, to come towards us.

Warrington. My Lord, if it please your Honour, it was out of his way; but whether he did it on purpose, or because he saw People there, I cannot tell.

L. Mohun. I desire he may tell you where Mr. Mountford's House is.

Warrington. Mr. Mountford's House is in Norfolk-street, two Doors in the Corner out of the Cross Street; and this was done in Howard-street.

L. H. Stew. I would ask you a short Question, whether that was the way to his House that he went.

Warrington. No, it was not the way my Lord; for he turned on the Right-Hand, and he should have kept straight along.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, whether he was not sworn at Hick's Hall, and whether he gave not the same Evidence there, that he doth now.

Warrington. I was sworn there, and did to the best of my Knowledge, give the same Evidence I do now.

L. H. Stew. If I understand you aright, you say both the Swords were drawn of Mountford and Hill?

Warrington. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. H. Stew. Can you say whether Mountford's Sword was drawn before he was hurt, or not?

Warrington. If it please you my Lord, I cannot tell that, I cannot be positive whether it was or no; for there were Women about them, I say, at first, and I could not discern the Beginning; and I did not stand to see them push, for as soon as I saw their Swords drawn, and they come off the Pavement to Fight, I run into the House to fetch a Paring-Shovel.

L. Mohun. Now my Lord, I will call another Witness.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, have you any Questions to ask this Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. Mohun. Then my Lord, I will call another Witness to shew you the reason why Mr. Hill and I stayed in the Street, and what was the Business we stay'd for. I desire Ann Knevit may be examined. (She came to the Bar.)

L. H. Stew. What do you ask her my Lord?

L. Mohun. I would ask her where she liveth, and what she knoweth of this Business.

Knevit. My Lord, I live in Howard street, exactly against Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging, and my Lord Mohun, as he gave his own Name to be, to the Watchmen, and another Man that they called Captain Hill, for so he gave his Name to be; they came down with Mrs. Bracegirdle, both the Mrs. Bracegirdles into the Street, and came to their Door, and old Mrs. Bracegirdle put her Daughter in at the Door, and then she stood still and talked with the Gentlemen, and asked them their Business. They said, they wanted to beg the young Woman's Pardon for what they had done, and then they would be gone. She said, she thought they came to rob her. They said no, they came upon a very Honourable Design, she said, then they might have come at a more seasonable time; but she believed they came to rob her.

L. Mohun. What time of Night was it?

Knevit. It wanted a quarter of Ten I believe, or it was about ten, a quarter over or under; I cannot exactly tell. They said, if she would give them leave but to speak to her, and beg her Pardon for what they had done, they would go home immediately. She said she would not, they should not see her any more that Night: Then one of the Gentlemen I know not which of them it was, said, they would walk a little while in the Street, she did see them walk very quietly, but she made a great Noise her self; and at last she went in, and shut the Door, and the Gentlemen walked quietly up and down; and by and by, they went to the Door again, and desired to be admitted to speak with young Mrs. Bracegirdle, that they might beg her Pardon for some Affront that they had put upon her, I suppose, and she still refused them, and would not let them speak with her; and several times they called and knocked at the Door, and still desired but to speak with her, and beg her Pardon, and they would be gone home, but she every time refused it.

L. H. Stew. Woman, I do not hear you, you must speak louder.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire your Lordships will let one of the Clerks come, and take the Evidence, and report it to you.

L. H. Stew. If it be material, another must report it; for I have not heard one quarter of it.

L. Mohun. It is very material my Lord, to shew the Reason why we stayed there.

Knevit. My Lord, I will repeat it over again if you please.

L. H. Stew. Then pray speak so loud that I may hear.

Knevit. My Lord Mohun is a perfect Stranger to me, I only tell you what I saw and heard. At the first beginning of all, two Gentlemen and two Women came to a Door over against our Door, and at that House Mrs. Bracegirdle and her Daughter lodged, the Gentlemen gave their Names to the Watch afterwards to be my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill: So when they came there, the old Woman put her Daughter in at the Door, and when she had pulled off her Hood and Scarf, she came to the Door, and asked them their Business; and they told her, they wanted to beg her Daughter's Pardon for what they had done; but she abused the Gentlemen mightily, and gave them very ill words; and said, she believed they came to rob her Daughter, they said no, they came upon a very honourable Design, then she said, they should have come honourably at a seasonable time; they said it was not an unreasonable time, for she was out of Doors her self at that time. So she stood there a little, and then at last she went in a Doors, and shut the Door, and some of them opened the Door again, and they were walking upon the Causey, and came up to the Door, and still desired the same thing, to speak with the young Gentlewoman to beg her Pardon for what they had done, and they would go home for that Night. One of them, I think it was Mr. Hill, said he had given her an Affront, and he desired to beg her Pardon; but still they said, he should not be admitted to speak with her. Then one of them, I think it was Mr. Hill, desired she would be pleased to come but to the Hatch, that he might see her, and beg her Pardon, and he would not desire to come in, but that would not be permitted. So one of them made answer, that they would not stir till they did see her, and they would walk there all night.

L. H. Stew. Cryer, call for Silence, and pray my Lord Great Chamberlain, take some Order with those People behind there, for they cannot hear themselves what the Witnesses say, and therefore they are resolved we shall not hear them neither.

(Proclamation was made for Silence)

L. H. Stew. Now go on Woman.

Knevit. They said they would stay in the Street all Night, unless they did speak with her: But if she would give them leave to speak with her, they would depart to their own Lodgings immediately: but they were denyed to be admitted to speak with her. Whereupon one of them called unto his Boy, to bring him his Cloak; but then he said, he would not have his Cloak, he would walk without it, because they had not both of them Cloaks; by and by they sent for a Bottle of Wine, and there they drunk her Health, and took several Turns, and after they had drunk off the Bottle, or some part of it, they went to the Door again, and knocked at the Door, and some body answered from within, for they were not at the Door, what they would have; They said the same thing as before, that they desired only to see her, and beg her Pardon, and they would go home; for it was a very cold Night, and it was not convenient to walk there, but they still refused to let them in: By and by, the Watch came down, and asked who was there, and what was their Business, and one of the Gentlemen made answer, and said, He was a Peer, and his Name was Mohun, the other said, his Name was Hill. So the Watch went by, and said no more, but some Body made answer, and said, there was a Gentleman had a Sweet Heart in that Street, and he wanted to speak with her: Just at that time, I went up stairs to warm a Bed in our House, and whilst I was warming the Bed, I heard a little bustle in the Street, and running to the Window there I saw a Sword in a Man's Body, I could not tell who the Man was, nor who put the Sword there, but the Man that drew out the Sword, run away as hard as he could, and the Man in whose Body the Sword was, went as fast as he could the other way. And my Lord that gave his Name to the Watch to be Mohun, stood on the farther side of the Street, and said, I have done no hurt to any Body, and I will not stir. And there was a Woman that called out to the Watch to seize him; but who the Woman was, I cannot tell, but he stood still between Mrs. Bracegirdle's Door, and the next Neighbours, one that is called Nuttall I think, and never stirred till the Watch came to him, and the rest went to Mr. Mountford, he said; there was no occasion to lay Hands upon him, for he would not stir from them.

L. Mohun. I desire to ask her if Mr. Mountford did not say I am killed after the Sword was broke.

Knevitt. Yes, he did say he was a dead Man.

L. H. Stew. What, after his Sword was broke?

Knevitt. After the Sword was drawn out of his Body, his Sword was in his own Hand, I squalled out when I saw the Sword in his Body, and had like to have gone out of the Window, and some body said to me, when I told them why I cry'd out, Will you break your Neck for that Reason? it may be it is one of the Watchmen. No, said I, it is not a Watchman.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked where Mr. Mountford and Mr. Hill fought; whether it was not in the middle of the Street.

Knevitt. My Lord, it was exactly in the middle, as near as I can guess, rather on our side of the way, with his Arms spread, and his Sword in the Scabbard.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ask this Witness?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Have you any thing to say to her, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. I would ask her where she liveth.

Knevitt. I live in Howard-Street.

Mr. Att. Gen. With whom there?

Knevitt. At one Mrs. Brewers.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Employment is your Mistress?

Knevitt. My Mistress keepeth a Coffee house.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you live near Mrs. Brown's?

Knevitt. I know not any of that Name there; but I live over against Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do not you know the People of that House?

Knevitt. No, upon my Word, I do not know their Names that keep the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let me ask you another Question: You speak of many Messages sent backward and forward, and that they said Mrs. Bracegirdle should not be spoken with while my Lord staid there; I desire to know if you can tell who any of the Persons were that brought those Messages.

Knevitt. It was the Man that called himself my Lord Mohun, and the other that called himself Hill, they spoke themselves.

Mr. Att. Gen. But who was it that came to them so often, to tell them they should not speak with her?

Knevitt. It was old Mrs. Bracegirdle.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are sure of that.

Knevitt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would ask you one Question more: When the Watch came up to them, did my Lord tell the Watch his Name was Mohun, or only that he was a Peer of England?

Knevitt. He said first he was a Peer of the Land, and then he said his Name was Mohun, and the other said his Name was Captain Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are sure both of them told their Names to the Watch.

Knevitt. Yes, I am sure I heard them say so.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more Witnesses to call, my Lord?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord, I could call some as to Sandys's Reputation, but I do not think it at all material.

L. H. Stew. Have you any thing, Mr. Attorney, to say to the Boy that was set by? Will you have him called again?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I did propose that the Boy should hear the Information read which he gave in to the Coroner.

L. H. Stew. Will you have him called again?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, if your Lordships please.

L. H. Stew. Well then, call him again.

(The Boy came to the Bar, and his Deposition before the Coroner was shewed to him.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that Paper, is that your Name, and of your Writing?

Boy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it true you then swore before the Coroner?

Boy. Yes, it was true.

L. H. Stew. Read it.

(It was taken by the Clerk, and read at the Table.)

Clerk of Crown. Reads.

Middlesex. The Information of Thomas Leake, Servant to Richard Hill, Gent. taken upon Oath this 12th Day of December, 1692. before me.

HE saith, that on Friday Morning last, about nine of the Clock, 'twas agreed betwixt my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill, to seize Mrs. Bracegirdle with some Soldiers, and carry her away in a Coach about nine Miles off, and about ten of the Clock at Night my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill, with about six Soldiers, did seize her, and endeavour to put her into a Coach; but she refused to go, and they led her down into Howard-street to her Lodging, and then said they would walk an hour under Mrs. Bracegirdle's Window, and another under Mrs. Barry's; and about an hour and an half after, Mr. Mountford came down the Street, and Mr. Mountford and my Lord Mohun saluted each other, and my Lord Mohun said; he hoped Mr. Mountford was not come to vindicate Mrs. Bracegirdle; and Mr. Mountford hoped my Lord did not come to vindicate the Rudeness done to Mrs. Bracegirdle by Mr. Hill; and then Mr. Hill said, he was able to vindicate himself, and bid Mr. Mountford to draw, and they both pushed at each other with their Swords, and my Lord said he would stand by his Friend, and Mr. Hill was his Friend: and during the time that Mr. Hill and Mr. Mountford fought, my Lord Mohun did not endeavour to part them.

Jo. Cowper, Coroner:

Thomas Leake;

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, as to this last Witness, I would desire some of the Watch may be asked, because she saith my Lord told them his Name was Mohun, and Hill told them his Name was Hill, whether it was so or not.

L. H. Stew. Who would you call?

Mr. Att. Gen. Merry, my Lord, if you please.

L. H. Stew. Call him.

Lord Mohun. I desire the Constable may be called.

Merry did not presently come in.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think it is not so material, as to desire your Lordships should stay for him. But as to that one Witness that entertained your Lordship so long, Mrs. Bracegirdle's Servant, I desire, that she being here, may give your Lordships an account what became of this Servant of hers.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, she went away from me on the Sunday.

L. H. Stew. Who did?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Maid that was then, and I sent to her Aunts the Week after to seek for her, but she could not be found, where she was I cannot tell, nor could not hear of her from that time to this.

Lord Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether she did not discharge her, or pay her her Wages.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. I did not.

Lord Mohun. Did not you or your Mother?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Mother, my Lord, did, she was not my Servant, my Mother hired her, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What doth she say? were her Wages paid, and she discharged?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. They were paid because she would not stay with me, my Lord. I desired her to stay, and she would not, and then she demanded her Wages, and my Mother paid her.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire you would ask the Maid the reason why she would not stay.

El. Walker. If it please you, my Lord, the reason was this. When I came from Hick's-Hall Mrs. Mountford the next day sent for me, and I lying with this Ann Jones that was here, she told me that I should be sent for, and they would rattle me off for my Evidence that I had given at Hick's-Hall for the King; my Lord, I having such an Item from Ann Jones, and they being all Players; I was afraid, because Players have a worse Reputation than other People.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we shall not trouble your Lordships with any more Witnesses.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire she may be asked if there were not Bailiffs sent to take her, and she threatened to be arrested.

L. H. Stew. What say you to that?

El. Walker. If it please you, my Lord, I cannot swear it, but I will tell you, as near as I can, how it was; I had not time to look over my Cloaths, being in haste when I went, and for fear I should have mistaken any thing, the next day I went to look over my Cloaths, whereupon I found I had mistook, and taken one of my Mistresses Aprons, and left one of my own for it, and knowing their great Suspicion and Inveteracy against me, I went the next day to my Uncles, a Porter's, and desired him to carry it to them; but when I had delivered it to him, he would not let me stay to speak much, for he said there had been three Bailiffs to take me, and I having no Friends, was much affrighted, and run crying up and down, and did not know where to fly; for fear they might lay me in a Prison; and having no Friends, therefore I was forced to fly, and so I went to a Justice of Peace, and there I gave him an Account of the Business. But he said he must have nothing to do with it, I must go again to proffer my Service to my Mistress; but I was not willing to proffer my Service again to her, so I kept away ever since.

L. H. Stew. If you have done with the Evidence on both Sides; What have you more to say, my Lord?

L. Mohun. My Lords, I hope it will be no Disadvantage to me, my not summing up my Evidence like a Lawyer, being a young man; I think I have made it plainly appear that there never was any former Quarrel or Malice between Mr. Mountford and me; I have also made appear the reason why we staid so long in the Street, which was for Mr. Hill to speak with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and ask her Pardon, and I staid with him as my Friend, so it plainly appeareth I had no hand in the Killing of Mr. Mountford, and upon the Confidence of my own Innocency, I surrendered my self, and I commit my self to this Honorable House, where I know I shall have all the Justice in the World.

L. H. Stew. Has your Lordship no more to say?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord, but I am innocent of the Fact, and leave my self wholly to your Lordships.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordships, according to my Duty, I am to repeat the Evidence to your Lordships on the behalf of the King.

My Lord, the Evidence hath been very long, both that on the Part of the King, and that on the Part of the Prisoner, and I know your Lordships have given Attention to it with very great Diligence. I cannot pretend that my Memory will serve me so well, as to repeat the Circumstances of this so long Evidence, but that which has been material, I shall crave leave shortly to mention to your Lordships.

My Lords, I know a great many things may slip my Notice and Repetition, but nothing can slip your Lordships Observation: So that though I should not lay a due weight upon the Evidence for the King, yet your Lordships will let nothing pass without giving it its just Consideration, and will give Judgment according to the exactest Justice.

My Lords, the Evidence for the King doth consist first of Facts precedent to the Killing of Mr. Mountford, and next what happened at that time.

As to what preceeded this Fact thus committed, there were two or three Witnesses called, and the first of them is Mr. Hudson, the next is Mr. Powel, and they give you an Account that Mr. Hill had made his Applications in the way of Courtship to Mrs. Bracegirdle, but that he had an Apprehension that Mr. Mountford was an Obstruction to him in that matter, and therefore he did declare several times, that he would be revenged of him. And one time (which I think was two or three Days before the Fact was done) my Lord Mohun, the Prisoner at the Bar, was at Dinner with Hill, when Hill had this Discourse course concerning Mountford, and said he would be revenged of him. My Lord Mohun was by, they both say, when such Discourse was used by Hill, but they cannot tell what Notice he took of it.

My Lords, after this, the Day that this Fact was committed, your Lordships have heard how my Lord Mohun and Hill hired a Coach and six Horses in order to seize Mrs. Bracegirdle and carry her away by Force, and that is proved most fully, both upon my Lord Mohun and Hill, that they were both concerned in that Design, and actually engaged in it; there can be no Dispute of that. Accordingly they dined together that Day, and at Dinner there arose a Discourse in relation to Mrs. Bracegirdle. And at that time my Lord Mohun said it would cost Hill 50 l. to carry her off. And Hill said, if the Villain resisted he would stab him. And my Lord Mohun said, He would stand by his Friend. This Declaration was made at Dinner, on the Day this Fact was committed; and then they appointed to meet at the Play house at six a Clock in the Evening, expecting Mrs. Bracegirdle would be there; and accordingly the Coach was ordered to be ready at that time in Drury-Lane.

My Lords, in pursuance of this Design, they both came to the Play-house at six a Clock; this is proved by two or three Witnesses. When they came there they inquired for Mrs. Bracegirdle, but she was not there at that time. And then not finding Mrs. Bracegirdle there, your Lordships have an Account from the Coach-man, to what Places he carried them from thence. First to Drury-Lane, there they staid some time; and not finding her there, he drove them into Norfolk-street, near the Place where she lodged, and there a Man and a Woman being discoursing together, gave them occasion to say, they thought they were betray'd. And Hill said, my Lord, let us go and cut that Fellows Throat, or Words to that effect.

Then, my Lords, they drove back from that Place, into Drury-Lane again, and ordered the Coach to stop over against my Lord of Clare's House. There it happened that Mrs. Bracegirdle came from Mr. Page's house, where she had supped. At that time there were present her Mother, her Brother, and Mr. Page, and Mr. Page led her along. Hill came up with seven or eight Soldiers, and forced her out of Mr. Page's Hand, and endeavoured to thrust her into the Coach. In that Coach my Lord Mohun was, that is agreed upon on all hands, the Coach Door was open, and my Lord Mohun was there in it with seven or eight Pistols.

It happening they could not carry her off, but the matter taking Air, People came in to their Assistance, and the Design being prevented, Hill would needs go home with her to her Lodging in Howard-street, and my Lord came out of the Coach and went along with him. When they were come to the Lodging, the Witnesses tell your Lordships, that at that time, when Mr. Page was going into the House, Hill would have had some Discourse with Mr. Page, and desired to speak with him, but Mr. Page said it was not a convenient time, but to Morrow would do better, and so went into the House, and the Door was locked.

My Lord Mohun and Hill continued walking about the Streets for about two hours before Mr. Mountford was killed, and now your Lordships will observe what Transactions there were during the time that they continued walking in the Streets.

Then there was an Interruption for about a quarter of an hour, occasion'd by a Lady's falling into Fits in one of the Galleries; but she being removed, and Proclamation made for Silence, the Court proceeded.

L. H. Stew. Pray, go on Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, I was observing to your Lordships, that part of the Evidence which related to what happened after the time that Mrs. Bracegirdle was in her Lodging. And, my Lord, your Lordships hear from the Witnesses, that my Lord Mohun, and this Hill continued in the Street, where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, and walked up and down for near two hours before Mr. Mountford came.

During that time, the Constable and the Watch-men have told your Lordship upon their Oaths, that my Lord Mohun's and Mr. Hill's Swords were both drawn. And the Constable swears expressly, That he asked my Lord Mohun what he did with his Sword drawn, and that my Lord answer'd, he was ready to put it up, and told him withal, he was a Peer of the Realm; the Constable then asked, Why the other Gentleman's Sword was drawn, and my Lord Mohun made answer that his Scabbord was lost.

But your Lordships observe, that before the Watch came, Mrs. Brown (as she her self hath sworn) came out of the House where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, and desired to know what they did there, and then Hill said, he should light upon Mountford one time or another; saith Mrs. Brown to him, why, what hath he done to you, to which he Replyed, he hath affronted me, and I will be Revenged upon him; and this was said in the Presence of my Lord Mohun, he being just by.

My Lords, after this, in a very short time, Mr. Mountford came down, and Mrs. Brown telleth your Lordships, that they were so much aware of this matter, that my Lord Mohun and Hill staid to do Mountford a Mischief, that there were Persons sent to Mrs. Mountford to give her Notice of it, and she sent Messengers to find out her Husband, to prevent his coming in their Way, but they could not find him.

Upon Mr. Mountford's coming down, Mrs. Brown seeing him, steps up towards him, to tell him that my Lord Mohun and Hill were in the Streets with their Swords drawn, and she was afraid they had some ill Design against him; but she sweareth she did not, nor could not tell him this, he was in such haste; but one of the Witnesses for my Lord contradicts her in this, and says, that she did tell him, but whether the one Witness sweareth true, or the other Witness saith true, must be left to your Lordships Judgment.

But Mr. Mountford came down immediately, and as he came down, he met my Lord Mohun, and they did Salute one another (for I would not injure my Lord in mistaking the Evidence, as near as I can) but your Lordships will observe the Witnesses say, that presently my Lord Mohun asked Mr. Mountford, whether he was not sent for, and said, I suppose you have heard what happened to the Lady this Night, and I hope you do not come to Vindicate Mrs. Bracegirdle. And Mr. Mountford Replyed, I hope your Lordship doth not come to Vindicate Mr. Hill in such an Action.

Thereupon Hill stepped up, and struck Mr. Mountford

Mountford a box on the Ear, and at the same time, with his Right Hand, passed at him, and run him through, before his Sword was drawn. This two of the Witnesses for the King say Mr. Mountford told them upon his Death-Bed, and it was very probable so; because your Lordships observe by all the Evidence, Hill's Sword was ready drawn in his Hand.

There being some Noise, Proclamation was made for Silence.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lords, I was observing that it was immediately, and at the same time that he struck him, and run him through, and it is very likely it was so, as Mr. Mountford said when dying; for several of the Witnesses for the King do Swear, that the Box on the Ear, was before his Sword was drawn, and Hill's Sword was ready in his Hand. So Mr. Mountford said when he was Expiring, and what regard your Lordships will have to the Declaration of a Dying Man, we must submit to your Lordships Judgment; and Mrs. Brown who was there and saw the Fact, sweareth the same thing, that it was done before Mr. Mountford could have time to draw his Sword.

If that be so, it is very plain it was Murder in Mr. Hill, and your Lordships will please to observe another piece of Evidence that came from the Mouth of a Witness, Examined for the Noble Lord the Prisoner at the Bar, and that is Leake the Boy, he was Examined before the Coroner, indeed he was not called now for the King, and your Lordships may see some Reason why he was not, but your Lordships have had his Deposition before the Coroner read, and by that your Lordships may observe, how different his Testimony then was, from what he now giveth. And whether your Lordships will believe what he then said upon his Oath, or what he now saith, is left to your Lordships Consideration. He saith, when he was Examined upon his Oath, soon after the Fact, that my Lord Mohun was by, when Hill did wound Mountford, and that my Lord Mohun said, that he would stand by his Friend, and that Hill was his Friend, and that my Lord Mohun did stand by, and did not offer to part them. Though he hath something varied from this in his Testimony now, yet he still affirms what he there Swore, to be true.

But further my Lords, your Lordships will Consider what the Constable Swore, my Lord Mohun said after he was taken, and when he was in Custody at the Round house. Whether he did Surrender himself or no, we must leave to your Lordships, upon the Evidence that hath been given on the one side, and on the other. But when he was in Custody (as I said) my Lord Mohun asked whether Hill was taken, and being answered No, he said he was glad of that; but he was sorry he had no more Money about him, and wished that he had that Money which he himself had, and that he would be willing to be hanged for him. So great a kindness he expressed for Hill, and said, he had changed Coats with him, and then had Hill's Coat on his Back.

This, my Lords, is the Substance of the Evidence on the King's part, and upon the whole of it, it is plain, with Humble Submission to your Lordships, that here was a premeditated Malice in Hill, by his own Declarations preceeding, by what was done at the time of the Fact committed, and by stabbing him before his Sword was drawn.

The Question will be, whether, my Lord Mohun the Prisoner at the Bar, was Privy to this Design of Hill's, and did so far agree in it, as to keep him Company to Assist and Encourage him. For if he was Privy, and knew of Hill's Design, and stayed there for that purpose, to give him Assistance in it, with Humble Submission to your Lordships Judgment, he will be as much Guilty of the Murder, as Hill that actually killed him: That therefore will be the Question before your Lordships, for your Judgment upon the Consideration of what has been proved in this Case.

My Lords, The Prisoner my Lord Mohun, has called and produced several Witnesses to your Lordships, in Defence of himself. The first Witness was called to this purpose, to shew that my Lord hath no Malice to Mountford, but that they were very good Friends, but two or three Days before, that he spoke of him with a great deal of Kindness, and desired to Drink a Bottle of Wine with him.

Now for this, I would observe to your Lordships, that it is not the Question, whether my Lord Mohun had any direct or express Malice against Mountford, but if Hill who was so great a Friend of my Lord Mohun's, had a Malice against Mountford, and my Lord Mohun had so great a Kindness for Hill, as to Accompany and Assist him in taking his intended Revenge. (Whether it was so or no, your Lordships are to Judge) it will be as much Murder in Law, as if my Lord had himself had a Hand in it.

For the other Witnesses that have been called for the Prisoner, I must leave the Consideration of what they say, to your Lordships. They are not upon their Oaths, but yet they are to be believed so far, as your Lordships shall Judge what they say Credible, upon Consideration of all that you have heard. But for the Boy, who hath Contradicted his own Evidence, which he gave upon Oath before the proper Officer; but acknowledgeth what he Swore then, was true, what Credit is to be given to him, will deserve your Lordships particular Consideration. How he has been prevail'd upon to change his Evidence, I cannot tell, nor what weight it will have with you.

My Lords, I will not spend more of your Lordships time, I know you very well remember, and will carefully Recollect all the Evidence, both for the King and for the Prisoner, and your Lordships will consider that it is a Case of Blood, and if your Lordships think him Guilty, tho' he be one of your own Body, you will adjudge him so, if not you will acquit him; and therefore I leave the Matter to your Lordships just Determination.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, I think now, having heard the Evidence on all sides, your Lordships will think fit to Adjourn to the House of Lords. Is it your Pleasure to Adjourn?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. Stew. This House is Adjourned to the House of Lords.

Then the Lords returned to their own House, in the same Order as they came into the Court.

After some Debate amongst themselves in their own House, they Adjourned till the next Day, and ordered the Prisoner, Council, and Witnesses to attend then in the Court.

Die Mercurii Primo Februarii 1692.

The Lords sate all Day in their own House, debating amongst themselves in the Absence of the Judges, who were in the Court, and about eight a Clock in the Evening, the House of Lords Adjourn'd till the Friday following, the Thursday being Candlemas-day, and no Law-day.

And the Prisoner, Council, and Witnesses were ordered to attend in the Court on Friday morning.

Die Veneris Tertio Februarii 1692.

ABout the Hour of Four in the Afternoon, the Lords (who had till then been Debating amongst themselves in their own House) came in the same Order as the first Day into the Court in Westminster-Hall, except only that the Judges were a great part of the Day waiting for them in the Court.

The Lords being seated on their proper Benches, and his Grace the Lord High Steward in the Chair before the Throne, Proclamations were made for Silence, and for the bringing the Prisoner to the Bar in usual manner; and the Prisoner coming to the Bar, and having saluted his Grace the Lord High Steward, and the Peers, and being resaluted by them, the Court proceeded in this manner:

L. H. Steward. My Lord Mohun, My Lords have heard the Evidence on both sides, for and against you; and upon that Evidence some Questions have arisen in point of Law, in which some of my Lords are doubtful. I am therefore by their Lordships Command to propose to your Lordships, my Lords Chief Justices and the rest of the Judges here, to have your Opinions upon a Case stated by their Lordships; and it is this:

In a Case where a Man shall murder another, Whether all those that are in his Company at the time of the Murder, are so necessarily involved in the said Crime, that they may not be separated from the Crime of the said Person, so as in some Cases to be found guilty of Manslaughter?

To this, my Lords expect you the Judges should give your Resolutions severally one after another, and therefore it is to begin with you, my Lord Chief Justice.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, the Question is pretty long; and I desire, that I may not be mistaken in the Opinion I shall give, that I may have it in Writing, and that I may have a little time to consider of it, because it hath been a Question framed upon very great Consideration and Deliberation: Therefore I would be very well advised before I give an Answer to such a Question, because it is of so great Importance.

L. H. Stew. You must speak out, my Lords; for else I am at such a distance that I cannot hear a word you say.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I make the same humble Request: The Question propounded is long, and the Fruit of great Deliberation among your Lordships; I desire therefore my Answer may be such as becometh me to it, and to that purpose that I may have a Copy of it, and some time to consider of it.

L. H. Stew. I have it here in Writing, and will give it you, if that will serve the turn.

The Paper was brought by the Black Rod from his Grace to the Judges.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we desire your Lordships will give us time to withdraw, and consider of it among our selves.

L. H. Stew. Your Lordships hear the Motion of my Lord Chief Justice; the Judges desire your leave to withdraw, and consider of the Question among themselves.

Lords. No, no, no.

Then the Judges sitting upon the Wool-Packs, conferred for a little time privately with one another; and then the Earl of Rocheſter stood up.

E. of Rocheſter. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Rocheſter, What say you?

E. of Rocheſter. My Lords, the Prisoner doth desire to have a Copy of this Question, it being a Question in Point of Law, that his Council may see it.

Lords. Ay, ay, he ought to have it.

A Copy was carried by one of the Clerks to the Bar, and delivered to the Prisoner, and he gave it to Sir Thomas Powys, who with Mr. Hawles and Mr. Price, before assigned of Council for my Lord Mohun in Matters of Law, stood by him at the Bar.

L. Mohun. My Lords, I desire to know whether my Council may speak to this Case before the Judges give their Opinions, it being a Matter of Law, and the Judges superiour to my Council.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, they may be heard to any Matter of Law that is Law singly, the Council on either side may be heard to any thing that is a Point of Law only.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I conceive this to be so.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, it is agreed to be so: But, my Lords, I must desire your Lordships leave to go down to the Wool-Pack, or I shall not be able to hear what is said.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then his Grace came down and seated himself on the Wool-Pack.

Sir T. Powys. May it please your Lordships, I am of Council—

E. of Devonshire. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Steward.

E. of Devonshire. I think your Lordships have not yet resolved that the Prisoner's Council shall be heard before the Judges; therefore I desire they may not begin.

Lords. Yes, yes, it was agreed above.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, it must be either then, or not at all; and I understand the Resolution of the House to be so.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. Go on, Sir.

Sir T. Powys. May it please your Lordships, I am of Council assigned by your Lordships for this Noble Peer that is now a Prisoner at the Bar: The Question your Lordships are pleas'd to propound is this:

In a Case where a Man shall murder another, Whether all those who are in his Company at the time of the Murder, are so necessarily involved in the same Crime, that they may not be separated from the Crime of the said Person, so as in some Cases to be found guilty only of Manslaughter?

My Lords, with humble Submission to your Lordships, I take it there are many Cases where a Person that is present when a Murder is committed by another Man, shall be equally Guilty of that Murder; and there are many Cases where a Person that is present when a Murder is committed by another Man, shall be Guilty only of Manslaughter: And there are many Cases where a Person that is present when a Murder is committed by another Man, shall not (with humble submission) be Guilty of any Crime at all.

For the first, there is no Question but if two Persons or more do meet together with Malice prepened to kill another, and one of them killeth him, and the rest do aid and assist him in doing of it, though the Mortal Wound is only given by one, there is no question but they are all equally Guilty of the Murder with him that gave the Mortal Wound: And it is also as clear, if two Persons meet together to commit an unlawful Act, and during the execution of that unlawful Act, one of them doth kill another Man, the other will be involved in the Guilt of it.

But, my Lords, if several Persons do meet together to commit an unlawful Act, and the Design of the Act is totally over, so that the Prosecution of it is quite left off. —

There being some Noise and Disorder about the Court, Proclamation was commanded to be made, and was made again for Silence.

Sir T. Powys. My Lords, I say in the second Instance that I was offering to your Lordships. If two Persons or more meet together to do an unlawful Act, but are either disappointed in it, or have totally desisted from it; and afterwards these same Persons having quitted their Design, are together, and a third Person coming into their Company, though there were Malice between one of those Persons, and that third Person, and upon words, or some other occasion or accident, there should be quarrelling and fighting between those two Persons that bore Malice to one another, and one of them is killed, and he that before had joyned in the Design of committing an unlawful Act, be only there in the Company, if he doth neither aid nor abet, nor any ways agree to the doing of the thing, the Authorities are it will neither be Murder nor Manslaughter; and of this I would, with your Lordships Favour, put some Instances.

If two Persons agree together, (as the Case is put in that which goeth by the Name of my Lord Dacre's Case) to enter into another Man's Park and steal his Deer, this is an unlawful Design; and if one of them kill the Keeper, and the other no way at all act in the doing of it, yet it will be Murder in the Person that did go along with that other in that unlawful Act: But the Lord Dacre's Case was accompanied with further Circumstances, for there it did appear that the Lord Dacres had agreed before-hand to kill any Person that should oppose them; there was that particular Circumstance in that Case.

But, my Lords, I take it, with submission, to be very clear, that if two such Persons who made such an attempt to rob or steal Deer in a Park, should be disappointed, and should leave the Park, and afterwards go to a Tavern, or an Ale-house, or any place to drink, having quitted that Design, and some Hours afterwards, a Person cometh in that was not expected, or thought of, and a Quarrel ariseth between one of those two Persons who were before together, and the Man that so came in, and he shall be killed, I take it that the other Person who was present will not be guilty of the Murder, unless he aided, or assisted, or acted in it.

My Lords, I would speak to your Lordships in a Case of this Nature with as good Authority as I could, besides my own poor Reason to prove to your Lordships that there may be many Cases where a Person may be present at the time when another is murdered, and yet he shall be guilty only of Manslaughter, and in some Cases shall be guilty of no Crime at all.

The Case that I shall cite is out of a Treatise of a very great and very Learned Man, it is the Book that goeth under the Name of Sir Matthew Hales's Pleas of the Crown; the Case is this, you will find in that Book under the Title of Murder, Fol. 51. If A. and B. having Malice prepened, meet and fight, and C. the Servant of A. not acquainted therewith, take part with A. his Master, and kill B. this is Murder in A. but only Manslaughter in C. So here is an Instance where one is guilty of Murder, and the other only guilty of Manslaughter, when both are present at the time of the Fact committed. The same Law, saith he, it is, if C. came in suddenly, and took part with A. and killed B. In this Case it is Murder in A. if there was Malice prepened between him and B. but only Manslaughter in C. who came in suddenly, and actually killed B.

My Lords, He goeth further, and saith, If one come by chance where one is killed, and doth not abet, he is neither Principal nor Accessory to that Murder or Manslaughter; so that here are Cases where it is Murder in one, and Manslaughter only in the other; and here are Cases where it is Murder in one, and not so much as Manslaughter, or any Crime at all in the other.

These that I have cited are Cases where one has Malice against another, and he that joyneth in the Quarrel doth not know it. But I will put the Case now, That a Person hath Malice against another, and one happeneth to be in his Company that knoweth he hath Malice against that other Person; if those two that had Malice against one another, do fight, and the one kill the other, yet he that is present will not be guilty of Murder or Manslaughter. For if the Law should be, that Men are involved in the guilt of Murder whenever they are present at a time when one that beareth Malice against another killeth his Enemy, Conversation in the World would be very dangerous: For, my Lords, we know the World is too full of Malice, and there are few Men but have Acquaintance with such as bear Malice to others; but if so be that no Man that is acquainted with one that bears Malice to another, may be in his Company but at the peril of his Life; if his Enemy come in his his way, and he happen to kill him in his Presence, then no Man that is ever so innocent can be safe.

For I would put this Case to your Lordships: I am walking with a Friend or an Acquaintance that I know hath Malice against another, and that other Man cometh in the way, and they fight, and my Friend killeth that other Man, and I am no way aiding or assisting in it, if that should involve me in the Crime, surely the Law of England would be the most unreasonable and dangerous Law to live under in the World. No doubt but in such a Case the Person that is so present is unfortunate, but he is innocent, is not guilty.

For to make one guilty of Murder where Murder is committed, it must be either that he doth aid or abet, or some way assist in the killing of the Man, or he must have before that time agreed and confederated with the Person that killed him that he would joyn therein at that time, and he must be there for that end and purpose: For if he never engaged or agreed to the killing of him, nor was there for that purpose, nor at the time did any way act, or joyn, or assist, in the doing of it; in those Cases he is certainly not guilty.

My Lords, I dare not apply any of these things to the present Case, because I suppose your Lordships only propounded this as a Question of Law, and not of Fact; your Lordships are the great Judges both of the one and the other: But what in the Argument or Resolution of this Case, your Lordships will find agreeable to the present Case of my Lord now before you, I submit to your Lordships Judgment.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I will not repeat what has been offered, the Distinction is certainly true that has been made, that there are Cases and Instances in Law where a Man may be guilty of Murder, when he is present where Murder is committed, and he may be guilty of Manslaughter only where another is guilty of Murder; and a Man may be present where Murder is committed, and be innocent both of the one and the other. But this I do venture to say, That there is no Authority in our Law that saith a Person present, when a Murder is committed, must be guilty either of Murder or Manslaughter, it must be according to the Circumstances of the thing, either that he intended to aid or assist in the killing when he was there by Agreement before-hand, or must actually aid or assist by some Action or Encouragement.

But, with Submission, the Authority of Law is very plain upon this Question proposed by your Lordships, that one Person may be guilty of Manslaughter, and another of Murder at the same time. The Case that hath been put out of my Lord Hales was upon his account Authority sufficient to quote, if we would only rely on him: But, my Lords, with Submission, the Authority goeth a little higher; yet Stampford putteth the Question before the Justices; A. that is, the Master, fighteth with B. and C. the Servant taketh part with his Master, and killeth B. A. is guilty of Murder, and C. only of Manslaughter.

And that Authority is followed afterwards in the Case of Salisbury, in Plowd. Com. Fol. 100. B. with the Resolution of all the Judges in that Case, That one Man may be found guilty of Murder, and another of Manslaughter, as to the same Fact; and Stampford doth expressly say, as my Lord Chief Justice Hales quotes it out of him, That if a Man be present, but do not abet or assist, or contribute to the thing, he is totally innocent, and neither Principal nor Accessory to the Murder or Manslaughter.

My Lords, We do not find that our Law hath any way prohibited a Man to keep Company with one that oweth another a Spleen; sure there should be some warning given about it, if that was the Law in such a Case. The Law goeth no farther than to caution a Man that he take care he doth not break the Law himself, that he doth not transgress the Bounds set him by the Law.

And it were a very hard Case upon a private Person if it should be otherwise; for no Law compelleth a private Person to part two that are fighting; if he doth attempt it, he doth it at his own Peril, as in that Case of A. the Master fighting with B. and C. the Servant taking part with his Master to part them, if B. be killed, C. is guilty of Manslaughter, though his Design was only to part them, because the Law putteth it not upon a private Person to do it; if it did, the Law would protect him for what he did in Obedience to it.

The Law is otherwise in the Case of a Magistrate or a Constable, who endeavoureth to part any Persons fighting, and to keep the Peace; if he happen so to kill a Man, he is totally innocent; but a private Person shall answer for it.

My Lords, I will not trouble your Lordships further; I hope it is plain that Malice is absolutely necessary to make a Man guilty of Murder, and there is no such thing in this Case stated by your Lordships; and therefore I submit the Matter to your Judgment.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I am of Council for this noble and young Lord the Prisoner at the Bar: I shall not trouble your Lordships so far as to make any Repetition of what has been said by those Gentlemen that went before me.

But there was a Case in Plowden that was cited by Mr. Hawles by the Name of Salisbury's Case; and I would crave leave to cite the Case that is next precedent; it is in that Book, Fol. 98. There, my Lords, was an Indictment for Murder against several, and among the rest against two, one for giving the Wound and the Stroke, and the other for being present and aiding the other; and they tell you how he was an Aider and an Abetter because he was present, and put the Man upon whom the Assault was made in terror, which terror was the occasion that he could not defend his Life; and made him full as much a Principal as the other that gave him his Deaths Wound. And there, my Lords, he citeth another ancient Record, which is Quarto Libro Assisarum Placito 25. of an Appeal of Murder by a Woman for the Death of her Husband against Sixteen; four whereof were Principals, and the others Accessories, where the words are Presence, Force and Aid.

How that will come up to this Case now before your Lordships, I am not to trouble you with the Consideration of, you who have heard the Evidence are best able to judge of it.

My Lords, By the same Reason and Rule that one Man may be found guilty of Murder, and another of Manslaughter; one may be found guilty

K k k k k

guilty, and the other not guilty. As for Example, if A. commandeth B. to kill C. and afterwards it repenteth him of this Command, and he countermandeth it: yet notwithstanding B. doth kill C. now B. that killed C. is guilty of Murder, but A. that countermanded it is not guilty as Accessory; for his malicious Intent did not continue till the murdering Stroke was given, and to make Murder there must be a continuing Malice till the mortal Wound given. Cases to this purpose many might be cited; but for a full Authority there is my Lord Coke in his Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 51.

My Lords, I have no more to say, but that by the same Rule; that one may be found guilty of Murder, and another of Manslaughter for the same Fact, by the same Rule, (as Circumstances may be,) the one may be found guilty of Murder, and the other not guilty at all.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to say that are of Council for the Prisoner?

Sir Tho. Powys. No, my Lord, I have nothing further to offer to your Lordships.

L. H. Stew. Have those who are of Council for the King any thing to reply to this that is said by the Council for the Prisoner?

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordships, the Question that is proposed, is this,

In a Case where a Man shall murder another, Whether those who are in his Company at the time of the Murder, are so necessarily involved in the said Crime, that they may not be separated from the Crime of the said Person, so as in some Cases to be found guilty only of Manslaughter.

My Lords, that which with all Submission we would offer to your Lordships is this; We are intrusted by their Majesties to prosecute for the Death of one of their Subjects; there hath been a Case stated to your Lordships by the Evidence which hath been given before you; That which is mentioned in this Paper has nothing certain in it, we are to imagine a Case, and suppose Facts, and then to argue what will be the Law upon those Facts supposed. When your Lordships are pleased to let us know what it is which your Lordships take to be the Fact of the Case before you, we shall be ready to speak to the Law upon that Case, as it becomes us, and as it is our Duty to do; but till the Fact be so stated by your Lordships, and declared to be that which your Lordships take to be the Fact of my Lord Mohun's Case, we think it not consistent with our Duty to enter into a Debate upon Supposals, or upon other Cases than that which is in Judgment before your Lordships.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordships then please that the Judges give their Opinion?

Mr. Sol Gen. My Lords, not to trouble your Lordships with any Repetition of what hath been said, it is my Opinion, as Mr. Attorney General has declared his, That, as this Case is stated, we are bound not to give any Answer to it, unless your Lordships will please to tell us what the Case is upon the Evidence that hath been given before you.

Mr. Serj. Thomp. My Lords, I desire to be heard one Word in this Case. I take it for granted, that your Lordships here are Judges both of Fact and Law in this Case, and you are so entirely Judges of it, that no Body can interpose in giving their Opinions in relation to your Judgments, what the Fact is, and from the Fact the Law ariseth. We, that are of Council for the King, must needs prejudice him as to the Evidence of the Fact that we have given, except we argue that which is the Fact of this particular Case, and the Law arising thereupon together; which is not necessary here, where your Lordships are Judges of both; and since you are better Judges of them, than any one else can be. Therefore we do not think it our Duty to argue upon a Case put ad extra, and obiter; and hope your Lordships will excuse us from answering what hath been said by the Council for the Prisoner; tho' I think it might be easily answered in every Point; but I shall not enter upon the debating of it. For your Lordships see what Caution we ought to have in relation to our Duty to the Government, which your Lordships will always expect we should perform as exactly as we can. When the Fact that hath been proved in this Case is stated, your Lordships then are the proper Judges what it amounteth to in point of Law, or if your Lordships desire that Council should argue it, we shall be ready to do it.

L. H. Stew. Then, my Lords the Judges, what say you to it? my Lords here expect your Opinion in this Case.

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will repeat the Question, which is this:

In a Case, where a Man shall murder another, Whether those who are in his Company are so necessarily involved in the said Crime, that they may not be separated from the Crime of the said Person, so as in some Cases to be found guilty only of Manslaughter?

My Lords, I shall not enlarge upon the Matter, but humbly offer my Opinion to your Lordships as generally as the Question. I am of Opinion, that the Crime of those who are in the Company at the time of the murder committed, may be so separated from the Crime of the Person that committeth the murder, as in some Cases they are only to be found guilty of Manslaughter. I suppose your Lordships do not expect that I should argue the Case, or explain my Opinion upon so general a Question, by particular Instances, or run into a Consideration of the different Cases that may be put upon it, therefore I only deliver this as my Opinion.

L. C. J. Treby. May it please your Lordships I am of the same Opinion; I think the Import of your Lordships Question is, Whether there may be a Case in which it is possible that one Person, who is in the Company of another at the time that he committed murder, may be guilty of Manslaughter; and my Lords, I think a Case may fall out, and may be so circumstanced, as that it may be possible, that he who did accompany the Murderer, may be guilty only of Manslaughter. Your Lordships only expect our Opinion, and therefore I will not go about to argue it.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, I shall not spend your time to repeat the Question, it hath been so so often repeated ; but I am of the same Opinion with my Lords Chief Justices, I must concur with them in it, that there may possibly be such a Case, as that when Murder is committed where others are in Company, he that doth the thing will be guilty of Murder, and those that were in Company guilty but of Manslaughter. There may be such a Case.

Earl of Carlisle. My Lords, to save your Lordships time, unless the rest of the Judges differ from those that have spoken their Opinion, I think you need not trouble them to speak to it severally.

Mr. B. Turton. We are all of the same Opinion, my Lords, we cannot differ in Opinion upon such a Case.

Earl of Monmouth. My Lords, I humbly beg your Lordships leave to propose a Question to my Lords the Judges for their Opinions.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. What is your Question, my Lord of Monmouth ?

Earl of Monmouth. My Lords, the Question is this,

A. Conscious of an Animosity between B and C, A accompanieth B where C happeneth to come, and B killeth him, whether A, without any Malice to C, or any actual Hand in his Death, be guilty of Murder ?

L. H. Stew. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to hand up your Paper, that my Lords the Judges may see it.

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. What saith your Lordship, my Lord of Mulgrave ?

Earl of Mulgrave. I only desire, that the Prisoner at the Bar, if he hath a mind to it, may have his Council speak to this Question, before the Judges answer it, as was done in the other Case.

L. Mohun. I desire, my Lords, my Council may have the Question in writing.

L. H. Stew. Make my Lord a Copy of it. One Copy was delivered by the Clerk to the Prisoner, and by him to his Council, and another to the King's Council ; and the Original was delivered to the Judges.

L. Mohun. Is it your Lordships pleasure that my Council may be heard to this Question ?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Sir T. Powys. My Lords, the Question that this noble Peer hath been pleased to propose, is this :

A Conscious of an Animosity between B and C, A accompanieth B where C happeneth to come, and B killeth him, Whether A, without any Malice to C, or any actual hand in his Death, be guilty of Murder.

My Lords, with humble Submission to your Lordships, I take it in this Case the Law is very clear, That as this Case is put, he that was in Company when the Murder was committed, under these Circumstances, is not guilty of any Crime : But without question he is not guilty of Murder.

My Lords, Malice is so absolutely necessary to Murder, either express, or that which the Law calleth Malice implied, that there can be no Case where Murder can be committed without it ; no Indictment can ever be good, unless Ex malitia sua precogitata be alledged in it ; because this is absolutely essential to Murder.

But, my Lord, if so be a Man that is present, not designing, or foreseeing that unhappy Accident that doth fall out between his Friend with whom he is in company, and another Person that came accidentally to them, tho' Malice was between those two, God forbid he should be guilty, if he did neither foresee it, nor any way acted in it.

He that is present must be involved in the Crime, either by some way aiding, abetting, or contributing to the death of the Man, or there must be some precedent Combination and Agreement to do that Act which at that time was done ; and that must be plainly and clearly proved : For his acting, his standing by innocently and harmlessly, is so great an Evidence of his not concurring, that it must be a mighty Proof of Malice that must convict that Man of a preceding Agreement to do the Fact ; and if it doth not appear plainly and manifestly, that he agreed before hand, or acted then, and abetted and contributed to the thing, I say, unless this be clear and manifest, it is no Question, but in Law, he is innocent of the Murder.

For in such a Case it is plain he never had pre-pensed Malice express, nor is there any Evidence of that which the Law calleth Malice implied ; which is when a Man killeth another without Provocation, that is, when he that doth the Act had no Provocation, or killeth an Officer in the Prosecution of his Office, That the Law calleth Malice implied. But then that is never but in the Person that did the Act, and not in the Persons who were present at that time, unless before hand they had agreed to do that Act ; and therefore they cannot be guilty of Murder.

And this, my Lords, is what I humbly offer to your Lordships Consideration, in relation to the Case put by that Noble Lord.

Mr. Hawles. Will your Lordships please to favour me with a Word on the same side with Sir Tho. Powys, and I shall be very short in the matter.

The King's Council did complain that the last Case was not fully stated, and therefore they could not speak to it ; my Lords, with Submission, this Case is fully stated, there was nothing in the other Case said of Malice between him that was murdered, and him that killed him ; but here it is said, That the Person present was not conscious of any Malice, nor had any manner of hand in the doing of it : And then with Submission, my Lords, upon the Question, Whether he was not guilty of Murder ? If this was a Special Verdict, found by 12 Men, and referred to the Judges, I do not at all doubt but their Judgment would be, That he was not guilty. For tho' in a Special Verdict, where Malice is not found, the Prisoner would be acquitted ; yet if it be expressly found in the Verdict that he did not know of any Malice between them, then, with Submission, there would be no Colour to find him guilty of any thing.

A Lord interrupted him, and said, The Case was put of one conscious of the Malice.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I beg your Pardon, I confess it is so, I did mistake it; but with Submission, that will not much alter the matter. If he was conscious, that will not make him guilty; for that Consciousness of his is no matter of Crime, if he did not act any thing, or agree to do any thing before hand, but only was in Company with the Person that had Malice against another, that will not make him guilty of any Crime whatsoever.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I shall speak but one word to it; I observe the great stress of the Case lieth upon the Word being conscious of the Malice between B and C. Now as to that with Submission, I conceive, and am of Opinion, that as this Case is, A is not guilty of Murder; and for Authority, I shall rely upon the Cases in Stampford's Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 40. And my Lord Coke's Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 51. The Case is this, If a Man happen to be in Company where Murder is committed, or Felony, and he cometh not there on purpose, or by confederacy to do it, In that Case, tho' Murder be committed, and he doth not endeavour to part them, this is no Murder in him, for he is punishable by Fine and Imprisonment, if not an Infant; but if he was an Infant, he is not punishable at all, for he is not Consufant of the Law in such a Case. But in this Case, except Malice prepensed, exprefs, or implied, be proved, without doing any thing, or abetting, he is not guilty of Murder.

L. H. Stew. Gentlemen, you that are of the King's Council, have you any thing to say to this Question?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, here is a Case put, which I hear from the Council on the other side, is certainly enough stated. My Lords, if this be stated to us, as that which is agreed to be the Fact of the present Case, we are ready to speak to it; but if this be not taken by your Lordships, to be my Lord Mohun's Case, and as such stated to us, then we must humbly beg to be excused. I know your Lordships will be tender in this matter, and as well pleased that we hold to that which we conceive to be our Duty in reference to that Station in which we serve the King, as with any forwardness in us to answer Questions: And therefore we beg your Lordships Excuse for saying nothing more to it.

Earlof Monmouth. My Lords, I did not propose it as a Case stated and agreed by your Lordships, it is only a Case particularly stated for my own Satisfaction.

Earlof Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

Earlof Mulgrave. If your Grace please, let the King's Council know, that they are not to ask you the Question, Whether the Lords are agreed what the Case is? They are to answer such Questions as are proposed, and not to ask any such Question.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, with that noble Lord's Pardon I did not ask any Question; all that I said was, That when a Case is agreed to, and stated by your Lordships to be the present Case, we would be ready to speak to it, and till we receive that Intimation from your Grace, we shall think our selves excused from giving any Answer to other Questions.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, I think we must go on, and if any Lord has any more Questions to propose, he may propose them.

Earlof Nottingham. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Nottingham.

Earlof Nottingham. Your Lordships will not certainly require of the King's Council to answer any Questions that they think improper for them to speak to, but when a Question hath been proposed by any noble Lord, to which the Council for the Prisoner hath been heard, and the King's Council think not fit to speak to it, there is nothing more requisite, but that in the presence of the Prisoner (as the Law requireth it should be) you do demand the Opinion of the Judges.

L. H. St. What say to it my Lord Chief-Justice?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will repeat the Question.

A conscious of an Animosity between B. and C. A. accompanieth B. where C. happeneth to come, and B. killeth him; Whether A. without any Malice to C. or any actual hand in his death, be guilty of Murder?

And my Lords, as this Case is stated I do conceive, that A. is not guilty of the Murder, for it appeareth the meeting was casual, and there was no Design in A. against C. and therefore though A. did know of the Malice between B. and C. yet it was not unlawful for A. to keep Company with B. but he might go with him any where, if it was not upon a Design against C. Therefore I take it as this Case is put, that C. came accidentally into the Company where A. and B. were, and then without any Design in A. B. killeth C. This is not Murder, indeed no Offence in A.

L. C. J. Treby. If it please your Lordships, as this Case is put, I think it is not an Offence of Murder or Manslaughter in A. it dependeth upon the Words as the last Question did. For the former Question was put generally, Whether there might not be a Case found or framed, wherein one might be guilty of Murder, and the other of Manslaughter. So here it dependeth upon the Word [Happeneth], which I take to signifie, (as my Lord doth) a casual coming into, or being in the Company.

Now my Lords, when B. had communicated to A. this malicious purpose to kill C. it stood uncertain, whether he to whom B. had communicated it did consent; if he had any way declared his Consent, that he would go to such a place, and stay there with B. for such a Purpose, then it had been Murder in both; but if he merely was silent, and only kept B. Company, perhaps with an intent to dissuade him from it, or possibly without any Consideration at all, and then the Person intended to be killed accidentally came by, and is killed by B. A. doing nothing towards it. In that Case, it is neither Murder nor Manslaughter in A.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, as this Case is, it seemeth to be meer accidental the coming of C. into their Company, for it is said, Happeneth to come; and so though A. did know that there was an Animosity between B. and C. yet declaring no intent of going with B. to that Purpose, but coming with B. into a place where C. accidentally came or happened to be, between whom and B. there is a Quarrel, and C. is killed; I do

I do not take it at all that A. is concerned, but meerly as any other Person that accidentally was there, and in that Case he cannot be guilty of Murder or Manslaughter, or any other Crime.

Earl of Devon. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Steward.

Earl of Devon. If the rest are of the same Opinion, you need not give them any further trouble I think.

Judges. We are of the same Opinion.

Earl of Scarborough. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Scarborough.

Earl of Scarborough. I humbly beg your Lordships Leave, that I may offer a Question to your Lordships, to be proposed to the Judges, and the Question is this:

Whether if A. heard B. threaten to kill C. and some days after A. shall be with B. upon some other Design, where C. shall pass by, or come in the place where A. and B. are, and C. shall be killed by B. A. standing by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not then being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's part against C. whether A. will be guilty of the Murder of C?

L. H. Stew. Pray, my Lord, give your Paper to the Clerk. (Which was done.)

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, doth your Lordship desire that your Council may have a Copy of this Question, and be heard to it?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord, if you please.

Then a Copy was given to him for his Council, and another to the King's Council, and a third the Judges had.

Sir Tho. Powys. Will your Lordships please to favour me with a few Words, and I shall trouble your Lordships very little, because I have said that already to your Lordships which will be an Answer to a good part of this Case? The Case is this:

Whether if A. heard B. threaten to kill C. and some Days after A. shall be with B. upon some other Design, where C. shall pass by, or come in the place where A. and B. are, and C. shall be killed by B. A. standing by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not then being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's part against C. Whether A. will be guilty of the Murder of C?

My Lord, with humble Submission we do take it, that the Law in this Case is likewise very clear, that A. is not guilty of Murder: For as this Case is put, there doth not appear (nay, the contrary doth appear) that he had any manner of Malice to this Man that was killed, nor any Hand in the killing of him: And as I said before to your Lordships, (and I hope the Judges will verifie us in that, and your Lordships will be of the same Opinion) there can be no Case wherein a Man shall be guilty of Murder, but where there is Malice against the Person so murdered, or some way abetting and assisting in the killing of him, or what the Law calleth Implied Malice.

But in this Case that is now put, there is neither express Malice, but the contrary appearing, nor any implied Malice, which is by Construction of Law; the Person that was by, and heard B. threaten C. before, yet doth no way aid or assist to the killing of him; and therefore I think, with Submission, the Law, and all our Law-Books, and Reason it self, are clear for the acquitting of A. in this Case.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I think the Resolutions that have been given in the Cases before, will warrant us in our Opinions in this, that A. is not guilty of Murder in this Case: For I think it was said by the Judges, That notwithstanding a Man knew another had a Design upon a third Person, yet it was lawful to keep Company with him, if he did not joyn with him in the Design. Now here it doth appear, that A. keepeth B. Company, but not upon that Design, for he had no Malice to C. nor had any Hand in his Death, and C. cometh in by accident into the Company or Place where they are: With Submission, my Lords, A. is totally not guilty, for there was no Malice in him; and though he was there, he was there upon his lawful Occasions; and if they two fight, the best course he can take is to stand still, and do nothing; and therefore he cannot be guilty of Murder or Manslaughter.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I have but this Word to say, His being there was lawful, C. cometh there but by accident, and when they two do fight, his not parting of them doth not make him guilty of the others Death; here is no Malice, therefore he is not guilty of Murder, and he hath done nothing towards the Fact, therefore he is not guilty of Manslaughter.

L. H. Stew. Will you say any thing to this Question, you that are of the King's Council?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we are ready to speak to the present Case, when we receive Intimation from your Lordships that what is put is the present Case.

Mr. Serj. Thomp. My Lords, if they put a Case of Fact to be argued as a Case of Law, and from time to time alledge Facts which are not in the Case before us, we cannot speak to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we are ready to argue the Case of the Prisoner at the Bar when it is stated; but till then, we humbly beg your Pardon: We think we are not bound to speak to other Cases.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Chief Justice; What say you to it?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will put the Question:

Whether if A. heard B. threaten to kill C. and some Days after A. shall be with B. upon some other Design where C. shall pass by, or come in the place where A. and B. are, and C. shall be killed by B. A. standing by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not then being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's part against C. Whether A. will be guilty of the Murder of C?

My Lords, I am of Opinion that A. in this Case will not be guilty of Murder or Manslaughter:

slaughter: For it doth not appear by the stating of the Case, that A. did consent to the Design, or in any wise contribute to the Fact.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Chief-Justice Treby.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I take this Question to be the same in Substance as to the Point in Law with the last; and am of Opinion that A. is not guilty of Murder or Manslaughter.

Mr. J. Nevill. I am of the same Opinion.

L. H. Stew. If all the rest of you are of the same Opinion, you may spare your selves the trouble of delivering it particularly.

Judges. We are all of the same Opinion.

[Then there was a little pause; and afterwards the Earl of Kingston stood up.]

Earl of Kingston. My Lords, I desire for my own private Satisfaction to know;

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed, (when the Person who knew of that Design is present) be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had the Design and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

L. H. Stew. My Lord, I must crave your Excuse, there is another Question to precede this.

Earl of Devon. My Lords, I had a Question to ask; but it being much to the same Purpose with the two last, I think it better to wave it, for there hath been given an Answer to it already.

L. H. Stew. Then, my Lord of Kingston, will you be pleased to deliver up your Paper to the Table? [Which was done.]

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, Do you desire your Council may have a Copy of this Question?

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

Earl of Mulgrave. I desire your Grace will hear the Question. Pray let it be read, that we may know what it is.

L. H. Stew. Read it.

Cl. of Crown. Readeth.

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man who happeneth to be killed, (when the Person who knew of the Design is present) be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had the Design, and killed him, though he had no actual hand in his Death?

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

Earl of Mulgrave. I think, my Lords, in a Case of this Nature we cannot be too exact: I humbly conceive that is not a proper Question to be put, therefore I move that we may adjourn to consider of it, whether it shall be put or not, if that Lord do insist upon it.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Kingston, Doth your Lordship insist of this Question being put?

Earl of Kingston. Yes, my Lords, I do, and I must insist upon it; for I think I cannot give my private Opinion in this Case without Satisfaction in it.

Lords. Then Adjourn, Adjourn.

L. H. Stew. This Court is Adjourned into the House of Lords.

Then the Lords went back to their own House in the same Order, and debated this Matter amongst themselves for about an Hour.

Between six and seven in the Evening the Lords returned into the Court in the same Order, and being seated on their Benches, and his Grace in the Chair before the Throne, they proceeded thus:

First, Proclamation was made for Silence.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Chief-Justice, and you the Judges—

L. Cornwallis. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Cornwallis.

L. Cornwallis. My Lord, Before your Grace giveth any Directions, I think you should call the Prisoner.

L. H. Stew. Is not the Prisoner at the Bar?

L. Cornwallis. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Call for the Prisoner.

Then Proclamation was made for the Governour of the Tower to bring forth the Prisoner, and he was brought as before.

L. H. Stew. I am to let you that are of Council for the King, and the Prisoner know, That if any Question be put by any of my Lords, which any of you shall not think fit to give an Answer to, my Lords will take it for granted either on the one part or on the other, that the Reason is, because it is not necessary to give any Answer; and then they will proceed to have the Answer of you, my Lords the Judges. And now for my self, I must desire your Lordships will give me leave to come down again to the Wool-Pack.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then his Grace came down, and seated himself on the Wool-Pack.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Kingston, Will you please to propose your Question?

Earl of Kingston. My Lord, my Question is this, which I desire the Judges Opinion in for my own Satisfaction:

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed, (when the Person who knew of the Design is present) be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had the Design, and killed him, though he had no actual hand in his Death?

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, Do you desire your Council may have a Copy of that Question?

L. Mohun. Yes, if your Lordships please.

L. H. Stew. Read it aloud, and deliver a Copy to my Lord.

The Question was read by the Clerk of the Crown, and one Copy of it delivered to the Prisoner's Council, and another to the King's Council, and a third to the Judges.

L. Mohun. Is it your Lordship's Pleasure, That my Council be heard to this Case?

Lords.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Sir Tho. Powys. The Case that is put my Lords is this:

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lye in wait to assault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed, (when the Person who knew of the Design is present) be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had the Design and killed him, though he had no actual hand in his Death?

My Lords, I shall not insist upon the same Privilege that the King's Council did even now do, to decline speaking to any Case that your Lordships shall put. But I hope your Lordships will permit me to say, That I do not admit this to be the Case of my Lord Mohun, and I hope that my speaking to it shall not be taken as any Admission that this is his Case. But as this Case is put with that allowance, that I speak to it not as his Case, I do take it, that this Person thus present at the killing of the third Man is not guilty of Murder.

My Lords, there are but two Circumstances in the Case that can draw him into any danger:

The First is, That he knew another Person had a Design to make an Assault upon a third Man. And,

The Second is, That he who had the Knowledge of this Design, was also present when upon that Assault that third Person happened to be killed.

But my Lords, I do take it, that in this Case neither of these Ingredients will make this Man guilty of Murder.

As to the First, The knowing that a Man has a Design to make an Assault upon a third Person, that taken by it self is no Crime. It frequently happeneth; that a Man heareth what others threaten, that they will assault and beat such an one, I may know that another doth so design, and that he will watch his Opportunity for the doing of it, and yet my meer Knowledge, my meer knowing of it, doth not make me guilty of any Crime, tho' I do not endeavour to prevent it.

I confess, it doth become a good Man upon such Knowledge to do all that he can to prevent such beginning of Mischief, but if he doth not prevent it, that is no Crime.

The Second Matter is, That tho' he did know of this Design, he was also so unfortunate as not to prevent it; nay more, he was present when the Assault was made, and that Assault is attended with the Death of the Party assaulted, but he never acted in it, never abetted it. Take all this together, and yet he is not guilty of Murder, nay, perhaps not of any Crime, at most only of a Misdemeanour.

For it is no more than this: I knew another Person did intend to assault a third Man, I was present when he did assault him, but did not prevent it either before he made it, tho' I knew he designed it, nor whilst he was making the Assault upon which the Man is killed. That is all that this thing doth amount to, and no Man can say with humble Submission, That this can involve me in the Crime of Murder.

It is true, if I command A. to beat C. and he according to my Command doth fall upon him, and so beat him, that he dieth; this maketh me guilty of his Death, because what is done by that Command of mine is my doing; therefore tho' I only commanded him to beat him, yet he dying upon that beating, which was made pursuant to my Command, I that gave the Command must answer for it, and am guilty of all that followeth thereupon.

But if I only know, that another Person designeth to do such a thing, and am neither commanding, aiding nor assisting in the doing of it, but only present at the time, but did not interpose to prevent it; that doth not make me such an Agent in this matter, as that I should be any ways guilty of his Death if it doth ensue. I take it this Case cometh to no more than this, there is no Malice precedent, no sort of abetting, aiding or assisting, but a bare declining to prevent the Assault, and that will not amount to any thing that is Capital; if it be any Offence, it can only be construed as a Misdemeanour, but neither Murder, nor Manslaughter.

Mr. Hawles. If your Lordships please to spare me one word on the same side: It is no manner of Crime for a Man to know, that another doth design to lie in wait to murder a third Person, much less to assault him.

There is but one Case that I know of in Law, where the Knowledge of an ill Design without discovery and endeavour to prevent it, is an Offence, and that is in the Case of High-Treason; and yet even there the bare Knowledge doth not make a Man guilty of Treason: And it was a hard Case if it should, for it is not in the Power of any innocent Man to say, that he shall not know of an ill Design, either of Murder, or High-Treason.

It is true, in the Case of Treason, if I conceal it, it is a Crime, but it is not Treason, but only misprision of Treason; which is forfeiture of Lands, and perpetual Confinement in Prison during my Life: But it doth not extend to any other matter; for tho' I know, and do conceal it, that is no manner of Crime at all, tho that is further than this Case putteth it; for it only goeth to the knowing, and not to the concealing.

And my Lords, with Submission, this would be likewise a hard Case if the Law was otherwise; For sometimes a Man may apprehend he knoweth of a Design, when there is no such thing designed. Your Lordships know where a certain Gentleman said he would kill any Man that did oppose him, when he neither designed it, nor executed any such purpose: And in such a Case, tho' it had been well done of the Person that heard of the Design, to have gone and informed the third Person (and if he had, I believe your Lordships would have had no occasion of a Tryal at this time, for it might have been determined another way) yet his not doing it is not a Crime.

Then further my Lords, a Person's being present at such a time is his misfortune, but not at all his fault; he can no more help the Action, than he could the ill Design, or his own Knowledge of that Design. It is a complicated misfortune, both to know it, and be present at the Execution of it; but without having any hand in it, it can be no Offence: For indeed, it is as to him no more than a Man's being present that did not know of such a Design. And if this was a Special Verdict, upon an Indictment for Murder, I doubt not but my Lords the Judges would give give their Judgment, that the Defendant was not guilty.

Mr. Price. I have only this word to add, my Lords; I do take it, That the bare privy of this design, with the bare personal Presence of him that was so privy when this Act is committed by another Man, will not amount to make him principal; and so he will not be guilty of Murder: For we find, that to make a Man principal in Murder, there must be aiding and abetting, and only being present will not do it. Now the aiding and abetting must be, either by commanding or assisting, or putting the Person assaulted in Terror and Fear, or he must be there ready, and designing to assist in case of Opposition. These are Facts that the Law requireth to the making a Man principal in Murder; and bare privy, with a mind to Assault, and bare Presence, when upon the Assault the Man is killed, will not amount to make a Man Principal, and consequently guilty of Murder.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, Do you think fit to say any thing to what the Council for the Prisoner have alledged?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Nor no other of the King's Council?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Are ye all of that mind?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I am of that mind, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. And so am I.

L. H. Stew. Then my Lord Chief Justice, what say you to it?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will repeat the Question:

Whether a person knowing of the design of another to lye in wait to assault a third Man who happeneth to be killed (when the person who knew of the Design is present) be guilty in Law of the same Crime, with the party who had the Design and killed him, tho' he had no actual hand in his Death?

My Lords, I am of Opinion this is no Murder nor Manslaughter, he that knew of the Design of assaulting, only happened to be present when the Assault was made, and the Party killed; but if he did not contribute to his Death, he is not guilty of Murder. This Question is much to the same effect with the Question that was put before: But if the Person that knew of this Design did advise it, or agree to it, or lay in wait for it, or resolv'd to meet the third Person that was killed, with him that killed him, it would be Murder: But as this Case is put, it is neither Murder nor Manslaughter.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I am humbly of the same Opinion as this Case is put. The Person to whom this matter of the Design to lye in wait to assault another is communicated, is only passive; he only receiveth the notice of it, and doth nothing towards the Fact. But if by going to the place, directing, perswading, promising Assistance, or encouraging, he had discovered his Consent, or had layen in wait himself, then he had been guilty: But if he did nothing, but only receive this notice, and then the Person assaulted happened to come by, and is killed in his Presence, this is but an Accident, and doth not involve him in the Murder. And I think in Effect, it is the same with the second Question that was proposed. There it was put, of one that had an Animosity against another, here it is put, of one that lay in wait to assault him; There it was put, of accompanying him to the place where the Party was killed; here it is, of his being killed in his Presence: So that the Resolution must be the same in this Case that was given in that.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, I shall not spend any of your Lordships time. I am of the same Opinion with my Lords that spoke before, and for the Reasons that they have given.

L. H. Stew. If they are all of the same Opinion, I suppose your Lordships will not require their particular delivering it.

Lords. No, no.

Judges. We are all of the same Opinion.

L. H. Stew. I am now to know of your Lordships, whether there be any of you that have any more Questions to ask?

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Nottingham?

Earl of Nottingham. The Question that I have to propose to your Lordship is the same that hath been already offered to you, but with some little Variation; for I do find, my Lords, the Judges do interpret this Persons being killed in the Presence of another, to be upon an accidental meeting. I would propose to your Lordships, that the Judges may answer what the Law would be, when a Person, knowing of the Design of another to lye in wait to assault a third Man, accompanieth him at that time that that Design is to be executed, Whether it be the same Crime in the one as the other?

L. H. Stew. If your Lordship have your Question in Writing, pray deliver it in.

Earl of Nottingham. I will immediately, my Lord.

(Then he did put it in Writing.)

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordship please that it may be handed to the Table.

(Which was done.)

L. H. Stew. Read it.

Cl of Crown. Readeth.

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man, and accompanying him in that Design, if it shall happen that the third Person be killed at that time in the presence of him who knew of that Design, and accompanied the other in it, be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had that Design and killed him, though he had no actual hand in his Death?

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, Do you desire a Copy of this?

L. Mohun. Yes, if your Lordships please.

L. H. Stew. Carry my Lord one.

(Then Copies were deliver'd as before.)

L. H. Stew. Well, Sir, What say you to that Question?

Sir Tho. Powys. The Case that is now propounded is this:

Whether

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to Assault a third Man, and accompanying him in that Design, if it shall happen that the third Person be killed at that time in the presence of him who knew of that Design, and accompanied the other in it, be Guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had the Design, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

My Lords, I shall not, (though I am of Council for this Noble Lord) decline or refuse Speaking to this Question; still, my Lords, with that saving which I know your Lordships will allow me; that I am very far from admitting that this which goeth much further than the last Case, is the Case of my Lord Mohun. Whether your Lordships will permit the King's Council who have declined Speaking to any of the Cases hitherto, as not being, as they pretend, my Lord's Case; now to speak to this which we do much less admit to be so, than they did the others, will be in your Lordships Pleasure to determine, but I shall not decline to speak to it with that Saving.

And truly, my Lords, with humble Submission, I do take it, that as this Case is put, the Party who accompanied the other in such manner as in this Case it is stated, is not Guilty of Murder. I know it was intended by that Noble Lord who proposed the Question, that it should be admitted that beyond all doubt the Fact was so as here it is stated; and then the Question is, What the Law will be where the Fact is thus admitted and agreed to on all sides: And if there was such a Case, (for my Lords I speak to this as a Case at large) if there was such a Case where the Fact is beyond all Question made out to be so as it is here Stated; yet I take it that in a Case of Life, which is the Case now before your Lordships, the Party will not be Guilty of Murder.

My Lords, here is a further Circumstance added in this Case than what hath as yet been inserted into any of the other Cases, that is, That the Party knoweth of the design of him that he accompanieth to Assault a third Man, and doth accompany him in this Design, and then is present when the Design is executed; yet all these together, will not, as I humbly conceive, with Submission to your Lordships Judgment, make this to be Murder, because it doth not appear in this Case that he did accompany him with an Intention to execute this matter, or to aid and assist him in the doing of it: There is no such Circumstance in the Case, and 'tis that which must be the thing that will draw him in to be guilty of Murder.

For if two Men (to put a Case which I hope I may do with your Lordships Pardon to explain my self) should be Travelling upon the way, and one of the Persons should acquaint the other, that at such an Inn, there is a Servant that he is resolved to Beat, and this Person that has this matter imparted to him doth accompany the other in the Journey, (which I take it answereth the knowing the Design and accompanying him in the Design) and when they come to the Inn the thing is executed in the presence of the Party that knew of such a Design, and it doth fall out that Death doth ensue upon it, unless he that did accompany him did some way or other act, contribute, or assist in the doing of it, it doth still remain a thing whereof he had only Privy and Knowledge, which he had done well, (especially in regard of the Consequence of it) to have prevented. And he is highly blameable, that he would accompany a Man who had such a Design to do an unlawful Act, and did not prevent him from executing of it.

All this is blameable in him, but it will not, as I conceive, be Murder in him; for I must insist upon that in point of Law, that to make any thing Murder, there must be preperised Malice in the Person that is to be found Guilty of it, or some precedent Agreement to do it, or some Act of Aiding or Assisting of the Person who doth it; but as this Case is, here is nothing of Malice doth appear, or that the Person who accompanied the other in his Design had any sort of Malice against the Person Assaulted. And it doth not appear, that he did any way assist in the doing of it. He was present at the time when the other Executed the Design he had imparted to him, but he never joyned in it, nor had any Malice precedent, nor did assist or do any Act at that time; and therefore I take it in this Case (which, as I said,) I am very far from admitting to be my Lord Mohun's Case, that the Party who accompanied the other is not Guilty.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, Though who are of Council for this Noble Lord, the Prisoner, do not think this Case that is put to be his Case, for with Submission, if the Indictment be looked upon, your Lordship will find—

L. H. Stew. Sir I must stop you there, you are not to tell my Lords what your Opinion is as to the Fact, for of that my Lords are the Judges, you are to take the Case fairly, as a Case put, and you are to inform my Lords what the Law, in your Opinion, would be upon such Case. It is not before you, but before my Lords only, to consider whether this be applicable to my Lord Mohun's Case or not.

Mr. Hawles. If your Lordship please, I shall observe your Directions in that Matter, and with humble Submission this is not Murder in him who accompanieth the other, as this Case is put; for in every Case of Murder the Indictment must be either that he actually killed him, or aided and assisted him that did kill him. But, with Submission, there is neither of these in this Case.

He did know of the Design, there is no Crime: he did accompany him in it, that is, he bore him Company at that time; he went with him to the place where he Executed his Design, but he did nothing when he came there to further, promote, or encourage the Execution of it; and therefore it can never make him Principal, nor Accessory to the Murder.

Mr. Price. I shall only say this, my Words, that I take it, that the bare going with him in this Design without doing any Act, doth not involve him in the Confederacy, as Aiding and Abetting. Something must be done or said, either he must assist or advise, or otherwise he cannot be Principal, and consequently cannot be guilty of this Murder.

L11111

L. H. Stew.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, have you any thing to say to this ?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we that are of the King's Council do not desire to be heard to this Case neither.

L. H. Steward. I do not hear you, Sir, what you say ?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not desire to speak to it.

L. H. Stew. Then my Lord Chief Justice.

L. C. J. Holt. This is the Question :

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to Assault a third Man, and accompanying him in that Design, if it shall happen, that the Third Person be Killed at that time in the Presence of him who knew that Design, and accompanied the other in it, be Guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had that Design, and Killed him though he had no actual Hand in his Death ?

My Lords, as for this last, I desire to make some Observations upon the Words, Had no actual Hand. By these Words, I suppose, is meant he did not draw his Sword, or lay any Hand upon the Person slain, or give any actual Assistance to the other Person at that time when the Third Person is slain, but was only in Company, and a Looker on.

E. of Nottingham. My meaning in those Words is, That with his Hand he gave no Stroke.

L. C. J. Holt. That my Lords, I take to be the meaning, he did not give an actual Stroke, nor held the Person whilst the other Killed him, nor used any Violence.

Now, I am of Opinion, my Lords, that this is Murder in the Person that did accompany the other in the Design. For he being acquainted with the Design, and knowing of the Intention of the Party to Commit Murder, or do an unlawful Act, upon which Death might ensue, accompanying him in that Design, he shews an Approbation of it, and gives him greater Courage to put it in Execution. Which is an Aiding, Abetting, Assisting and Comforting, which are the Words used in such Indictments, and so my Humble Opinion is, it is Murder in that Person that accompanied the other, as well as in him that did the Fact.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, as this Case is, I think the accompanying of him in that Design (which are the effectual Words upon which the Question turneth) is Murder.

Here is first of all the Party that designeth the Assault, and he doth, pursuant to that Design, make this Assault, and thereupon doth Kill the Third Man, this undoubtedly is Murder in him, for here was Malice prepenfed, and intent of Bodily Hurt to the Party, and in pursuance of this Intent, Death ensueth, this is unquestionably Murder in him.

Then the Question is, What Crime it is in him to whom this is made known, and who accompanied the other in that Design, knowing of it. I take this to be a Consent to the Design, and to the Execution of it. It is more than knowing and not revealing of it, though that was his Duty to have done, (and so the Council for the noble Lord did admit, that it was a Misdemeanor in him not to hinder such a breach of the Peace.)

But here I say is more than that : He goeth with him to the place, and accompanieth him in order to the executing the Design, and this is an Aiding and Abetting of it. If a Man say to another, I intend to assault and beat such a one, come along with me, stand by me, and see it done ; and the other consenteth, and accordingly goeth along with him, and accompanieth him whilst he beats and kills the Man. This is an Approving, Encouraging, and Emboldening of him in his mischievous Purpose, and shews such concurring Malice in that other Person, as renders him guilty of the same Crime with him that with his Hand and Weapon beat and killed the Man.

Mr. J. Nevil. My Lords, as this Case is, and as I take the Law to be, this is murder. It is a Case of one's lying in wait, and another Person doth accompany him in the Design, he that did design the lying in wait having told it to him, and then he is present at the Execution. I take it as Law, if the Party is killed, he that is present, and cometh with the other upon that Design, shall be taken to come to assist or abet the other, or defend him if any thing of opposition should happen, and that I take to be Murder.

L. H. S. Are you all of the same Opinion ?

Judges. We are all of that Opinion, it is Murder in both in that Case.

E. of Devon. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Steward.

E. of Devon. My Lords, I desire they may all give their Reasons, as well as their Opinions, as this Case is.

Mr. J. Gregory. My Lords, I am humbly of the same Opinion with my Lords Chief Justices that spoke before me, that this is Murder, and my Reason is this : First, He knew of the Design, which was an unlawful Design ; then he accompanied him as this Case is put, not only to the Place, but in the Design, which differs the Case from his being present by Accident ; for by his going along with him he doth encourage him to do that, which perhaps singly the other would not venture upon, and going and being present when the Design is executed, upon which the Man is slain ; I take it he is as much guilty as the Person that strook the Stroke in point of Law.

Mr. J. Eyres. My Lords, I am humbly of the same Opinion, I take it to be murder in him that knew the Design, and did accompany the other in it, though he did nothing at all towards the killing of the Man.

For, my Lords, it is the Intention of the Party that diversifieth the Act. If he came there with an ill Intention, and to assist him if need did require, as it is plain he did if he did accompany him in the Design, which is a strong Evidence of the Intention : And my Lords, Nature hath allowed no Man a Casement into anothers Heart, and therefore we can judge of no Mans Intention, but by Circumstances of the Fact appearing without ; and then I say, if the Fact be so apparently from the Circumstances of it, that he knew of the Design, and accompanied him in it, it is a strong Evidence that he came to assist him ; and though he doth nothing actually in the Matter, yet being present to assist him if Occasion did require, it is plain he did aid and abet him in the Action, and so it is as much murder murder in him, as in the other that gave the Stroke.

Mr. B. Turton. My Lords, I am humbly of the same Opinion; the thing that differeth this from the former Case is, That this Person was in the Design with the other, for that, my Lords, I take to be accompanying him in the Design in order to the Execution of it, for bare Privy and Knowledge of the Design would not do it; but if he be with him at the time, and accompany in order to the Execution, that maketh him as much Criminal, as he that did actually occasion the Death of the Person, for he was present in the Company, and ready to assist him in the Evil Design, which I conceive is as much murder as the other.

Mr. B. Powell. My Lords, I am of Opinion, as this Case is now put, That this is murder in both, and my Reason is this: Where one Person is privy to a Design of Felony, or committing some Personal Violence as this Case is, and is not only privy to it, but goeth along with him, and accompanieth him in putting this Design in Execution, though he may not think it will extend so far as Death, but doth only intend Beating, and hath no Personal Hand, or doth otherwise contribute; but by his being with the other Person when he executeth his Design of Assaulting, and the Party beaten dieth, they are both guilty of murder.

L. Mohun. My Lords, Will your Lordships give leave, that my Council may answer some things that the Judges have said?

L. H. Stew. No my Lord, you must not Reply after the Judges have given their Opinions. Have any of your Lordships any more Questions to propose?

L. Cornwallis. My Lords, I have one.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Cornwallis.

L. Cornwallis. My Lords, I am very sorry to have occasion to ask any Questions in this Case, but I humbly desire a Question may be answered by the Judges, which is this:

If a Person be by, named William, when Thomas said, He would stab John, upon which William said, He would stand by his Friend, and afterwards Thomas doth actually murder John, and William is present at the same Murder: Whether the Law will make William equally guilty with Thomas, or what Crime William is guilty of?

L. H. Stew. Pray deliver in your Paper, my Lord.

It was deliver'd in, and read by the Clerk of the Crown, and Copies given of it as before.

L. H. Stew. What say you to this Question, Gentlemen?

Sir T. Pewys. May it please your Lordships, this Question runneth thus:

If a Person be by, named William, when Thomas said he would stab John; upon which William said, he would stand by his Friend; and afterwards Thomas doth actually murder John, and William is present at the Murder; Whether the Law will make William equally guilty with Thomas, or what Crime William is guilty of?

My Lords, I do not question but many Cases may be put which will be plainly Murder, and if this Case should be attended with Fact equal to the state of this Case, I believe it will amount to Murder. But upon this difference the Resolution of it will depend, and every Case must stand upon its own Circumstances.

If a Person do generally say, I am fully resolved, I will stab such a Man, and say so without condition or limitation, that he will do it; and another doth declare his Intention to assist and aid him, by saying, I will stand by you in it, and afterwards the thing is executed in his Presence, who so concurred; I do take it, that that is an Evidence that he is equally guilty with the other.

But on the other hand, if a Man say, I will stab such a one if he oppose me in such a Design, and so maketh his Resolution conditional, and the Person that is present doth say, I will stand by you in it, that is in your doing it, if you are opposed in such a particular matter; My Lords, with submission, if he is not opposed in that particular Thing or Design upon which he did say he would stab him, but if he doth afterwards, upon some other occasion different from the former, and not relating to what he was talking of before; or upon some other Provocation, stab him, and the other Person happeneth only to be present, I take it, that the Words which he spoke with a limitation to a particular matter, will not make him liable to the Guilt of the Murder that is committed upon quite another account.

The Words, Standing by him, are capable of two Senses; but I would not, in so serious a matter as this, offer to put a Jocular Sense upon them, as if it was meant he would stand by and not meddle; but I take it, that such a Case as this will turn upon the manner of the Man's engaging himself; if he engaged to stand by him in a particular matter, and the other doth stab the threatened Person afterwards, not upon that particular occasion, but upon another account, and he happeneth only to be by, these words will not draw him in, though they should be well proved to be spoken, so as to involve him in the guilt of that Murder.

For the Law is favourable to a Man in the Case of Life, and will judge according to the Intention of the Party; and he having not abetted or contributed to the Fact, his Words shall not be carried to his Prejudice, further than his Intention, or farther than the concomitant Circumstances of the Matter will make them plainly import.

This Case is put generally, and without restraint; and there is no question but many Cases may be put that will undoubtedly be Murder; but every Case must, as I said, stand and fall by its own Circumstances.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I think the Case as it is put single, and upon these Circumstances, would be Murder; and my reason is this, The Person that saith he will stand by a Man, who saith he will kill or stab another, is as much guilty as that Man himself, and will be thought as malicious; but if it should happen that between the Words pronounced, and the Murder committed, that the Person that saith he will stand by his Friend, cometh to have a friendship and kindness for the Party that is threatned to be killed, and upon meeting him caresses him extremely, and there being no Malice continuing (as there must be to the time of the stroke given, to make Murder) but he happeneth to be killed by that other, suddenly in his presence, those words will not make him guilty of Murder; but as the Case is put, I think it is Murder.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I shall not take upon me to trouble your Lordships with making a Case, but as this Case is put without any Condition, or other Circumstance annexed to it, I think it will be Murder.

L. H. Stew. There will be no need to ask the King's Council upon this Question whether they will speak to it, because the Council for the Prisoner agree it to be Murder; Therefore if your Lordships please, we may now proceed to ask the Judges Opinions; And first, What say you, my Lord Chief Justice?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lords, the Question is this.

If a Person be by, named William, when Thomas said he would stab John, upon which William said he would stand by his Friend, and afterwards Thomas doth actually Murder John, and William is present at the same Murder, Whether the Law will make William Guilty with Thomas; or what Crime William is Guilty of?

My Lords, I am of Opinion that this is a great evidence of Murder in William, that was thus actually by. I cannot say it is Murder, as the Case is put; but upon such an Evidence, Fact is to be left to the Conscience of a Jury in the Case of a Commoner, or the Conscience of the Peers in the Case of a Peer.

For when William said he would stand by his Friend, who said he would Stab John, That is plainly a Consent, or at least such an Expression, from which, a Consent to the Stabbing of him may be inferred.

Then afterwards it seemeth Thomas actually murdereth John, and William was present. Now if William was designedly present with the other that committed the Murder, then it is plain it will be Murder in William, but if there be no Evidence to prove upon what account he was present, it may be presumed he was present in pursuance of his former Agreement, so that it may be Murder, or not Murder, as Circumstances may happen upon the Evidence; if he was present in pursuance of his Promise, then no doubt it is Murder; But if he did not meet in pursuance of that Agreement, it may not be Murder. But this is all Matter of Evidence, and that rests upon the Consciences of those that are to Try the Prisoner.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I am of Opinion that this is Evidence, and great Evidence of Murder, the Fact consisteth of Two Parts.

First, Here was a deliberate Expression of his Intention, that he would stand by his Friend Thomas, when his Friend Thomas had said before he would Stab John, and this I take properly to be Interpreted, and understood as a Promise of Abetting him in the Murder he would commit; for, I presume, standing by him in this Case to be meant in a grave Sense, signifying that he would befriend, and if there should be occasion, defend and support Thomas in what he resolv'd to do.

Secondly, He was present at the Stabbing, which was before Designed and Spoken of: Now I think, his being present when that Resolution of his Friend was executed, coupled with his preceeding Declaration of his Intention, is a strong Evidence of Murder.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, the Question I take to be, Whether the Law of England saith William is Guilty of this Murder? Truly, my Lords, I must say as my Lords have said before, that as this Case is, This is a very strong Evidence of Murder: For when he doth say, That he will Murder such a Man, and the other saith, he will stand by him, in the common acceptance of those Words, it is taken, that he doth then agree with him in that Design, which he declareth to be to Stab John.

But then it seemeth to me truly, that this Case is not put full, how long it was afterwards that the Fact was done, and what Circumstances attended it; for if any Circumstance happened afterwards that did amount to a Countermand of this Promise, or any thing thing interposed to interrupt it, that this Agreement was not performed, perhaps the Case might not be Murder, but still it is Evidence, so far as your Lordships may judge upon the Circumstances that attend it, whether it be Murder or no. But to declare a further Opinion, as this Case is put, truly I cannot.

Mr. J. Gregory. My Lords, I do upon this Case humbly conceive, there is a little difference from the former, only there it is put positively but here as Evidence. Now, my Lords, I do humbly conceive that in common Discourse, I will stand by my Friend, is, I will assist my Friend. If my Friend should say, I will Kill such a Man, or I will do any other Act, and I say I will stand by him, I think the import of the Words is, I will assist him in it.

My Lords, As to the latter part, as this Case is put, for I can go no further, it doth not appear, whether when the Man was killed, he came by accident, or in pursuance of his Agreement, knowing of the Design. Now that is but matter of Evidence, if he came by Accident it will not be Murder, but if he came with Design, no doubt it is Murder in one as well as in the other.

E. of Mulgrave. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

E. of Mulgrave. If any of my Lords desire that the rest of the Judges should give their Opinion, it is fit they should be heard; but if no Lord doth desire it, and they say they are of the same Opinion without any more to do, because it may save a great deal of time, I desire your Grace may only ask them, Whether they agree in their Opinions with those that went before?

L. Cornwallis. My Lords, I humbly desire the Judges may all speak.

Lords. Go on then.

Mr. J. Eyres. My Lords, I humbly conceive this is a Question of Fact, and not of Law, and it is a very strong Evidence, if a Man hear another say he will Stab such a Man, and he saith he will stand by his Friend, and accompanieth him him at the time when the Fact is done, it is a strong Evidence, that he came with a murderous intent with his Friend ; and doth as much manifest his Intention to commit Murder, as if he had actually given the Wound, and a great Evidence to involve him in the Crime, as much as the Person that gave the Stroke.

Mr. B. Turton. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion with my Lords and my Brothers that have spoke before me ; my Lords, I confess I do not think it cometh up so close to the matter as the Question that was put last before ; for this, as my Brother Eyres saith, is rather a Question of Fact and Evidence, than Law. But certainly a very strong Evidence it is of the Intention of that Party that was present when the other said he would Stab the third Person, and his going away presently, and accompanying him when the Stab was given, and Murder done, I say his Presence after this Determination is a very great Evidence, that it was done in pursuance of that Agreement : It is a matter of Fact which your Lordships will determine, according as the Circumstances appear before you, which may vary the Resolution one way or other.

Mr. B. Powell. My Lords, I am of Opinion as this Case is put, that it may be Murder or not Murder, according to the Concomitant Circumstances. If a Man say, I will Stab such a one, and another say he will stand by him, and afterwards when he is with his Friend, the Man is stabbed, if that is at some distance of time from the Words speaking, and the meeting be accidental, or other Facts happen that may alter the Case, it may receive another Determination. But if after this is said there be any immediate going to look after this Man, or they be near the way where this Man is to come, and then he is killed ; this is a mighty strong Evidence that something was done in pursuance of this Resolution, and that the one went along with the other to countenance him in the Action.

L. H. Stew. Have any of my Lords any other Questions to propose ?

Lords. No.

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords, If there had been any other Questions proposed by any other Lords, I would have staid till they had all been over ; but I see their Lordships are at an end with their Questions : I have one which I think is nearer the Case than any has been yet, and of more Importance to the Matter in Hand, and more fit for the Council to inform you in, and for your Lordships to ask, and the Judges to answer. The Question is this :

If A. accompanieth B. in an unlawful Action, in which C. is not concerned, and C. happeneth to come in the way of B. after the first Action is fully over, and happeneth to be killed by B. without the Assistance of A. Whether A. is guilty of that Man's Murder ?

This Question was banded to the Table, read by the Clerk, and Copies given as before.

L. H. Stew. What say you to it Gentlemen, who are of Council for the Prisoner ?

Sir Tho. Powys. May it please your Lordships, I will not trouble your Lordships with the repeating of the Case again, because my Copy is agreeable with what was read at the Table : Nor shall I trouble your Lordships with many Words upon this Case, because I take it, the Law is very plain.

If two Persons accompany each other to do an unlawful Act, and in the Execution of that unlawful Act, one of them doth go beyond what was first designed, and a third Man is killed whilst they are in Execution of that Act, though the one did the Fact, and the other did not immediately contribute thereto, yet he being joyned with him in the unlawful Action, upon which this doth ensue, he is answerable for all the ill Consequences of it ; the Law herein is clear according to the Case that was put at first of two Persons going together to rob a Park and steal Deer.

But if that unlawful Action be executed, or the two Persons who joyned in the Design have totally desisted from it, or are disappointed in it, if afterwards when they are together upon some other Occasion, it happeneth that one of them killeth another Man, but his Friend no way aided him or assisted him in the doing of it, your Lordships and the Law will separate these Persons who were at first joyned together for another Purpose ; and will distinguish between them in this new Matter that is subsequent to the former Agreement, though they were in Company together.

Because in the first Case, he that joyned in an ill Action must look to himself, and be answerable for all that followeth thereon : In the second Case, he is in no fault at all, it is only his Misfortune to be in ill Company if he had no Hand in the Fact. This the Law is very plain in, and therefore I shall not trouble your Lordships further with speaking to it.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I would only add one short Word ; There is but this one Difference between an Accessory and a Principal ; The Principal is always present, the Accessory is always absent. And I would only put you one Case of an Accessory in Felony out of my Lord Coke ; he saith, It must be the same Numerical thing in which they are joyned, and therefore if A. bid B. rob the Vintner's Boy of Plate as he cometh to a Gentleman's Chamber to bring Wine, but B. doth not pursue the Instructions, but breaketh into the Vintner's House, and stealeth the Plate there ; this is a different matter, it is not the same thing wherein A. and B. agreed at first, and A. is no way concerned in it.

The same Law is, if A. and B. agree to kill C. and B. killeth D. tho' A. be present, it will not be Murder in A ; for the Agreement was for the killing of C. and not of D.

My Lords, as this Case is put, they did agree in the unlawful Act, but that Matter was over, and there is no Agreement as to the other Matter, nor is that pursuant to the Matter agreed upon ; and therefore the Presence of the Party that agreed to the unlawful Act doth not make him guilty of Murder, unless he agree to that too.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I have but one Word on the same side. I take it, that when a Man is doing an unlawful Act, there is an inseparable Incident that doth attend it, which is Malice implied. And this is so inseparable, that when, his ill Design is at an end, his Malice is at an end too, and hath no being, and therefore if he entereth upon an ill Design afterwards, tho' another be present that was joined with him in the ill former Design, yet his Malice who was so joined, being coupled with the ill Design that is over, must be gone too; and there is no Malice in his being barely present. And therefore for that Reason, he that was aiding and assisting before cannot be principal in such a sudden Act as this new one is, and consequently cannot be guilty of Murder, or of Manslaughter.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, Do you, or any of the King's Council think fit to say any thing to this Question?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we that are of the King's Council do not think we have any occasion to be heard to this Question.

L. H. Stew. Then my Lords the Judges, what say you to it?

L. C. J. Hk. If your Lordships please, I will again repeat the Question, it is this:

If A. accompanieth B. in an unlawful Action, in which C. is not concerned, and C. happeneth to come in the way of B. after the first Action (that is the unlawful Action, I suppose) is fully over, and happeneth to be killed by B. without the Assistance of A. Whether A. is guilty of that Man's Murder?

And I do humbly conceive with great clearness, That A. is not guilty at all. For here is no Relation to the first unlawful Act that he was engaged in, but that is all over and determined; and then C. cometh in the presence of B. who killeth him, and of A. who had no knowledge of any Malice between them, or any Design of his Death. This is merely accidental, and doth not depend upon the first unlawful Action; and therefore A. is not guilty.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I think there can be no difference of Opinions in this Case: For it is plain there was an unlawful Action in which they did agree, (as a Riot or Assault to beat or wound a Man or the like) and if Death had ensued, they both had been guilty of Murder, as well he that looked on, as he that gave the mortal Wound. But then the Question addeth further, That the Action to which they agreed was fully over, and there only happeneth to be a continuance of their Presence together; and there being an old Grudge between one of the Parties and a third Man, and the Party who had that old Grudge, meeting with his Enemy, executeth it then upon him, and murdereth him; this doth in no sort affect the other that was present, and had joined in the former unlawful Action that was over. In the former, he did joyn and concur, and therefore if Death had ensued, they had been both guilty: In the latter, he did not joyn and concur; and therefore though Murder did happen in his Presence and Company, he is not guilty, but only the Party that actually killed is.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion.

L. H. Stew. If you are all of the same Opinion, I think you need say no more.

Judges. We are all of the same Opinion, my Lords

L. H. Stew. My Lords, all the Judges are of the same Opinion; and now I think it is your Lordships Resolution to adjourn to the House.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. Stew. This Court is Adjourned to the House of Lords.

And then the Lords returned to their House in the same Order, and there presently Adjourned till the next Morning.

Die Sabbati Quarto Februarii 1692.

ABout four of the Clock in the Afternoon, the Lords came from their House in the former Order into the Court in Westminster Hall; and being seated on their Benches, and his Grace the Lord High-Steward in the Chair before the Throne, Proclamation was made for Silence; and the Judgment of the Peers was demanded, and delivered in this manner.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, Your Lordships have now heard all the Evidence both against the Prisoner and for him: The next thing is your Lordships Judgment, and for that the Method is this, Your Lordships Opinions are to be delivered in the absence of the Prisoner. The Question that your Lordships are to deliver your Opinion about will be this:

Whether my Lord Mohun be guilty of the Murder of William Mountford, whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?

The Order of delivering your Opinions must be, to begin with the youngest Baron, and so upwards; and therefore I must desire your Lordships to allow me to take your Judgments distinctly, and that I may write them down.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Lemster, is my Lord Mohun guilty of the Murder whereof he standeth indicted, or not guilty?

The Lord Lemster stood up in his Place uncovered, and laying his Right-hand on his Breast, pronounced his Judgment thus:

L. Lemster. Not guilty upon my Honour.

The same Question was severally asked of all the Lords, who in the same Form delivered their Opinions as followeth:

L. Capell. Guilty upon my Honour.

Duke of Somerset. Not guilty upon my Honour.
Duke of Norfolk. Not guilty upon my Honour.
L. H. Stew. My Lord Privy Seal, &c.
Earl of Pembroke. Not Guilty upon my Honour.
Then his Grace the Lord High Steward stood up uncovered, and laying his Right-Hand upon his Breast, pronounced his Grace's own Judgment thus :
L. H. Stew. My Opinion is, That my Lord Mohun is not guilty, upon my Honour.
Then his Grace seated himself again in the Chair, and numbred up the Opinions of the Peers.
L. H. Stew. My Lords, I have carefully taken your Lordships Opinions, and find the Numbers to be thus : My Lords that have found my Lord Mohun to be guilty are Fourteen ; my Lords that have found him not guilty are sixty Nine.
Call for the Prisoner.
Proclamation was made for the Chief Governour of the Tower to bring forth the Body of the Prisoner, and he was brought to the Bar as before : And Proclamation for Silence was made.
L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, you have been indicted for the Murder of William Mountford ; upon your Arraignment you have pleaded not guilty, and have put your self upon the Judgment of your Peers ; and your Peers have considered what hath been said both for and against you, and the Judgment of my Lords is this, That your Lordship is not guilty : Your Lordship is therefore discharged. Make Proclamation for dissolving the Commission.
Cl. of Crown. Serjeant at Arms make Proclamation.
Serjeant. O Yes.
Cl. of Crown. Again.
Serjeant. O Yes.
Cl. of Crown. Again.
Serjeant. O Yes.
Cl. of Crown. My Lord High Steward of England his Grace, doth straightly Charge and Command all manner of Persons who have given their Attendance here, to depart hence in the Peace of God, and of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen ; for his Grace the Lord High Steward of England intendeth to dissolve his Commission.

Which the Serjeant at Arms repeated, and at the end of it, his Grace standing up, and holding the White-Staff in both his Hands, broke it in two, by which his Commission was dissolved.

Marq. of Carmarthen. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to your own House?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Marq. of Carmarthen. This House is Adjourned into the House of Lords.

And then the Peers returned to their own House in the same Order.

The Tryal of Thomas Rosewell, for High-Treason; in the Months of October and November, 1684. 36. Car. II.

N. B. This Tryal, in point of time, should come between that of Titus Otes for Scandalum Magnatum, and that of Robert Bailie of Jerviswoode.

Die Jovis 23. Oct. An. Dom. 1684. Term. St. Mich. An. Reg. Regis Car. II. 36. B. Regis.

HIS Day, being the first Day of the Term, Mr. Attorney General moved the Court of King's-Bench for an Habeas Corpus, directed to the Keeper of the Gate-house, to bring up the Body of Thomas Rosewell, Clerk, to be arraigned upon an Indictment of High-Treason, found against him at a late Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, held at Kingston in the County of Surrey; and it was desired returnable to Morrow, but was not taken out till that Day, returnable immediate, and upon Saturday it was returned.

Die Sabbati 25. Oct. 1684. B. Regis.
Dominus Rex vers. Rosewell.

THIS Day Mr. Rosewell was brought upon the Writ of Habeas Corpus, to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, and was thus Arraigned:

Clerk of the Crown. Thomas Rosewell, Hold up thy Hand, (which he did) Thou standest indicted by the Name of Thomas Rosewell, late of the Parish of Rotherhithe, in the County of Surrey, Clerk; For that thou, as a false Traytor, against the most Serene, and most excellent Prince our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. thy Supreme and Natural Lord; not having the Fear of God in thy Heart, nor weighing the Duty of thy Allegiance; but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil; the cordial Love, and true, due and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our said Sovereign Lord the King doth, and of right ought to bear towards him, altogether withdrawing: and contriving and intending to disturb the Peace and common Tranquillity of this his Kingdom of England, and to sow Sedition and Rebellion within the Kingdom, and to depose our said Sovereign Lord the King from the Stile, Honour and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and to bring our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death, and final Destruction, the 14th Day of September, in the 36th Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, at the Parish of Rotherhithe aforesaid, in the County of Surrey aforesaid; didst propose, compass and imagine to sow Sedition, and raise Rebellion against our said Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, and to make a miserable Slaughter among the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, and to cause our said Sovereign Lord the King to be deposed from the Regal State, Title, and Honour of the Imperial Crown of this Realm; and to put to Death, and final Destruction, our said Sovereign Lord the King; and the Government of this his Kingdom of England, at thine own Will and Pleasure to change and alter; and the State of this Kingdom of England, in all its Parts well order'd and constituted, to overthrow and subvert; and to levy War against our said Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom: And to compleat thy said most wicked Treasons, and traiterous Purposes, and Imaginations; and to raise Discord between our said Sovereign Lord the King and his People, Thou the said Thomas Rosewell, the aforesaid 14th Day of September, in the 36th Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid; falsely, unlawfully, seditiously, maliciously and traiterously, in a certain unlawful Assembly, and in the Presence and Hearing of divers Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King, then and there unlawfully and seditiously, and against the Laws of this Land, assembled and gathered together; didst speak, assert and declare, That the People (meaning the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King) made a flocking to our said Sovereign Lord the King, upon pretence of healing the King's Evil, which he (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King) could not do; but that we (meaning thy self, and other traiterous Persons, Subjects of our said Lord the King) are they to whom they (meaning the Subjects of our said Lord the King) ought to flock, because we (meaning thy self, and the said other traiterous Persons) are Priests and Prophets, that by our Prayers can heal the Dolours and Grievs of the People. We (meaning the Subjects of our said Sovereign Lord the King) have had two wicked Kings, (the most Serene Charles the First, late King of England; and our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, meaning) together, who have permitted Popery to enter in under their Noses; whom (meaning the said Charles the First, late King of England, and our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is) We can resemble to no other no other Person but to most wicked Jeroboam: And that if they, (meaning the said evil-disposed Persons then and there, so as aforesaid with thee unlawfully assembled, and gathered together) would stand to their Principles thou (meaning thy Self) didst not fear, but they (meaning thy Self, and the said evil-disposed Persons) would overcome their Enemies, (meaning our said Sovereign Lord the King and his Subjects) as in former Times with Rams horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in Sling; against the Duty of thy Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. How say'st thou Thomas Rosewell; Art thou guilty of this High Treason whereof thou standest Indicted, and hast been now Arraigned, or not Guilty?

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I humbly crave the Favour to speak a Word.

Mr. Just. Holloway. What is it you would say, Sir? You must Plead.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, my Charge is very high; and I bless my God, I am not conscious to my self of any Guilt as to those Things, that you have heard read, and charged upon me—

Mr. Just. Holloway. If you will Plead, Sir; to this Indictment, so; that is all you have to do now.

Mr. Rosewell. My Innocence is my great Comfort under the God of Heaven; who knows they have lay'd to my Charge Things that I know not. I do protest my Abhorrence of these Things alledged to be said by me against my Sovereign, whom I honour in my Heart, and daily pray for; I bless my God for it.

Mr. J. Holloway. I hope then your Innocence will clear you. But we have nothing to do now but to take your Answer to this Question, Whether you are Guilty, or not Guilty, of what you stand Indicted for.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly crave your Lordships Patience a little. Pray, my Lord, give me Leave—

Mr. Just. Holloway. Sir, you will be heard whatever you have to say, at the time of your Trial.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray hear me a few Words, my Lord; I would not trespass upon your Patience: I have but a few Words to say.

Mr. Just. Walcot. You must plead, Guilty, or not Guilty, first.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I beseech you—

Mr. J. Holloway. Sir, We cannot hear you in a Case of so great weight and moment as this, till you have Pleaded. You will have time enough at your Tryal to make your Defence; and all we can do now is to take your Plea of Guilty, or not Guilty.

Mr. Rosewell. May it please your Honours, You are sensible of my great Weakness and Ignorance in Matter of Law, and Things of this Nature; I therefore humbly beg I may have Council to assist me in this Business.

Mr. J. Walcot. If there be any thing of Matter of Law doth arise upon your Tryal, the Court will assign you Council.

Mr. J. Holloway. We cannot assign you Council at present, for we have nothing to assign it upon. If there do any Question of Law arise in your Case, then the Court will, (as they are bound to do,) take Care of you, that you suffer no Prejudice for want of the Assistance of Council; and in Matters of Fact upon your Tryal, the Court are of Council for you.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly thank you, my Lord: I hope you will pardon my Weakness and Ignorance. I crave the Favour to have a Copy of my Indictment.

Mr. J. Holloway. We cannot allow it. You cannot be ignorant of that, it has been denied in many Cases of late.

Mr. J. Walcot. We cannot grant it, except Mr. Attorney will consent to it.

Mr. J. Holloway. You must positively say Guilty, or not Guilty. Sir Samuel Astry, call him to his Plea.

Clerk of Crown. How say'st thou, Art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Mr. J. Holloway. Look you Sir, you shall not be straitned, you shall have convenient Time to consider what Defence you have to make. In the mean time, we have nothing to say, but to know of you what you Plead; Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Sir Robert Mr. Att. Gen. If you desire to have the Sawyer. words read again to you, you shall.

Mr. J. Holloway. Ay, with all our Hearts.

Mr. Rosewell. I thank you, Sir, and my good Lords. I desire, if you please, to have it read in Latin.

Mr. J. Holloway. Read them in Latin.

Cl. of Crown. How say'st thou, Art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Mr. J. Holloway. Now what do you say to it, Are you Guilty, or not Guilty? for indeed we cannot spend our Time impertinently, we have other Business. Here is a Question you ought to make a direct Answer to, one way or other.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I humbly crave the Favour it may be read once more in English.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Samuel Astry; Read the Words without the Inuendo's.

[Clerk of Crown reads] That the People made a flocking to the King, upon pretence of healing the King's Evil, which he could not do; but we are they to whom they ought to flock, because we are Priests and Prophets, who can heal their Grievs. We have now had two wicked Kings together, who have permitted Popery to enter under their Noses, whom we can resemble to no other Person, but to the most wicked Jeroboam: And if you will stand to your Principles, I do not fear but we shall be able to overcome our Enemies, as in former Times, with Rams Horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Now you hear your Charge, both in Latin and English; Pray, therefore, let the Court know what you do Plead; Guilty, or not Guilty to it.

Mr. Rosewell. Not Guilty, my Lord; and I blefs my God for it.

Clerk of Crown. Culprit, How wilt thou be Tried?

Mr. Rosewell. By God, and my Country.

Clerk of Crown. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Mr. Rosewell. These are Things that my Soul abhors, I thank my God.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Justice Holloway, will you please to appoint some time for his Tryal?

Mr. J. Holloway. What time would you have, Mr. Attorney? When can you be ready, Mr. Rosewell?

Mr. Rosewell. I desire, my Lord, it may be on the 19th of November.

Mr. J. Holloway. What Day of the Week is that?

Mr. Clerk. Upon Wednesday.

Mr. J. Holloway. Are there no Arguments appointed for that Day?

Mr. Clerk. There is a Jury of Northamptonshire, for that Day.

Mr. J. Holloway. Then it cannot be that Day.

Mr. Rosewell. Then, if it please your Honours, I desire it may be the next Day; upon Thursday.

Mr. Att. Gen. When it is most convenient for the Business of the Court.

Mr. J. Holloway. Sir Samuel, you will see when it will be most convenient at the Return of the Venire.

Cl. of Crown. Must I return it?

Mr. Att. Gen. No; The Sheriff must: And the Courfe is to make it returnable the same Day the Cause is tried.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I humbly desire I may have Council allowed to come to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. You can have no Council allowed you.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I request that my Friends may be allowed to come to me in the mean time; I have been a Prisoner above this Month, and not permitted to see my Friends, nor they to see me.

Mr. J. Holloway. What Friends would you have?

Mr. Rosewell. My Relations.

Mr. J. Walcot. That Relations is a large Word.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, Sir, I think he may have liberty to discourse with any Person in the presence of the Keeper. I shall not oppose that.

Mr. Rosewell. Yes, my Lord, I desire no otherwife.

Mr. J. Walcot. Who do you name to come to you?

Mr. Rosewell. I have poor Children, that desire and long to see me.

Mr.

Mr. F. Holloway. Who do you say, you would have come to you?

Mr. Rosewell. My Wife and Children, my Lord, that are my Bowels.

Mr. Att. Gen. In the presence of the Keeper I cannot oppose it.

Mr. Rosewell. Will your Lordship please to allow Council to come to me?

M. F. Holloway. We cannot do it by Law. The Court is to be of Council for you when you come to your Tryal. The Court will not suffer any thing to be done to your Prejudice against Law.

Mr. Rosewell. Is there any Statute, my Lord, that forbids the giving of Council?

Mr. F. Holloway. The Law forbids the allowing of Council in Capital Causes; unless where Matter of Law doth arise.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, as I remember, Fitzbarris had Council allowed him.

Mr. F. Holloway. That was in a different Case, in a Matter where there were Special Pleadings; this is a General Issue.

Mr. Att. Gen. That was in a Matter of Law, that was insisted upon, but it is not so here: If this Gentleman had any matter of Law to plead, he should have Council assign'd him too. But, Sir, I think Tuesday the Eighteenth of November will be the freest and most convenient Day.

Mr. F. Holloway. Let it be that Day then.

Cl. of Crown. The Eighteenth of November is the Day of your Tryal.

Mr. Rosewell. But, my Lord, was not Council allowed him before his Tryal came on?

Mr. F. Holloway. Yes; but that was upon a Special Plea, of a Matter in Law.

Mr. Rosewell. I hope you will consider my Case as of one that knows not the Law.

Cl. of Crown. Tuesday the Eighteenth of November is the Day.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I humbly request the Favour that any Person that can speak of my Integrity, may come and Testify for me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, Ay; you may have Sub-paena's out of the Office for any body, who you will, that are to be Witnesses for you.

Mr. F. Walcot. The Officers of the Court will do all things that are requisite and legal for you.

Mr. F. Holloway. Then take back your Prisoner, Keeper.

Mr. Att. Gen. I do not know truly, whether the Practice of the Court is not to commit to the Marshalsea, being the Prison of the County of Surrey.

Cl. of Crown. Sir, it may be one or th'other way, as the Court thinks fit. As long as the King's Bench sits in Middlesex, he may be Prisoner still in the Gate house.

Keeper. Then the Rule of the Court is that he shall come agen then.

Cl. of Crown. Yes, he is, by Rule, to appear here the 18th of November next.

Whereupon he was carried back to the Gate-house.

Die Martis 18. Nov. Anno Dom. 1684. B. Regis.

Dominus Rex vers. Rosewell,

THIS Day the Prisoner was brought by Rule, from the Gate-house to the Bar of the King's Bench Court to his Tryal, at which all the Judges of the said Court were present.

Cl. of Crown. Thomas Rosewell, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Those Men that thou shalt hear called, and do personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord, and thee, upon the Tryal of thy Life and thy Death: If therefore thou wilt challenge them, or any of them, thou art to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be Sworn. Sir George Sheers, Baronet.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I would humbly crave the Favour of your Lordship, that I may have the Use of Pen, and Ink.

* Sir George Jeffreys. * Lord Ch. Just. Ay in God's Name, let him have Pen and Ink.

Cl. of Crown. Swear Sir George Sheers, Baronet.

Mr. Rosewell. I beg I may have Pen, Ink and Paper, before he be Sworn.

L. Ch. Just. Ay, let him.

Cryer. Look upon the Prisoner. Sir, You shall well and truly try, and true deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoner at the Bar, whom you shall have in Charge; and a true Verdict give according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Jurat' Sir George Sheers.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I challenge him.

Lord Ch. Just. That you cannot do now he is Sworn.

Vol. III.

Mr. Rosewell. I was surprized, my Lord; I did not know it.

Lord Ch. Just. I cannot help it, Mr. Rosewell, you must mind your Business. We cannot unswear him agen. Go on.

Cl. of Crown. Sir St. John Broderick.

Cryer. Look upon the Prisoner, Sir; You shall well, &c. Jurat' Sir St. John Broderick.

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

L. Ch. Just. You cannot Sir; he is Sworn now.

Mr. Rosewell. I beg your Lordships Pardon, I was surprized.

L. C. Just. Let us not spend time in such Talk as is to no Purpose; I tell you we cannot unswear him.

Mr. Rosewell. I desire, my Lord, my Challenge may be received, I was going to speak—

L. C. Just. It cannot be after he is sworn; we cannot make a new Law for you. Mind what was said to you; if you have a Mind to challenge any body, you must challenge them before they come to be Sworn.

Cl. of Crown. Sir Robert Knightsley.

L. C. Just. Mind the thing you are about; Man: Speak now, if you have a Mind to challenge him.

Mr. Rosewell. I do not challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Then Swear him.

Cryer. Look upon the Prisoner, &c.

Jurat' Sir Robert Knightsley.

L. C. J. Pray now mind the Thing you are about; you are looking about you for some private Mark, or hint to be given you by some body, and so lose your time of Challenging. You must challenge them as they come to the Book to be Sworn, and before they are Sworn.

Mr. Rosewell. I beg your Lordships Pardon; I was minding to set down the Names in my Paper, because I am to take notice of those I challenge for their Number.

L. C. J. You shall have all the fair Advantages that the Law will allow; you shall have your full Number to challenge, which you may do peremptorily, and without Cause as to 35; and as many more as you can with Cause.

Mr. Rosewell. Is there any one to note the Number?

L. C. J. There shall be sure to be notice taken that you be not surprized that way. You shall have all fair Advantages, I tell you.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly thank your Lordship.

Cl. of Crown. Sir William Elliot.

Cryer. Look upon the Prisoner.

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Sir George Woodroffe.

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Sir Cornwall Bradshaw.

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Sir Thomas Bludworth.

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Anthony Thomas, Esq;

Cryer. Look upon the Prisoner.

Mr. Rosewell. I do not challenge him.

Cryer. You shall well and truly, &c.

(Jurat' Anthony Thomas.)

Cl. of Crown. Francis Brend, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. John Weston, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. James Reading, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. Is it Mr. Justice Reading of Southwark?

L. C. J. Do you challenge him or not? you may if you will.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, my Reason is, I have heard much of him, but never had any Opportunity to know him till now. I have no Exception against him.

L. C. J. Then Swear him.

[Which was done.]

Cl. of Crown. Thomas Newton, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Thomas Vincent, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Ambrose Muschamp, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Ralph Freeman, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Joseph Reeves, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Anthony Rawlins, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I do not challenge him.

[He was sworn:]

Cl. of Crown. Thomas Overman, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I have no Exception against him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. George Meggot, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

L. C. J. Cryer, Before you bid them look upon the Prisoner; and the Prisoner look upon them, that he may see what he does.

Cryer. I do so, my Lord.

Cl. of Crown. Samuel Lewin, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I have nothing to say against him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. Lawrence Marsh, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I desire to know how many I have challenged.

L. C. J. He shall tell you. Count them.

Cl. of Crown. Twelve. What say you to Mr. Marsh?

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Ambrose Brown, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. John Halsey, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. John Auburn, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. Henry Flood, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. John Parsons, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. John Pettyward, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I do not challenge him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. Richard Coldham, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I do not challenge him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. Robert Sanders, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I challenge him.

Cl. of Crown. John Heather, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. I do not challenge him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. John Austin, Esq;

Mr. Rosewell. Pray, Sir, doth this make Twelve if he be sworn?

Cl. of Crown. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Rosewell. Then I do not challenge him.

[He was sworn.]

Cl. of Crown. Cryer, count these. Sir George Sheeres.

Cryer. One, &c.

Cl. of Crown. John Austin.

Cryer. Twelve, good Men and true, stand together and hear your Evidence.

The Twelve Sworn were These,

Sir George Sheeres.	} Jury.	Thomas Overman.
Sir St. John Broderick.		Samuel Lewin.
Sir Robert Knightley.		John Pettyward.
Anthony Thomas.		Richard Coldham.
James Reading.		John Heather, and
Anthony Rawlins.		John Austin.

Clerk of Crown. Thomas Rosewell, Hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Gentlemen, you of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of Thomas Rosewell, &c. (Prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis)—Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded not Guilty; and for his Tryal hath put himself upon God, and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether he be guilty of this High-Treason, in manner and form as he stands Indicted, or not guilty. If you find him guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the time of the High-Treason committed, or at any time since to your Knowledge. If you find him not guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels as if you had found him guilty. If you you find him not guilty, and that he did not fly for it, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez; If any one can inform my Lords the King's Justices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, or this Inquest now taken, of the High-Treason whereof the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted; let them come forth, and they shall be heard: And all manner of Persons, that are bound to give Evidence on the behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence; for now the Prisoner stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance: Or they forfeit their Recognizance.

Mr. Phipps. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury——

Mr. Rosewell. Hold! Hold! I crave the Favour that the Indictment may be read in Latin.

L. C. J. Ay, with all my Heart, let it be read in Latin.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I humbly crave leave to speak a Word or two.

L. C. J. What would you have?

Mr. Rosewell. I beg your Patience for a Word or two. I find, my Lord, as I told my Lords upon the Day of my Arraignment, that my Charge is very black, and high: And truly if I were guilty of those Things that are laid to my Charge——

L. C. J. You are now going to be tried for them. I hope you are innocent.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly thank your Lordship: I beg you would hear me but a Word or two.

L. C. J. You must keep up to the Method of Proceedings, your time is not yet come. What is it you would have?

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, my Soul abhors these Things, I thank my God for it. I was going to speak to your Lordship, to know whether the Words of a Natural, or a Mad-man be Treason in Law.

L. C. J. No.

Mr. Rosewell. Then, my Lord, the Ground of the Question is this, I find by Recollection and Consideration of the Words lay'd to my Charge, that my malicious Enemies have accused me of what any Man in his Senses,——

L. C. J. This is not proper, Mr. Rosewell, at this time; for this is but an Anticipation. You must hear what is first proved against you. We must keep up to the Forms of Law, you shall have your full time to be heard whatsoever you will say for your self; but you must not anticipate the Cause with previous Discourses.

Mr. Rosewell. I would only assert my own Innocency.

L. C. J. Not yet; you must not do it, nor you shall not do it. When it comes to your turn to speak, you shall have liberty enough to make your Defence as long as you will. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Phipps. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn: The Prisoner at the Bar, Thomas Rosewell, stands indicted, That he, as a false Traytor, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, and endeavouring to disturb the Peace and Tranquillity of the Kingdom, and to depose the King, the 14th of Sept. in the 36th Year of this King, at the Parish of Rotherhithe, in your County; did falsly, maliciously, and traiterously, purpose and imagine to raise a Rebellion within the Kingdom, and to deprive the King, and depose, and put him to death and Destruction, and the Government to change and alter, and to levy War against the King within the Kingdom: And these wicked Purposes to bring to pass, he the said Thomas Rosewell, the said 14th of September in the thirty sixth Year aforesaid, at the Place aforesaid, falsly, unlawfully, maliciously, seditiously and traiterously, in a certain unlawful Assembly, then and there congregated, did say and declare, The People make a flocking to the King, upon pretence of Healing the King's-Evil, which he cannot do; but we are they to whom they ought to flock: for we are Priests, and Prophets, that can heal their Grievances. We have now had two wicked Kings together, who have permitted Popery to come in under their Noses; and whom we can compare to none, but the most wicked Jeroboam. But if they would stand to their Principles, he did not doubt, but they should overcome their Enemies, as in former Times with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling. And this is laid to be against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity; and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. To this Indictment he has pleaded not guilty; If we prove him guilty of this Matter, you are to find him guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship; and you Gentlemen of the Jury; these traiterous Words; that the Prisoner at the Bar is accused of, were spoken in a Sermon, or Preachment at a Conventicle. And tho' the Gentleman does pretend to much Innocency; yet you will find that in open Defiance of the Law, he takes upon him to Preach against the Law, not only of the Land, but even against the Laws of Almighty God: For he takes upon him to be a Preacher against a Rule, than which nothing is more plain in all the Word of God, viz. That he should not speak Evil of Dignities, nor revile the Prince of his People. He knows this to be the Rule of the Scripture; and yet in his constant Discourses, (as we shall prove) he makes it his Practice to revile the Government on all Sides. And by these doings at this Day, Gentlemen, you will easily understand what the Designs of these Conventicles are; only to nurse up People in Sedition, and train them up to Rebellion; that they may be ready to break out into it when their Teachers advise them to it. We shall call our Witnesses, and prove to you, that this is, and has been the constant Tenor of his Discourse; viz. Reviling of the Government, and there is almost no Text of Scripture, but; in his way of perverting it, he has turned against the Government. We shall shew this to be the habitual Course and Practice of him who pretends to be so honest, and so innocent a Man. Cryer, call Elizabeth Smith,——Hilton and Farrar.

Then some of the Council at the Bar, being talking among themselves, the Lord Chief Justice reproved them for it.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, you must not have Interlocutions among your selves. And you, Gentlemen of the Jury, I must tell you, If any one whisper any of you, you ought to acquaint the Court with it. It is your Duty to

to be directed by the Court, and the Evidence. Here is a Man's Life in Question, and that is a very weighty Thing: and you must not take any private Insinuations, but only hearken to your Evidence, and mind what is spoken publicly, that the Prisoner may be able to give answer to it.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly thank your Lordship.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where are Mrs. Hilton and Mrs. Smith?

(They were all sworn.)

Mr. Rosewell. I do humbly request one Favour of the Court.

L. C. J. What would you have?

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly beg they may be examined separatim.

L. C. J. They shall.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly thank your Lordship.

L. C. J. Who do you begin withal, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Jones. My Lord, we shall begin with Mrs. Smith.

L. C. J. Then you must make way, that the other Witnesses may go out of hearing. You Cryer, make way for them; and see that they be set where they may not hear.

[Which was done]

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Mrs. Smith, pray give my Lord and the Jury an account whether you have been at any Meeting, where this Gentleman has been. Whether you know him; and what you heard of him.

Smith. I heard him say this—

L. C. J. Hold a little. What is this Woman's Name, Elizabeth Smith?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord. Were you by at any of his Conventicles?

Smith. Sir, I have been ever since the 20th of July, till that Day for which he was taken, but one Sunday.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give my Lord an account of what you heard.

Smith. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Where was it that his Meeting-House was?

Smith. He had several Houses, private Houses and a publick House of his own.

L. C. J. Where? In what Place?

Smith. In Salisbury-street, near his own Dwelling.

L. C. J. Where is that?

Smith. In Rotherhithe.

L. C. J. You were frequently there, you say?

Smith. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What number of People might be there, as you guess?

Smith. I believe there might be 400 People or 300 commonly.

L. C. J. What sort of People were they?

Smith. Men and Women, House-keepers.

L. C. J. Well, what did you hear him say?

Smith. I can give you an Account of his Sermons several Days.

L. C. J. Do so.

Smith. The first Notice that I took of any thing concerning the Government, was upon the 17th of August, and that was concerning His Majesty; and then in his Prayer after Sermon, he wished he might not offend God in not praying for the King; but that it might please God to open his Eyes, and the Times might turn.

Mr. Att. Gen. What other Things have you heard him say?

Smith. The next time that I heard him was the next Sunday again, and that was in West-lane, in a House there, and then he was speaking of Sodom and Gomorrah; and he brought in this Proof, not doubting but if there had been ten righteous Persons, the City had not been destroyed: But he did not mean Recorders, nor Lord Mayors.

Mr. Rosewell. What Day was that Mistris?

Smith. The 22th of August.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, what did you hear him speak, upon the Day in the Indictment, the 14th of September?

Smith. He said, The People made a flocking to the King, to cure the King's Evil which he could not do; but, says he, we are they they should flock unto, for we are Priests and Prophets, that by our Prayers can cure their Grievances. He said, We have now had two wicked Kings together, which have permitted Popery to come in under their Noses, and could be compared to nothing but to most wicked Jeroboam. And then, after he had preached a good while, again he said, If they would stand to their Principles, he did not fear, but they should overcome their Enemies, as in former Times, with broken Flatters, Ram's Horns, and a Stone in a Sling.

L. C. J. When was this?

Smith. This was upon the 14th of September.

L. C. J. Where was it?

Smith. At one Captain Daniel Weldy's House.

L. C. J. What is he? a Seaman?

Smith. Yes, and he pray'd for him, being then at Sea and his Son both, who was ill.

L. C. J. How many do you think might be present there at that time?

Smith. There was a low Parlour full, and a little Room up six Steps; and where he preached was up one pair of Stairs, there was a large Room and a Garret.

L. C. J. Where did he stand?

Smith. In the Door-Cafe of that Room, that the sound might go up and down.

L. C. J. How many People in number might there be think you?

Smith. I cannot tell, my Lord; a great many.

L. C. J. How many, as nigh as you can guess, or think?

Smith. Several Hundreds of them.

L. C. J. Do you know any of them? Were they People of any Quality?

Smith. Yes, I know a great many of them; several of them are in the Court, and about the Hall now.

L. C. J. Who stood at the Door and let you in?

Smith. One Mr. Paul Shed; and he was angry at my coming with Pattens, for they made an Impression in the Ground, and gave notice to others, that there was Company there: and I promised him I would come no more with them.

Mr. J. Walcot. Was he Door keeper? What is he?

Smith. A Brasier, I think.

Mr. J. Holloway. Had you any notice of a Conventicle that was to be there?

L. C. J. Ay; Tell us how you came thither.

* Sir Thomas * Mr. Recorder. How came you Jenner. to find it out that there was a Meeting at such a Place?

Smith. At first I found it by dogging of People as they went along; and afterwards, there were were People set commonly at a Place called Cherry-garden Stairs to give notice ; and sometimes I asked there, and sometimes I went to Mr. Shed's House to enquire.

L. C. J. Shed, you say, was present there then ?

Smith. Yes, he let me in.

L. C. J. What ; he was the Man that managed the Conventicle. He was Clerk, I suppose ; was he not ?

Smith. I never heard him say Amen ; but I have heard him expound in the Conventicle sometimes.

L. C. J. Oh, he was a Journeyman Preacher it seems.

Mr. Recorder. Pray was there any store of Watermen and Seamen there ?

Smith. Yes, abundance from Rotterbith, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Which way came all the People that were there ?

Smith. From Deptford and Rotterbith, and all thereabouts.

L. C. J. Was it near the Water-side ?

Smith. Yes, not far from it.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Attorney, have you any more Questions to ask her ?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, I think not. Mrs. Smith, you have heard him, you say, at other Days ; how did he use to treat the Government in his preaching at other times ?

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I beseech your Lordships to tell me whether these Questions are proper to be put, it not relating to the Matter that I am accused of ?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, to give an account of the Disposition of your Mind ; very proper as can be.

Mr. Rosewell. Because it is not part of my Charge, and I cannot be prepared to answer it.

L. C. J. When the King's Council have done with her, you may ask her any Questions ; but you must let them go on first.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, it is charged that he spoke these words with a traitorous, malicious Mind ; and what better Evidence of such a Mind than his usual Discourses ?

Smith. The 31st of August, I heard him preach at Paul Shed's House ; and there he preached that there was a certain great Man, that lived at the Upper-end of Grace-church-street about this time eighteen Years ago ; I name no body, says he, you all know him whom I mean : and there came a certain poor Man to him ; he was not a poor Man neither, but a Carpenter by Trade, one that wrought for his Living, a labouring Man ; and told that great Man, if he would take his Advice, he would tell him how to quench the Fire ; but he Pish'd at it, and made light of it and would not take his Advice. Which if it had not been for that great Man, and the Lord Mayors and Sheriffs that have been since, neither that Fire in London, nor the Fire at Wapping, nor the Fire at Southwark, had gone so far, or come to what they did.

L. C. J. There was a great Man that lived at the Upper-end of Grace-church-street ! — Who did he mean by that ?

Mr. Recorder. He meant, we suppose, Sir Thomas Bloodworth, that was Lord Mayor at the Fire-Time.

L. C. J. He did not live there then.

Mr. Recorder. It seems he said so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mrs. Smith, let me ask you one Question. How far were you off from him ; and where did you sit this 14th Day of September, when you heard him say those Words you speak of ?

Smith. I sat upon the Bed, and he was standing at the Door.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with this Witness at the present.

L. C. J. Now, Mr. Rosewell, if you will, you may ask her what Questions you please.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I was before going to beg your Pardon for my Weakness, being altogether unacquainted with these Things ; and that you would look upon me as one that is inops consilii, and pardon any thing that comes from me impertinently. I cannot speak to her as a Lawyer to sift her, and search out the Truth ; will your Lordship give me leave to speak to her as a Divine ?

L. C. J. Ask her what Questions you will, but we will not have any of your Preachments here. You must consider where you are, you are not now in your Pulpit, but at the Bar ; I assure you we do not intend to make a Conventicle of the King's Bench Court.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I meant only to endeavour to convince her, by putting some Questions, like a Divine, to her. For I pity them, tho' they envy me ; and I bless my God, have pray'd for them many times since my Imprisonment.

L. C. J. Well, well ; do not stand to commend your self now, this is not your time of making your Defence : Only, if you will ask this Witness any Questions, you may.

Mr. Rosewell. You are under an Oath, Mrs. Smith. I am so, Mr. Rosewell.

Mr. Rosewell. Are you sensible what an Oath is, and the great Obligation you are under by it to testify nothing but the Truth ? as you will answer it to the great God —

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Rosewell, ask her any Questions to the Business that she has here testified ; but do not preach to her. It is not your Work to Catechise the Witnesses, that is the Duty of the Court, and we shall, no doubt, take care to do our Duty. And I will tell her, to save your Preachment, she is in the Presence of the Great God of Heaven and Earth, before whom we must appear at the great Day of Judgment, to give an account of every Word we speak. And you are under an Oath, and if in Case you tell one Tittle of a Lie in your Testimony against the Prisoner at the Bar, who stands now to be tried for his Life, it will be just with the Great God to sink you down into Hell Fire immediately. Therefore, I require you, upon your Oath, not to speak one Word but what is Truth.

Smith. My Lord, I assure you, I will rather say less, than add any one Tittle.

L. C. J. Mr. Rosewell, ask her what you will, but do not give your self, or us, the trouble of a Preachment to teach her the Obligation of an Oath ; for she very well knows it seems what it is, and says she will rather speak less than more than the Truth.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly thank your Lordship for what you have said to her. Mrs. Smith, Pray was you at Rotherbith the 14th Day of September?

Smith. Yes, that I was.

Mr. Rosewell. Did you come alone? or, who came with you?

Smith. Mrs. Hilton came along with me, and another Gentlewoman, and Mr. Shed let us in all together.

Mr. Rosewell. Who is that Mrs. Hilton?

Mr. Att. Gen. You will see her by and by

Mr. Rosewell.

Mr. Rosewell. Where did you meet together?

Smith. Mrs. Hilton lay with me all Night, and we were together the Day before.

Mr. Rosewell. What time did you come thither, pray Mistris?

Smith. I came thither before Seven of the Clock, before you came, Sir.

Mr. Rosewell. And I pray whose House came you to at Rotherbith?

Smith. We were informed it was Captain Weldy's House.

Mr. Rosewell. Are you sure it was his House?

Smith. As they did tell us it was Captain Daniel Weldy's.

Mr. Rosewell. I pray Mistris what Room were you in there?

Smith. We were up one pair of Stairs. There is a little Room we come at sooner; but we were in the Room with the Bed; and there was one Mr. Atkinson there that was in Mourning, and there were two or three Boys of his with him that sate upon the Bed, and their Shoes were plucked off, that they might not dirt the Bed; and I gave him his Boys Shoes from under the Bed.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray where did I stand, Mistris, do you say?

Smith. In the Door-Cafe.

L. C. J. What Boy is that you speak of?

Smith. Two Boys that came in with one Mr. Atkinson; his Relations, I suppose they were.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray how did the Service begin?

Smith. You took your Text out of the 21st of Genesis; that was the Chapter to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Rosewell. But I ask you Mrs. how did the Worship, the Service begin?

L. C. J. You mean your Prayer, you do not use to call it Service.

Smith. You made a Prayer.

Mr. Rosewell. Was it begun with a Chapter, or a Psalm, or how?

Smith. There was no Psalm; a long Prayer you made, as you used to do formerly.

Mr. Rosewell. How long was that?

Smith. It was always used to be about three quarters of an Hour long.

Mr. Rosewell. Was there any Chapter read?

Smith. There was no Chapter before you took your Text, as I heard, and I was there before you.

Mr. Rosewell. Upon what Occasion then were these Words spoke, if there was no Chapter read?

Smith. I say there was none till you took your Text, and then you spoke those Words.

Mr. Rosewell. But how came those Words in?

Smith. You always took a whole Chapter, and expounded all along.

Mr. Rosewell. A long Text for one Sermon, Mistris.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, We know you have a fine way of Preaching.

Mr. Rosewell. Well, Mistris. Upon what Verse of the Chapter were these Words spoke, about flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil?

Smith. I cannot be punctual to the particular Verse.

L. C. J. Nay, I suppose you seldom keep to your Text. I am sure there was never a Verse in any Chapter that warranted the speaking of any such Words as these.

Smith. My Lord, I cannot be punctual to the particular Verse. It was within five or six Verses of the beginning, I believe.

Mr. Rosewell. Then upon what Occasion came in the Words about the two wicked Kings?

Smith. In Preaching you brought it in by other Proofs.

L. C. J. Why, Man, there can be no Occasion for speaking of those Words. You spoke them without any Occasion at all. No body can tell what Occasion you had to speak them.

Mr. Rosewell. But, my Lord, I suppose there may be some coherence in my Discourse. I would know how they were brought in?

L. C. J. Who can tell the Occasion? Do you ask me what Reason any Man has to speak Treason? I tell you there is none at all to be given for it.

Smith. One of your Proofs in your Preaching was concerning Dalilah and Sampson, and you brought in that Proof concerning the King's using of Women, it was out of the Judges. And he said he did not Question, but that in the end the Whores would serve the King, as that Whore Dalilah did Sampson.

L. C. J. Was this at the same time, upon the same Day?

Smith. Yes, it was upon the 14th of September.

Mr. Rosewell. If it please you, my Lord, these are not Words that are charged in the Information—

L. C. J. You draw it upon your self by your Questions.

Mr. Rosewell. If they were spoken, (upon that Hypothesis, I say if they were spoken; but I deny the Thesis, I abhor the thoughts of them.) I would know how they were brought in, under what Verse?

L. C. J. Ay, I take you right as to that, you do deny it; and they are not in the Indictment.

Smith. I cannot be punctual as to the Verse.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray upon what account did come in the two wicked Kings?

Smith. I cannot tell the Verse, truly.

Mr. Rosewell. How came in that about Jeroboam?

L. C. J. How can she tell how you bring in Treason?

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord—

L. C. J. Nay, pray, Sir, hear me a little. You shall have all the Liberty to defend your self that the Law can allow of. We are accountable to the Law upon our Oaths to do Justice, and are as much accountable to Heaven for our Actions, ons, as you or any Prisoner that comes to this Bar is to the Law for your Actions. But do you ask what Reason you spoke Treason for? I tell you no Reason can be given for it.

Mr. J. Holloway. Do you think any of your Auditors can give an account of the Connexion of your whole Sermon?

L. C. J. When you talk besides the Cushion, do you think any Man alive is able to give an account how you come to ramble and talk Treason?

Mr. Rosewell. Can you tell, Mistress, when that was spoken, of standing to their Principles, and the Rams-horns, &c.?

Smith. That was at the latter end of your Sermon.

L. C. J. When you had said there were two wicked Kings, then presently you were for standing to your Principles, and over coming your Enemies.

Mr. J. Holloway. It seems she was very intent upon your Sermon.

L. C. J. For my part, I wonder she can remember so much as she does. It is much she can remember such Stuff as this.

Mr. Rosewell. The God of Truth, my Lord, I hope will manifest the Truth. Pray, Mistress, were these Words spoken one just after another in my Discourse?

Smith. No, they were not; but they were all spoken at that time.

Mr. J. Holloway. Have you done with her?

Mr. Rosewell. No, my Lord, I humbly beseech your Favour and Patience a little; Pray Mistress Smith did you write?

Smith. I did not write till I came home, and after I came home I did write it down. Several that were there did write down your Sermon.

Mr. Rosewell. Several of whom do you mean?

Mr. Smith. Several of your Congregation, Sir.

Mr. Rosewell. Did your Companions write? and pray where did you first write down these Words?

Smith. After I came Home I set them down, Word for Word to a Tittle, as they were spoken, as near as I could remember, what you spoke.

Mr. Rosewell. Was any body with you when you set them down?

Smith. Yes, my own Family saw me write them down: and the other Witness was with me; and afterwards we went to the Bull and Mouth, the Quakers Meeting-House.

Mr. Rosewell. What other Witnesses were by when you set them down?

Smith. There was my Husband, my Apprentice, and my Child.

Mr. Rosewell. And did you set them down just exactly, as you have sworn them upon this Indictment?

Smith. Yes, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Rosewell. Upon your Oath in the presence of the great God, did you set them down as they were spoken?

Smith. Yes, I tell you.

L. C. J. Ay, I would ask you that Question; Did you, (I speak to you as in the Presence of the great God, and upon your Oath) set down his Words just as he spoke them in Substance?

Smith. Yes, I did to the same Substance as near as I could remember.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray what other Words were spoken between these Words in the Indictment, if they were not all spoken together?

Smith. One thing I do remember more, that you said that Day. You said there was a Word they called Canting; but for your Part you did not understand what it meant, unless it were this; You said, you chanced to go by one of the great Churches; where peeping in, you saw a Man with a white Surplice, and the Organs were going, and they were canting, and singing the Litany, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments with a Ha-ha-ha-ha-ha. For your part, you were ashamed to hear it: and this you said was all the Canting you knew.

Mr. Att. Gen. You will draw this upon your self.

Mr. Rosewell. I am sorry to hear this indeed, my Lord.

L. C. J. So am I too, with all my Heart, I'll assure you.

Mr. Rosewell. You say you set down the Words the same Day, when you came Home?

Smith. Yes, I resolved so to do, when I came away from the Meeting, to write them down as soon as I came home.

Mr. Rosewell. Did you confer with any body about these Words?

Smith. Not till I came to a Justice of Peace, and discovered it.

Mr. Rosewell. What Justice of Peace was that whom you discover'd it to?

Smith. The Recorder of London.

Mr. Rosewell. And you swear these were the Words that I spoke?

Smith. Yes, as near as I can remember.

L. C. J. If she swear the substantial part of them it is enough, tho' the very exact Words she doth not swear: For the Words are laid in this Indictment in Latin, and by way of Assertion.

Mr. Rosewell. Your Lordship will pardon my Weakness, I am ignorant of the Law.

L. C. J. And we will take care you shall have nothing done to your Prejudice that is against Law.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly thank your Lordship. Mistress Smith, upon your Oath you say Mr. Shed was at that Conventicle?

Smith. Yes, he let me in at the Door, and was angry with me that I would come so near the Place with my Pattens; he said it might give occasion of Suspicion.

Mr. Rosewell. You were saying you heard him expound. Where was that, pray?

Smith. Yes, that I did, at Mr. Crookshank's House; and I heard him another time.

Mr. Rosewell. What was the Day in August that you say you came first to hear me?

Smith. I do not say it was in August, but in July that I came first to hear you, the 20th of July.

Mr. Rosewell. You say I preached in the publick Meeting-Place; What Day was that pray?

Smith. The 10th of August, to the best of my Remembrance; it was the fourth Sunday, as I remember that I heard you there.

Mr. Rosewell. Have you not sworn against Conventicles in other Places?

Smith. Yes.

Mr. Rosewell. What Conventicles?

Smith. If my Lords please to ask me, I shall give an account.

Mr. Rosewell. Have you, or have you not?

Smith. Yes, several; tho' I never heard any thing spoken in any of them against the King, but at yours.

Mr. Rosewell. Did you swear a Conventicle against one Mr. Hales?

Smith. I swore it by Confession.

Mr. Rosewell. Were you at that Conventicle?

Smith. No, I was not; but I swore it by Confession.

Mr. Rosewell. What day was that Conventicle?

Smith. As they told us, it was the 13th of July.

Mr. Rosewell. Was there any thing done upon that Conviction?

Smith. Yes, he paid his Money that was set upon him, and never made any Appeal; his Wife confessed it.

Mr. Rosewell. What other Conventicles have you been at?

Smith. Concerning you, do you mean?

Mr. Rosewell. No, any other Conventicles of the Fanatics that you have sworn against.

Smith. I do not know whether that be a proper Question.

Mr. Rosewell. What say you, Mistress Smith?

L. C. J. No, no; that you must not ask her, that is to accuse her self.

Mr. J. Holloway. You must not ask her to any thing but that you stand here charged with.

L. C. J. You must not ask her any thing that may make her obnoxious to any Penalty.

Mr. J. Walcot. Do you ask her any other Questions?

Mr. Rosewell. I will presently, my Lord, I beg your Patience.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, take your own time.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray, Mistress Smith, were you a Witness against a Conventicle at one Mistress Batbo's?

Smith. Yes, that I had by Confession of her own Mouth.

Mr. Rosewell. Was there not some Money offered her—

L. C. J. That is not to be asked, you must not ask her any Question that may make her accuse her self criminally.

Smith. Never by me, Mr. Rosewell.

Mr. Rosewell. I beg your Lordships Pardon.—

L. C. J. I'll tell you the Reason for it, and it is that which ought to be satisfactory to you or any body. They are not bound to answer any Questions that you ask the Witnesses, whereby they charge themselves with any Crime, or by answering may subject themselves to any Penalty. Whether it be so or no, you must not ask them, but prove it.

Smith. I never did offer any, my Lord.

Rosewell. I thought I might offer any thing against what she had sworn.

L. C. J. Prove what you can in your Time; but do not ask her any such Questions. The Law is so, and the same for you as it is for every body else.

Mr. Rosewell. Mistress Smith, you swear these Words were spoken in the Forenoon upon that place, the 21st of Genesis, one after another.

Smith. Yes; those Words, as near as I can speak them, were spoken then.

L. C. J. Are those the Words you heard at that time?

Smith. In Substance they are, my Lord; as near as I can discover.

Mr. Rosewell. I have no more Questions to ask her at present my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mistress Smith, since he has started such a Question; Have you been tamper'd with, and been offer'd any Money; and what, and for what?

Smith. There came one Cartwright, and one Norton to me one Day, I cannot give an account exactly what Day it was; and first they spake to me about Mistress Batbo's Business, and afterwards they fell into Discourse about Mr. Rosewell, and they told me, They wonder'd I would have my hand in any Man's Blood. Said I to them, Suppose you had heard what I did, what would you have done? Says Mr. Norton, you had better take 20 Guineas, and not appear against him, said he; not that any body, that I know of, that he is concerned with, will give you that sum of Money, but you had better take it. Says I, what is the Truth no Money nor Gold shall buy me off from telling. What was Truth I would speak, and no more; and I had already given Evidence of it, and would not retract it. Said Mr. Cartwright then to me, But if you had not discovered it, no body else would. Said I, yes, others heard it as well as I.

Mr. Att. Gen. Has any body else tamper'd with you? have you had any Letter sent to you?

Smith. Nothing till Yesterday Morning: A Letter came then.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was that?

Smith. I suppose my Lord saw it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, but you must tell the Jury what it was.

Smith. One came to my Brothers, and brought a Letter thither, which I read over; and he said to my Brother, if I could be any ways Assistant to Mr. Rosewell in not coming in against him; might have 200*l.* paid down to Morrow, not that Mr. Rosewell knew of it, or would give it me, but it was a Wager that was lay'd. Some laid he would be hang'd, and some lay'd he would not; and so he said he would come and give me an account who it was that spoke to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with her now. Call Mistress Hilton.

Mr. Rosewell. Will your Lordship please to indulge me so far that I may ask her another Question or two?

L. C. J. What is it you would have, Sir?

Mr. Rosewell. I desire her before she goes out to recollect one thing.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, she shall not go away; If you have a Mind to ask her any thing before she goes away, do so; or she shall come again if you have any Questions to put to her.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, she is big with Child, and cannot well crowd in and out.

L. C. J. If she be with Child, then let her sit upon the Stool there.

Mr. Rosewell. With your Lordships Indulgence, I would ask Mistress Smith this Question; The Gentlewoman that was with you, Mistress Hilton, I think you call'd her, did she agree with you as to the same Words, and as to Time and Place?

Smith.

Smith. If you please to examine her, I suppose she will give you an account.

Mr. Rosewell. Then I would ask her this Question, with your Leave, my Lord; whether was that other Gentlewoman with you in the same Room?

Smith. Yes, she was, and sat upon the Bed with me, and I pulled her by the Sleeve when the Words were spoken, to take notice of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Come, Mistress Hilton, give my Lord and the Jury an account; have you been at this Conventicle at any time, and what have you heard there?

Hilton. I came to Mistress Smith's on Saturday Night, and on Sunday Morning I went with her to this Place; I was never there before in my Life, they said it was one Daniel's House, one Captain Daniel's; it was near West-Lane in Rotherbirb. And when we came there, there was one that Mistress Smith knew, that stood at the Door, they call him Paul Shed, a little Man: And when we came to the Door, he said to us, Pull off your Pattens, says he; for they will give too much Occasion of Distrust of Peoples coming: So we pulled off our Pattens, and said we would take care the next time. When we came in, we went through a kind of a Hall, and when we came there into the Hall, there was a little Parlour against it: We went up the Stairs, and when we came up Stairs, there were two more Rooms; that Room we came into was hung with sad-colour'd Paper, and upon the Left-hand there stood a Sweetwood kind of Chest, a little Cabinet, and a little Glass over that. Mr. Rosewell came, and stood at the Entrance in of the Door; so there was a little Child in bed when we came up, and we sat down on the other side of the Bed; and the Child was taken out of the Bed presently afterwards. Mr. Rosewell preached upon the 20th or 21st Chapter of Genesis, I cannot be positive which of them, but one of them it was.

Mr. Rosewell. But upon your Oath cannot you tell which it was?

L. C. J. You must not interrupt her, Sir; you shall have your time to ask her what you will.

Hilton. It was the 20th or 21st of Genesis, I will not be positive which of them it was. But the thing was as to Abraham and Sarah; that was the Contents of the Chapter that Mr. Rosewell was then pleased to preach upon. After he had took his Text, and preached a little while, he said, the People went flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil, which he could not do; for they ought to flock to them, that were Priests and Prophets, who by their Prayers could cure their Grievances. Then he preached a great while of the Chapter following again; and then says he, We have had two wicked Kings that have suffered Popery to come in under their Noses, which I can compare to nothing but the most wicked Jeroboam. There was another King named, and I think it was Rehoboam. I cannot be positive as to that, but Jeroboam I am sure was named. Then he said, If the People would stand to their Principles, he did not question but to overcome all their Enemies with broken Platters, Rams Horns, and a Stone in a Sling. These were the Words Mr. Rosewell was pleased to say.

L. C. J. Can you remember what day of the Month this was?

Vol. III.

Hilton. It was the 14th of September, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do you remember what number of People were there?

Hilton. I believe there were four or five hundred People; there was a Garret full, and two Rooms below, the Parlour full, and the Hall full; and one Paul Shed, (as Mrs. Smith told me his Name was,) let us in. I did not know any of them; nor ever had Convicted any of them; that was the first time I ever was at a Meeting in my Life; and I had enough of it then.

L. C. J. You say you came on Saturday Night to Mistress Smith's House.

Hilton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What time that Night?

Hilton. About eight or nine a Clock.

L. C. J. What time in the Morning did you go along with her to this place?

Hilton. We went by seven a Clock in the Morning.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Rosewell come before you, or after you?

Hilton. No, he came presently after we were there.

L. C. J. Do you remember any other Words he utter'd there that Day?

Hilton. He was pleased to talk of several things between whiles in his Sermon; among the rest, I heard him speak about Canting. He said there was a Word they called Canting, but he did not understand what that Word meant; except it were the Fellows in their white Gowns. For he was going by one of their Churches, where he heard them sing the Lord's-Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments, with a Ha-ha-ha-ha; for my part, says he, I was ashamed to hear it.

L. C. J. Do you remember any other part of the Discourse?

Hilton. He had a great many other of those things, that I cannot now remember; it affrighted me to hear it, out of my Wits.

L. C. J. Where did you go from thence?

Hilton. We went Home to Mrs. Smith's. It was two a Clock, and we had not eat a bit of Bread all the while; and as soon as she came Home, Mistress Smith took her Pen and Ink presently, and writ down those Words; her Husband and I, and she, were together; and when we had done this, we went to the Quaker's Meeting.

L. C. J. What Quaker's Meeting is that?

Hilton. It is that by Cheapside; I do not well remember the Name, I think it was called the Bull and Mouth.

Mr. J. Holloway. What time of the Day was it that the meeting was done at Mr. Rosewell's?

Hilton. We came from Mr. Rosewell's a little after two a Clock.

L. C. J. From Seven to Two did he hold? that is pretty long winded.

Hilton. No, he went into Dinner, and left us there, and abundance in the Congregation eat Sweet-Meats, or Biskets, or such things as they had. But I am sure we had nothing there. I was never among you before, nor ever Convicted any of you.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly beseech your Lordship to make her sensible of the Obligation she is under by her Oath.

L. C. J. Ay, Ay; I will. Look you Mistress, you must take notice, here is the Life of a Man in question, which is a thing of great Consideration. And for you to have any concern in taking away the Life of a Man, if it be upon false Grounds, is a very dismal thing; besides, that there is a thing which is yet of greater weight and moment to you your self, it concerns your own immortal Soul. You must consider, what Guilt you contract upon your self, if you tell a Lie; but there is a much greater Guilt contracted, if you offer to swear a Lie in a Court of Justice, upon a Cause of this Concernment. Consider, I tell you, you are in the Presence of Almighty God, that seeth into the Hearts of all Mankind; that is the Avenger of all Lying and Perjury; that may justly sink you into Hell if you offer to swear a Falshood. Therefore, I charge you, in the Name and Presence of that great God, the Judge of Heaven and Earth, to answer me truly to this Question: Are these things that you have sworn here true?

Hilton My Lord, they are every Word true. There is a Gentlewoman here, one Mrs. Collingwood, that shall witness, I set them down that Day; and went away to the Recorder, and gave him an Account of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, if you have done, go over.

L. Ch. Just. No, hold Sir, will the Prisoner ask her any Questions?

Mr. Rosewell. Yes my Lord with your Leave.

Lord Ch. Just. Ay, in God's Name, what you will, that is fitting to ask.

Mr. Rosewell. Mistribs, what is your Name?

Hilton. My Name is Hilton.

Mr. Rosewell. Was your Name ever Shastoe?

Hilton. Yes, but my Name now is Hilton.

Mr. Rosewell. Or otherwise Smith, I suppose: for I have heard so.

Hilton. No Sir.

Mr. Rosewell. Then Mrs. Hilton, upon the Oath you have taken, (for I hope you have observed what my Lord has said to you about the Sin, and Danger of False-swearing.) —

Hilton. Mr. Rosewell, God forbid I should stand here to tell such a Lie as this; if it were not all Truth to my Knowledge, I would rather speak less than more.

Mr. Rosewell. Were you at Rotberbith that 14th Day of September?

Hilton. Yes, I was. I was with Mrs. Smith at her House over Night, and went with her to Rotberbith at Seven a Clock next Morning.

Mr. Rosewell. Whose House were you at there?

Hilton. I cannot say whose House it was of my own Knowledge, for I was never there before in all my Life; but they said it was one Captain Daniel's House.

Mr. Rosewell. What Street was it in?

Hilton. I do not know what Street it was in, it was near West-Lanc.

Mr. Rosewell. What kind of Buildings were there in the Street?

Hilton. Over against it, a little way from the House, is a Bridge, that we went over; I believe it may be some ten or twelve Doors from the House.

Mr. Rosewell. In the Street, you say, over against the House?

Hilton. A little way from it. Mr. Rosewell, if you do remember, (I can remember these things very well,) there were Shutters in the Windows, and the Sun came in, and you were afraid least the People that went by should hear you. First, There was not light enough, and you desired that one part of the Shutters might be opened; which was done: And then you desired that half might be shut again, for fear the People should over hear you.

Mr. Rosewell. What kind of Entrance is there into the House?

Hilton. There is an Entry, and from the Entry we went into a little Hall, the Rooms were but of a low Height.

Mr. Rosewell. Was it in an upper Room, or a lower Room that I preached?

Hilton. It was in an upper Room, you were up two pair of Stairs, the Chamber was hung with sad coloured Paper, and a sad coloured Bed was in the Room; upon the Left-hand, as you stood, there was a Chest of Sweet Wood stood, and a little Cabinet upon it, and a Glass over that; and upon the Right-hand, on the side of the Chimney, was a Closet. I took very good Notice of all these things.

Mr. Rosewell. Two pair of Stairs, upon your Oath, you say it was?

Hilton. Yes, It was two Pair of Stairs, upon my Oath, Sir.

Mr. Rosewell. How many Steps, Mrs. Hilton, were there?

Hilton. They were low Stairs, eight or nine to a Pair, I think; I did not number them, Mr. Rosewell.

Mr. Rosewell. The other says, there was a little Room up six Steps; and that I was but one Pair of Stairs high.

Hilton. And there was a Garret, my Lord; which I am sure there was above four Hundred People there at that Meeting.

Mr. Rosewell. Did you see that Number of People there?

Hilton. Yes, I did.

Mr. Rosewell. If you were within in the Room, how could you see them all there that were below, and in the Garret, as you say?

Hilton. When you went down to refresh your self, to Dinner, as I suppose; said I to Mrs. Smith, for the Lord's sake let me go out, for I am affrighted out of my Wits to hear such Stuff as this.

L. C. Just. Frightful Stuff indeed.

Hilton. Says she, you cannot go out till they all go; there is no Body to let you out; but I would fain have been gone out thence.

Mr. Rosewell. What time did you come thither, say you?

Hilton. We came by Seven a Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Rosewell. How did the Exercise begin?

Hilton. Between Seven and Eight.

Mr. Rosewell. I do not ask you what time, but how it began.

Hilton. You made a kind of a Prayer, I do not understand your way, for I never was used to your Meetings, I never was at any before in my Life. You took your Text, (I cannot be positive which, but it was) either out of the 20th or 21st Chapter of Genesis.

Mr. Rosewell. But can you remember these Words, and not the Chapter?

Hilton. I can tell you more that you said, if you please.

Mr. Rosewell. Mrs. Hilton —

L. C. Just. Let her go on; you ask her a Question, and will not stay for an Answer, but go to another thing. She is telling you what was done.

Hilton. This I am positive in, it was the 20th or 21st Chapter of Genesis: the Story was about Abraham and Sarah, how he bid her call her self his Sister.

Mr. Rosewell. That is the 20th Chapter.

L. C. Just. Nay, I suppose you can remember the Text better than this Woman.

Hilton. I believe it was the 20th, that you did most expound upon that Day; for you said at last Abimelech made Abraham a Present, which you did think might be about 20 Guineas.

Mr. Rosewell. I see you are thorough paced.

L. C. Just. Methinks she brought away much of your precious Stuff for one time upon my word.

Mr. Rosewell. How long did you stay there, Mrs. Hilton?

Hilton. I stay'd there from the time you came in till the end of all; about eleven or Twelve a Clock you went down to Dinner; They that were there stay'd till you came up agen, which was in the Afternoon; and then you began upon a Text which you took in the Psalms, I think; I cannot positively say where; but a new Text you did take, that you did.

Mr. Rosewell. In the Psalms did you say?

Hilton. And if it please you Sir, I never saw you but then, and now, in my Life.

Mr. Rosewell. What Habit was I in?

Hilton. You had a Camlet Cloak on that had an Eye of blew in it, and a mourning Hat-band about your Hat; and upon the Bed-side by me sat Mr. Atkinson in a mourning Cloak, and his two Boys.

Mr. Rosewell. There was some Stop or Pause you say; you call it a Dinner?

Hilton. You went to Dinner, I suppose; I know not where you were.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray how did the Exercise begin in the Afternoon?

Hilton. I cannot very well tell.

Mr. Rosewell. Was you there to the End of it?

Hilton. To the very End of all.

Mr. Rosewell. What Psalms was read, or what Chapter that I preached upon?

Hilton. Sir, I cannot remember what your Psalms is. These are the Words that you said, and that you Preached. Sir, I cannot remember how all these came in, nor all the Stuff that was said.

L. C. Just. She says she cannot remember all your Stuff.

Hilton. I was never used to a Conventicle in my Life; and I would I had not been there then.

Mr. Rosewell. What was the Text I preached upon?

Hilton. In the Morning it was, I tell you the 20th or 21st Chapter of Genesis. But the Heads of your Sermon, and after you had talked about the King, and all those things, was about Abraham and Sarah—

Mr. Rosewell. But what was the Text in the Afternoon?

Hilton. I cannot tell that truly.

Mr. Rosewell. Then upon what Occasion were those Words in the Morning about flocking to the King to cure the Evil?

Hilton. Sir, you said—

L. C. Just. How can any Body tell what occasion you could have. You had no Occasion from that Text, nor any other Text that I know of to talk of the King, or the King's Evil.

Mr. Rosewell. But I speak of the Coherence of the Discourse, my Lord.

L. C. Just. You Preach without any Coherence, or you never had been brought here. When you give your self the Liberty to talk of these things, you ramble from your Text.

Mr. Rosewell. I mean by it, my Lord, what part of the Chapter it was that did lead to it.

L. C. J. No Man living can tell; it was the Devil led you to talk Treason; The Indictment tells you so, that you had not the Fear of God before your Eyes, but were moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil to do it. Who leads People to do all sorts of Wickedness but the Devil? you can give no reason for it your self, nor no one else.

Mr. Rosewell. Were these Words delivered all in the Forenoon Discourse?

Hilton. I do not know what you call Forenoon, or Afternoon: I am sure we had no Dinner.

Mr. Rosewell. But was it all before or after I broke off, and went down?

Hilton. Before, Sir.

L. C. Just. She says it was before you went to Dinner; but for her part she had no Dinner at all she says. If you have done with her, then go on Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where is Mrs. Joan Farrar?

Farrar. Here I am, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you tell my Lord, and the Jury; were you present at this House when Mr. Rosewell preached there?

Farrar. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you hear him say?

Farrar. Do you ask me of the 14th of September first, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes.

L. C. Just. Why? were you there at any other time?

Farrar. Yes, several times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, take your own way of delivering your Evidence, and give an Account what you know of the Prisoner.

L. C. Just. But hark you, be sure you tell nothing but what is Truth. You must consider, here is the Life of a Man at the Stake, and your own immortal Soul is at stake, too. You are in the Presence of the great God of Heaven and Earth, that seeth into all your Actions and Thoughts, and searcheth the Hearts of all Mankind, and therefore have a Care of contracting any Guilt upon your self, by telling any Lie; be sure to say nothing but what is Truth.

Farrar. Sir, I was not in the Room with him; I was in a Parlour or Hall, what do you call it, a low Room; and he was up Stairs above it.

Mr. Att. Gen. But were you in the Congregation? Were there any other of the Hearers in that Room among whom you were?

Farrar. Yes, Sir; there were a great many of them there, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, what did you hear him say?

Farrar. Sir, concerning the Evil was the first thing I heard him say; and he made it so, that it was not the King that cured it, but it was they, they should Flock to. It is we they should Flock to, says he; for we are they which which are the Priests and the Prophets, that by our Prayers do cure the Grievances of the People.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did you hear him say more in that Discourse ?

Farrar. The next that I observed was, he said, we had had now two wicked Kings together ; but I could not tell who he compared them two wicked Kings to ; but he bid the People stand to their Principles, and in time they should overcome their Enemies.

Mr. Recorder. Pray have you heard him at any other time ?

Farrar. Yes, I have heard him at other times.

Mr. Recorder. Did you take Notice of any thing he said against the Government ?

Mr. Rosewell. I beseech your Lordship, may these leading Questions be asked ?

L. C. J. Yes, I have told you already to shew your Practice. It is not at all a leading Question. What did you hear him say at any other time about the Government ?

Farrar. In a Mill, it was by Rotherhithe Wall, at one Hudson's, he prayed that he might not offend the Lord in not praying for the King ; but the Lord might please to open his Eyes, or turn the Times.

L. C. J. Can you remember when that was ?

Farrar. It was the 17th Day of July, — no, of August to my best Remembrance ; and upon the 17th Chapter of Genesis.

L. C. J. That he preached upon there, did he ?

Farrar. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Did you hear him say any thing at any other time ?

Farrar. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. What do you remember about People in Scarlet ?

L. C. J. Tell us what you have heard him say else ?

Farrar. At West-lane end, at one Paul Shed's, I heard him preach concerning the Fire of London about eighteen Years ago. That there was a certain great rich Man, that lived in Gracechurch-street ; he said, he needed not name him, he supposed they all knew who he was ; and he said there went a poor Man to him, not a poor Man neither, but a Carpenter, an House-keeper, a labouring Man, and told him how to quench the Fire ; and then he preached, that if it had not been for that great Man, that Fire had not been, nor the Fires in Southwark or Wapping, if it had not been for the Lord Mayors and Sheriffs since.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ask her ?

Mr. Recorder. What have you heard him say else ?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, we have done, I think.

L. C. J. Answer my Brother Jenner's Question.

Mr. Recorder. What about People in Scarlet ?

Farrar. Then after he had preached concerning the Fire, he said it was a fine Sight to see Fools in Scarlet Gowns ; and he heard the Recorder was to be made a Judge.

L. C. J. He hears strange Stories it seems. What do you make of this Brother Jenner ?

Mr. Rosewell. God forbid, my Lord, this should be true.

L. C. J. You see she swears it.

Mr. J. Wimbins. Mr. Rosewell, will you ask her any Questions ?

Mr. Rosewell. Mistress, you say you were at the Meeting on the 14th of September ; pray in whose House was it ?

Farrar. It was at a House at the end of West-lane ; there are a Row of Houses that face to the Fields.

Mr. Rosewell. But whose House was it ?

Farrar. They said it was one Daniel's House.

Mr. Rosewell. In what Room of the House were you ?

Farrar. In the lower Room.

Mr. Rosewell. Did you see me there ?

Farrar. Sir, you were gone up Stairs before I came in.

Mr. Rosewell. You did not see me there upon your Oath ?

Farrar. No, my Lord, I did not see him.

L. C. J. She said at first, you were gone up before she came, and she was in a lower Room.

Farrar. But I knew his Voice.

L. C. J. Did you know his Voice ?

Farrar. Yes, Sir ; I had heard him several times.

Mr. Rosewell. Did not you tell some Body that you heard none of these Words ?

L. C. J. Were you asleep all the while ?

Farrar. No, Sir, I was not asleep, I did not Sleep while I was in the Room. I never slept in your Presence in my Life.

Mr. Rosewell. Were you there at the beginning ? What time came you in ?

Farrar. Sir, I believe you had read half your Prayer ; I was at the beginning of the Sermon.

Mr. Rosewell. Who came along with you ?

Farrar. I came alone ; my Child was not well, and so I came late.

Mr. Rosewell. What was the Chapter I was upon ?

Farrar. It was upon the 21st of Genesis, Sir.

Mr. Rosewell. Upon what Verse of the 21st of Genesis, was it that you heard these Words ?

Farrar. I cannot tell what Verse it was.

Mr. Rosewell. I ask my Lord, because I went distinctly upon Verses.

L. C. J. Prithce Man, I care not how thou went'st on.

Mr. Rosewell. Cannot you tell how they came in ?

Farrar. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Nor any one else, I dare say ; how such Words can come in.

Mr. Rosewell. Were the Words spoken together in that Exercise that you have sworn ?

Farrar. Yes, in that Exercise.

Mr. Rosewell. How long did you stay there ?

Farrar. Till you had done, I believe it was two a Clock.

Mr. Rosewell. Was it in the Forenoon ?

Farrar. We had no Dinner at all ; I cannot tell what you call Forenoon, or Afternoon.

Mr. Rosewell. Was it all spoken upon that Chapter, upon your Oath ?

Farrar. Truly, Sir, I think it was upon your first Text.

L. C. J. If you have done with her, let her go over.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall call one or two more of his Auditors at other times, that will give some account of his Way. Where is your Man, Mr. Atterbury ? What is his Name ?

Mr. Atterbury. Peter. But here is one of the Witnesses.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear him then. What is his Name?

(He was sworn.)

Mr. Atterbury. Robert Cook, he says.

Mr. Recorder. Were you an Officer in this place?

Cook. Yes, in St. Mary Maudlin's I was; Saint Mary Magdalen Bermondsey Parish.

Mr. Recorder. Were you at the executing of any Process against Rosewell's Conventicle?

Cook. If it please you, my Lord, I had a Warrant from Sir Thomas Jenner, to serve at one Weldy's House a Brick-layer in Rotherhithe; and when I came to the House to serve it, there was abundance of People, and a great Riot was made, but no Blows I confess; but a great Tumult of People, that had not I, and the Beadle, one Samuel Bennet by Name, caused the People to stand clear, I do not know but there might have been mischief done. Of which, we upon that gave an account to Sir Thomas Jenner, and he hath bound some of the People over to the Sessions.

L. C. J. What do you mean by this, Gentlemen?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done; this is only about some Disturbances that the King's Officers meet with, in executing Process against these Conventicles.

L. C. J. But what is this to the Prisoner?

Mr. Att. Gen. Here are some would have him called; but I confess we cannot make any use of his Evidence against the Prisoner, only as to what is hinted in the Indictment, that he did it to disturb the Peace.

L. C. J. Pish, that is nothing, the Officer did his Duty; but what is that to this Business? Have you done, Gentlemen, for the King?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, we have done.

L. C. J. Then Mr. Rosewell, now is your time to make your Defence; and you shall have time to make it as full as you will.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, may I have the Favour to have the Indictment read agen in Latin?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, if you will. Read it agen.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly thank your Lordship, only the Words, my Lord.

Cl. of Crown. (reads.) *In quadam illicita assemblea, in praesentia & auditu diversorum subdit' dicti Domini Regis, adtunc & ibidem illicitè & seditiosè assembleat' & congregat', assruit & declaravit quod populus (subdit' dicti Domini Regis nunc, inuendo) coadunationem fecere (Anglice made a flocking) dicto Domino Regi nunc, sub praetextu sanandi morbum regni (Anglice the King's Evil) quod ipse (dictum Dominum regem nunc, iterum inuendo) facere non potest; sed nos sumus illi (seipsum Thomam Rosewell & al' seditiosas & proditor' person' inuendo) ad quos illi (ligeos subdit' dicti Domini regis nunc, inuendo) debent accedere (Anglice flock to) quia nos (seipsum predict' Thomam Rosewell & al' sedit' & proditor' person' iterum inuendo) sumus Sacerdotes & Prophetæ qui precibus, dolores ipsorum (ligeos subdit' dicti Domini regis nunc, iterum inuendo) sanaremus. Mr. Rosewell. If it please you, my Lord, that which I object against, and desire to be satisfied in by your Lordship, is this; I am charged with speaking words about flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil; and it is in the Indictment called Morbus Regni Anglici, that is, the Disease of the English Kingdom—

L. C. J. No, no; It is Morbus Regni, Anglicè the King's Evil.

Mr. Rosewell. I do not understand how Morbus Regni can be the King's Evil.

L. C. J. Therefore because there is no apt Word in the Law for that Distemper, they help it up by the Word Anglicè to shew what they meant.

Mr. Rosewell. But my Lord, I understand there are proper Words for the Disease; as Struma, and Scrofula, those are proper Words for it, nor Morbus Regni.

L. C. J. Not at all in Law; those may be the Words used among Physicians; but in legal Proceedings we are to keep up exactly to the legal Names and Phrases; and where we have not an usual Word, then we help it up by Anglices: And so here we express that very Distemper, which is called by the Name of the King's Evil, by a Word framed as near to a Law Phrase as we can; and to shew our meaning in it we add, Anglicè the King's Evil.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, is that the Phrase that is proper for it in Law?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, it is very well expressed to shew what is meant.

Mr. Rosewell. But my Lord, Morbus Regni is in English properly the Disease of the Kingdom.

L. C. J. It is so, the Disease of the Kingdom; if they had gone no further, but left it there, it might have had such an Interpretation put upon it. But because the words are so ambiguous in Latin, they are reduced to a Certainty, by putting an Anglicè to them.

Mr. Rosewell. I thought it had been Anglici: My Lord, there is another Phrase that I object against, it says Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges insimul. My Lord, this cannot be understood of two Kings one after another; but insimul makes it to be both at once.

L. C. J. No, we have had now together two wicked Kings.

Mr. Rosewell. That we do not use to express so in Latin.

L. C. J. The Words do thus sound in English.

Mr. Rosewell. Here are two Words Insimul and nunc that do signify the present time. My Lord, I am now only speaking all this while upon the Hypothesis that these Words were spoken by me; for I still do and always must deny the Thesis.

L. C. J. We take it so.

Mr. Rosewell. It should have been Successive.

L. C. J. Then it had not agreed with your Words. For the Witnesses swear that you said we have now had two wicked Kings together, and not successively.

Mr. Rosewell. If that be an Anglicism, this cannot be true Latin.

L. C. J. Nay, if it be a Blunder in the Latin, it was a Blunder of your making; for you spoke it so in English, and the Indictment in Latin must exactly pursue your English.

Mr. Rosewell. Then, my Lord, here is another Expression, that they suffered Romanam superstitionem, Popery to come in.

L. C. J. Ay, is not that well expressed?

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, there may be Superstition in the Worship of the Church of Rome, and yet that not be the thing we call Popery.

L. C. J. There may so, you say right; but then this comes under the same reason, as the former Phrase you objected against about Morbis Regni. Because Romana superstitio is such a general Word, and because there are several Superstitions in the Romish Church, abundance of them; and this may make it uncertain; and because we have no other Word to express what we call Popery by, therefore there is an Anglice put in, to shew what is meant.

Mr. Rosewell. Then my Lord, it is said in eorum conspectu: is that right, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, Anglice under their Noses.

Mr. Rosewell. That is in their Sight.

L. C. J. Pray how would you put that into Latin, under their Noses?

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, if I should speak according to the other parts of the Latin of this Indictment, which your Lordships says must exactly pursue the English, I would render it Sub naribus illorum.

L. C. J. Such People suffer Conventicles under their Noses, in eorum Conspectu.

Mr. J. Holloway. 'Tis not your Nose that fees.

L. C. J. Suffer Rebellion under your Noses; are these things Sub naribus, or in Conspectu?

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, this could not possibly be spoken of the late King, and this King; when the Precedent King died a professed zealous Protestant; and his present Majesty has so often, and earnestly declared against it.

L. C. J. We know that very well; but yet withal we know 'twas the Pretence of Popery and Arbitrary Power, and those things that brought that blessed Martyr to the Scaffold; and the great Cry now at this Day by all Factionous, and seditious busy Fellows, is against Popery; as if it were just breaking in upon us, and the Government abetted it; when it is all false, nothing more untrue; the Indictment calls it so, says these Words are spoken falso, & malitiose; and all Treasons are so.

Mr. Rosewell. Then, my Lord, there is another thing, Si ipsi starent ad Fundamentalia eorum, Anglice if they would stand to their Principles, or Principals; for I know not how it is in the Indictment. Pray, my Lord, How comes Fundamentalia to signify Principles?

L. C. J. Their Principles, that is their Foundations, or Fundamentals. If the Foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do? Says the Psalmist. The Latin Bible expresseth it by Fundamentalia.

Mr. Rosewell. Then it is si ipsi in the third Person; now my Lord, in common Sense that must needs refer to the two wicked Kings, that were spoken of just before; or to the King, and his Subjects spoken of afterwards; and then sure it cannot be Treason.

L. C. J. No, they; that is, I and you that are here. 'Twas spoken to your Congregation. If they would stand to their Principles, then come the broken Platters, &c.

Mr. Rosewell. If it were spoken to them, and of them, it must have been you, or we. Then it is added in the end, my Lord, Fractis Patinis, broken Platters: Your Lordship has remembered me of that Word. My Lord, I did hear that Mistress Smith did swear at Kingston Affizes, it was Pewter Platters.

L. C. J. I do not know what she swore there; now I am sure she swears as it is in the Indictment.

Mr. Rosewell. Mistress Smith, Pray did not you swear it was Pewter Platters at Kingston?

Smith. No, I never said otherwise than I do now; and that is, broken Platters.

Mr. Rosewell. I did hear she swore Pewter then. But, my Lord, I conceive, if it refers to me, and the People that were there, it should have been as the former Sentence is in the first Person; We have had, &c. but here it is changed into the third Person, and therefore cannot be so meant.

L. C. Just. But it plainly speaks its own meaning, that it is meant of the People there.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, then as to these Inuendos, I see there are Eight or Ten of them. Whether are these to make such a Construction of a Man's meaning, which doth not otherwise sufficiently appear, as to bring a Man under the guilt of Treason?

L. C. Just. I tell you, the meaning is plain; if you and we, such false Traytors as are said to be there assembled with you, will but stand to our Principles, we shall overthrow and destroy our Enemies with broken Platters and Rams-horns.

Mr. Rosewell. It is said here ipse non timebat quin—Of whom should I speak that ipse?

L. C. J. You were speaking of your self and your Congregation.

Mr. Rosewell. But that is in the third Person, and the singular Number.

* Mr. Sol. Gen. No, the Jurors that find this Indictment say, that he said * Mr. Finch. so, and that must be in the third Person.

Mr. Rosewell. That is not according to the rest.

Mr. Just. Withins. They, is the People with him; and he, is he himself; that is plain, and can have no other Construction.

Mr. Rosewell. Now, my Lord, will your Lordship please to accept a free Declaration of the Truth of this matter?

L. C. Just. Ay, ay, go now to the Fact; now we are got over the Exceptions to the Indictment. To answer the Fact is most proper at this time.

Mr. Rosewell.

Mr. Rosewell. Then here in the Presence of the great God of Heaven, the righteous Judge of all the Earth; before whom you and I, and all that are here, must one Day appear, at that terrible Bar of impartial Justice, (and a glorious Tribunal it will be) to give an account of all things that we have done in the Body, whether they be good or evil; and I am told by my blessed Redeemer, (who shall also be my Judge that Day,) that an account must be given of every idle Word that I shall utter, how much more for Lying and Perjury, and False-witness bearing, as your Lordship, (I humbly thank you for it,) did very seasonably suggest to those that have witnessed these things against me; I say, in the Presence of that great God, and this Honourable Bench of Reverend Judges, and you Gentlemen of the Jury and my dear Countrymen, that have been now sworn, as well as returned by the Process of Law for that end; I do here most solemnly declare the Truth unto you, as in the Presence of this God I shall answer it hereafter. And I shall begin with the latter part of these Words first; where this Indictment ends; for that seems to refer to some things of the late Times, and also to my Treasonable Intentions now. My Lord, and dear Countrymen, because I heard something mentioned as to the late unhappy Civil Wars in these Nations; I can declare, my Father was no ways concerned in those Wars, for he was dead before they began; and I was then but a Child, and did not understand the thing. But for the Death of the King, (Death did I say? that is too soft a Word; the Murder, the barbarous Murder of His Majesty King Charles the First, whom I had once the Happiness to see the Face of; or rather the Unhappiness to see in respect of his Condition at that time; being at Dinner under a Tree, with some few Persons about him, which very much affected my Heart, tho' then but young. So far was I from being one that would compare him to Feroboam, &c. as your Lordship will hear, that) I always bewailed and abhorred that Act. For my present Sovereign, I declare in the Presence of God, I honour him with my Soul, and daily pray for him; and if I could do him any real good, I would Sacrifice my Life most cheerfully to do it; I would die at his Foot to do him any real good. My Lord, I was once threatened with the loss of my Life for declaring for His Majesty in his Exile; when, it is well known, few durst appear in those Days on the behalf of an injured Prince: It was objected against me, that I never prayed for Oliver Cromwell, that had Usurped the Government. My Lord, I knew he stood upon a false Bottom; he was an Usurper. And for declaring, that the Kingdom would never be at Peace till the Right Heir, our Sovereign that now is, were restored to his Right, I was threatened that a Gibbet should be set at my Church Porch, and I hanged upon it, or at my own Door. I preached upon that place of Scripture, Ezek. 21. and the 27th Verse, I will overturn, overturn, overturn; and it shall be no more, until he come whose Right it is, and I will give it him. And I declared in my Sermon the several overturnings, that God hath given them then in Power. And tho' they threatened me, yet God preserved me then here at Home, as he did my dear Sovereign abroad; for whom I have prayed many hundreds and thousands of times. And it is well known, immediately after his Majesty's happy Restoration, I did upon one of His Majesty's Days preached upon that Subject: For the Transgressions of a Land, many shall be the Princes thereof. I preached concerning the Excellency of Monarchy, which I shewed to be the chiefest and best of Governments, practised almost every where: And I proved it from the Example of the great God of Heaven, the Monarch of all the World, down to some of the meanest Species of Creatures. I shewed it was the Government God had set up in his Church; appointing the Lord Christ to be the King there: Among the Angels there was the Prince of them: Among the Celestial Bodies, the Sun in the Firmament—

L. C. J. Mr. Rosewell, I am very unwilling to give you any Interruption, because of the Condition you stand in, being a Prisoner pleading for your Life, upon an Accusation of High-Treason. But I tell you, these things that you have now insisted upon are not at all to the purpose, as to what you are brought here for. You are not here Arraigned for your good Works, but for your evil Works. If you commend your self for two Hours together; it signifies not one Farthing; and the Gentlemen of the Jury must let it go for nothing. It only serves to please your Humour of talking, and captivate the Auditory; but it is not at all to the purpose. Keep close to the matter, that it is incumbent upon you to answer; to the Business you are upon here. It is our Duty, who are upon our Oaths, and who are accountable to the Government and the Law for what we do, to see that things be done according to Law. You are not here called in Question for your good Works or Actions; but for Treasonable and Seditious Words. I would to God, you had never done worse than what you have said of your self. But here is an Indictment for Traiterous Preaching at one particular Place, and one particular Time; answer to that, The Jury must go, not according to your way of Speaking; but according to the Evidence, relating to the Matters laid in this Indictment. Do not talk of your Preaching for Monarchy; and your Overturn, Overturn, Overturn; for if this be true, that the Witnesses have Sworn against you, you have at once overturned all the good you ever did, or said in your Life before.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, I know very well, one such evil Action is enough to marr a Life of former good ones. But this that I have said was to shew, how inconsistent those things that they have Sworn, are with my constantly declared Judgment and former Practice.

L. C. Just. There are abundance of People, to whom the King has formerly extended Mercy, not only his Pardon, but even all the Promotions their ambitious Fancies could make them pretend to: But 'tis well known, the Devil has not had more ready Instruments to carry on bloody Designs for the Murdering this Gracious King, their Princely Benefactor, than these very Men that were thus gratified and advanced by him. Therefore, we can say nothing to what is alledged of former Loyalty; the Devil surprizes Men into these things; they do them as the Indictment says, by the Instigation of the Devil. Keep to the Matter before you.

Mr. Rosew. Well then, my Lord, to cut short. As to the Business since his Majesty's Return: I have been a constant Observer of his Days; and particularly the 30th of January I have always observed as a Day of Humiliation: And I did upon one of those Days preach upon that Text—

L. C. Just. And all this signifies just nothing; and upon that Day you went to a Conventicle against the Law, and Preached there; which shews, what a conformable Man to the Government and the Law you are. You can have your Congregation of Hundreds of People, and I know not what; now I tell you all this makes nothing against you, nor doth all your Commendation make any thing for you.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, I do not know any Law of the Land that is against Preaching the Gospel.

L. C. Just. Yes, in Conventicles to preach, is against the Law of the Land.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, I humbly conceive it is the Circumstance of Number that makes the Transgression.

L. C. Just. It is not only a Circumstance, but the Substance to preach in a Conventicle, and all against Law.

Mr. Rosew. If you call that a Transgression to preach the Gospel, I humbly acknowledge myself a Transgressor.

L. C. Just. I tell you it is a Transgression; but it is not such a Transgression as that for which you are here Indicted: But because you commend your self so much; a Man, I must tell you, that every Day doth notoriously transgress the Laws of the Land, need not be so fond of giving himself Commendations for his Obedience to the Government and the Laws.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, I was only saying that upon the 30th of January I preached upon that Text; 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2. I exhort therefore, that first of all Supplications, Prayers, Intercessions and giving of Thanks be made for all Men; for Kings and all that are in Authority; that under them we may lead quiet, and peaceable Lives, in all Godliness and Honesty.

L. C. Just. Amen! I say to that Petition.

Mr. Rosew. Amen! I am sure I say to it, with all my Soul; and it is my daily Prayer to my God for my Sovereign. And here I shewed, that it was the Duty of Subjects to pray for their Prince—

L. C. Just. I tell thee, I care not a Farthing what thy Text was, nor thy Doctrine; I wish you had been at Church tho', and been conformable to the Laws. But this is nothing to our Business.

Mr. Rosew. I had therein a sharp Reproof and Invective against those that instead of praying for their Civil Head, cut it off; and those that design and plot against the Government.

L. C. Just. You did abundance of good by your Sermon, no doubt; I shall not now stand to examine that.

Mr. Rosew. So far was I from harbouring any Traiterous Thought—

L. C. Just. Come, Come; All this is besides the Cushion; come to the Matter that is here before us Man. I would not restrain you of any part of your Defence, either in Time, or any thing else; but let us not have the time taken up with that which no way concerns our Question. Our Business relates to what was said at your Meeting, at that Time the Witnesses speak of.

Mr. Rosew. Then, my Lord, as to the Truth of this particular Case, I shall now declare all that past then; as in the Presence of that God who searcheth the Heart, and trieth the Reins, and who shall judge us all. Upon the 14th Day of September last, I did preach to some People that were met at a Friend's House, one Capt. Daniel in Rotherbith: and as my Course hath been to expound the Scriptures, (to make them understand them) I was, my Lord, that Day upon the 20th Chapter of Genesis. The Chapter is about Abraham and Abimelech King of Gerar. Now, my Lord, will you please that I shall deliver to you what was said, by repeating it by Word of Mouth, or read it.—

L. C. Just. No, no; I do not desire any of your Expositions, or Preachments; Answer to the Indictment, and what is charged upon you there.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, I am about it, in telling you what was really said; and I ask the favour of delivering in Court what I then delivered to them. My Lord, it was thus: In the 2d Verse it is said, And Abraham said of Sarah his Wife, she is my Sister; From whence I observed, that he had been guilty of this once before, in the 12th Chapter, when he told the very same Lie to Pharaoh King of Egypt. And thence I raised this Note, That a Good Man, or a Friend of God might fall into the same Sin once and again. And in proof of it, I brought three, or four Instances. That of Lot in the foregoing Chapter, his falling twice into the same Sins of Drunkenness and Incest with his own Daughters. That of Samson, in the 16th of Judges, (and there came in the mention of Dalilah, that she spoke of, which she only remembers the Name of, and not the Truth of the Quotation.) That of Peter's denying his Master, Once, twice, and again; first, with a Lie; secondly, with an Oath; and thirdly, with an Imprecation. But the Proof which they in this Point have most distorted, is that of Jehosaphat, who sinfully joyned with two wicked Kings: First, with a wicked Father, Ahab in his Expedition into the Land of the Syrians against Ramoth Gilead, 2 Chro. 18th Chapter; for which he is reprov'd as a great Transgressor, and threatned by the Prophet in the 19th Chapter, and the beginning: And yet he afterwards joyned with another wicked King, Abaziah, Ahab's wicked Son, to go to Tarsish; as we may see in the 20th Chapter, and the latter end. And here, my Lord, is the whole of the Business concerning the two wicked Kings. In the Presence of the Holy and great God there was not one word spoken of the Kings of England, either King Charles the First, or his present Majesty. This was as to the two wicked Kings. And then, my Lord, I came to the 7th Verse, which has these Words, He is a Prophet, and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt Live. Upon this I observed, That the Prayers of God's Prophets have been very prevalent for the Healing, and helping of others in a time of need. And three Proofs I brought of this: The last of which, was that of the Prophet Isaiah's praying for King Hezekiah in the time of his great and dangerous Sickness. But that which has reference to this Business, was that out of the 1 Kings 13. and the beginning; When the Prophet came to Bethel, and there rebuked Jeroboam, and prophesied against the Alter there; Jeroboam put forth his hand, and shook it at him, and said, Lay hold of him him; upon which the King's hand was dried up. Thereupon the King intreated the Prophet, that he would pray unto the Lord his God for him, that his hand might be restored, which the Prophet did; and the King's hand was restored again, and became as it was before. And here is the Business of Jeroboam. In the Presence of God, I speak it, there was not any the least Comparison of my Dear Sovereign to that accursed wicked Prince Jeroboam, who made Israel to Sin: No, my very Soul trembled at the Thoughts of it when I heard it. Upon this Head I had this Sentence, or Observation (which I will give you to a Word.) If I were to die the next Moment, and appear before the glorious Tribunal of the Heavenly Majesty, I tell not the least Lie, or Equivocation, or Prevarication) That a Godly Man's Prayer is a Sovereign Cure of the King's Evil; whereby the meanest, or the poorest Christian may gratify, and serve the greatest Monarch. And this is not my Saying neither, but the Saying of an Expositor upon that very place of Scripture, out of whom I did quote it. Nor did I speak of it, or he write of it, with respect to that particular Disease, that the Indictment calls Morbus Regni, but the King's Evil as the King's own Disease, in reference to Abimelech; who was King of Gerab. For it followeth in the Close of the Chapter, God heard Abraham's Prayer, and healed Abimelech and all his House. But as for that Word they speak of; of the People's flocking to his Majesty to cure the King's Evil, which he could not do; and that we were Priests and Prophets to whom they must come for Cure; in the Presence of the Eternal God there was not a Word of it. Then, my Lord, for that of the Ram's-horns; I shall observe how that came in by and by; but first I will premise, That all this that has been now spoken of, was upon the Exposition of that Chapter in the Morning. In the Afternoon I preached upon a particular Text; I began with the reading of a Psalm, and a Chapter; and so far I conceive it was after the manner and Usage of the Church of England, which enjoins the reading of the Scriptures as Part of its Worship. I Preach'd upon the 11th of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and the 12th Verse, (tho one of the Witnesses said it was a Psalm) —

L. C. J. She would not be positive, but she thought a Psalm, she could not tell.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, it was the 11th of Heb. v. 12. the Words are these, Therefore sprang there of one, and him as good as Dead, so many as the Stars of the Sky in multitude, and as the Sand which is by the Sea-shore innumerable. Upon which I had this Note, That the great God can effect great Matters by very small and unlikely Means: As here, (of one) what was less than one? none at all: And this one too, as good as Dead; and yet from him to raise as many as the Stars in the Sky, and the Sands on the Sea-shore. What great things did God effect by the Rod of Moses? which was but a little Wand in his Hand, and yet a Sign and Symbol of Authority; as our Sheriffs white Staves are. Never was there any great Plague to be sent upon the Enemy of God, and his Church, Pharaoh and his Egyptians; but upon the stretching forth that little Rod, it came. And so, at the Siege of Jericho; What dreadful Dilapidations in that great City, did the Sound of the Rams-horns make? What a Terrible Army of the Enemies of the Israelites did Gideon's small Host destroy, with a few broken Pots or Pitchers? (much less did I mention Platters, or Pewter Dishes; as I have been informed they first Swore.) And what a tremendous Champion did David strike down with a Stone in a Sling? And what a glorious Work did our Lord Christ, the Son of David, do, in his curing the Blind Man with a little Clay and Spittle; more likely to dam up the Eyes of one that could well see, than to open the Eyes of one that was born Blind. Now here, my Lord, is the whole truth in the Presence of the Eternal God. Here your Lordship sees is mention made upon the second Verse of the Twentieth of Genesis of two wicked Kings; but how? not (as they have represented it) with any Reflection upon the Kings of England: Nor were they spoken in that order as they have Sworn them; but as I have now repeated them. Here is mention of healing the King's Evil, and of Jeroboam; but no way in that manner as they say. And here is likewise mention of Rams-horns, broken Pitchers, and a Stone in a Sling; but not with the least application to the Government, or reference to it, or Reflection upon it or the King: and this is the Truth. I have made an ingenuous Confession of the whole as it passed, that your Lordship may see how much I am abused by these false Wretches. And if they have so good Memories as really, and indeed to remember what was then said, their Memories and their Consciences cannot but go along with me; and confirm what I have said; that all that was spoken by me that Day, was as I have related it, without the least Reflection upon, or Application to his former Majesty and our present Sovereign, or either of them, or any thing relating to the Government. And if you be not convinced here, I am sure there will be a Day come wherein you will find and see, that these are none of the King's Friends, but his Enemies; that thus have falsely accused an innocent, faithful Loyal Subject of Treason; a Crime which my very Soul abhors the thoughts of. In Proof whereof, if your Lordship will give me leave, I will now call my Witnesses to Testify the Truth of all this Matter. And after this free and ingenuous Confession of the Truth, and what the Witnesses I shall call will testify about it, I hope, and trust in my Good God, that he will let you my Dear Countrymen, see the Truth and Sincerity of my Heart in whatever Words were spoken by me. Had I been guilty of those Things that are laid to my Charge, I were not worthy to live. Pray Mr. Cryer, Call Mr. Thomas Hudson.

Vol. III.

L. C. J. Ay; Come call your Witnesses.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, One thing I would desire to speak to your Lordship. Your Lordship was speaking, that what I declared of my former Loyalty was nothing to what the Witnesses have deposed; My Lord, I have read in a true History, (I think the Scriptures will be owned by all Persons that are here to be such,) of two false Witnesses; they were such; they are called Sons of Belial; (I pray God these be not accounted Daughters of Belial) that Swore Naboth did blaspheme God and the King. Doth your Lordship believe it?

L. C. J. What would you have of us, Man, by that Question?

Mr. Rosew. I am confident, my Lord; your Lordship, and the Court, do not believe he did so.

L. C. J. The Scriptures tell us it was not true; Do you think we do not believe the Scriptures,

tures, because we do not hear you Preach in your Conventicles? We do believe the Scriptures, Man; and we believe too they have been perverted by you, and other People, to very ill Purposes. Yes, I do remember the Story of Naboth; and to shew you that I can remember some Holy History as well as you; I can tell you of another Story, and that is the Story of Susanna, and the Elders, and there was Circumstance of Time and Place testified to; but it seems they were defective in their Proof, and thereby discovered. You would do well to detect the Witnesses if you can, in some Contradiction, or Falshood; that will do you more Service, than all your Harangues and Speeches.

Mr. Rosew. The God of Heaven will do it this Day, I trust; for to him I have open'd my Cause.

L. C. J. Well, well, Call your Witnesses, and prove what you can.

Mr. Rosew. My dear Redeemer himself was served so; nay condemned by the Testimony of false Witnesses. (Mr. Hudson came in.)

L. C. J. Come, here is your Witness; What say you to him?

Mr. Rosew. Mr. Hudson, were you present at the Meeting at Rotherhithe on Lord's-Day the 14th of September last?

Mr. Hudson. Yes Sir, I was so.

Mr. Rosew. Here is Mrs. Smith hath sworn that since the beginning of August, we had a meeting in our Publick Meeting-House; Was there any, pray Sir?

Mr. Hudson. There was none such, that I know of.

Mr. Rosew. She swears, that we were at the House of Captain Daniel Weldy's the 14th of September. Was it so?

Mr. Hudson. No, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. What place was it then?

Mr. Hudson. It was one Capt. Daniel's.

L. C. J. That is the same, as they say.

Mr. Rosew. The first Witness, Mrs. Smith said Capt. Weldy's; indeed, the other said Capt. Daniel's.

L. C. J. She said she was told so, but she could not tell; but she remembers you pray'd for him, and his Child too who was then ill.

Mr. Rosew. Pray Sir, as to the Truth of the Business; Did you hear me speak of two wicked Kings? That, my Lord, came in, I say upon the second Verse of the 20th of Genesis, which I then was expounding.

L. C. J. Nay, ask him in general what he heard you say? and whether he heard you say any thing of two wicked Kings, and what it was?

Mr. Rosew. Ay, about Abah, and Abaziab his Son—

L. C. J. Nay, nay, I must have none of those Things, we must have fair Questions put; for, as you see we will not admit the King's Council to put any Questions to the Witnesses, nor produce any Witnesses against you, that are leading, or not proper, so nor must you: But if you have a mind to ask him any Questions, what he heard concerning two wicked Kings generally; do so.

Mr. Hudson. Upon the 2d Verse he was then.

L. C. J. Of what Chapter?

Mr. Hudson. Of the 20th of Genesis. I was then in the Place, and writ. He was upon the second Verse, and concerning Abraham's denying of Sarah his Wife. Says Mr. Rosewell, doth Abraham here fall again into Lying? I thought he had smarted enough in the 12th Chapter, for the same he told to Pharaoh: And doth he fall again, and not take warning by it? From that you may take notice, that the best of God's Children may fall agen and agen into the same Sin. And there you quoted what Mischief good Jehosaphat had like to have brought upon himself, by joyning with two wicked Kings: First, with wicked Abah King of Israel; and, after he was reprov'd for it by the Prophet, yet he fell into the same Sin agen, by joyning with Abah's wicked Son King Abaziab. And so he quoted Sampson, who got Mischief by taking a Wife among the Daughters of the Philistines; and yet after he had felt some smart and hurt by it, yet like good Jehosaphat, and good Abraham, he falls into the same Sin agen, by going to Tinnab and taking Dalilah.

Mr. Rosew. What said I, pray, upon the Seventh Verse?

Mr. Hudson. The Seventh Verse was, concerning God's appearing to Abimelech in a Dream; where God says, He shall pray for thee, for he is a Prophet, and thou shalt be healed. And there Mr. Rosewell spoke concerning the Worth and Value of the Prayers of God's Prophets; wherein he instanced in one thing, that they were good to cure the King's Evil. And he quoted several Texts of Scripture of the Worth and Value of them; and among the rest was that in the First Book of Kings, the 13th Chapter, and the 6th Verse, wherein the Prophet came to reprove Jeroboam at the Altar at Bethel; and the King stretched forth his Arm, and bid lay hold on him, and the King's Hand was dried up: Upon which, the King said to the Prophet, Intreat now the Face of thy God for me, and he did so; the Prophet prayed unto the Lord, and the King's Arm was restored whole as the other. And he did quote that of Hezekiah too.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, this Man did take Notes; and therefore may be the more exact.

Mr. Hudson. Yes, my Lord, I have my Notes, and can read them at large; and I did generally write, my Lord.

Mr. Rosew. Then pray Mr. Hudson, will you declare, whether you heard any thing in that Exposition or Discourse, concerning Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling?

Mr. Hudson. That was in the Sermon, Sir; in the Afternoon.

Mr. Rosew. She swears it was all in the Morning Discourse.

Mr. Hudson. There was not such a Word in that, as I know of: The Sermon was not in the Morning; you did only Expound, as you used to do, in the Morning.

L. C. J. If you have done with him, I would ask him a Question or two. Hark you, Sir, Pray what time did this Exercise begin?

Mr. Hudson. It begun about Eight a-Clock.

L. C. J. What number of People do you think there were there?

Mr. Hudson. I cannot judge how many they were.

L. C. J. How many do you think?

Mr. Hudson. I believe there were a matter of Forty or Fifty there.

L. C. J. No more than Forty or Fifty?

Mr. Hudson. Alas, we could see but in one Room.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What Room were you in?

Mr. Hudson. I was in one of the Chambers.

L. C. J. How many Pair of Stairs high?

Mr. Hudson. Two Pair of Stairs high.

L. C. J. Did you see Mr. Rosewell?

Mr. Hudson. No, I could not see him at all.

L. C. J. Was there ever a Bed in the Room where you were?

Mr. Hudson. No, my Lord, there was not.

L. C. J. Was there a Dinner-time between?

Mr. Hudson. There was at Noon a Resting a little while.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Rosewell go down?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, my Lord, he did, I believe, go down Stairs.

L. C. J. Do you remember any thing that was spoken of Sampson and Dalilah?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, as I said before, there was about Sampson's going down to Timnah to take Dalilah; shewing his failing, how he fell twice into the same Sin.

L. C. J. Did you hear any Discourse about Canting? Did you observe he used that Word Canting?

Mr. Hudson. No, not that Day, as I know of.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him use that Word?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, I did one Day.

L. C. J. Ay; What did he say that Day about Canting?

Mr. Hudson. I am not able to tell you very exactly.

L. C. J. You must, you must indeed.

Mr. Hudson. I do assure your Lordship, I know not how to repeat his Expressions about it.

L. C. J. For look you, Sir; Tho' you are not upon your Oath, because the Law doth not allow it; yet the same thing that I told those Witnesses before, the same I must tell you; you must consider, Friend, you come here to serve no turn, nor Party; you are in the Presence of the great God of Heaven and Earth, who will call you to Account for every thing you Testify here; and therefore without any Subterfuges tell us the Truth, and the whole plain Truth without Welt or Guard.

Mr. Hudson. My Lord, I will not deny one Tittle of the Truth, nor tell any thing that is untrue. I know I am in the presence of a great Court of Justice, and in the Presence of the God of Heaven.

L. C. J. Tell us then, what the Prisoner said about Canting.

Mr. Hudson. He was speaking of the wicked Men of the World, that when they spoke concerning serious Religion called it Canting, and says he, what is Canting? Canting, says he, is a whining Tone.

L. C. J. Did you hear him speak any thing concerning Organs, and Surplices, and white Gowns?

Mr. Hudson. No, my Lord; nothing of Surplices nor white Gowns?

L. C. J. Nor any thing concerning Organs?

Mr. Hudson. No; but something he had concerning the Cathedrals, and their canting Tone there.

Mr. Rosewell. Will your Lordship accept an ingenuous Confession from me my self about this Matter?

L. C. J. No, no, Mr. Rosewell, that will not be Evidence; you can neither acquit, nor condemn your self by these Things either confessed or denied. It is your Witnesses that I must ask, and that I expect an Account from. Therefore I ask you Friend, and pray recollect your self; How was it that he talked concerning the Canting in Cathedrals?

Mr. Hudson. Truly, my Lord, I cannot give a better Description of it than I have done. For I neither do particularly remember what time it was that I heard him use that Expression, nor can I tell you where it was; neither where, nor when.

Mr. Rosewell. Shall I tell your Lordship the Occasion—

L. C. J. Why do you think I believe any Word you say, notwithstanding any Imprecations or Asseverations you make about your self? It must neither weigh with the Court nor the Jury; we must go according to the Evidence. St. Peter himself, that you say you talked of, denied all with a great many Asseverations; but that Denial did not make him Innocent, no it was his Sin. So all your Imprecations, and Asseverations and Affirmations of your own Innocence, do not signify one Farthing to this Cause.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hark you, Mr. Hudson; Let me ask you one Question. Pray when Mr. Rosewell had explained those Texts of Scripture, did he not use frequently to make Application of his Quotations?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, pray Sir, after he had spoken of the two wicked Kings, how did he apply that?

Mr. Hudson. My Lord, I will tell you how he applied it. After he had made those Quotations, says he, take notice, if Abraham fell, and good Jehosaphat fell, and Sampson fell, and Peter fell, then what are we? Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall: and that was the Application he made of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you speak to all that Mr. Rosewell spoke in that Discourse at that time touching these Matters?

Mr. Hudson. No, Sir, not all; I cannot remember all; But the Substance of the distinct Heads I do remember.

Mr. Rosewell. Then about the King's Evil; how did you apprehend it was meant?

Mr. Hudson. My Lord, I do not believe he spoke it with respect to that Disease which we call the King's Evil; because he spoke it with reference to the Disease that the King was under.

Mr. Rosewell. Did you hear any thing about Twenty Guineas?

Mr. Hudson. No, I did not hear a Word of any Guineas that Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear him say any thing about the Peoples flocking to the King?

Mr. Hudson. No indeed, Sir; not I.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray Mr. Hudson, Did I name the Word Priests?

Mr. Hudson. No, Sir, I did not hear you name Priests, but Ministers and Prophets; and what a Judgment it was to have the Prophets taken away.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray recollect your self; Is that a Phrase they use, Ministers and Prophets; or do not they call themselves Priests?

Mr. Hudson. Ministers and Prophets, my Lord, are the usual Words.

Mr. Att. Gen. Priests is the Word I am told they have.

Mr. Rosew. Then Sir, Pray will you give an Account how that about the Rams-horns came in?

Mr. Hudson. That my Lord was upon that Text, 11 Heb. 12.—

Mr. Rosew. Do you remember what time it was; Forenoon or Afternoon?

Mr. Hudson. I do remember it was in your Sermon in the Afternoon. The Words are these, Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as Dead, so many as the Stars in the Sky in multitude, and as the Sand by the Sea-shore innumerable. From whence he raised this Note, or Doctrine; That the great God could by very small Means bring great things to pass. And then he came to prove his Doctrine, by several Instances. Says he, What Works did God do by Moses's Rod? And by Gideon's broken Pitchers, routing a whole Army? What great Works has God done by small Means? That by the founding of Rams-horns the Walls of Jericho should fall down? And what great Wonders he wrought when David slew the tremendous Giant Goliath with a Stone out of a Sling! And what great Works and Wonders did the Son of David our Lord Jesus Christ do, in opening the Eyes of him that was born Blind, with a little Clay and Spittle? The Application of that was, A little Grace—

L. C. J. We do not desire to hear your Applications.

Smith. My Lord, if your Lordship please, Mr. Hudson used to Expound himself.

Mr. Hudson. My Lord, I used to repeat what I write, in my own Family; that is all.

L. C. J. Yes, no doubt he is a most excellent Expositor; there are several People take upon them to Expound that can neither read, nor write. But pray Friend, let me ask you one Question more; Was the Captain, at whose House you were the 14th of September, at Home or at Sea?

Mr. Hudson. My Lord, he was not at Home, but at Sea; and is still at Sea.

L. C. J. Do you remember that he pray'd for him at that time?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, my Lord, 'twas his common Practice to pray for the Family wherever he came.

L. C. J. And did he pray for his Son that was Sick?

Mr. Hudson. I cannot tell whether he were Sick or no, I do not remember that; but he prayed for the Father and all his Children, the whole Family.

Mr. Rosew. Pray did you hear any one Word mentioned of the Kings of England, or of his present Majesty, but only in Praying for him; as I bless God I daily do, that God would give him Grace and all good Things here, and his Glory hereafter?

Mr. Hudson. Not one Word did I hear named of the Kings of England; nor of any Kings, but those mentioned in the Scriptures, that were quoted; The Kings of Israel, and the like.

Mr. Rosew. Was there any Word spoken about Popery being permitted to come in under their Noses?

Mr. Hudson. Not one Word of that was spoken, that I know of.

L. C. J. Did you hear the King of England mentioned at all that Day?

Mr. Hudson. Yes, in his Prayer. It was his constant course to pray for the King.

L. C. J. Ay; what did he pray for?

Mr. Hudson. He used to express himself very heartily in Prayer, that God would enable him to Rule and Govern the People under his Charge; and bless him. And he used to say, God forbid that he should Sin against God in neglecting to Pray for the King.

Mr. Rosewell. It was Samuel's Speech to Saul. Pray Sir, did you hear that?—

L. C. J. Nay, nay, ask him what he did hear you pray.

Mr. Rosew. Did I pray about opening the Eyes—

L. C. J. But you must not open your Witnesses Eyes: Do not lead him.

Mr. Hudson. It was his Common Practice to pray for the King, that God would preserve him from all his Enemies.

L. C. J. And we say the same thing too.

Mr. Hudson. And that God would remove all Evil Councillors from him.

L. C. J. Ay, no Question.

Mr. Hudson. And establish his Throne in Righteousness, and lengthen his Life, and prosper his Reign; and he used to pray as heartily, and as favourably for the King, as ever I heard any Man in my Life.

L. C. J. So there was praying in this Hall, I remember, for his late Majesty; for the doing of him Justice: We all know what that meant, and where it ended.

Mr. Rosew. Mr. Crjer, pray call Mr. George Hall. (who came in) Mr. Hall, Were you present this 14th Day of September at Rotherbith?

Mr. Hall. Yes Sir, I was.

Mr. Rosew. When I expounded upon the 20th of Genesis?

Mr. Hall. Yes, you did so, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Pray will you inform my Lords what you heard me say.

Mr. Hall. I will inform them to the best of my Memory.

L. C. J. What Trade are you, Friend?

Mr. Hall. I am a Mealman my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, what say you?

Mr. Hall. The 14th of September last it was my Lot to hear Mr. Rosewell expound the 20th Chapter of Genesis; as it was his usual Course to expound a Chapter.

Mr. Rosew. It was not of Choice, but taken in Course. And pray what do you remember was said by me about two wicked Kings?

Mr. Hall. Sir, I remember you brought a Scripture concerning Jehosaphat joining with two; first of all with wicked Abah, and afterwards with wicked Abaziah his Son; and you proved it out of 2 Chron. 18th Chap. and 19th and 20th Verses.

Mr. Rosew. Do you remember there was any one Word spoken of the Kings of England?

Mr. Hall. There was nor one Word of his present Majesty, nor his Father, nor any of the Kings of England; but of the Kings of Israel, Abah and his Son.

Mr. Rosew. Well then, concerning Feroboam, what do you remember of that?

Mr. Hall. As to Feroboam—* You were expounding from the 7th Verse of the 20th Chapter of Genesis—And in the opening of that 7th Verse among several Texts of Scrip-

* This Witness was wont to say that some Person or Persons pinch'd his Legs as he was ture, giving his Evidence, ture, Mr. Rosewell had this which occasioned those frequent breaks. Note, —Hold—Jeroboam.—

L. C. J. Ay, about Jeroboam.

Mr. Hall. My Memory fails me—

L. C. J. Ay, so I perceive it doth wonderfully.

Mr. Hall. As to Jeroboam, he brought a Text from the 2d Book of Kings, the 13th, and the former part of the Chapter. There was a Man of God that came to Bethel, and prophesied against Dan and Bethel, and there were these Words, that Jeroboam—

Mr. Rosew. He had his Hand dried up—

L. C. J. What do you mean by that? If your Witness be out in his Story, must you prompt him? Go on, Friend.

Mr. Hall. He prophesied, that the Bones of the Priests should be laid upon the Altar and burnt, as we read in that Text of Scripture, 2 Kings 13. and the beginning. And Jeroboam was there, and put forth his Hand—and bid some body take hold of him—whereat the Hand of Jeroboam dried up.

Mr. Rosew. If it please your Lordship, I will call another.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, you may set him going, for he is out.

Mr. Hall. If it please you, I can go a little further. I have something to say as to that—

L. C. J. You had best go out, and recollect your self; you have forgot your Cue at present.

Mr. Rosew. Mr. Cryer, pray call Mr. James Atkinson.

(Who came in.)

L. C. J. You Mrs. Smith, I will ask you, (I will not ask him himself, because he may accuse himself by it.) Is this the Miller at whose House one of the Meetings was?

Smith. No, my Lord, the former Witness Hudson is the Miller where he preached.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask this Witness?

Mr. Rosew. Mr. Atkinson, were you at our Meeting the 14th of September last?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, I was there the 14th of September.

Mr. Rosew. Were you there at the Beginning?

Mr. Atkinson. I was there from the Beginning to the End.

L. C. J. Pray, what Trade are you, Sir?

Mr. Atkinson. My Lord, I am a Mathematical Instrument-Maker.

Mr. Rosew. What Chapter was I upon?

Mr. Atkinson. The 20th of Genesis in course, and not out of Choice. His usual Custom was to expound a Chapter before he preached.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, what do you remember was said by me of two wicked Kings?

Mr. Atkinson. Of two wicked Kings! I remember that was upon the second Verse; how Abraham said of Sarah his Wife, She is my Sister: And upon that Mr. Rosewell had this Note, That a Child of God may fall into the Commission of the same Sin again and again, after he had been reprov'd and smarted for it. And he quoted several Instances: As that of Lot, committing Incest over and over again; that of Peter, denying his Lord three Times; that of Sampson out of Judges, taking two Wives among the Philistines, one after another; and then quoted that of Jehoshaphat joining with two wicked Kings; Ahab, in the 2d of Chron. 18. Chap. and afterwards, tho' reprov'd by the Prophet Jehu, he joined with Ahab's wicked Son Ahaziah.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, what did you hear of the King of England?

Mr. Atkinson. Not a Word, unless it were in his Prayer; in which he always used to pray earnestly for the King.

Mr. Rosew. What do you remember was spoken about the King's Evil?

Mr. Atkinson. There was an Expression concerning the Evil, upon the 7th Verse; He is a Prophet, and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt be healed. And he had this Expression, or to this same Effect, for I hope you cannot expect I should speak every Word exactly; but I shall endeavour to speak the Sense, and the Truth, as near as I can, and nothing else. He said, the Prayers of God's Prophets were very prevalent for the healing and helping others in time of need. And he quoted several Instances; as that out of the Prophet Jeremy, 27th Chap. and 18th Verse, to the best of my Remembrance. And he also quoted that of the 1 Kings 13. concerning Jeroboam. The Prophet came to reprove him, and Jeroboam stretched out his Hand against him, and it dried up; and then he desired of the Prophet to pray for him; which he did, and his Hand was healed.

L. C. J. Look you, what you say may be true, and so may what they say too; for he might say both. You used to say abundance of good things, as well as some bad ones; therefore I would ask him this Question, whether he heard any thing of the King's Evil, or that had any Reference to the King of England?

Mr. Atkinson. This is all that I heard that comes to my Memory concerning the King's Evil. That a godly Man by his Prayers may help to cure the King's Evil, and thereby the poorest Christian may gratify the greatest King, as says our English Annotator upon that 7th Verse; but I never understood him to mean it of the Disease of the King's Evil.

Mr. Rosewell. Do you remember that I preached in this Discourse about Rams-horns or broken Platters?

Mr. Atkinson. I did not hear of any such thing upon all that Chapter.

L. C. Just. But did you hear him speak of any such thing at all that Day?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, my Lord I did.

L. C. Just. Come then let us have it. What was it?

Mr. Atkinson. His Course was after the Exposition, to preach a Sermon.

Mr. Rosewell. Was it in the Forenoon, or in the Afternoon?

Mr. Atkinson. It was after the Exposition; he prayed, and then ceased for a quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Rosew. Was it distinct in the Afternoon?

Mr. Atkinson. It was another distinct Discourse after the People had received some Reflection in the Afternoon; I cannot tell exactly the time. But the Discourse was preached from Heb. 11. 12. I suppose that I need not repeat the Words.

L. C. J. No, no, I care not for that.

Mr. Atkinson. But he thence rais'd this Doctrine, That the great God can effect great Matters by very unlikely means; and he instanced in several ral Particulars to prove it. As the Miracles God wrought by Moses's Rod; and the Walls of Jericho falling down at the found of Rams-horns, in the 6th of Joshua; and then he quoted that of Gideon, a dreadful Rout of a great Army, by a few Earthen Pots and Pitchers; and what a tremendous Champion did David smite down with a Sling and a Stone?

Mr. Rosew. I have this one Question more to ask you; did you hear me speak any thing of standing to their Principles?

Mr. Atkinson. Not one Word; and I was there all that live long Day, from beginning to end.

L. C. J. Then, Sir, I would ask you a Question or two, if Mr. Rosewell have done with you.

Mr. Rosew. I have, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray, what Room were you in?

Mr. Atkinson. I was in the same Room that Mr. Rosewell was, he stood at the Door.

L. C. J. What, one Pair of Stairs?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes.

L. C. J. Is there not another Room between the Floor or the ground Room, and that you were in?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, Sir; there is another little Room, a little lower than that.

L. C. J. Was there a Bed in that Room you were in?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Did you sit upon the Bed?

Mr. Atkinson. I did sit upon the Bed sometimes.

L. C. J. Had you a mourning Cloak on that Day?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. Had you a mourning Hatband?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. Do you remember who sat by you?

Mr. Atkinson. No, my Lord, I do not know.

L. C. J. Do you remember any Body gave you your Boy's Shoes from under the Bed?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, my Lord; but I cannot tell who.

L. C. J. Well then, I ask you, did you hear any mention made that Day about Dalilah and Sampson?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. You did?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, my Lord, as an Instance of a good Man's falling twice into the same Sin.

L. C. J. Did you hear any mention made at that time concerning any other matter that you remember?

Mr. Atkinson. My Lord, that of Sampson and Dalilah, was one of the Instances that I repeated before.

L. C. J. Mrs. Smith, was it the same Day that he spoke about Canting?

Smith. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Do you remember, Friend, any thing that was spoken by him that Day concerning Church-musick?

Mr. Atkinson. No, my Lord, not a Word that Day that I know of.

L. C. J. Did you hear any thing about Canting that Day?

Mr. Atkinson. No, not a Word.

L. C. J. Did you hear him talk any thing of Surplices or white Gowns?

Mr. Atkinson. No, my Lord, not one Word all that Day; but that of Sampson and Dalilah, my Lord.

L. C. J. You remember that?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, it was one Instance of a good Man's committing the same Crime once and again.

Mr. Rosew. Yes, I own it, it was so; but not as the other Witnesses swear.

Mr. Atkinson. Truly, my Lord, I would not tell one tittle of a Lie; to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, let me ask you one Question: I see you are very perfect in the Proofs of the Sermon, did you take Notes that Day?

Mr. Atkinson. No, I did not, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you remember then any one Observation that he made upon any other Verse? Pray what Observation did he make upon the eighth Verse?

Mr. Atkinson. None at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What upon the 12th or 13th Verses?

Mr. Atkinson. I cannot tell; I can upon the 5th.

Mr. Rosew. Will your Lordship give me leave to acquaint you with that?

Mr. Atkinson. He only explained that which was difficult; but when it was a little Historical, he only read it. But what he observed upon the second and the seventh Verses, was the substance of the whole Exposition almost.

Mr. Att. Gen. Has no body read the Notes of that Sermon to you since?

Mr. Atkinson. I endeavour'd to recollect myself, after I heard Mr. Rosewell was accused; and writ, what I could remember, down.

Mr. Att. Gen. But did any body read their Notes to you since?

Mr. Atkinson. No, indeed, there has no body read any Notes to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Upon your Oath how came you to remember the word Tremendous?

L. C. J. He is not upon his Oath, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Atkinson. Because when he made such short Notes, I endeavour'd to remember them; I thank God I have a pretty good Memory.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, upon my Word, a very strong one.

Mr. Atkinson. He did use the Word tremendous Champion.

Mr. Recorder. Had you and Mr. Hudson any Discourse about this Matter since?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, Sir, we might talk what we did remember to one another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he write down the Sermon?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, I suppose he did; but I did not sit by him.

Mr. Rosew. Mr. Cryer, Pray call Mr. William Smith.

(Who came in.)

Mr. Smith. Were you at this Meeting the 14th of September last?

Smith. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Pray will you acquaint my Lords, what you heard me say there? What Chapter did I expound?

Mr. Smith. The 20th Chapter of Genesis.

Mr. Rosew. What do you remember of it?

Smith. I remember the Chapter concerned Abraham and Abimelech.

Mr. Rosew. What did you hear of the People's flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil?

Mr. Smith. I heard no such Word.

Mr. Rosew. Or that His Majesty could not cure the King's Evil?

Smith.

Mr. Smith. No, Sir, not a Word of it.

Mr. Rosew. Did you hear any thing at all concerning the King's Evil?

Mr. Smith. Sir, you did quote something out of the Annotator about the King's Evil.

Mr. Rosew. Do you remember what that was?

Mr. Smith. I cannot remember it fully at length, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Pray did you understand it as meant of the King's Evil; or of the Evil of Abimelech, King of Gerar?

Mr. Smith. I did not understand it of the Disease so called; but of the Evil of Abimelech.

Mr. Rosew. What did you hear concerning Priests and Prophets?

Mr. Smith. You said it was the Function of the Prophets to pray for the People.

Mr. Rosew. What do you remember was said of two wicked Kings?

Mr. Smith. You did make mention of two wicked Kings, Abab and Abaziah; that Jehosaphat sinned, in joyning with them one after another.

Mr. Rosew. Was there any thing of the Kings of England, or of my Sovereign?

Mr. Smith. No, not at all, Sir.

L. C. J. Did you hear any thing concerning Jeroboam?

Mr. Smith. Yes, that Jeroboam stretched forth his Hand, and his Hand withered; and the Prophet prayed for him, and his Hand was restored.

L. C. J. Did you hear any thing in the Exposition of broken Pitchers; I mean in the Forenoon?

Mr. Smith. No, I think not.

L. C. J. What did you hear of them? and when?

Mr. Smith. To the best of my Remembrance it was in the Afternoon; That God could do great matters by small means; and you quoted several things. I did not stand well, so that I could not hear all the Particulars.

L. C. J. But what did you hear?

Mr. Rosew. Pray did you hear any Word of standing to their Principles; or of overcoming, that Day?

Mr. Smith. No, I did not.

Mr. J. Holloway. It seems you did not stand in a good Place to hear.

Mr. Rosew. Mr. Cryer, Pray call Mr. William Bates.

(Which he did, but he did not appear.)

Cryer. He is not here, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Pray Sir, call Mr. George Hales then.

(Who came in.)

Were you this 14th Day of September at this Meeting, Sir?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Were you there from the Beginning to the End?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Pray then will you tell my Lord what you heard me say, with reference to flocking to the King, or curing the King's Evil.

Mr. Hales. I heard nothing that you should say of Peoples flocking to the King; but you were speaking of the King's Evil, and that was thus: my Lord. It was from the 7th Verse of the 20th Chapter of Genesis, He is a Prophet, and shall pray for thee, and thou shalt be healed. God is speaking to Abimelech in a Dream; and after a little Paraphrase upon the Words, Mr. Rosewell said, That a godly Man's Prayer was a Sovereign Cure for the King's Evil; and quoted some Scripture Instances, as in 1 Kings, where God having sent a Man of God to reprove Jeroboam for his Idolatry, he stretched out his Hand, and his Hand withered; and he desired the Prophet to pray to the Lord his God, that his Hand might be restored; and accordingly it was accomplished.

Vol. III.

Mr. Rosew. Did you hear any thing of the Kings of England?

Mr. Hales. No, not one Word all that Day; only you Prayed for His Majesty as you used to do.

Mr. Rosew. What do you remember was said about Rams-horns?

Mr. Hales. I remember you were preaching out of the 11 Heb. 12. and the Words were these, Therefore sprang there of one, and him as good as Dead, as many as the Stars in the Sky for Multitude, and as the Sand upon the Sea-shore innumerable. From whence he had this Observation, That God is able to bring great Matters to pass by small Means. And so accordingly Mr. Rosewell instanced how the Walls of Jericho were shook down by the sounding of Rams-horns; or something to that purpose.

Mr. Rosew. What do you remember of broken Platters?

Mr. Hales. I remember you brought in an Instance concerning Gideon: and I think it was thus, that by breaking a few earthen Pitchers he routed a great Army.

Mr. Rosew. And so of a Stone and a Sling. But was there any thing of standing to Principles?

Mr. Hales. Not a Word.

L. C. J. As you heard?

Mr. Hales. That I heard.

L. C. J. Or that you remember?

Mr. Hales. Yes, my Lord. But you said what a tremendous Champion did David slay with a Sling and a Stone.

L. C. J. Did you take Notes?

Mr. Hales. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then pray how came you to remember that Word tremendous?

Mr. Hales. I do remember he did use that Word.

L. C. J. Have you had any Discourse about this matter since?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I have.

L. C. J. With whom?

Mr. Hales. With several Friends.

L. C. J. Did you discourse with Atkinson about it?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Did you with William Smith?

Mr. Hales. No; I do not remember I did.

L. C. J. Did you discourse with Hudson?

Mr. Hales. I cannot say I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nor you cannot say you did not.

L. C. J. Did you hear any Notes read?

Mr. Hales. I think I did.

L. C. J. Whose Notes were they you heard?

Mr. Hales. Thomas Hudson's Notes, I think; I am not sure of it.

L. C. J. It is so hard and difficult to get out the Truth from this sort of People; they do so turn and wind. How long after the Sermon was preached was it that you heard the Notes read?

P P P P P

Mr:

Mr. Hales. I was in the Country when Mr. Rosewell was taken; and when I came home again, I heard of it.

L. C. J. But you did not remember it till after he was taken?

Mr. Hales. No, my Lord; and I read the Chapter my self, and remember'd these things.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray is the Word tremendous in Hudson's Notes, or no?

Mr. Hales. I cannot tell whether it be or no.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray when was the next Day after this?

Mr. Hales. I cannot tell, I was in the Country.

L. C. J. Did he take Notes in Long-Hand, or Short?

A Stranger that stood by. In Characters, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you not heard him preach since that time?

Mr. Hales. Sir, I went into the Country soon after.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was his Text at any other time? can you tell?

Mr. Hales. No, I cannot readily.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nor what he discoursed upon?

Mr. Hales. As to any particular time I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do not you remember his Text at any other time?

L. C. J. When was the time before this 14th of September, that you did hear him preach? You have heard him before?

Mr. Hales. Yes, my Lord, I have.

L. C. J. Was that upon a Sunday?

Mr. Hales. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Did you hear him the Sunday before?

Mr. Hales. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Well, what did he preach upon then?

Mr. Hales. This I know, that in his Course of Reading and Exposition, he was upon the 19th of Genesis.

L. C. J. What was his Discourse upon that Chapter?

Mr. Hales. That I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Nor the Lay afterward?

Mr. Hales. No my Lord.

L. C. J. Upon my Word you have a lucky Memory for this Purpose; to serve a turn, it can just hit to this very Day. You are very punctually instructed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any other part of the Sermon of this Day than what you have related?

Mr. Hales. Yes.

L. C. Just. Ay; tell us what you remember besides.

Mr. Hales. I must consider a little; I am not so ready at it.

L. C. J. Ay, Come let us hear it.

Mr. Rosew. These Things he might have more occasion to recollect by reason of my Charge.

L. C. J. You say right, just occasion for this Purpose. But I thought these Men that have such stupendious Memories, as to tell you they remember the Chapter, and the Verse, and particular Words when it serves a Turn, might remember something before or after, at least in the same Sermon. Why do you think they were enlightned to understand, and remember that one Day more than any other? They can remember particularly as to such things, and can Clan it together to answer such particular Questions; but as to any thing before or after, they are not prepared.

Mr. J. Withins. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Rosewell?

Mr. Rosew. Mr. Cryer, pray call Mr. John Wharton. (Who came in.)

Mr. Just. Holloway. Where do you dwell, Wharton?

Mr. Wharton. At Rotherhitb.

Mr. J. Holloway. What Calling are you of?

Mr. Wharton. A Gardiner.

Mr. Rosew. Were you at the Meeting the 14th of September?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. What do you remember pray of the Exposition then concerning Flocking of the People to the King to be cured of the King's Evil?

Mr. Wharton. Sir, I do remember upon your Exposition of the 20th of Genesis, you were speaking concerning Abimelech King of Gerar; and you took your Exposition thus, That Abimelech had taken away the Wife of Faithful Abraham, that I do remember very well; and that you did say in your Exposition, That the Prayers of the Prophet were prevalent for the curing of the King's Evil. And then you brought your Proof to the best of my remembrance concerning King Jeroboam; that Jeroboam stretched out his Hand against the Prophet of the Lord, and that the King cried, Lay hold of him, when he came to cry against the Altar at Bethel, and his Hand dried up; whereupon the King desired the Prophet to pray to the Lord, that his Hand might be restored; and he did so. This was the Exposition that you made upon that Verse in Part.

Mr. Rosew. Do you remember any thing of comparing the King of England to Jeroboam?

Mr. Wharton. I do not remember any such Passage.

Mr. Rosew. Do you remember any thing about two wicked Kings?

Mr. Wharton. I do remember this Passage, concerning Jehosaphat, that he had fallen twice into the same Sin, by taking part first with wicked Ahab, and then with his wicked Son Abaziah.

Mr. Rosewell. Was there any thing of the Kings of England mentioned in this Discourse?

Mr. Wharton. No, nothing Sir. It was but an accidental thing that I heard you then. I heard nothing of the King of England in your Exposition or Sermon, but only in your Prayer; when you pray'd for his long Life and happy Reign.

L. C. Just. Did you ever hear him before that time?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Just. Did you ever hear him since?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, once since.

L. C. Just. Now let us know his Text, and the subject Matter he was upon since.

Mr. Wharton. Truly, as to the time since I did not take much Account; for I did not write.

L. C. Just. Canst thou tell us of what past at any time before?

Mr. Wharton. Once before, I heard him upon the 19 of Genesis, where he made his Exposition — Truly, I have not any Notes —

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Then hark you Friend, have you spoken with any Body since that 14th of September that did take Notes?

Mr. Wharton. I am not acquainted much with them that were his constant Hearers that did take Notes.

L. C. J. But answer my Question that I ask you; did you ever discourse at all about this Matter? and with whom?

Mr. Wharton. I came thither by my self, I say; I had not much Acquaintance with them.

L. C. J. Nay, do not prevaricate, Friend, with the Court, but speak the Truth out plainly. I ask you in the Presence of Almighty God, did you ever speak with any Body since the 14th of September about this Business?

Mr. Wharton. Mr. Hudson did speak with me about it.

L. C. J. Did he read his Notes to you?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. It is a strange thing, Truth will not come out without this Wire-drawing. You cannot help this Canting for your Life; this is Canting, if you would know what Canting is. Did you ever speak with Hales, or Atkinson, or Smith about it?

Mr. Wharton. I do not know Atkinson, or Hales. I know Mr. Smith; but I never spoke with him about it? nor he with me.

L. C. J. When was it that Hudson and you spoke together of this thing?

Mr. Wharton. It was last Thursday.

L. C. J. Did he come to you, or you to him?

Mr. Wharton. I met him.

L. C. J. Where did you meet him?

Mr. Wharton. At Rotherhithe.

L. C. J. Did he speak to you of it first, or you to him?

Mr. Wharton. He spoke to me.

L. C. J. Then I ask you, (and remember, though you are not upon your Oath, yet you are to testify the Truth, as if you were upon your Oath,) did he mention any thing of Jeroboam?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Of Jehosaphat? and of Abimelech?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Did you mention any of these things to him?

Mr. Wharton. Yes, Sir, I repeated more then, than I have done now.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was your Meeting accidental, or appointed?

Mr. Wharton. It was accidental in the Street; I dwell below him a great deal.

Mr. Att. Gen. And where was it?

Mr. Wharton. We were talking in the Street.

Mr. J. W. Did not you go into some House?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any Discourse at that time of being present at the Tryal of Mr. Rosewell?

Mr. Wharton. No, I did not know any thing of it till I saw the Subpœna.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before you discoursed with him, did you remember all these things?

Mr. Wharton. Yes I could remember them as well as he; and a great deal more then.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, cannot you remember what was done the next Day?

Mr. Wharton. No, I cannot.

Mr. Att. Gen. How come you then to remember so well what was said that Day?

Mr. Wharton. Because there was a remarkable

Passage, that I had never heard before expounded. I had not staid at that time, but that he was expounding of a very remarkable thing, which I had never heard expounded before.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses Mr. Rosewell?

Mr. Rosew. I have some Witnesses to call more, if your Lordship pleases, to testify concerning my Life, and that I always prayed for the King, that God would Crown him with Grace here, and Glory hereafter; and that he would remove all his Enemies from him.

L. C. J. Ay, Mr. Rosewell, first remove all his Friends from him; and then remove his Evil Counsellors.

Mr. Rosew. Pray Cryer, call Mr. Charles Arthur. (but he did not appear.)

Mr. J. W. Come it seems, he is not here, call another.

Mr. Rosew. Call Mr. Tho. Jolliff. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What do you call this Man to?

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, this Person I call to testify with respect to my Conversation and Carriage towards His Majesty and the Government.

L. C. J. What is your Name, Sir?

Mr. Jolliff. Thomas Jolliff.

Mr. J. W. Where do you live, Sir?

Mr. Jolliff. In Mary Magdalen's Parish.

L. C. J. Why not St. Mary Magdalen's?

Mr. Rosew. He is my Neighbour, my Lord.

L. C. J. But, I suppose, he thinks that would have made the Name so much the longer; or else, he thinks, that there is Popery in calling it so.

Mr. Jolliff. No, my Lord, I have called it a Hundred times, and a Hundred times St. Mary Magdalen.

L. C. J. Prithce then do it again, it will never be the worse for thee, I dare say. Well, Mr. Rosewell, what do you ask him?

Mr. Rosew. Pray, Sir, will you testify what you know of my Conversation towards the Government, and particularly towards His Majesty?

Mr. Jolliff. My Lord, in the time of Indulgence I have heard Mr. Rosewell once, or twice, or more; and I heard him pray for the King, and the Peace and Wellfare of the Nation, as heartily as ever I heard any Minister in England in my Life.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, Sir, for my Conversation; did you ever hear any thing of my Disloyalty or Disaffection to his Majesty, or the Government?

Mr. Jolliff. No, Sir, I never heard any thing of any Disloyalty, or any such thing in my Life; but all the Parish will give you an Account, that you have behaved your self as an honest Man; and I never knew that either in Word, or Deed, you were accused of any Disloyalty. And, my Lord, if you please to give me my Oath, I will swear it; for it is the same thing to me to testify here in such a Court under an Oath, or without it; for I ought, I know, to testify the Truth.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, I am confident that what he says he would Swear; and he is a very honest Man.

L. C. J. Well Mr. Rosewell, if you have any more Witnesses, call them; and make what Remarks upon the Evidence you please afterwards, for this is not the time for making Remarks.

Mr. Rosew. I humbly thank your Lordship for your great Favour.

L. C. Just. I do not speak it to cramp you in your time; but call your Witneses, and then make what Remarks you will: For, God forbid, we should hinder you from taking your full time; for you stand here for your Life.

Mr. Rosew. Is Mr. Winnacott here?

(He did not appear.)

Then pray call Captain Richard Cotton.

(But he did not appear.)

Call Mr. Thomas Fipps.

(Then Capt. Cotton appear'd.)

Mr. Rosew. This Gentleman, my Lord, hath known me for several Years. Captain Cotton, I pray Sir, will you speak what you know of my Conversation, and Life, and Loyalty, with respect to the King and Government?

Capt. Cotton. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, of late I have not frequented Mr. Rosewell's Company, or his Congregation; but when the Door stood open, without opposition, I have been there; and have heard him pray for the King and Government several times; and bless God that we lived under so peaceable a Prince, when all our Neighbours were in Blood and War.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, Sir, have you ever heard, that either in Word or Deed, I should ever declare against His Majesty, or the Government?

Capt. Cotton. No, I never heard any such thing in my Life; but what I heard now upon this Trial up and down the Hall, as I was walking below.

Mr. Just. Withins. How long ago is it, that you speak of, Mr. Cotton?

Capt. Cotton. I was abroad most of the time at Sea; but this was three, or four, or five Years ago.

Mr. Just. Withins. What time was that?

Capt. Cotton. It was in the time of the Indulgence.

Mr. Just. Withins. Ay, then it may be, he could speak kindly enough of the Government.

Mr. Rosew. He has known me these ten Years. Have you not, Sir?

Capt. Cotton. Yes, I believe, I have, ever since you came thither. (Then Mr. Fipps came in.)

Mr. Rosew. This Gentleman hath known me several Years, have you not Sir?

Mr. Fipps. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Pray Sir, will you give my Lord and the Court an Account, what you know of my Life and Conversation, and of my Loyalty or Disloyalty to the King or Government.

Mr. Fipps. My Lord, I have known this Gentleman divers Years. He lived in Wiltshire, and there he had the Reputation of a very honest Man, a good Scholar, and a pious Man. I never heard him Preach in my Life, because I never go to Conventicles; but I have been in the House where I have heard him pray in the Family; and there he pray'd very earnestly for the King and Government, for the Prosperity of it. Since I came to London, he came to London too, and has been here in London about ten Years; and has been often in my Company since, and in the late Times, the Bethelish Times, when every Body did take Liberty to say what they would of the King and Government; I have been often in his Company, and heard him speak with a great deal of Respect of the King, and of the Government, and thank God for the Liberty he did enjoy, and the Protection he had from the Government; but I never heard him speak an ill Word of the Government in my Life; and I have known him as much (I believe) as any other Man that was not his Hearer; he was always reputed a very ingenious Man; and that is all I can say. I never heard, or knew any thing of ill of him in my Life.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray call Mr. Caleb Veering.

(Who came in.)

Sir, you have known me several Years. Pray be pleased to testify to my Lord, and the Court, what you have known of my Conversation, with Respect to His Majesty and the Government.

Mr. Veering. My Lord, I have known Mr. Rosewell these several Years; and I have been in Company with him upon the Occasion of receiving Money on Account of Rent for a Friend of mine; and likewise have heard him formerly when he preached publicly; and never heard any thing from him that reflected upon the Government, or shewed any disrespect to the King. I have heard him pray often very heartily for the King, and he never meddled with any publick Business, nor spoke of any News while I was concern'd with him.

Mr. Rosewell. Pray, Sir, did you ever hear of any ill I should speak of my Sovereign?

Mr. Veering. I have heard him often pray for the King and Government; and I never heard any Man say that he did otherways, or that ever he spoke an ill Word concerning any of them.

Mr. Rosew. Call Mr. John Hitchcock—

(Who came in.)

Sir, you are a Gentleman that have known me for several Years; pray will you testify what you have known concerning me? And if you have heard, or known any ill of my Conversation towards the King, pray speak it out, and let me be shamed before God and this great Assembly.

Mr. Hitchcock. I have known him (my Lord,) several Years, and have heard him formerly, though not of late; and when I heard him, he used constantly to pray for the King and Government; I never knew him to speak any thing against the King and Government in my Life; but always spoke very worthily of them.

Mr. Rosew. Have you heard me often pray for the King?

Mr. Hitchcock. I have so, Sir, a great many times.

Mr. Rosew. How long is that ago?

Mr. Hitchcock. About two or three Years ago, my Lord; and I never knew him to be but a very worthy Gentleman.

Mr. Rosew. Pray call Mr. Michael Hinman—

(Who came in.)

My Lord, here is another Gentleman that hath known me several Years. Pray Sir, will you speak what you know of my Conversation, with Respect to His Majesty, and the Government?

Mr. Hinman. My Lord, I have known him many Years, and been in his Company several times, and never heard him speak any thing of ill relating to the King or Government.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, Sir, have you not been, (upon some Occasions,) present where I have prayed?

Mr. Hinman. Yes, Sir, I have heard you pray; pray ; and I have heard you pray for the King very heartily.

Mr. Rosew. Have you heard of any Evil I should either say or do ? Or any thing by Word or Deed, against the King or Government ?

Mr. Hinman. No, never in all my Life, one way or other.

Mr. Rosew. Pray call Mr. Nicholas Wanley.
(Who came in.)

Sir, you have known me for these many Years ; pray will you be pleased to speak the Truth of what you know of my Conversation, with Respect to the King and Government ?

Mr. Wanley. My Lord, I have known the Prisoner at the Bar several Years ; I have been frequently in his Company ; and never heard him speak an ill Word against the King or Government in my Life : But have often heard him wish, that the King might live, and have a long and prosperous Reign ; I never heard him say one ill Word of the Government in my Life ; but always when he spoke of it, it was with all the Respect that any Person could do.

Mr. Rosew. Did you ever hear from any other Person directly or indirectly, that I have spoken reflectively upon His Majesty ?

Mr. Wanley. Never in my Life, my Lord.

Mr. Rosew. One way or other ?

Mr. Wanley. No, not any way at all.

Mr. Rosew. Pray call Mr. John Strong —
(Who appeared)

Sir, you are a Gentleman that have known me many Years too, ten or twelve Years I believe.

Mr. Strong. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know of me with respect to my Behaviour in Word, or Deed, in reference to His Majesty or the Government ?

Mr. Strong. Sir, I have heard you teach several times formerly ; I was not at this time indeed (for which you now stand Accused) at that Place : But I never heard you speak a Word against his Majesty or the Government. But you always pray'd very earnestly for his Majesty.

Mr. Rosew. Did you ever hear that I should say any thing ill of the King, or Government ?

Mr. Strong. No, never.

Mr. Rosew. Call Mr. John Cuttloe —
(Who appeared.)

Sir, You have known me too, very many Years ; What do you know pray, concerning my Behaviour towards his Majesty and the Government ?

Mr. Cuttloe. My Lord, I never knew him speak one Word disrespectfully of the Government, or the King in my Life ; tho' I have known him some Years.

Mr. Rosew. Did you ever hear from any body else, that I did speak ill of the King or Government, directly or indirectly ?

Mr. Cuttloe. No, never a Word ; I assure you, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Have you been where you have heard me pray for his Majesty ?

Mr. Cuttloe. Yes, Sir ; I remember at Bristol once occasionally I heard you in the time of Liberty ; otherwise I cannot say I have heard you : But I never heard any thing against the Government ; but you always behaved your self Loyally and Peaceably that I know of.

Mr. Rosew. Call Mr. Charles Melfum —
(Who appeared.)

My Lord, I call this Gentleman, who will acquaint you that he liv'd with me many Years in an honourable Family, a Person of Quality of this Nation, one of the Hungerfords : Where (my Lord) I was Tutor to Sir Edwards Son for near Seven Years ; a Gentleman well known for his great Loyalty to the King and Government : So that if I had been such an Enemy to the King, or so disaffected as these People would make to be, sure he would never have entertained me. Pray, Mr. Melfum, will you please to acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, how many Years I was in that Family ?

Mr. Melfum. Seven Years ; and I was above Fourteen my self.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, what do you know of my Carriage in that honourable Family, with respect to the King and Government ?

Mr. Melfum. As far as I know for my Life, I will declare. I do not remember he did trouble himself, or meddle or make with any Man's business but his own. He was a Man that kept much to his Study : And when he came up to Prayer, he prayed heartily for the King ; and had the good Word of all his Neighbours thereabout.

Mr. Rosew. Have you often heard me pray for the King ?

Mr. Melfum. I have heard him a Hundred times pray for the King ; I never miss Prayers when I was at Home ; and it was his constant Practice.

L. C. J. Did he Pray in the Family then ?

Mr. Melfum. Yes, he did

L. C. J. Did he use to go to Church ?

Mr. Melfum. Yes, he went to Church, to the beginning of the Prayers ; he did frequently attend Divine Service.

L. C. J. Did he receive the Sacrament in all that time ?

Mr. Melfum. Yes, I believe he did ; I cannot say it directly.

Mr. Rosew. I was a constant Attender upon the Publick Ministry. It is now above a Dozen Years ago ; it was in the Year 1664, my Lord, and so downward. Sir, you know I was a constant Attendant upon the Ministry of the Church, and the Worship of God there.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him make use of the Common Prayer himself in the Family ?

Mr. Melfum. I cannot say he did.

L. C. J. Well ; Have you any more Witnesses, Sir ?

Mr. Rosew. Yes, my Lord. Pray call Mr. Robert Medbam.
(Who appeared.)

Here is another Gentleman, my Lord, that lived in that Family. Pray Mr. Medbam, how long did you live in that honourable Family ?

Mr. Medbam. About four Years.

Mr. Rosew. Was that in the time that I was there ?

Mr. Medbam. Yes, it was.

Mr. Rosew. Pray then, Sir, will you declare what you know of my Conversation in that Family with respect to the Publick ?

Mr. Medbam. My Lord, it is a great while ago ; but at that time Mr. Rosewell did always keep to the Parish-Church : He was Chaplain to my Lady Hungerford ; and always pray'd for the King at every time of Prayer.

Mr. Rosew. Did you ever hear that I should speak or declare any thing against the King, or Government in all my Life, all my time, or your time that I was there ?

Mr. Medham. I must needs say, I never did hear any such thing in my Life.

Mr. Just. Holloway. But it was not the Prayers of the Church that he used ?

Mr. Medham. I cannot say that.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him use the Prayers of the Church ?

Mr. Medham. The Prayer that I heard, was that which was usually made in the Family.

L. C. Just. But pray speak plain ; Did he use the Common-Prayer ?

Mr. Medham. No, my Lord ; I cannot say he used the Common Prayer.

L. C. J. I tell you what I mean ; did he pray out of the Book of the Common-Prayer ?

Mr. Medham. No, my Lord, I cannot say that.

L. C. J. Dost thou take his EX TEMPORE Prayer to be the Prayers of the Church ?

Mr. Just. Withins. My Lord, he does not know the difference, I believe ; I believe he does not go to Church.

Mr. Medham. Yes, I use to attend upon the Publick ; and so did Mr. Rosewell.

Mr. Just. Withins. Well, Sir, have you any more Witnesses ?

Mr. Rosew. Yes, my Lord ; Pray call Mrs. Ann Broadhurst.

(Then Mr. Winnacott appear'd and offered himself.)

Mr. Winnacott. My Lord, I heard I was call'd ; and am come as soon as I could get in.

Mr. Rosew. Ay, Mr. Winnacott, you have known me many Years ; I desire you would testify what you know concerning my Conversation and Behaviour.

Mr. Winnacott. Formerly, when I heard him, I never heard him speak a Word against the King or Government ; and it is some three years ago, since I heard him.

Mr. Rosew. Have you heard of any Evil that I have said or done against the King or the Government ?

Mr. Winnacott. No ; but I have heard him often Pray for his Majesty.

Mr. Just. Withins. Well, there is your other Witness Anne Broadhurst ; what ask you her ?

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, this was a Servant that lived several Years in my Family. Pray Nan, how many Years did you live there ?

Anne Broadhurst. Four Years, my Lord.

Mr. Rosew. Pray declare what you know of me in my Family, with respect to the King and Government.

Ann Broadhurst. I have generally heard you twice a Day pray in your Family ; and I never heard you Pray in my Life, but I heard you Pray as earnestly for the King as you did for your own Soul. This I can declare during the time that I lived there.

Mr. Rosew. Did you ever hear me speak Evil of the King in my Family ; or Reflectively upon the Government ?

Anne Broadhurst. No ; You always Pray'd for the King, (as I say) as earnestly as for your Self or your Family.

Mr. Rosew. If you know any ill Carriage in Word or Deed towards my Sovereign, I desire you to speak it out, without favour or affection, or any respect to me in the World.

Ann Broadhurst. No, I never did ; but have often heard you heartily Pray for him.

Mr. Just. Withins. Pray, how long ago is this ?

Anne Broadhurst. Two Years ago I lived with him.

Mr. Rosew. Pray tell my Lord again, how long it was, and when that you lived there.

Anne Broadhurst. I lived there four Years ; and it is two Years ago since.

Mr. Just. Withins. Pray how often were you at Church in that time ?

Anne Broadhurst. When I had occasion to go, I did go ; but I did usually hear my Master, when I dwelt with him.

Mr. J. Withins. Well, who is your next Witness ?

Mr. Rosew. Call Anne Manning.
(Who came in.)

You lived with me in my Family several Years ?

Anne Manning. Three Years, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Pray will you declare what you know of my Carriage and Behaviour towards the King and Government, in my Family while you were there ?

Anne Manning. My Lord, he prayed for the King, for his long Life in his Family Duties, Morning, and Evening ; and in Private, when no body heard him but my self.

L. C. J. What ! you and he were at Exercise together ?

Ann Manning. My Lord, I have gone by his Study-door, and have heard him pray for the King's long Life, when he knew not that any body heard him.

Mr. Rosew. This, my Lord, is more than I expected ; for I little thought that any body could give a Testimony of my private Devotion ; tho' I never then omitted to pray for the King, and never shall as long as I live.

Anne Manning. My Lord, he pray'd as heartily for the King's Life as for his own Soul ; and I have heard him often praying and desiring God to preserve him in his Kingdom, and give him long Life ; and have heard him insinuate upon that Scripture, Speak not evil of the King, no, not in thy Bed Chamber ; for the Birds of the Air shall declare it.

Mr. Rosew. Pray speak the Truth. Did you ever hear me utter an ill Word, or Reflection upon His Majesty, or the Government ?

Anne Manning. No, my Lord, he was always mightily for the King.

Mr. Rosew. Speak the Truth of what you know ; I hope you would speak the Truth, and nothing more than the Truth, as if you were upon your Oath.

Anne Manning. I do speak the Truth, and it is what I can declare, and would, if I were to die the next Moment ; and I can safely swear it.

Mr. Rosew. Then pray call Isabella Dickenson—

(Who appear'd.)

My Lord, surely I would not speak Evil of his Majesty, or the Government in publick in the Congregation, when I prayed for him in my Family and my Closet. But here's another Servant that liv'd in my Family ; Pray will you speak what you know concerning my Behaviour in my Family, with respect to the King and Government ?

Isabella

Isabella Dickeson. He used to pray twice a day in his Family, Morning and Evening, and he always pray'd earnestly for the King, for his good Health, long Life, and Prosperity.

Mr. Rosew. Did you ever hear me speak any Evil of the King or Government in any Respect?

Isabella Dickeson. No, never, Sir, in my life; nor do I believe you ever had an evil Thought of the King.

Mr. Rosew. Pray then will you call Mr. James Atkinson?

Mr. Just. Withins. We have had him already, and I suppose he is gone; he is not here.

Mr. Rosew. I call him now to testify another Thing, if your Lordship pleases; and he is at hand, my Lord, I suppose.

L. C. J. You should examine your Witnesses together, but we will not surprize you; we will stay.

Mr. J. Holloway. Pray call any body else, in the mean time, if you have any other.

L. C. J. Nay, Brother, it may be he hath observed a Method to himself; he is for his Life; let him take it.

(Then Mr. Atkinson came in.)

Mr. Rosew. That which I call you now for, Sir, is to testify, what you heard upon the 30th of January from me, about praying for the King and all that are in Authority?

Mr. Atkinson. My Lord, he kept that Day, the 30th of January, as a Day of Fasting and Prayer; and he preached from that Text on the 1 Tim. ii. 1. Pray for Kings and all in Authority: And then he did assert that Kingly Government was most agreeable to the Word of God, and the Constitution of the Government of England, which was the best in the whole World; and had been so approved by Writers, both Foreign, and of our own Country: And he did urge it as a Duty incumbent upon all People to pray for the King, and Magistrates, that they might live a peaceable and quiet life under them in all Godliness and Honesty.

(Then he seem'd a little faint and stop'd.)

Mr. Rosew. Pray Sir, will you recollect your self? My Lord will indulge you a little.

Mr. Atkinson. I have been acquainted with Mr. Rosewell these ten Years.

Mr. Rosew. But, pray Sir, what do you remember of the Application of that Sermon upon the Text about praying for Kings, and all in Authority?

Mr. Atkinson. That Persons were to pray for them, and to obey them, and that it was their Duty. That is all that I can remember.

Mr. Rosew. What do you remember of my Invectives against those that practiced the Contrary?

Mr. Atkinson. Why truly as to those Things, he did highly condemn those Persons that had any way acted against it. And I have heard him both in publick and private, inveigh against those that had any hand in the murder of the late King, and condemned the Fact as a diabolical Design.

Mr. Rosew. Is Mr. Smith there?

Mr. Atkinson. I was very ill on Sabbath-day last, and I thought I should not have come out now; and I would not to the best of my remembrance speak a Lie, as I am in the presence of this honourable Court, and in the presence of God, to whom I must give an account another Day.

Mr. Rosew. God will reward you for what you come to do for an innocent Person this Day.

Mr. Atkinson. I never heard an ill Word against the King or Government drop from Mr. Rosewell in my Life. I am not upon my Oath, but know my self to be bound to declare and tell the Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Rosew. I am confident, my Lord, he would not speak what he would not swear.

L. C. J. The Jury are Judges of that, Mr. Rosewell, I must leave it to them.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, Mr. Atkinson, was Mr. Smith with you?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, and I have sent one to call him.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, Sir, let me ask you as to what Mistress Smith says, that I should say of the Recorder being made a Judge?

Mr. Atkinson. I never heard you speak any such Words in my Life.

Mr. Rosew. Upon the last day of August last, at Mr. Shed's House, she says, that I did use that Expression.

Mr. Atkinson. As to Shed's House, I was then Sick, and was not there. If my Lord will give me leave to look upon my Note-book, I can tell what Day I was there.

Smith. It was at one Daniel Weldy's House, as I think, that you spoke about the Mayors and the Sheriffs; but what you said about Fools in Scarlet Gowns was at Shed's House.

Mr. Rosew. Was there any meeting at the Meeting-house, since July last, upon the Sabbath Day?

Mr. Atkinson. Truly I be not able to remember; but if my Lord please to give me leave to look upon my Note-book, I can give an account; for I writ down every Day the Place where we met.

L. C. J. Prithee look upon thy Note book; for I have a mind to know something out of that Note Book. Prithee tell me what was insisted upon the 14th of September.

Mr. Atkinson. My Lord, I only have a Note of the Day, of the Place, and of the Text.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, Sir, did you hear me speak of a great Man in Grace-church-street at the upper end; and that if it had not been for him, the Fire had been quenched?

Mr. Atkinson. I never heard that Expression from you in all my Life.

(Then Mr. Smith came in.)

Mr. Rosew. Pray did you hear any such thing, Mr. Smith?

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord. I can bring all the rest to testify the same thing. if your Lordship will let me call them over again.

L. C. J. Do as you will, I would not restrain you from any thing of a legal Indulgence, that is fit to give to any Man in your Condition.

Mr. Atkinson. What day of the Month do you say it was, Sir, that she said you spake of the Recorder?

Mr. Rosew. The 31st of August, I think.

Mr. Atkinson. At that time I was Sick, and was not there.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, Mr. Smith, have you ever heard me preach upon the 30th of January?

Mr. Smith. Yes, Sir; I have heard you upon that Day, and upon that Text, that we should Pray for Kings, and all in Authority. You kept it it as a Day of Humiliation, and you abhorr'd the Action of that Day. It was kept very solemnly, for the bewailing the horrid Murder of our late King. And you were so far from giving any Countenance to the Action of that Day, that you detested it, and preached very much against it, and you have always preached up Kingly Government.

Mr. Atkinson. Sir, you were asking me, if there were a Meeting since July, in the Meeting-house.

Mr. Rosew. Yes, because she says there was one upon the 10th of September.

L. C. J. If you look upon your Notes again, Mr. Rosewell, you'll find it was the 10th of August.

Mr. Rosewell. Where were you upon the 10th of August?

Mr. Atkinson. I was at home Sick then; it is written down, your Lordship may see it.

L. C. J. Do you take notice where you heard the Meeting was, when you were Sick?

Mr. Atkinson. Yes, my Lord, I have a short Note of it.

L. C. J. Where was the Meeting then?

Mr. Atkinson. In the Meeting house, as I heard.

L. C. J. Pray recollect your self, and look upon your Book, how is it enter'd there?

Mr. Atkinson. My self at home the 10th of August.

L. C. J. When didst thou take that Note, upon your Word now?

Mr. Atkinson. When my Family came home, some body did tell me that Day, or the next day.

L. C. J. Well, where was it the time before?

Mr. Atkinson. The 3d of August, at Mr. Crookshanks; the Text was the 11 Heb. 7. The 10th at the Meeting house, my self at home; and Canticles the 7th and 13th.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, these Gentlemen say, they were at several Meetings. I desire my Lord, that these Witnesses may be called.

L. C. J. Call whom you will. Who do you call first?

Mr. Rosew. Thomas How. My Lord, I could bring Hundreds of Witnesses as to this Point.

L. C. J. Well, there is Thomas How; to what purpose do you call him?

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, to testify that she should swear before Sir George Treby, that Mr. How was at a Conventicle such a time, when he was not. And therefore I desire him that he would please to testify the Truth of that matter.

Mr. How. My Lord, I will testify the Truth as far as I know it; she sent three Ten—

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. How. So they said.

L. C. J. That is no Evidence; and I care not what they said: if you know any thing your self of your own Knowledge, speak it.

Mr. How. They offered—

L. C. J. I tell you their offering signifies nothing.

Mr. How. My Lord, it is a Year and an half ago.

L. C. J. Let it be never so long ago, if it be only what they said, it signifies nothing, it is no sort of Evidence; but if you can say any thing of your own Knowledge, you say well; in God's Name we will hear it.

Mr. Rosew. Then, my Lord, some Questions I desire I may have leave to put to Mr. Recorder.

L. C. J. If Mr. Recorder be ready to answer your Questions, with all my Heart.

Mr. Rosew. Mr. Recorder, I desire you would please to do me the Justice to testify, whether you know any thing concerning Mistress Bathoe.

L. C. J. Who is She?

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, it is whether there was not a Conventicle sworn before Mr. Recorder against one Mistress Bathoe.

Mr. Recorder. I can't well tell, Mr. Rosewell. There was a Conviction before me, (as I remember) of one Mistress Bathoe for a Conventicle; and as I take it, (as the Witness told you just now) she had it from her own Confession.

Mr. Rosew. Do you know any thing, pray, Sir, of a Composition that was made upon that Conviction?

Mr. Recorder. No, Sir; you don't think sure, that I make Compositions; or know any thing of them.

Mr. Rosew. Was not the Money, Sir, paid back again?

Mr. Recorder. Not a Penny that I know of, or any Agreement for it.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, Sir, will you acquaint the Court, how that matter was really?

Mr. Recorder. Mistress Bathoe came to me, and said she was mistaken, if any such Words did pass from her; for indeed there was never any such Conventicle, as Mistress Smith swore she had confest. Upon that, I sent for Mistress Smith, and bid her consider of it, whether there was really any such Conventicle; and Mistress Bathoe hath brought her Appeal, and it is depending now, and will be heard the next Quarter Sessions.

Mr. Rosew. Pray Sir, Did you tell her that she might have her Money again?

Mr. Recorder. I did tell her, Mistress Smith was mistaken, and did not insist upon it, and she would have her Money return'd again.

Mr. Rosew. Pray Sir, Did you send your Warrant for one Cartwright under your Hand?

Mr. Recorder. You ask me a hard Question; I might send a Summons for several Persons, I cannot remember all their Names.

Mr. Rosew. By whom, I pray, Sir?

Mr. Recorder. I can't tell who I send all my Summons by.

Mr. Rosew. Was it not by these two Women, Mistress Smith and Mistress Hilton?

Mr. Recorder. I can't tell; it may be it might be so.

Mr. Rosew. Pray Sir, What did you say to Mr. Cartwright, when he came thither?

Mr. Recorder. I can't remember particularly.

Mr. Rosew. Sir, did you not ask him what he had to say against these Witnesses that are produc'd against me?

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, I remember when Mr. Cartwright came to me, I did ask him some such Question; for they had told me that he had, by a Person, been tampering with them, to take them off from prosecuting a great many Persons.

Mr. Rosew. By whom were you told so, Sir?

Mr.

Mr. Recorder. By themselves. I know nothing of it; But I tell you the reason why I sent for him; because they told me they went in Danger of their Lives; that they could not walk the Streets in Safety, but they had Stones thrown at them; and they were reproach'd as common Informers, and were beset hard with Applications of Money, to take them off from Prosecuting. And among the rest, they complain'd of one Carrwright, that he had been dealing with them; and it was upon that account that I sent for him, to know what he had to say against them; and he satisfied me, that he had nought to say against them.

L. C. J. These Questions, Mr. Rosewell, perhaps, may be better let alone.

Mr. Recorder. I have seen a Letter that does threaten them very much; but I cannot say whence it comes.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I desire to ask Mr. Recorder, whether or no he did not send for some of my Witnesses.

Mr. Recorder. I don't know your Witnesses, Sir.

Mr. Rosew. Did you send for one Richard Gibbs of Rotherhitb?

Mr. Recorder. Yes, he was Constable at Rotherhitb.

Mr. Rosew. Pray Sir, upon what account did you send for him?

Mr. Recorder. I did it, because I heard the Constables of your Side durst not execute their Warrants, for fear of the Rout of the People.

L. C. J. I tell you, these Questions were better let alone.

Mr. Rosew. Mr. How, that which I call you for, is, whether Mrs. Smith has not offered to Swear before a Justice, that you were at a Conventicle, when you were not?

L. C. J. She says, she does not know any thing of her own Knowledge.

Mr. Rosew. She offered it a Year and a Quarter ago, before Sir George Treby.

L. C. J. Were you by when she offered any such thing?

Mr. How. I was by when she was before Sir George Treby; and she went into a Yard, and offered to inform against one Mr. How, for being at such a Conventicle; but I was not the Man, she said.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, she had Sworn it.

L. C. J. No, no, she had not Sworn it, she only offered it, and for ought I perceive, she is a very careful Witness, to see that she does not fix upon the wrong Person.

Mr. Rosew. Then if it please your Lordship, I desire John Townsend may be called.

(Who came in.)

Pray will you testify what you know concerning Mrs. Smith's swearing that Mr. How was at a Conventicle?

Mr. Townsend. Sir, I will tell the Truth as near as I can, I cannot tell the Day, it was about a Year and an half since, that he was out of Town of the Lords Day, and that Day was remarkable; for I met him coming to Town, and it was about Evening, about five of the Clock, and that Day they had brought him some notice of a Warrant for the seizing of his Goods, for that he had been at a Meeting; now he understanding when they were to make Affidavit of it before Sir George Treby, he desired me to go with him thither, and I went with him, and he asked her if she knew the Man. There he was, and I was, and one more, and there came one Stranger: And we went out to the Light, and she look'd upon all of us, and knew never an one of us.

L. C. J. You use to go to Conventicles, all of you, I warrant you.

Mr. J. Withins. She was not much out in her Conjecture, I dare say.

L. C. J. But she seems to be very careful, that she did not swear against the wrong Person. And (Speaking to Mr. Townsend;) If she had Sworn that thou hadst been there that Day, I warrant you she had Sworn true.

Mr. Rosew. Is Sir George Treby here?

(He did not appear.)

Then I desire Mr. Thomas Harvey may be call'd.

L. C. J. There he is; what do you ask him?

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, to prove that this Elizabeth Smith Swore that several Persons were at several Conventicles, which she afterwards confess'd in truth they were not; and made Applications to Compound for the Forfeitures, and they should have their Money again.

L. C. J. Prithee, ask him in general, what does he know of her.

Mr. Harvey. Elizabeth Smith came to a Friend of mine in April, or May last—

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you by?

Mr. Harvey. Yes, I was by. She came to a Friend of mine, I say, and she told him that she could Swear against him, and some others, for a considerable Value of Forfeitures upon Conventicles—

L. C. J. What Friend of thine was this?

Mr. Att. Gen. Where does that Friend live?

Mr. Harvey. In Southwark.

L. C. J. What's his Name?

Mr. Harvey. One Games.

L. C. J. What Trade is he?

Mr. Harvey. A Sail maker.

L. C. J. Whereabouts does he live in Southwark?

Mr. Harvey. By St. Mary Overy's Dock. And he came to me, and desired me that I would meet and speak with her; I met her, I think it was about the Exchange at the Roe-Buck; there was she, and another fellow with her. She told me she could Swear against such and such; and desired me to give her a Cup of Drink, which I did; and then she told me her Story, and demanded either 10 or 20 Pounds; and that that should take her off from Swearing against them. I told her, I could say nothing to it; but I would acquaint them; which I did, particularly Mr. Games; They thought not fit to give her any thing; which Answer I return'd to her. She told me she was very Poor, and if she could have but something, she would declare who it was that would Swear; but upon reasonable Composition (though she had offer'd to Swear) she would not. But she had taken the Copy from a Sister of hers; and I think she said her Sister's Name was Mary Farrar, as I remember.

L. C. J. Did she offer to Swear any thing against you?

Mr. Harvey. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. You know that Games very well, don't you?

Mr. Harvey. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Does he use to frequent the Church constantly?

Mr. Harvey. I don't know that my Lord; I have known him many Years.

L. C. J. Do you live near him?

Mr. Harvey. No, I do not.

Mr. Rosew. Pray call Mr. John Cartwright, and Mr. George Norton.

(Mr. Cartwright appear'd.)

Mr. Cartwright, I desire you would please to testify what you know here concerning Mrs. Smith, who hath testified against me?

Mr. Cartwright. My Lord, may it please your Honour; the 22d of July last, Mrs. Smith and I were together from Seven o' Clock in the Morning, till half an Hour after Eleven; and that Morning we went to a Constable, one Alexander Venner in Aldersgate-street; and from thence we went to Moorfields to look for a Meeting in Petty-france; but there was none: And from that place we went into Moorfields again, and followed an ancient Man, whom we supposed was going to a Meeting; and this Man we followed the space of almost an Hour's time, that it was almost this time of Day that it now is that I am speaking. That Day she convicted Mrs. Bathoe for having a Meeting in her House; when she own'd to me and another Man, that she never was in the House of Mrs. Bathoe; and then for the same Morning there was one Rice Bowing that was convicted of a Conventicle at Bermondsey, upon her Oath.

L. C. J. How do you know that?

Mr. Cartwright. As I was told.

L. C. J. But it may be you were told a Lye; you must only speak what you know your self.

Mr. Cartwright. Then, my Lord, several times she has asked me to convict with her, when I never had been at a Meeting; and also, she has offered to convict with me, when I have been there, and she hath not been there; and she also asked my Wife to Convict one Dod's Meeting at Shoreditch, and my Wife refused it, because she was not there.

L. C. J. Were you by when she asked your Wife to do it?

Mr. Cartwright. Yes, and please your Honour.

L. C. J. Who did you tell this first to? Because I see you hunted along with her, why did not you go and complain when she had several times proposed such a thing to you?

Mr. Cartwright. My Lord, I did not so well understand it at that time.

L. C. J. Who did you first of all tell it to, I ask you?

Mr. Cartwright. I first of all told it to one Smith.

L. C. J. Was this before Mr. Rosewell was taken, or after?

Mr. Cartwright. It was afterwards.

L. C. J. Did you go to Smith, or did he come to you?

Mr. Cartwright. It was through another's means that I came to speak with Mr. Smith.

L. C. J. Who was that?

Mr. Cartwright. It was through a Goldsmith's means.

L. C. J. What is his Name?

Mr. Cartwright. His Name is Ferns; he lives in Newgate-street.

L. C. J. How came he to understand it, to bring you together?

Mr. Cartwright. Because he understood that I was with Mrs. Smith that time that she convicted Mrs. Bathoe, and was concern'd with her.

I did not know any thing of Mr. Rosewell, at that time at all.

Mr. Rosewell. Did she not tell you, she would do as much for me?

Mr. Cartwright. She did offer me this; that if I would go and discover any Meeting, she would Convict them, though she was not there.

L. C. J. Who didst thou tell a thing of this Nature to? only to Mr. Smith and that Goldsmith?

Mr. Cartwright. I told it first to that Mr. Smith.

L. C. J. When these Witneses, and things drop out of the Clouds, I never put any great Value upon them. These come to serve a Turn, and never make any Discovery till you are taken.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, you may observe it was her common Practice to Convict upon a Report, not having any Eye or Ear-Witneses.

L. C. J. Well, I will observe what he has said; but I tell you what I think of it.

Mr. Cartwright. She has asked me to do it several times.

L. C. J. All that I can say to it, is, it seems she look'd upon thee as so very a Knave, as that thou wouldst have done such a thing; and it may be she was not mistaken.

Mr. Rosew. Then call Mr. George Norton.

(Who appear'd.)

I call you as a Witness, to declare what you know of Mrs. Smith's importuning you, or any one to Swear against Meetings.

Mr. Norton. Yes, she has offered to Swear; but I cannot say with him; for I was not present all the time. All that I can say, is, that she own'd she was never at Mrs. Bathoe's House.

L. C. J. So she says still; and it agrees with all the rest of the Evidence: It was only Hear-say.

Mr. Rosew. Then pray, will you please to call John Hobson?

L. C. J. There he is: What say you to him?

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, I bring this Witness to testify, that Mrs. Smith swore there was a Conventicle at such a Place, when there was none.

Mr. Hobson. Sir, there was none since I came into the House to my Knowledge.

L. C. J. What House?

Mr. Rosew. At Mr. Hale's; she swore there was a Meeting upon the 13th of July.

Mr. Hobson. There was none, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. J. Withins. We must not Convict People of Perjury upon such Evidence. Indict her of Perjury, if you have a mind to it.

L. C. J. Where is the Instrument Maker, Atkinson? Bid him send me his Book.

(Which was done.)

L. C. J. Were you at every Meeting always that he preach'd at?

Mr. Hobson. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then there might be many Meetings that you do not know of.

Mr. Hobson. I live next Door to this Mr. Hales.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. You use to go frequently to hear Mr. Rosewell, did not you?

Mr. Hobson. No Sir.

L. C. J. (Having look'd upon the Book.) Was there any Meeting that you know of, the 13 of July?

Mr. Hobson. None there: He lives the next Door to me.

L. C. J. Was there no Meeting no where there away?

Mr. Hobson. Not that I know of.

L. C. J. She Swears to that Day at Mr. Hales's.

Mr. Rosew. Ay, and to the very Place.

L. C. J. Do you know one Hodgefson?

Mr. Atkinson. It is Hudson, my Lord.

Mr. Hobson. No, my Lord; I do not know him.

L. C. J. Were you ever at his House at any Meeting?

Mr. Hobson. No my Lord; I never was at any Meeting this two Years.

Mr. Rosewell. He lives next Door to the House.

L. C. J. There may be a Meeting next Door to my House twenty times over, and I not know it.

Mr. Rosew. Then pray call John Crook.

(Who came in.)

Pray, Sir, do you know whether there was any Meeting at Mr. Hales's the 13th of July?

Mr. Crook. No; I never heard of any such thing, but what was according to his own use amongst his Family. I live under his Roof, and never yet did know that there was a Meeting there.

Mr. Rosew. Pray call Sarah Whibby. (Who came in.) I desire she may be asked, whether Mrs. Smith did not Swear there was a Conventicle at Mr. Hales's the 13th of July; and whether there was any such thing.

Mrs. Whibby. There was none.

L. C. J. That you know of, you mean.

Mrs. Whibby. I am certain of it.

L. C. Just. How came you to remember the Day particularly?

Mrs. Whibby. I can tell you by a very good Token; because the Chimney of my House was on Fire that Day.

L. C. J. How do you recollect it was the 13th of July?

Mrs. Whibby. Because there was a Neighbour of ours, that is a Waterman, that was sent for to wait upon His Majesty; and I went that Day to call him to quench the Fire; not finding him at home, I went further to call more Help.

L. C. J. How can you tell that it was the 13th? It might be the 20th for ought you know.

Mrs. Whibby. No; it was the 13th.

L. C. Just. How can you tell that?

Mrs. Whibby. Because there was another Meeting on the 20th Day, for which I paid 20 Shillings; and I can remember my Chimney was on Fire that Day.

L. C. J. What Day of the Week was it?

Mrs. Whibby. It was Sabbath-Day.

L. C. J. Why, if my Chimney was on Fire the 14th or 15th, it may be I can remember it a little while, but how came it that you do remember it so long?

Mrs. Whibby. It was the 13th of July.

L. C. J. How can you be sure of that?

Vol. III.

Mrs. Whibby. Because it was the Sunday before the Meeting at Mr. Bowen's.

L. C. J. Where was the Meeting that Day your Chimney was on Fire?

Mrs. Whibby. I did not know then; but I knew since, it was at Mr. Hudson's.

L. C. J. Then you have been instructed about it; But pray don't think you come here to serve a Turn.

Mrs. Whibby. It was at Mr. Hudson's.

L. C. J. Was there a Meeting on the 13th of July?

Mrs. Whibby. By Relation there was; but I was not at it.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, I bring her to testify there was no Meeting at Mr. Hales's that Day.

L. C. J. We know well enough you sniveling Saints can lye.

Mrs. Whibby. I have answered the Truth as far as I know.

Mr. Rosew. I only ask her about Mr. Hales.

L. C. J. She shall answer such Questions as the Court shall think fit to ask her.

Mr. Rosew. How far is your House from Mr. Hales's?

Mrs. Whibby. Next Door.

L. C. J. How far is your House from Mr. Hudson's?

Mrs. Whibby. A great Way.

L. C. J. Was it half so far as you went to fetch the Waterman?

Mrs. Whibby. That was but three Doors off; but Mr. Hudson's is half a Mile, I believe, or a Mile.

Mr. Rosew. Then pray call Anne Collins.

(She appeared.)

Mr. J. Witbins. Well; what do you ask her?

Mr. Rosew. Mrs. Smith hath Sworn, that there was a Conventicle at Mr. Hales's the 13th of July; I desire to know of you, whether there was such an one or no?

Mrs. Collins. The 13th of July there was none.

Mr. Rosew. Upon your certain knowledge?

Mrs. Collins. Upon my knowledge there was none; I can justify it.

L. C. J. Not there you mean, at Mr. Hales's: But do you know there was any, any where else?

Mrs. Collins. No, not to my knowledge.

L. C. J. Do you know Mr. Hobson? Was there any there that Day?

Mrs. Collins. I know one Hudson.

L. C. J. I thought you had said Hobson.

Mrs. Collins. No, it was Hudson.

L. C. J. Was there any Conventicle there?

Mrs. Collins. I cannot tell any thing as to that.

Mr. Rosew. Then pray call Sarah Bathoe, and Susan Bathoe. (Sarah Bathoe appear'd.)

L. C. J. Well, what say you to this Witness?

Mr. Rosew. That which I call Mrs. Bathoe for, is to prove that Mrs. Smith was mistaken, when she Swore that Mrs. Bathoe permitted a Conventicle at her House the 20th of July: Upon which Mrs. Bathoe was Convicted, and brought her Appeal.

L. C. J. You do mistake, Mr. Rosewell. She says, that Bathoe confess'd that there had been a Conventicle at her House, as she heard.

Mrs. Bathoe. She has convicted me.

L. C. J. Ay, but it was upon your own Confession,

Q q q q q q 2

Mrs.

Mrs. Bathoe. No, I never confes'd any such thing; for I had none there at that time, nor did confes any such Thing.

L. C. J. Had you ever any Conventicle at your House?

Mrs. Bathoe. That is not it that I am to answer to now. I desire to be excused from answering that Question.

L. C. J. Then I will not believe her, if she talk'd as long as you Preach.

Mr. Rosew. There was an Appeal brought, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. She is not a Witness, it is in her own Case. It would be a fine thing if an old Woman's Story should prevail here against positive Testimony.

(Then Susan Bathoe came in)

Mr. Rosew. Mrs. Smith hath Sworn, that Mrs. Bathoe had a Conventicle at her House the 20th of July.

L. C. J. No; She only Swears that Mrs. Bathoe confes'd it; but her self was not there, she says.

Mr. Rosew. Did you confes it?

L. C. J. No matter what she says; it all agrees with that Testimony that she has now given: This Matter, it seems, is depending upon an Appeal, and so she testifies for her self. And when I ask her whether she ever had any Conventicle at her House, she will not tell me; which induces a Suspicion that she does not come for a fair Purpose, but only to serve a Turn.

Mr. Rosew. Pray Mrs. Susan Bathoe, was there any such Conventicles?

Mrs. Bathoe. There was none.

L. C. J. Why I tell you, you mistake still. Mrs. Smith swears that Mrs. Bathoe confes'd to her that she had a Conventicle, but she swears she was not there. And take all together, seeing she will not answer whether she ever had a Conventicle; and so it may be only a Mistake just of the Day: Or she might tell her so, for any thing appears; and for ought I know Hales has had Conventicles: and what is all this to the Purpose of which you are Accused?

Mr. Rosew. Call Mr. John Ferne.

(He did appear.)

My Lord, I desire Mrs. Bathoe may not go away.

L. C. J. Let her stay then. What do you call this Man for?

Mr. Rosew. It is to prove she has compounded Convictions. Pray Sir, do you know whether Mrs. Smith hath compounded with Mrs. Bathoe since the Conviction, to set by the Prosecution; and Mrs. Bathoe was prevail'd with so to do?

Mr. Ferne. Mrs. Bathoe came to me about 8 or 10 Days ago; says she, I must get you to go with me to the Recorder's. I am promised my Money again, that was paid upon the Appeal I brought. I was glad to hear it, and went with her; the Time appointed was five or six a-Clock. I was there a little after five; and Mrs. Smith was not there, that was one of the Witnesses upon her Conviction, Elizabeth Smith, for I served her with a notice to attend the Recorder. We were there a second Time at the Recorder's Chamber about six a-Clock; she was not come. We waited hard by, and went a third Time; and then she was there, and desired my Sister to excuse her that she was not there earlier; but she did not doubt but she should have her Money; and waited to see the Recorder. Mr. Recorder had several above with him. We waited an Hour or better. Mrs. Smith went up, and my Sister went up with her, or followed her: And says the Recorder to her, Are not you the Woman that was with me such a Time, with Mrs. Williams? Yes, Sir (says she) I was. Says he, What made you make such haste away? Upon that, Mr. Courtbope steps forward with the Book; Sir, (says he) I have paid it in to the Clerk of the Peace. Then, says the Recorder, It is out of my Hands, I can go no further: But promised afterwards to speak with Sir William Smith, the Chairman of the Sessions about it.

L. C. J. I can make Nothing of all this. What a Business is here?

Mr. Ferne. She seems to be a Rash Woman, ready to Swear any thing.

L. C. J. Oh dear, Sir! and you seem to be a grave, prudential sort of a Man.

Mr. Rosew. If she did not Swear that this Meeting was at Mr. Hales's, why was he convicted for that Meeting?

L. C. J. I know nothing of the Conviction at all; it is the first time that I have heard of it.

Mr. Rosew. Then if your Lordship please, we desire to have the Record of it read; here it is.

L. C. J. Make it appear that she swore, and that what she swore was false; and then you say something.

Mr. Rosew. We desire to have these Copies of Records read. Here it is per Testimonium Elizabethæ Smith, or per Sacramentum.

L. C. J. Prove that she swore it.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, we had a very gracious Answer concerning the Petition that my poor Wife deliver'd to His Sacred Majesty in reference to her coming to me; which His Majesty granted with a great deal of Compassion: He remitted it to your Lordship, and your Lordship did second it, for the having the use of what Records should be necessary for my Defence. And upon what Application we made to the Attorney General, it was readily granted: But for the searching of the Records, we have desired the Recorder, and cannot have it.

L. C. J. You are much mis-informed in that. I'll tell you how it was: Your Wife, and a young Man came to me, a matter of a Fortnight ago, and did tell me, there were several Records that were necessary for your Defence, and the Recorder refused to let you have Copies of them. I told her then, God forbid but that you should have all manner of Helps from Records that were necessary for your Tryal; and thereupon I did require my Brother Jenner, who is Recorder, to attend to shew Cause, why he did refuse to let you have any Records that you thought necessary for your Defence: And he gave me this for Answer, that they were Records of Convictions, and were return'd to the Sessions of Peace; some to Surrey, and some into Middlesex, and some were in the Clerk of the Peace's Hands. Whereupon I told your Wife, if she would go to the Clerk of the Peace for Copies of the Records, if they did not readily give you Copies at your Charge, I would make them do it, if she came to complain to me; and if they would not, I would lay them by the Heels. When my Brother Jenner came to me, said I, I believe that which they have a mind to, is to know upon whose Testimony the Convictions are made. Now that is no part of the Conviction; and that we thought ought not to be granted.

Nor

Nor is there any Law for it; for that is to open a Way to the tampering with the King's Witnesses. After this, there was Mr. Wallop that came and moved the Court of King's Bench about this Matter; and we gave him the same Answer, that for any one to discover the King's Witnesses before they come to a Tryal, was not to be allowed by Law. If Mr. Attorney had come here, and said, Pray give us a List of all the Witnesses that Mr. Rosewell will make use of at his Tryal; we should have denied his Motion. God forbid but that the Witnesses you bring should be heard; and that the Witnesses they bring should be heard; but we must prevent tampering with the Witnesses on all sides.

Mr. Rosew. If the Witnesses are suppress'd, it is impossible to encounter their Testimony.

L. C. J. What do you mean by suppressing the Witnesses? They are here produced.

Mr. Rosew. Their Names, my Lord, upon the Records.

L. C. J. Their Names are never exposed, nor ought to be.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, it is that which must enable me to make my Defence. If we could have their Names, we could prove them Perjured.

L. C. J. It cannot be by Law. You have the same Benefit that all the rest of the King's Subjects have. If any one be Convicted of Treason by Witnesses (twenty in Number) we never enter them upon the Record; and if any be acquitted, the Testimony of the Evidence upon that Acquittal, is never enter'd upon Record. It may be in your Matter, it was not upon the Testimony of Witnesses, that the Conviction was; but upon the Notoriety of the Fact, or by Confession, as in the Case of Mrs. Bathoe; that was by Confession, and Witnesses. The Notoriety of the Fact, or the Confession of the Party, are all, and each of them, sufficient to make a Conviction by Record. You have the same Liberty that every Subject has.

Mr. Rosew. Mr. Courthope is the Recorder's Clerk, that saw the Convictions in the Clerk of the Peace's Hands.

L. C. J. We cannot tell that, without the Clerk of the Peace was here.

Mr. Rosew. Pray, where is Mr. Charles Walker?

(He appear'd)

I desire you, Sir, to testify what you know concerning the Conviction of Elizabeth Smith upon Mr. Hales, for a Conventicle at his House the 13th of July?

Mr. Walker. You had a Copy of it from the Clerk of the Peace; I made it out.

Mr. Rosew. Of Mr. Hales and Mistress Bathoe, do you mean?

Mr. Walker. No, only of Mistress Bathoe.

Mr. Rosew. Then I suppose we may have it; and the Clerk will testify it to be a true Copy.

Mr. Walker. This is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Then make what use you please of it. Will you have it read?

Mr. Rosew. No, my Lord, not yet. If your Lordship please, I desire Richard Drew may be call'd; but however, if your Lordship will, let him read that Passage in it, that I cannot so well read, 'tis in Court Hand.

(Clerk of the Crown reads.)

Memorandum quod ad generalem Sessionem pacis pro Com' Midd' septimo die Octobris, tricesimo sexto, &c.

L. C. J. What do you make from this? Here is a Record of the Conviction, which says, that by two credible Witnesses, and the Notoriety of the Fact she was convicted.

Mr. Rosew. Pray call Richard Drew.

(Who came in)

Pray Sir, what do you know about Mistress Smith's Practice in relation to Conventicles?

Mr. Drew. Upon the eleventh of July last, there was an Acquaintance of mine that she did pretend was at a Meeting—

L. C. J. Who was that that did pretend so?

Mr. Drew. Elizabeth Smith; and she would have had some Money of him. He came to me, and asked my Advice. Yes (said I) I think you had better give her Money, than to run the Hazard of swearing against you: So he did. He took me along with him to a Place where they were to meet, where she took ten Shillings, and promised he should come into no further trouble about it.

L. C. J. Had he been at a Conventicle, or not?

Mr. Drew. That I cannot say.

L. C. Just. Do you believe he was, or was not?

Mr. Drew. My Lord, I cannot say that he was, or was not.

L. C. J. But that is not the Question I ask you; for you would not persuade him to give her Money, if he had not been at a Conventicle.

Mr. Drew. My Lord, I did not know whether he was, or was not.

L. C. J. I ask you again, did you believe he was, or was not?

Mr. Drew. I believe he might, by his being so willing to take my Advice; tho' he said it was a base thing to give her any Money in such a matter.

Mr. Rosew. Pray call James Howard.

L. C. J. There he is; what would you have with him?

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, I crave leave first to ask Mistress Shastoe; Are you Mr. Hilton's Wife?

Smith. Yes.

Mr. Rosew. Then I desire Mr. Howard may testify what he knows concerning this Mistress Smith: But first, which Hilton's Wife are you?

Smith. George Hilton's.

Mr. Rosew. What then do you know of her, Sir?

Mr. Howard. I was once drinking a Cup of Ale in Grub street, where she did take a parcel of Money in the Concern of the King, my Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee speak up: In what Concern?

Mr. Howard. She took a Bribe in the Concern of the King.

L. C. J. What dost thou mean?

Mr. Howard. Of a Person that had been at a Meeting.

L. C. J. Prithee, what Bribe was it?

Mr. Howard. About 11 or 12 Shillings.

L. C. J. Prithee, of whom was it?

Mr. Howard. The Man I never saw, nor the Woman before: I came in by chance.

L. C. J. How long ago is this?

Mr. Howard. About the middle of July last.

L. C. J. Who did you discover this matter unto?

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I was only drinking a Cup a Cup of Ale; and I discover'd it to Mr. Drew, that was call'd last.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Drew one of them?

Mr. Howard. No; Mr. Drew I am acquainted with; he is my Neighbour.

L. C. J. When were you at Church last?

Mr. Howard. The last Lord's Day.

L. C. J. When did you receive the Sacrament there?

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I never did. We have no Parish-Church at present; it is now a Building.

L. C. J. Where do you live?

Mr. Howard. In Mugwell-street.

L. C. J. Have you no publick preaching in the Parish?

Mr. Howard. I do hear Doctor Fowler, and Mr. Smythies too, sometimes.

L. C. J. That is when there is no Conventicle (I suppose) in the way. That Mr. Smythies and Doctor Fowler are both very well known.

Mr. Rosew. Is Mrs. Anne Fary here?

(She did not appear.)

Pray call Mrs. Anne Higgenfon.

(Who appeared.)

Do you know Mrs. Shaftoe, or Mrs. Hilton, as she is call'd?

Mrs. Higgenfon. My Lord, I have very little Knowledge of her; I have known her but a very little while.

Mr. Rosew. What Testimony can you give of her Conversation?

Mrs. Higgenfon. Since I have known her, I have heard some ill things of her: But I cannot speak to any thing of mine own Knowledge.

L. C. J. Why, so People may say a great many ill things of you, that you do not deserve, nor know any thing of.

Mr. Rosew. Call Anne Carter.

(She did not appear.)

I desire Sir John Talbot would please to be examined.

L. C. J. Here is Sir John Talbot by me.

Mr. Rosew. Sir, I desire you would please to testify to the Court and the Jury, what you know concerning the Conversation of Mistress Shaftoe, otherwise called Mrs. Hilton.

Sir John Talbot. She was a Servant, that liv'd in my House a great many Years; but I did not use to converse with her.

Mr. Rosew. No, Sir John; but what do you know of her Conversation while she lived in your House?

Sir J. Talbot. All that I know of her is, she had no very good Character in the Family.

L. C. J. Do you know any thing of your own Knowledge?

Sir John Talbot. As to any thing of my own Knowledge, I cannot speak; it is all no other than Hear-say from all the Family.

L. C. J. But I ask you what you know of your own Knowledge, Sir John. Tell us the Particulars you your self know.

Sir J. Talbot. It was the Complaint of all the Servants of the House, that she was guilty of telling Lyes and Stories in the Family.

Mr. Rosew. Was she reported in the Family a frequent Lyer?

Sir J. Talbot. She had that Character in the Family; all the Servants complain'd of it. I only know of other things since she was gone out of the Family; and that she has been concern'd in an odd sort of Practice, about attempting to steal away a young Lady.

cern'd in an odd sort of Practice, about attempting to steal away a young Lady.

L. C. J. Do you know of it of your own Knowledge?

Sir J. Talbot. I had it from her self, and upon her own Affirmation.

L. C. J. What was that?

Sir J. Talbot. It was about the Practice that had been set on foot of cheating People of Money for procuring Fortunes; particularly concerning the Daughter of one Sir Harry Jones. And there have a great many Gentlemen been abused about Town in that Matter, and made believe that this Woman had an Interest in her, and would put this great Fortune into their Hands: I have not been privy my self to any of the Negotiations, but I have understood there were such Practices; there was one Salem, and she that were engaged.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir John, do you know this of your own Knowledge? for we must not hear Evidence to take away People's Reputation by Hear-say: If she hath confess'd any thing to you, you may speak that, and let us know it.

Sir J. Talbot. My Lord, if it be not too long to give you the Circumstances, how I come to know it; I will tell you what I have been informed about it.

L. C. J. No, that is not Evidence, Sir John; unless you know it your self, or had it by her Confession.

Sir J. Talbot. My Lord, I do not come here as a voluntary Evidence, but I am here called upon, And my Lord, I think I ought to give my Testimony if a Man's Life be concerned.

L. C. J. And so ought we who are upon our Oaths, to insist upon it, that you give legal Evidence; what you know of your own Knowledge; and I ask you here again, whether what you relate be of your own Knowledge, or what was by Hear-say?

Sir J. Talbot. My Lord, I had notice sent me by a Letter, That there was a Gentleman came to Thistleworth with a Coach and four Horses, with a Design to steal Mrs. Jones. I cannot remember whether there was any Name to the Letter, but such a Letter was sent, and I was to enquire about it of this Ellinor Shaftoe, who was engaged in the Design. I sent to her to come to me, and she did come; and told me that there had been such a Practice of one Salem, and she would bring a Gentleman to discover the whole Business, and she did so; and brought this Hilton (by whose Name, (as her Husband) she owns her self) and he came to me, and gave me a Note of several Gentlemen's Names that were concern'd in it; and I believe, I have a Book wherein their Names are. I then asked why she did let it so long run, and the Business go on so far. Mr. Hilton did confess, that one particular Gentleman had been kept in treaty, who was a Country-man, and came to live in Town, and was in Town the greatest Part of the Winter upon this Design; and did walk that Way expecting that this Nan Carter should bring down this Heiress, that so they might have an Opportunity to Steal her. Mr. Hilton had no other way of Application to me, but by this Shaftoe; and he confess'd himself that he was a Party concern'd in the Design.

L. C. J. Ay; but what did Hilton's Wife say?

say ? for what he said is nothing to the Purpose in this Point.

Sir J. Talbot. She is one that I had no Communication with, nor converse, while she was in my Family, otherways than as an ordinary Servant ; but this same Mrs. Jones was my Ward.

L. C. Just. Did she confess she had any Design in this matter ; or was to have a Reward for setting the matter on foot ?

Sir J. Talbot. No, my Lord ; she did not particularly confess she had any hand in the Design ; but it was that which several other Persons have come and enquired since of my Family about ; who have told me, that there was one Shastoe, otherwife Hilton, that was concern'd in it.

L. C. Just. That is not Evidence, Sir John, I must tell you agen.

Sir J. Talbot. My Lord, I can't make the Evidence otherways than as it is. I tell you what I know.

L. C. J. You understand your self so well, Sir John, that you know it is not Evidence ; and you are not to talk of what other People have told you.

Mr. J. Withins. How long did she live in your Family ?

Sir J. Talbot. I can't tell how long (my Lord) but I believe she was there ten Years.

Mr. Just. Withins. That's a strange thing, that you should keep an ill Woman so long.

Sir J. Talbot. My Lord, with your Permission, she was a Servant when that Child came to me, and when the Mother died ; and my Wife did not think fit to put her away ; so she came and staid with the Child as long as my Wife could keep her ; but at last she did foment Differences in the Family, Lyes and Stories ; and was found to be a Person not fit to live in the Family ; and therefore my Wife was afraid to keep her any longer, and put her away.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Rosewell, have you any other Witnesses ?

Mr. Rosew. Pray call Anne Dillingham.

L. C. Just. Well, what do you ask her ?

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, I bring this Witness to prove concerning Mrs. Shastoe alias Hilton, that she offered to swear against People as being at Conventicles, whom she had never seen.

Mrs. Dillingham. She lodged in my House, and is a very ill Woman ; and asked me to swear of Meetings, that I never knew any thing of at all in my Life. I never was at Meetings but about Thirteen Years ago. I asked her why I should swear, or what I could swear to ? She told me, I should have a share of the Money if I would swear to what she said ; whether it were right or wrong, I should have a Share if I would but swear.

L. C. J. How long ago is this ?

Mrs. Dillingham. Two Years ago.

L. C. J. Who did you tell this to first ?

Mrs. Dillingham. My Lord, I am Subpœna'd here to give my Testimony.

L. C. J. That's true ; but who did you tell this that you talk of first to ?

Mrs. Dillingham. My Lord, I never told it to any body but her, except it was to my own Husband.

L. C. J. But why would you keep this as a Secret, and not tell it to any body ?

Mrs. Dillingham. Why, my Lord, I don't speak it for any Malice to her at all, I assure you.

L. C. Just. Where do you live ?

Mrs. Dillingham. In Long-Acre at the Golden Ball.

L. C. J. If you live in Long-Acre, how came you to discover any thing of a matter that was transacted at Rotherhish ?

Mrs. Dillingham. My Lord, I know nothing of it, of my own Knowledge ; but what she would have perswaded me to.

L. C. J. But how came she to talk to you about a matter of Rotherhish ? or, you to know any thing about her ? that I desire to know ; and how you came here ?

Mrs. Dillingham. One Mrs. Peirce, that is a Neighbour, ask'd me what I knew of her ; and so would Subpœna me, because she lodged at my House.

L. C. J. How long did she lie at your House ?

Mrs. Dillingham. I can't tell ; I believe about half a Year.

L. C. J. Well, what became of her ? How did she behave her self ?

Mrs. Dillingham. My Husband turn'd her out of the House, and would not entertain her ; because she kept Company with a Man that was none of her Husband.

L. C. Just. Why, can you tell when they were married ?

Mrs. Dillingham. She went as the Wife of Mr. George Hilton, when she was not married.

L. C. J. How ! Was she not married then ?

Mrs. Dillingham. No, they were not married then. He was not her Husband then. There are a great many of our Neighbours that can say more than I. She is a naughty, filthy Woman ; a very ill Woman ; if I should call her Whore, I believe she might trouble me for it ; but I believe it to be true.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Rosewell ?

Mr. Rosew. No, my Lord ; but I hope your Lordship will give me leave to say something to the Court and Jury.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, have you any more Witnesses to call for the King ?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have some Witnesses to support the Credit of these Witnesses that we have produced : But we don't think there is any need ; nor that it is any way diminished by the Defence of the Prisoner at the Bar.

L. C. Just. Do as you please, Mr. Attorney ; go on your own way.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord ; we shall trouble your Lordship no further with any Evidence.

L. C. J. Then, Mr. Rosewell, let's hear what you have to say further for your self ; for all the Witnesses have been heard, of one side and t'other.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, and dear Countrymen who are to be my Judges in this Cause this Day ; What I now speak, is with respect as much to their precious Souls, who are concern'd either in Prosecution or trying of me, as my own Safety. There is not a Man of you of the Jury, tho' you are Strangers to me, but I would lay down my Life to Morrow to save one of your Souls, if I might be an Instrument therein : How much more then all of them, if the Consideration be taken of the Worth of an immortal Soul ? Your Lordship knows, and I am sensible, sensible, how unfit I am now to do such a thing as this is, in the Company of so many learned Gentlemen of the long Robe. I have betray'd already too much of my Ignorance in such Affairs, and I beg your Pardon for it; and I humbly thank your Lordship, and the Court for the Indulgence that you have shewed towards me in my Infirmities. You are my Lord, as in the Presence, so in the Place of the great God; the Judge and Lord of all, at this Day: You are Elchim, I have said ye are Gods; whose Property it is to help the Weak, and compassionate the innocent; therefore I make this Apology in reference to my own Innocency, and my great inability to sum up the Proofs that have been in this Cause. If you will put my Weakness in competition with their vast Abilities, who are of Council for the King against me; and my ignorance in the Laws of the Land against their great Knowledge; I cannot but expect to be overthrown, notwithstanding my Case is very innocent, and I have declared in the Presence of God the Truth of my Heart this Day. And if I were to be call'd to the Bar of the great God, the Judge of all the Earth, before I sleep; I should speak the same thing, and must, and no other. I am sensible, a Lye is both a base, and a very wicked thing; and that the Lake that burneth with fire is prepared for all Lyars. And I pray God convince these Gentlewomen wherein they have wrong'd and abus'd me; that they may repent of their Sin; which (I bless God) I have prayed for them most Days ever since I was confin'd, and beg'd it of God with Tears, in Charity to their poor Souls. And I believe I have pray'd more for His Majesty in one Week, than they have done in all their Lives. They are not the King's Friends, but his Enemies, in bringing such Allegations against those that are his true, faithful and innocent Subjects; as I am, my God knoweth.

And here, my Lord, I would first observe the Variations that are in their Evidence. In the first place, Mrs. Smith swears, That the Text I preached upon was the 21st Chapter of Genesis. And here is Mrs. Hilton comes, and she swears afterwards that it was the 20th: herein they vary. Then I suppose, my Lord, if they vary and differ, in Law they are not two Witnesses: But differing so, are both of them incredible: And I think the Statute Law of this Land is, that a Man must be convicted upon the Oath of two Credible Witnesses.

Next my Lord, here's Mistress Smith swears, that these Things were delivered, which are charged in the Indictment, altogether in the Morning-Exercise, in the Forenoon: Whereas your Lordship has heard from several Witnesses (and I do not know one Man of them but fears a Lye; and would have sworn to the Truth of what they have spoken. They tell you) how every Passage that these People would pervert must come in, and how it was divided. I hope your Lordship will pardon the Infirmity of two or three, a few illiterate Men, that are weak, and could not so well instruct themselves to speak in a Court of Justice upon such an Occasion. But upon the whole matter, they give such an account, all, that it cannot be presumed, or thought that they should agree to speak any thing that was not true. And I am confident, there is not a Man of them but would take his Oath, (as I said) of the Truth of what he has here declared. And they have declared that there were two distinct Exercises, as I have protested in the Presence of the great God. That in the Morning was upon the 20th of Genesis: And th' other in the Afternoon (there being an Hour that past between,) was upon one particular Verse of a Chapter in the Epistle to the Hebrews, quite distinct from the other Discourse that was in the Morning. She not only varies from the Truth, but also from her Fellow-witness, that it was all in one Exercise. This I submit to your Lordship's and the Jury's Consideration (these worthy Gentlemen that are to judge of my Life, and Death) whether they are two Credible Witnesses, thus varying.

There be several other Things (my Lord) that because of my present Infirmity, I may not so readily call to Mind; but which ought to be recall'd and recollected; as in reference to the Person whose House we met at; One says it was one Capt. Daniel Weldy's: Another that it was one Mr. Daniel's. Therein again they vary, in reference to the Person; and if they are out in one Thing, they may be out in another.

Smith. I can say nothing about his Name, I never was there in my Life before.

L. C. J. Mrs.! Mrs! You must not interrupt him; he is upon his Defence for his Life.

Mr. Rosew. Then, my Lord, she says that my Text in the Afternoon was upon a Psalms; and there was no such thing as your Lordship has had it particularly made appear to you. I have ingenuously told you the Text, and the Truth; I have spoken it from my heart in the Presence of the great God; and upon what occasion every Passage that they have wrested was spoken: And your Lordship may thereby perceive how most abominably they have perverted my Words. Now they having wrested my Words that are innocent in themselves (so far from being Treason, that I do not know there was any Fault or Crime in them; being only plain Scriptural Proofs of Doctrinal Propositions in Divinity, without those Applications that they have pretended to) certainly your Lordship and the Gentlemen of the Jury will consider, what is most probable or likely; what they have declar'd, or what you have heard from the several Witnesses that have come in to testify concerning me.

My Lord, I was going to speak something to your Lordship of the great Wickedness of their making the Application of what was innocently spoken and meant, to the late King of England, and his present Majesty, whom I daily pray for, and always did; whatsoever these Witnesses have declared concerning me. And your Lordship has heard my Maid testify (which I little expected) That I use to pray for the King every Morning and Evening in my own House; and God knows that to him I have address'd my self for him daily: And more than that she heard me (when I thought none but the God of Heaven himself had heard me) pray for him in my Closet. I would desire your Lordship and the Jury, to consider, whether these are not the Criminals (and not I) that have made application of innocent Passages, and wrested the Words that were plain and innocent in themselves, to a wrong meaning, to make me Guilty of High-Treason; applying them to His Majesty jesty, when I never intended, or thought the least of any such thing.

My Lord, I doubt not but there have been several that have joyn'd in it, that have help'd to frame and forge this Accusation against me. And there is that which I suggested to your Lordship in the Morning, in the beginning of this Cause: These Persons have not only, or so much Sworn me a Knave; but a perfect Fool and a Mad man to speak such absurd, incoherent, inconsistent, sollecistical and nonsensical Things. I believe there is no Man of common Sense and Reason, no Gentleman that's here this Day, that can imagine that a Person that had the use of common Sense and Reason, should speak such absurd Things as these are. Besides, my Lord, I have brought Witnesses, several of them, to testify there never was any such Thing spoken by me as they have testify'd against me, and misapply'd. I have likewise produced several Persons to give Evidence of my usual and constant Practice with relation to the King and Government all along; my contending for Monarchy, and against Anarchy, which did too much reign in these late Days of Confusion, which I remember by very sad Experience, tho' I was then indeed but a Child. And when I came to be a Man, I used always to observe the 30th of January, and the 29th of May: Preaching upon those Days, and pressing People to Obedience; and inveighing against those that had acted against their Principles, and were Rebels either against his present Majesty, or had been concern'd in that barbarous Act against his Royal Father; which I did utterly abhor.

And, my Lord, Methinks it should have been very unlikely that a Man that should make it his common Practice so to do; as I have testify'd concerning my self, should fall under such a Suspicion and Accusation as I now am; Or, that such an one should fall into such a Sollecism, as the Words that are testified against me must import; it is very unlikely. I leave it to the great God of Heaven to vindicate my Innocency in the Matter; which I do not question but he will do.

Then, my Lord, here are several Gentlemen of the Church of England that have testify'd concerning my Conversation. They have had Acquaintance with me many Years, some of them near 20 Years; the least, 8, 10, or 12. They never heard an indecent Word, with respect to His Majesty, or the Government, fall from me; any unworthy Reflection upon either of them: But my constant Practice was to pray for His Majesty with all earnestness and sollicitude. There are several of them Gentlemen of repute in the City. There are particularly two Persons that belong'd to an honourable Family; in which I lived so many Years, who give a Testimony what my Conversation there was; and my constant Practice of practice of praying for the King, while I was there. This your Lordship, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, have heard and observed; I doubt not.

But, besides that; your Lordship and the Jury, I hope observe as to these People who Swear against me; what my Witnesses have testify'd; that they would swear any thing, and forswear it; And what a Character is given concerning one of them particularly, your Lordship has heard from that worthy Gentleman, Sir John Talbot, whose Face I never saw before it was in this Place. And by the last Witness, you have a Testimony concerning her lewd Conversation. And several other Witnesses prove she would Swear any thing for them, if they would Swear for her. So that it appears she would, and does Swear at a venture such and such Conventicles; only upon hear-say, and meer report: And that she has taken Money, and made some Compositions too. These things I must refer to your Lordship, and these worthy Gentlemen, who are of the Jury.

If then my Carriage and Conversation (so well known in the World) be compared with that Character that is given of these Persons; I must humbly submit it to your Lordship, and the Jury, how far they are to be believed against me; and might argue from the Incredibility of their Testimony; but your Lordship cannot but remark it.

My Lord, It is very strange that these two Women should so exactly remember these Words: They agree in every particular Circumstance. I durst appeal to your Lordship, and the Jury, particularly to the Jury, if now they would undertake to repeat upon their Notes, the Words that have so often been repeated here; and whether there is any of them would be able to agree in all the particular Words? They have an incredible Memory that could so exactly agree together that these were the Words. I do humbly submit this to your Lordship. For, my Lord, I lay the stress of my Defence very much not only upon the incredibility and improbability, but even the impossibility of the Evidence that they have given. I humbly submit it, I say, to your Lordship, and these Gentlemen; and leave it with them and the great God of Heaven, whom I pray to direct them. I hope they will consider the Life of a Man, and the worth of Blood. My Lord, however I am represented this Day, I know my self to be a faithful Subject to His Majesty; and to the great God of Heaven, whose I am, and whom I desire to Serve.

My Lord, I will now, if you please, ingenuously confess my Crime, if it were any. I have been frequently Preaching, in my Congregation, out of the Scriptures; and it is true, as your Lordship sees, the Chapter came then in course to be Expounded: Which I use to do, to let the People understand the Scripture, as well as I could; for the People perish for lack of Knowledge; and it is by the Knowledge of Jesus Christ that they must come to Life and Salvation; for him to know is Life Eternal. It has been my way to Expound the Scriptures to them.

In the Presence of the great God, before whom I speak, to whom I can appeal for the truth and integrity of what I say, that God before whom we must all stand, (all whose Faces I see here shall meet, and see one another at the great Tribunal;) It is to this God that I appeal as to the Truth of my Heart in these Things. And, my Lord, I shall continue as I have done, however God dispose of me, to Pray for the Life, and Happiness of His Majesty; my usual Prayer, Morning and Evening being, that God would crown him with Grace here, and Glory and Honour hereafter. And this I shall do by the grace of God unto my Dying day; For my Soul does abhor such Things as have been testify'd against me this Day.

Thus, my Lord, I have dealt as plainly with your Lordship and the Jury as I can. My Infirmities are great. I desire to leave my whole Cause with the Lord; and with these worthy Gentlemen my Country-men, who I do not question will have a just compassion and consideration of my Case, under these Circumstances wherein I stand; and to all the Circumstances that have been made out in this Cause this Day.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Will you please, or any of the King's Council, to say any thing in this Matter?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, we leave it entirely to your Lordship.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Case has held a long Time; and Gentlemen, I must tell you, no Body ought to think Time too long in a Case of this Nature, wherein the Government is so much concern'd on the one side, and the Life of the Prisoner at the Bar on th' other. Et de vitâ hominis nulla est cunctatio longa. I think no Man ought to apprehend his Patience too much tired in finding out the Truth in the case of a Person that is tried for his Life. However, Gentlemen, by the way; because the Case has been long, it is fit that there should be some recollection made of it; and in order, as near as I can, that I might help your Memories in the Evidence that hath been given, both for and against the Prisoner at the Bar; I would endeavour as well as I can, to repeat, at least the Substantial Part of it, to you; and in case any thing that is material be omitted, God forbid but it should be supply'd by any one that is able for to give any Assistance of that kind; for I cannot pretend to be so exact as to give an account of the whole Evidence myself. But Gentlemen, I must tell you, it is a Duty incumbent upon the Court, to give you all the Assistance that can be in a Matter of this Nature, and I will do it with as much Integrity, and with all the Care and Caution of doing no Injury, either to the Prisoner or to the King, between whom we are to be indifferent, both you, and the Court, as possible can be; that there may be no wrong done on the one side, or on the other; and, according as the Prisoner himself hath said, what I shall speak, I know I speak in the Presence of the great God of Heaven and Earth; who is to be the Judge of all Men. We are upon our Oaths, and you are upon your Oaths; and we are all of us Bound by our Oaths that we have taken, to be guided in this weighty Affair, (for so I must call it) by the Evidence that has been given to us at this time, both against the Prisoner and for him. For certainly there cannot be a Thing of greater concern, nay, even in point of Compassion, than to see any Man come to be accused of so high a Crime as the Prisoner at the Bar is now tried for. And he must have a strange obdurate Heart and Conscience, that cannot so far participate of the common sympathy of human Nature and his Fellow Creatures, as to compassionate any one that stands in such Circumstances as the Prisoner does. But, then on the other hand; the Denials of the Prisoner at the Bar, with all the Imprecations that he has made; and all the Affirmations that he has offered of what he has formerly done; and all these things of his appealing to the great God of Heaven about his Innocency; that I must tell you, of themselves, they are not to weigh with you; for your Business is to know according to the Oath that you have taken, whether you have Evidence given to you, (since you are Sworn upon this Tryal) to satisfy you that he is Guilty according to that Evidence. So that if the Affirmation of the Person accused, tho' attended with never so many Imprecations one way or other, be offered to Persons that are in your case, as Jurymen, it is not to weigh with you at all one way or other, if it be only the Affirmation of the Party accused; for if so, then there would never be any guilty Person brought before any Jury whatsoever; or any Criminal could come to suffer any Judgment, or be convicted of any Crime; if his own Affirmations concerning himself, and his own Commendations of himself would be sufficient to Acquit him, and set aside his Accusation. So that now you are to go according to the Evidence offer'd; and so are we, against this Person that is here before you.

Gentlemen, I must say that it is very untoward; and I hope by this Cause there will be a warning given, at least, to other Persons; that there have been too many notorious Transgressours of the Law in this Matter of Conventicles. I speak that, not to affect this Case at all; but I speak of what the Nation hath had but too woful Experience of, as to these Seditious Meetings, that are, and have been continually kept up in Opposition to the Laws; and I speak nothing as to the Meeting that was at this time; but I speak it that others may be warned for future Times; for always Mischief attends the open and publick Transgression of the Law. God forbid, but that People should worship God, and serve him according to their own Consciences; therefore the Law has been so indulgent to them, as to give them leave to exercise their Religion in other manner than as is done in the Church of England; provided there be not any occasion of Tumult; but that there be not above Five, except those of the same Family, meeting together; which you know the Act of Parliament hath provided for. And the truth of it is, the Reason of the Law is very plain: For you all know, who are Gentlemen of Quality, that this Law, as well as another Law that has so great a relation to the Case before you, does declare, that from these Seminaries of Sedition and Faction Conventicles, and the Clubs and Cabals of discontented, irregular People, disaffected to the Laws both of Church and State, was the great Mischief and Confusion that was brought upon us, and which at length brought us into the Distractions of the late Times.

Gentlemen, I must say likewise this to you, that whatsoever the Prisoner at the Bar thinks now, that blessed Martyr King Charles the 1st. was by such means brought to that horrid, accursed, murderous Death and End; I cannot call it less than so, in relation to the Persons that brought him to it, under the Pretence of Religion. It was the Cry of Popery and Arbitrary Power, of which he was no way Guilty, tho' that was insinuated into the Minds of silly People, those ignorant Souls that were easily captivated with a base Lye; but that was the Occasion.

Occasion. Many of you Gentlemen, that are yet in being, remember it your selves; and many of you have, and cannot but have seen and read the History of those Times, and have been so conversant with the Practices of these People since, that you are able to make a Judgment in the Matter. All these sort of Things are but Pretences, and fair shews of dangerous and seditious People; that which was most dangerous to us at that Time, and I am apt to believe will be so to the World's end. For when People come to guild over their bitter Pill of Sedition, it is always under pretence of Religion. For a lack-a-day, perhaps there were as many Rebels against the late King raised by the beating of the Cushion in the Pulpit, as by the beating any Drum in the Street; for it is well known these are the Bell-weather's of the Faction, that under pretence of Religion, come there to incense the People to commit all these Villanies that sometimes they are incited to do, as we know; and to prepare the Way to bring us into that condition, that we were in, in the late Times: And particularly, were used as Instruments to bring that blessed Martyr, King Charles the First, to the Block. These Pulpiteers took Occasional Texts, of binding their Kings in Chains, and their Nobles in Fetters of Iron; and raised up such Doctrines from Texts of Scripture, that were certainly intended for quite far other Purposes, to countenance their Practices, to make People kill and slay God's Anointed, under pretence of saving and protecting the Anointed of God. But who did they mean by it? Pray how did these People come to take upon them to preach against Popery, when indeed they were preaching down all manner of Religion, under the Pretence of that? So that you grew to have as many Religions as there were Sects or Dissenters in the Nation; and never any could be tolerated that were not grown into the Party, but they came all into Office, and the more extravagant the more prefer'd; so that without the Blessing and immediate Providence of God, by a second Resurrection, reducing us into some sort of Order, in restoring his Sacred Majesty (whom I pray God grant long to Reign over us; and so ought all Loyal Subjects to pray) what a miserable Condition had we been in? And I may call it a second resurrection, it being the Resurrection of our Religion; we were turn'd all into Confusion; we had no other Religion, at least apparently predominant, but that that had the strongest Army to support it, and that had force enough to contribute to what the luxurious, debauch'd Professors of it would make to be Religion; for they were the Professors at that time of all things.

Gentlemen, I speak this, because even the Laws that have been made since the Restoration of the King, have taken notice, that the beginning of all the Mischief hath been this; and that the great Incendiaries of all Sorts of Rebellion were these who took upon them in their Pulpits, under colour of Religion, to countenance Rebellion and Treason, Confusion and Anarchy. Now how far these things have been known to you all, that I must leave to you; and must betake my self a little nearer to the Case, having premised these things; to which I would add this as a Warning to all People; that they would not abet or assist in any Meeting against Law, or that is known to be against Law, whatsoever they think; for there will Mischief come upon it one time or another, let them pretend what they will. As that Gentleman says, he undertook to Expound, and teach his People the Knowledge of the Lord: the Knowledge of the Lord is a very good Lesson to be learnt, and to be taught all People; but blessed be God, we thank him for it, we have Church men of as great Learning, (without any reflection upon the Gentleman at the Bar) as he can pretend unto; and Men as Pious, and Virtuous; and perhaps we may say at this time, with a little more Confidence than ordinary, that we have as Learned a Clergy as ever was since Religion was known within this Kingdom. And God be Thanked, these Men are not only learned for themselves, but they exert themselves for the good of others, for the Satisfaction of that Duty in which they are employ'd, by their due and constant Attendance upon the Worship of God, in their Places of Worship, the Churches which are by Law appointed for it; and we need not run into Holes and Corners, and Conventicles, and Clans to understand the Word of God and the Practice of our Duty towards him, or towards Men; because we have Churches to apply our selves to, where we may learn to know God, to obey him, and them that are put in Authority under him; which I am sure is a Duty incumbent upon every Preacher of the Word of God to insist upon, and press and urge. And I am sure, whosoever preaches at a Conventicle cannot with a safe Conscience preach Obedience to the Civil Magistrate; because while they are in that very Preaching, they are acting Disobedience against his Laws; in regard what they do, is against the Authority of those Laws under which they live; and no Man can Preach well against that which he knows in his own Conscience, at the same time, he is practising himself.

So that Gentlemen, I must tell you this is a wonderful dangerous thing; and therefore I give it as a Caution to all People to beware how they break the Laws by going to such Meetings, and Conventicles as these are; for it will have at the long run one time or other a very dangerous Issue. And there is another thing which is wonderful dangerous too, to see what Shoals and Crouds of People come to these sort of Meetings; People of all sorts of mean Trades and Professions. And how easy is it, if a Man has a Mind to insinuate into some silly, ignorant People, common, illiterate Fellows that can neither write nor read, some of them; yet thereby to feel their Pulse, to see whether they will swallow down such a Thing, or such a Pretence at first? For they did not in the late Times begin with open Rebellion, and preaching the Doctrine of deposing of Princes, or bringing them to the Block; but they tryed with several previous Ways, and as the Bait sunk, and was suck'd in, they attempted to try further. They apply'd themselves perpetually to pursue the temper of their Auditory; and therefore we must have a great deal of Care to prevent all such Mischiefs as these are for the future, that they may give no countenance to such, who pretend to be Expositors, but are very ill ones of the Scripture; and thereby instill into the Minds of Men such dangerous and pernicious Doctrines; that the Scripture may not be per-versed,

verted, to give an Authority to such desperate Things as these are ; for we have known over and over how easily People are drawn into Mischief in this Age, even by the very same Train that they were, in the time of the late Rebellion.

Now, Gentlemen, these things being premis'd, I would take notice to you, that the thing now before you, is a Question of a different Nature from what I have now spoken of. It is not the Question that you are to try ; Whether he preach'd at a Conventicle or not ; or whether the doing of that which he did in to Preaching, is against the Law or not. But whether he did at any Meeting, (especially as to the time that is particularly specified) speak Words of the same substance, to the same effect and intent that are compris'd in the Indictment. For tho' he did Preach at a Conventicle, and thereby did transgress the Law ; yet in case he did not Preach to the Substance of what is contain'd in this Indictment that hath been read unto you, and that he is accused of, he must be acquitted. That I must declare to you for Law, as no doubt it must be acknowledg'd to me to be ; therefore you are to take care upon your Consciences, to try and consider whether or no you believe these three Witnesses that have been produced against him, swear true ; or are guilty of wilful Perjury. For in downright plain English, they are guilty of Perjury, if he be not guilty of the Words laid in the Indictment. One of the two is certainly true ; either they are guilty of Perjury, or the Prisoner at the Bar is guilty of the Treason laid to his Charge ; I pray God direct you in your Enquiry ; for it is a Question (I must needs say) of very great Difficulty.

Gentlemen, for the intention of a Man's Heart (I must tell you this for Law) as to the compassing and imagining of the Death of the King, it is not to be discovered but by some Action ; some Word or Overt Act, there might be to interpret the secret Imagination of the Heart. It is impossible to discover, or disclose the Imagination of any Man's Heart, except we be directed to that Discovery by Words or Actions.

Now Gentlemen, Words that in themselves may bear a good Construction, and are good Words, yet coupled with Actions that are Evil, or other Words that are Evil, these very Words may be a Discovery of the evil Imagination that is in a Man's Heart. As to express my self in a very familiar Example, for the purpose, that I may make things as plain as I can, for that is my design, and ought to be every one's that is concern'd in such a Matter as this. Because we have had some Discourse concerning the late blessed Martyr King Charles the First, he was here brought to a Shambles of Justice ; for I cannot call it a Court of Justice, however they called it a High Court ; and there was a kind of Mockery or Pageantry of a Tryal. He was Arraign'd and Try'd for Treason, and a new notional Treason, never yet invented nor known of before amongst us, Treason against his People ; I say, new and never thought of till these Butcherly Fellows that sprung out of the Shambles came to put it in Practice ; erecting what they call'd a High Court of Justice, but which was truly to be call'd a High Court of Injustice ; and there they were to have some come and cry Justice, Justice, Justice upon the King. Gentlemen, Justice is a good Word ; but if that Word be used and spoken as it was in that case, in order to bring the King to his Death, that which was a good Word, and if otherwise used, had been a proper Word even at that time ; that is, if apply'd to good purpose, to set the King and the Nation free ; yet being apply'd to the bringing that Sacred Martyr to so horrid and barbarous a Death, that was plain downright Treason ; and I make no difficulty in the World, (nor can any Man that understands any thing) that it was so by Law ; and it was an Overt Act sufficiently indicating the intention of all Persons that were therein concern'd to put and bring the King to utter Death and Destruction ; and all these Fellows that made use of that good Word, Justice, Justice, Justice, were all undoubted Traytors ; making use of it for that ill Purpose.

Gentlemen, again ; Suppose if Mr. Cook was a Man of Law, that was Solicitor of what they call'd the Common-wealth at that time, Solicitor to the State, (I only speak this to explain my Mind) if he comes (when the King had just ground to dispute the Authority of that Court of Injustice, that he was dragg'd to, and refused to Plead) and does pray Judgment against the King, as he did, and it was proved at his Tryal. Judgment alone might be there meant as tending to excuse the King, as well as to Sentence him to Death ; yet he being there, praying Judgment against the King, and which was afterwards at his Prayer so pronounced ; that shew'd what his Opinion of the Word he used was at that time ; and that made him a Traitor, and was an Overt-Act to discover his Guilt.

Why so, Gentlemen, I am to tell you, tho' there are Words that may be used in a Scriptural Way very well, and to very good Purpose ; yet if they be applied to an ill Purpose, they may be a sufficient Indication of a Man's compassing and imagining the Death and Destruction of the King. Therefore, Gentlemen, you are the Judges, whether if in this case, he speaking these Words, of destroying our Enemies, and standing to our Principles, they have not an Allusion to the former Words ; and whether they are not Expositors of the Mind of this Person, the Prisoner at the Bar, of compassing and imagining the Death and Destruction of the King ; and I do this on purpose to remind you of what is necessary to let you into the Question.

Now for the Testimony against the Prisoner at the Bar, you have three Witnesses. First, you have Mrs. Smith, she does directly Swear that she did frequently, several times go between the 13th of July and the 14th of September, to hear the Prisoner at the Bar preach at several Conventicles or Places of Meeting. She tells you the particular Days ; She tells you as to one, that she heard him the 20th of July. She heard him another time the 10th of August, according to the best of her remembrance. She heard him again the 17th of August, the 24th of August, the 31st of August ; and she heard him the 14th of September ; that is according to the best of her remembrance. She both tells you the Time and the Place, and she heard him Preach at these Conventicles. All that she says as to this, is introductory to what she speaks of the 14th of September, which is the Day to which the Indictment does refer ; and this she does say positively, that upon the 17th of August, he pray'd that he might be forgiven for not Praying for the King ; and by that she would have you to understand, as she would insinuate, that he did not use to Pray for the King.

Mr.

Mr. Rosew. [Turning to the Jury.] I made use of the Words of Samuel, God forbid that I should cease to Pray for him.

L. C. Just. Sir, you must not talk to the Jury now; I am directing of them.

Mr. Rosew. My Lord, I beg your Pardon; it was to set the Matter right. It was mis-apprehended.

L. C. Just. All this is antecedent to the Matter for which he is accused; and you see his Answer to it, from a Text of Scripture that he offers to you, which he did not repeat with dislike to pray for the King; but that he thought it his Duty always so to do.

Then she tells you particularly at another time, which, I think, was at the House of one Paul Shed; I cannot particularly tell directly the Name; there was a talk of the Recorder, and of the Lord Mayor of the City of London; but that was before this time. And afterwards, the first and the second Witness, two of them more, give you an Account, tho' they were never there but then; That he began to talk about the Fire, and that he should say there was a great Man at the Corner of Grace-Church street, I need not name his Name, for you all know him very well; that he met with a poor Man, tho' indeed he was not a poor Man, he was a labouring Man, a Carpenter; and they began to talk much concerning the Fire, and he did say, that in case it had not been for that great Man, there had been no such Thing as the Fire in London; nor if it had not been for the Lord Mayors and Sheriffs afterwards, there had been no such thing as the Fire in Southwark and Wapping. And I take notice too, that at the same Place, which was Shed's House, that they spoke of, there is Mrs. Farrar, against whom there is not the least Objection that I can hear of; She agrees both in the Circumstance of Place and Time, and of the Words, and to the Dialogue about Grace-Church street, and the Carpenter; and to the previous Words, that he was not a poor Man, and the like; and about the Discourse relating to the Fires of London, Southwark, and Wapping; and likewise relating to the Lord Mayors, and Aldermen, and Sheriffs; these Discourses were at that time.

Gentlemen, the next Testimony you have, is of these Witnesses that speak of the Time that is in the Record; which all the three Witnesses that you have heard, speak to; tho' the most of what I mentioned before, was another Time: And this is at the House of one Captain Daniel; one says, Capt. Daniel Weldy. But that it was a Captain that was then at Sea, is plain; for this Gentleman himself, Mr. Rosewell, does not deny that this was at Capt. Daniel's House; and that he did pray for him, as being then at Sea, and for all his Family; and all the Witnesses speak to the same time. Tho' indeed the first Witness did say, that she did not know but it might be Capt. Daniel Weldy; but she likewise said, she did not directly know his Name. But she directly Swears to the very Words that are mentioned in the Indictment. She does directly Swear that Mr. Rosewell preached upon the 21st of Genesis. Says she as I remember; tho' Mr. Rosewell did think, there was a difference between the Evidence of the one and the th' other Woman about the 20th or 21st; yet it was only upon her remembrance, as well as she could, and she did not positively Swear it was in that place, but according to the best of her remembrance. And the second Witness Mrs. Hilton, when she come to Swear, she said it was either the 20th or 21st; but in so many Words she did directly Swear; that he should Preach that the People made a Flocking to the King on purpose for the Curing of the King's Evil; but the King could not do it; but we are they that the People should flock to for the curing of all their Evils. Which are the very same Words in Substance that are in the Indictment.

The very same Words in Substance, says that other, the second Witness; the same Day, in the same Place, did I hear Mr. Rosewell then speak these Words; and they go further, and the same Witnesses both Swear, Hilton and Smith, that Mr. Rosewell should say, We have had two wicked Kings together, who have suffered Popery to come under their Noses, who can be compar'd to no other Persons but wicked Jeroboam. Mrs. Smith Swears these Words directly, and Mrs. Hilton says, she thinks there was the Name of Reboboam mention'd; but she is sure there was mention of two wicked Kings, in the same Words as Mrs. Smith speaks. They go yet further, and say, both the one and th' other of them, That he said if the People would stand to their Principles, he did not doubt but they should overcome their Enemies as in ancient Times with Rams horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling. The two Witnesses, both Mrs. Smith, and Mrs. Hilton swear to the very Words, and at least to the Substance of them; and if there should be some little Variance in some few of the Words, that will signify nothing if the Substance be the same.

But now Gentlemen, besides these two Witnesses, there is a third Witness, Mrs. Farrar, against whom (that I can see) there is not the least Exception in the World, if you remember any, you would do well to consider of it; you may be better able to recollect what has been spoken or offered than I can in so long a time; and you ought to endeavour (being Men of Understanding, and good Quality) to refresh one another's Memories, and make what Observations you can; which I perceive you have taken Notes about, some of you at least.

She does directly Swear as to the business of the King's Evil, The same Words that the other two have Sworn, about flocking to the King to Cure the King's Evil which he could not do; But they were the Priests and Prophets that could cure the Maladies of the People. And as to the second Words, She swears that he said there had been two wicked Kings that had suffered Popery to come in under their Noses. And she Swears in the third place, That there was likewise an Exhortation to stand to their Principles, and that they should overcome their Enemies. She does not indeed particularly tell you about Rams horns, and the Platters, and the Stone in the Sling, but only of standing to their Principles, and overcoming their Enemies: Which I would have you particularly to take notice of, it being the material Part of the Indictment, to make these Words Treason.

Now Gentlemen, give me leave to tell you, there is great regard, and very great, to be had to the Circumstances in this Case; to see how far these things are to be tack'd together. First, you remember the Witnesses were examined apart. And it does not appear that they have talk'd together; and there was all the Care taken that possibly could be, they should be out of the Court, and out of one another's hearing; so that there was as much endeavour to detect the Falshood of their Testimony (if it could be) as possible in any case, even in the very most minute Circumstance. Mrs. Smith Swears, that Mrs. Hilton came to her House on Saturday Night; that they went together to the House of this Capt. Daniel upon the 14th, about Seven of the Clock; that they were there before Mr. Rosewell came in; that there was a Lower Room in the House; and a little higher there was a little Room; and then there was a Room up two Pair of Stairs, where there was a Bed; that Mr. Rosewell stood upon the Stairs, but they both sat upon the Bed, together with one of Mr. Rosewell's own Witnesses, which was the Mathematical Instrument-maker, and that he was in a Mourning Cloak; and that there was particular notice taken of a Pair of Shoes given by Mrs. Smith from under the Bed to the Child of that Mathematical Instrument maker; and that there was Prayer made for Capt. Daniel the Master of the House, who was then at Sea, and for his Child and Family. There were these Circumstances, every one particularly asked of the Witnesses, and Sworn to by them in the very same Words, the same manner of Posture, the same Things done both as to the Room, the Bed, who sat upon the Bed, the Mourning Cloak, the plucking off and delivering of the Shoes; that I may appeal to your Memories, if they did not agree to a tittle exactly.

Then they began to enquire further concerning other Expressions of Mr. Rosewell at other times: Something about People in Scarlet, and something about Canting: And Mrs. Smith tells you, that he did speak something about Canting; that he was talking concerning that Word; says he, I will tell you what that Canting means; I went not long ago thro' a Cathedral where the Organs are, and there the People were gather'd together, and they were Singing the Lord's Prayer, and I don't know what; I heard them Sing, and I could not but laugh out; and he broke out in his Sermon into a He! he! he! that is Canting. This, they say, was his Expression at that time.

When Mrs. Hilton came in, she tells you the very same Words, even to a very particular Phrase which I had forgot before, that he saw the Men in white Gowns that were Singing, and which he counted Canting. It is very true, there is no such thing mentioned in this Indictment; but only it is offer'd by the King's Council to shew the Temper of the Man, and how he usually used to Preach.

As concerning the Story of Sampson and Dalilah, that's Sworn by both Witnesses, that there was such a Discourse; for he began to talk of our King's keeping of Women, and he hop'd that they would bring the same Destruction upon him that they had brought upon Sampson; he hoped it would so fall out with our King. How far it is true, (they both having Sworn it) you are the Judges; they have directly Sworn it, and to all the Circumstances both of Time and Place.

Gentlemen, There is yet another thing that is material too, tho' a small minute Circumstance, and that is about this same Paul Shed, that they have spoken of. When the first Witness came in, he chid her for coming in her Pattins, and bid her pull off her Pattins, for they would leave such an Impression there, that People would be apt to discover that there was, or would be a Meeting; and therefore she promis'd when she came any more, that she would be sure to leave off her Pattins. And it is proved, that Mrs. Hilton and Mrs. Smith were in the Room above, and Mrs. Farrar was in the Room below, and it does not appear that she was acquainted with the rest. She had heard him several times, and tho' she did not see him that Day, he being up two pair of Stairs higher, yet she Swears directly to the same Words, the substantial Part of them that the other two Witnesses spoke of. So that I must say, if in case they have contrived this Story to take away the Life of the Prisoner at the Bar, they have contrived it with all the devilishest Subtilty that ever any could do, or that could enter into the Minds of any People. You are the Judges of the Fact, I pray God to direct you, that you may detect the Truth; far be it from the Court, or any body, to desire that any thing but Truth should prevail. For it were far better a thousand times that a hundred guilty Men should escape, than one innocent Man should suffer. But on the other side, far be it from any Man that is upon his Oath to do his Duty between the King and the Subject, to be moved by Compassion, or any thing of that Nature, to go against the Evidence that is given in open Court; unless he be satisfy'd that the Evidence is False. For in this case, I say again, either you must find the Prisoner Guilty of what he stands charged with in the Indictment; or else you must find these three Witnesses guilty of wilful Perjury: And I pray God again to direct you what you are to do in it.

Gentlemen, as to the Testimony that has been offered on the behalf of the Prisoner; (I would follow the same Method that has been taken, both in the Evidence given by the King and the Prisoner, as near as we can.) First, you have had brought by him half a Dozen, (for I would not injure him as near as I could one tittle) that have given you an Account of what he said at that time. There was Hudson, Hall, Atkinson, Smith, Hales and Wharton; I took their Names, as near as I could; and all these People do directly say they were present at that time, and they heard nothing spoken of the late blessed Martyr King Charles the First, or of Reflection upon the Government; but all that was said of the King's Majesty that now is, was in his Prayer, wherein he did pray for him; that they heard nothing come from Mr. Rosewell concerning the King's Evil in the manner that the Witnesses speak of; but what was spoken, was spoken of another King, in relation to Abimelech King of Egypt, and not relating any way to the Disease they call commonly amongst us the King's Evil. It is true, one of them does say (which is a Word that has obtain'd very much amongst some sort of People) that when he pray'd for the King, he pray'd for his deliverance from evil Counsellors: And under these Words, evil Counsellors, and deliverance from them, we know what became of that so often mention'd Prince now, King Charles the First. Under that Pretence they would remove all his Friends from him; and when he was left alone they could easily do what they pleas'd with him. Many with pretence of great Pity and Zeal for the King, cry out that all that they complain of, is not of what the King does; him they think to be a wonderful good Man; it is not he, but his evil evil Counsellors that they reflect upon; and so we must fight against these evil Counsellors; and when we have laid them aside, and he stands alone, then it will be easy to serve him as they did his Father. Whatsoever the Pretensions of such Words are, we know what the Designs of the People that made the same Pretence heretofore came to; and I pray God that there are not the same Designs on foot still; nay, that that was not the Design of this Prayer of the Prisoner at the Bar.

Gentlemen, they give you a particular Account how he preached upon the 29th of Genesis; and they speak as to the 2d and 7th Verses of that Chapter, and what Discourse he had upon them. But truly it is pretty strange (as Mr Rosewell himself objected even to you of the Jury very well) can any one of you remember so exactly the Words that were spoken as these Witnesses have Sworn? and truly he puts a very material Question: But then the Question turns to other way; how come all your Witnesses to give such an exact Account; all except the second Man, who indeed did commit a Blunder or two, your Six Witnesses, even to the Texts of Scripture, to the very Phrases that were used, particularly to the Word Tremendous? they are all as exact as can be. It is strange that five People should agree in all the Circumstances; but why should it not be as much believable that three should have as exact a Memory as the other five? Nay, and I will tell you what is pretty strange too, that these People must hear, and remember just what was said upon the 14th of September; but that which was said upon the Text the time before or after, that they cannot so well remember. It is plain they have been dialogueing with one another; and it is plain, that some People can neither write, or read, nor remember, but how they shall be sure to serve the present purpose. That seems to carry an Objection in it on the other side, as the King's Council say; and it seems the more reasonable on Our side why they should remember so exactly, as they have Sworn; because, (say they) that Day when we came home, we call'd for Pen, Ink and Paper and set down these Words, the Substance of which we have now here Sworn: So that that does shew you we had reason to remember what we have testify'd against this Person. But what is yet greater than all this, it cannot be imagined, (say the King's Council) that the Prisoner's Witnesses are so much to be believed, since they give no Account of what was spoken at any time before, nor any time since.

Then, Gentlemen, there is another Reason, says Mrs. Smith, I came on purpose to see who was at the Conventicle; tho' I had been at several Conventicles before, yet I never heard such Words spoken. Says Mrs. Hilton, I was glad to be gone: and tells you of her unwillingness to stay there, having never heard such Words spoken against the Government before; and therefore she set them down immediately as soon as they came home; and they went together to the Bull and Mouth, the Quakers Meeting near Aldersgate afterwards; and that that Day, or the Day following, they went to Mr. Recorder, and gave him an Account of what had past in their Knowledge. This is the Answer that is given by them to what the Prisoner's Witnesses say; But you are to weigh this Testimony of both Sides. For

I must tell you, Gentlemen, tho' these Witnesses that are for the Prisoner are not upon their Oaths, yet they are as much under the Obligation of giving true Testimony, as they can be by Law; and you ought to have regard to their Testimony; how far it is consistent with Reason and with Truth. Some things they differed in; some things they heard in another manner; whether you believe such things may slip out of their Memories, or how that is, you are to consider of it. This, Gentlemen, is the first part of the Evidence that the Prisoner hath given for himself.

Next, Gentlemen, There is another part of the Evidence, and that is from the Fifteenth Witness, one Mr. Jolliff, Captain Cotton, Mr. Fips, Mr. Veering, Mr. Hitchcock, Mr. Hinman, Mr. Wanley, Mr. Strong, Mr. Cutloe, Mr. Melsum, Mr. Medbam, Mr. Winnacott, Anne Broadhurst, Anne Manning, Isabella Dickeson; all these were call'd to his Reputation, as to his Behaviour and Conversation towards the Government. They tell you that they have known him a long time. It seems they frequented the hearing of him sometimes, when there was an Indulgence and a Dispensation for such Meetings; then they went to hear him; and then he used to pray for the King; and it has been observed, that, it may be, meeting with favour and kindness from the King and Government he might be very well pleased with the King at that time; tho' that turn'd to the Prejudice of the Government, (as we all know.) But whether his Complexion alter'd towards the Government, when it was thought fit to restrain that Indulgence; that you have to consider. They say they know nothing of Harm by him, and that may be true; no more do I; and I presume you do not; if you do you will tell us. You and I pray God we had never heard of any thing of Harm come from him with relation to the King and Government; but you have heard what has been testify'd by these Witnesses.

Then there came two Witnesses that lived at Sir Edward Hungerford's, when the Prisoner at the Bar lived there; one of them lived Ten Years there, the other Four. And they give you an Account how he was used to Pray (not according to the Common-Prayer, but) he used to go to Church, and he did Pray for the King very earnestly and heartily, as they say; he came there in the Year 1664, and he continued there Seven Years, and they always look'd upon him to be well-inclin'd to the Government.

Then you have an Account of three Servants that lived in the House; one lived four Years with him, and that she frequently heard him pray for the King, (for I would not willingly forget a Word that should make for the Prisoner's Advantage) she said he prayed as earnestly for the King as for his own Soul; with as much zeal and earnestness as he could do; this is what she says. And the second lived with him three Years, and she does remark particularly, that one time being in private in his own Closet, at Prayer by himself she heard him very earnest in Praying for the King: So that he would urge it as improbable; and unreasonable to believe, that if he, in his private Family, and by himself should so earnestly pray for the King, (which was never intended to be heard by any body, and came to be thus heard by Accident) he should in Publick, before a great Congregation, utter such such Words against the King and Government, as are pretended against him. This is the use he makes of that.

Then, Gentlemen, you have likewise afterwards the Testimony of those two Witnesses that had been examin'd before, that is Mr. Atkinson and Mr. Smith; that whereas you seem to say, says he, I made a great Reflection upon the late King and his present Majesty; it was so far from that, that I used to Teach upon the 30th of January; and then to preach Obedience to the King, and to pray for the King, and make sharp Invectives and Reflections upon those that had been concern'd in that horrid, barbarous Murder of the late King of blessed Memory; so that I cannot be thought to encourage such Things as these, when I used to preach to my Auditory such Doctrine as I now tell you of. This is the Substance of that part of the Evidence, as near as I can remember, and recollect; you have taken Notes, Gentlemen, your selves; you will be able for to make Observations, according to what Notes you have taken.

Then Gentlemen, here are eighteen Witnesses that he has called to endeavour to perswade you to a disbelief, and gain a discredit as to the Witnesses that are produced against him. Now as to that, which was offer'd by the first Witness How; that was but by Hear-say, he knows nothing of his own Knowledge; for my Brother, Sir Thomas Fenner, he gives you an Account of all the Questions that he was asked about; that she never did say that she was present at the Conventicle, but that Mrs. Bathoe had confess'd it to her; and upon that Confession she was Convicted. Now Gentlemen, it is a very untoward thing in this Matter, that Mrs. Bathoe it is plain used to have Conventicles, and she is the Widow of a Non-conformist Preacher, and this Woman was so far from saying, that she was there; that she only insisted upon it, that Mrs. Bathoe had confess'd it to her. So likewise you have been told concerning that Business of Mr. Hales, the Conventicle at his House on the 13th of July; it was so far from her Swearing that Mr. How was there, that tho' he was mention'd, yet she refused before Sir George Treby to Swear that there was any such Conventicle, or that he was the Man; she did not know the Man, and could not say any thing to him. And my Brother Fenner being convinc'd that there might be a Mistake, that there might be no such Conventicle at Mrs. Bathoe's, went as far as he could to retrieve it; but it seems it was past from him into the Clerk of the Peace's hands; I cannot say any thing to it: But if you are satisfy'd that there was no such Conventicle at all, all that can be said is, that the Old Woman bely'd her self; and my Brother Fenner as to an Accommodation between them did resolve to do what he could, and promis'd to speak to the Clerk of the Peace: Not but that for any thing yet appears, this Woman that is here brought as a Witness against Mr. Rosewell, did swear true, That that other Woman did confess to her, that there was such a Conventicle; they indeed have endeavour'd to evince there was no such Conventicle. I must leave it to you; for nothing appears clear of the one Side, or the other.

Then Gentlemen, as concerning her talking with, and about one Games; wherein you had an Account given you by one Harvey, and he advised to give Money rather than to be troubled; but they would not give Money. Now, for that the whole Answer (that it may be given together) is that you know the Prosecutor in these Cases, has a Share out of the Penalties that are incur'd by Conventicles; and tho' it may be that it was not so well done by such Informations to compound Penalties, yet it is no Evil Thing: For if I will choose to inform or not inform, there is a right in me to a Part of the Penalty arising from the Offence: And tho' it be not a commendable Thing, yet it is not a criminal Thing for me to Compound it; for I do not observe that they are proved to be People that do use to go to Conventicles.

Then Gentlemen, There is something to be observed concerning the Evidence of Cartwright; He comes and tells you, that he was by, and one of the Persons that went along with Mrs. Smith to several Places, in order to make Convictions of Persons for Conventicles; and she would have him Swear such and such Conventicles that she would dictate to him; and she promis'd and offer'd to Swear for the Conviction of Conventicles when she was not there: And this was a great while ago; but no body heard a Word of it till now, and that when Mrs. Smith was engaged in this Prosecution against Mr. Rosewell. Now when we meet with this sort of People, we ought to consider of the Nature of their Evidence. It is certainly a very improbable thing, that any Person should come and tell him, I will be Guilty of Perjury, I will be forsworn for you, if you will be forsworn for me. It can hardly be believed that any body should say so to a Fellow that you see is likely enough to detect any such thing, if it should be for his Advantage: And it had been his Duty (if he had been an honest Man) to have discovered this to a Magistrate immediately, and detected it, so as that the Villany should have been punish'd; not to come and serve a turn upon such a Tryal just as this is. And therefore Gentlemen, I do not like such accidental Witnesses that seem to drop (as it were) out of the Clouds, and we can have no Account of them before. You have no Satisfactory Reason how he comes in now to make this Discovery: Here you have several other Witnesses that were before, that give some Account of her Behaviour in these Matters.

As to the Conviction that they talk of upon the 13th of July; several Witnesses give you an Account of the Matter. First of all it is very apparent by that Book that is produced, That there was a Conventicle the 13th of July; and it was at Mr. Hudson's; but indeed it was not at Mr. Hale's; and it is not alledg'd hereby her that it was so. And for that other, my Brother Fenner gives you an Account that upon the Confession of Mrs. Bathoe there was a Conviction; but there was no such Conviction of Hales in the Case, but only of Bathoe; as appears by the Record which hath been produced.

Then Gentlemen, the next Question is concerning the Clerk of the Peace, and the Writing that they talk of; which makes nothing one way, nor t'other. Then there are two Witnesses, Drew, and the other Man, that meet with this Woman, Mrs. Smith, in Grub-street, in order to make a Composition for Penalties for going going to Conventicles; and they find out a Fellow that used to go to Conventicles, and they frighten him into a Composition, and so much as they say, was paid perhaps, and he ought to have paid more: But it's plain, he used to go to Conventicles; and it's pretty odd that he should be pick'd up on a sudden there, on this side the Water, to discover these Practices at the Instigation of the Prisoner at the Bar, who lives at such a Distance on t'other side of the Water.

Then Gentlemen, as for Mrs. Higgenfon, I can only say this, she says nothing to the Purpose, that is either material for or against the Prisoner; for she said, she knew nothing of her own Knowledge; and all that she did say, was but Hear-says and Reports, not by way of down-right Accusation against the Person she was produced against. And Gentlemen, you are to consider that Hear-say and Report is no Evidence at all; but it must be what the Witnesses know, and say of their own Knowledge.

The next is a worthy Gentleman, Sir John Talbot, and as to whatsoever he said, or any of his Family told him, except he knows it of his own Knowledge, that's no manner of Evidence at all to take off the Credit of Mrs. Hilton. But what she her self did say, (if it can be testify'd) is Evidence against her. If she confest that she had any Design, or was ingaged in any Practice to betray the young Lady Sir John Talbot talks of; that indeed is a very evil thing. But whatsoever were the Apprehensions of others concerning her share in that matter; or any of the little things that they talk'd of concerning Mistress Hilton before she intermarried, it can signify but very little in this matter. And when we ask Sir John Talbot the Question, he cannot give any Satisfactory account of it; for he says plainly, he had no Conversation with her. It seems it was not a Contrivance while she liv'd there for ten Years together; and it is pretty hard to imagine in such a Case, if she had been such an evil Person as they would represent her, in that time that it had not appeared, so far at least as that she had been discharg'd the Service long before: For Sir John Talbot is a Person that cannot be thought to permit any thing of ill in his Family. But yet withal, he can't know all that passed, any more than any of you of Irregularity in the Family. If indeed they had question'd any of the Servants that were more conversant with her, and taxed her of any thing that was Evil, then it had been a much more probable Exception; but to have Peoples Reputations blasted barely by Tittle-tattle and Stories, after Persons are gone out of a Family, where they have liv'd for many Years, is a matter of very dangerous Consequence; and any Man in the World may be injur'd in his Credit, if such a thing be permitted. What Sir John Talbot speaks of his own Knowledge, that is Evidence, and we would hear it, and give all due regard to it: But what was spoken of concerning Hilton, before she was married; what the rest of the Servants said concerning her; or the general Reputation that she had in the Family; that's no Evidence at all.

Gentlemen, in the last place there is a Witness produced, one Dillingham; and she pretends that she is a Woman of a very ill Reputation; and that she would have hired her, (as she would have it believed) to have sworn against several People. Now as to that, she would have done exceeding well to have made a Discovery of this before this Question; and it had been her Duty so to do; and not now to come, and drop in, just when this Question comes to be debated before you: That Gentlemen, draws a Suspicion along with it, and a very great one: But I must leave the whole matter to you, which I do not question but you will examine, and look into, as well as you can. Thus I have offered the Evidence that has been given on the one side, and on the other in point of Fact.

Now Gentlemen, there are some Remarks made by the Prisoner at the Bar, (as God forbid but he should have the Advantage of whatsoever can be observed upon the Evidence given against him) that is, he makes a Difference between the Testimony of the one and the other of these Witnesses, about the 20th or 21st of Genesis; that the one said the 21st, the other the 20th. Now it is to be observed, as has been said, that she that said the 20th, which was the second Witness, said, it was either the 20th or the 21st; and Mrs. Smith said it was so to the best of her remembrance; but it appears to be, and so I perceive, by all the Witnesses, upon the 20th; so that as to her it cannot be very material, because she does not swear positively, either the one or the other.

Then Gentlemen, there is another thing, that is, that she should talk of one Weldy, Captain Weldy, or Captain Daniel Weldy, when it seems his Name was not Weldy, but his Name was Captain Daniel; which I think can go no great way in the Case. She is not acquainted with the Man himself; she tells you one part of his Name right; describes the House in all the Parts of it; and speaks of the Circumstance of his being at Sea, and being pray'd for by Mr. Rosewell; therein they do both agree: So that tho' she apprehended that his Name might be Daniel Weldy, yet it is so far right enough that it was one Captain Daniel; and that is a very small minute difference, that will make little one way or other.

Then Gentlemen, he insists upon the difference between their Evidence about that Circumstance, whether it was all upon one entire Subject; or part one part of the day, and part the other. One of them says it was not an entire Discourse; for that about the Rams-horns, and the broken Platters, and the Stone in a Sling was after Two o'-Clock, after the interval that had been, and the space of time between the Discourse of the King's Evil, and those other things; and therefore, says Mr. Rosewell, whereas she pretends that it was all spoken at the same time, just as it is laid in the Indictment, that cannot be; and so it appears upon his own Evidence. Now, says that Woman, I can't so well tell whether it was Forenoon or Afternoon; and truly they might call it Forenoon, because they had neither Eat nor Drank; and says the Woman, we reckon that it's Forenoon till after we have Dined; and she cannot tell whether it was in the Psalms, or whether it was upon the Chapter; but it was in that Discourse that he held that Day. She does generally apply it to the whole; and that in that Day's Discourse (all which time she stay'd, till all was over) such Words did pass. You have heard the difference that is between the two Witnesses, and you will do well to consider of it, if you think there is any thing material in it.

S f f f f f

Gen.

Gentlemen, I must confess it carries a notable sort of Testimony in it, of which you are Judges, and will weigh it according as it ought to be weigh'd: First, That these People should luckily hit together concerning the King's Evil, and that there was such a Discourse as is laid in the Indictment about it; and of the Prophets praying for the People for the Cure of the King's Evil, and then they should be immediately heal'd. And on the other side, it is pretty strange (as he urges for himself) that that should be perverted which he spoke concerning the Prophet's praying for the King, and thereupon his Hand being healed, whereby the Prophets have the Honour, (as he says) some time by Prayer, of curing the King's Evil: So that something or other there is in the matter that gives a mighty countenance to what the Witnesses speak. There is a certain sort of Occasion given (as one would say) for such Expressions as they have testify'd, in his Discourses.

Then when they come to talk concerning the Rams-horns, and the Platters; the Witnesses say, we heard nothing concerning Platters, much less of Pewter Platters; no, it was broken Pitchers, and that was occasion'd by, and had relation to a Text, (says Mr. Rosewell) about Gideon, how easily he discomfited the Philistines Army, and there was no such thing as any Discourse concerning the King or the Government, or any relation thereunto; it was only a Phrase used by me in the Pulpit, to shew how great a matter might be done by little means. And so likewise concerning the Stone in the Sling, that being an occasional Instance too, what great Miracles have been brought about by little Means and Circumstances: I have instanc'd in that (says he) how David kill'd Goliath with a Stone out of a Sling, and that our Saviour Jesus Christ cured the Blind man by a little Spittle mingled with Clay. So that he would insinuate, that those Words that were spoken were not with any such Intention as the King's Council would make it, and as the Indictment insinuates; but only in a common, ordinary Preachment, as Inferences from such and such Scriptures. And whether this that he talks of was the Discourse he held at that time; or what the Witnesses speak, must be left to you; they having sworn it. And this (as I take it) is the Substance of the Evidence given by the one and the other side.

Then Gentlemen, Mr. Rosewell put the Question in the Morning, and he seem'd to insist very much upon it in Point of Law, that the Discourses of a Mad-man cannot be Treason. It is true that such Discourses cannot be Treason, if you take (Mad-men) in the true sense that the Law commonly takes it. All Traytors, all Knaves and Villains, are some way, and in some sense Madmen; for no Person can act with any Reason in any such Affairs. Treason is not to be committed upon the foundation of Reason. Therefore upon his asking of the Question of the Witnesses, what Reason there was for him to use such Expressions; I told him, you did it, according as the Indictment says (which is drawn according to the Prescripts of the Law) by the Instigation of the Devil; you did it, not only without Reason, but against Reason. But if the bare saying that it was against Reason, and that therefore a Man was a Madman, would serve the turn, there would be no Traytor according to that Rule; because every Traytor would be a Madman. Every Traytor is a Madman; but every Madman is not a Traytor. A Madman, in our common Acceptation, is one that is captivated in his Senses, not one that is corrupt in his Will and Affections, which must be the Definition of a Traytor: So that the Argument, I must tell you, is fallacious. Every Man, that is depraved in his Mind and Affections, is a Madman, so as to be an Enemy to the Government, or to Mankind; but he is not such a Madman, as is commonly meant by that Word; one whose Words may be mistaken, because of some disorder in his understanding; so as to be excus'd from the Accusation of Treason. Therefore whatsoever consequence there may be of the Thing, I must tell you, all Men that talk after this rate that this Person is accused to talk in his Pulpit, they are every one Traytors, and so Madmen; for every Traytor is a Madman: And if in Case Mr. Rosewell be Guilty, he is in that sense a Madman. It is true, in other Things you find him a Man of very notable Understanding; a Man of a very great Insinuation; one that has a great deal of Knowledge in the Tongues; look'd upon to be a very learned and ingenious Man; who was thought fit to be a Tutor to Sir Edward Hungerford's Children; and has had very many learned Discourses, and shewn himself to be a Man of very great Parts. Tho' if he be a Traytor upon this Evidence that is given, he is eo nomine a Traytor, and consequently a Madman for preaching and publishing such Doctrine as this; that will not serve to excuse him from his Treason: But the rather, because he is a Man of so much Learning, it aggravates the Treason; as it must needs do to any Body in the World that considers it. For he under that pretence offering to preach his Doctrine, as Gospel-truths to ignorant People, (it seems 300 or more, of all Trades and Perswasions) whose Duty it was, according to Law, to have been then at Church; Men of Strength and Ability of Body, as they appear to be, for the Service of the Government; for these People to be debauch'd into such Doctrines as these, of Standing to their Principles, against the Government; the more learned the Man is, the greater and blacker is the Crime of that Man that is guilty of it. God knows whether that be Mr. Rosewell's Case, and you that are of the Jury are to try it: To do it under pretence of preaching the Gospel, is the worst way of doing it that could be taken; to quote Scripture for Rebellion adds to the Crime; as it did to that of those black Villains that were concern'd in the Murder of our late dread Sovereign, who has been so often mention'd; they were generally the Preachers of the late Times that contributed to that horrid Villany.

Gentlemen, it is notoriously known to you in this accursed late hellish Conspiracy against his sacred and most merciful Majesty, our Sovereign that now is, (whom I pray God long to reign over us,) those that had an hand in the Intention to destroy him, and his Royal Brother, were a great many of them black-Coat Dissenters to the Church of England; and I cannot say I know any one Member of the Church of England that had any hand in it at all. How many of them stand now convicted by Out-lawry lawry for that bloody Treason; I won't say all Parsons, but generally all of them Dissenters; and we know these are those base, profligate Villains, always made use of in these base Sinks of Rebellion. And they are the common Sewers of Faction; these Conventicles are, and of Treason and Conspiracy against the Government in Church and State. God be praised, we have a Religion that teaches us much better; a Religion established by the Laws of the Land, and with that Decency of Worship, and Care of the Souls of Men, that may bring us all to Heaven, by the Grace of God, if we please to hearken to the Dictates of it, and to mind what is enjoyn'd us our Duty by the Law; but when People are once deluded by the Insinuation of such false Teachers, and run into Faction and Discontent, then they'll soon run into Rebellion too. And I speak this the rather to deter and give warning to other People, to have a care how they come near such Places, and such Practices, than to affect you.

Gentlemen, here you have had three Witnesses examined against the Prisoner, who stands accused for a Crime of High Treason. I must confess, I have taken up a great deal of the Time; and a great deal of the Time was taken up before; but there's no Time too long, wherein a Question of so mighty Moment as this is, is to be decided: The Government, the Preservation of our King, the Preservation of our Religion, the Preservation of our Laws, are all concern'd: For by the Destruction of our King and of our Government, our Religion, and all that is near and dear to us in the World, will run a great Hazard, if not come to a total Destruction; and I am sure it did come near to it in a former Time, by this very sort of way. Therefore I enjoyn you, in the Presence of the Almighty God, let neither Displeasure, nor any sort of personal Animosity, in any thing, that has been contracted by Hearsay, from abroad, nor any Imaginations that have been suggested here without proof, any way direct you in the Consideration of this Cause against the Prisoner at the Bar: But go according to the Evidence that has been here before you, on the one side and on the other side. For as on the one side you are not to be corrupted by common Talk, or any Prejudice against a Party or a Faction; so are you not to be misled by any Affirmation or Reflection, or Comment that the Prisoner has made or said for himself, other than what is supported by the Testimony of these Witnesses that he has produced, and whose Evidence is left to you to consider: For you must not be led by any Circumstances, or by Discourses; but what's sworn on the one side for the King, or testified on the other for the Prisoner. And therefore I can with all Freedom and Zeal for the Government, and all due Compassion to the Prisoner at the Bar (whom with all my Soul I am sorry to see accused, or indeed any Man, of such a Crime,) leave this matter entirely upon the Evidence that has been given. And tho', I say, I am sorry to see him accus'd; yet such Transgressions are aggravated now, when we live in an Age, wherein we have all Peace and Plenty, while the rest of our Neighbours are wallowing in their Blood round about us; some we have heard of are brought to the Necessity of eating the most filthy and basest Animals, that never was design'd for the Food of Man: I say, when all our Neighbours are groaning under the Miseries of War, (blessed be God) we live and sleep quietly under our own Vines; we enjoy the Benefit of being Subjects to a gracious King; we enjoy the full extent of our Laws, which are sufficient to secure our Liberties and Properties; and no Man can be brought (no, not one of the meanest Subjects the King has) to such an untimely End, but by the true Methods of Justice.

He is to be try'd by you, Gentlemen, who are Gentlemen of Quality of the County where the Fact is alledged to be committed; against whom he might have made his Challenges and Exceptions, if he had any reason, as he did against the others (according to the Liberty the Law allows him) without any reason. So that you stand indifferent between the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, to try this Cause, whether he be Guilty, or not Guilty of the Treason of which he stands accused. In case the late intended Rebellions and Insurrections had taken the designed Effect, according to the Doctrine preached in these Sermons, of standing to Principles and overcoming Enemies; and what several of his Brethren who stand now accused of, and are upon Prosecution (and for ought I know every one of them might be actually engaged) I say, in case such a thing had been, there had been nothing but cutting of Throats; there had been no Justice for any Subject to have expected; no Methods or Proceedings of Law; but Destruction would have come upon us like an armed Man.

Therefore, Gentlemen, as the Evidence has been long; so I hope you will give me your Pardon, that I have been the longer in insisting upon it; and according to my best Understanding and Memory, I have given you the best Account I can both of the Evidence for, and against the Prisoner. You are Judges of the Fact; and I pray God direct you, and guide you and your Consciences, that the Truth may be discovered by your Verdict.

Mr. Rosewell. May a Loyal Subject speak, my Lord?

L. C. J. No Mr. Rosewell; after the Jury are charged by the Court, you are not to say any thing. Swear an Officer to keep the Jury.

(Which was done.)

Then the Jury withdrew into the usual Room for such Purposes, to consider of their Verdict; and afterwards they returned into Court.

Clerk of the Crown. Crier, take the Appearance of the Jury.

Crier. Sir George Sheers:

Sir George Sheers. Here.

Crier. Vous avez Sir George Sheers, &c.—

(And so of the rest.)

Cl. of the Crown. Gentlemen, Are you agreed in your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of the Crown. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of the Crown. Thomas Rosewell, Hold up thine Hand. (Which he did.) You of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner. How say you? Is he Guilty of the High-Treason, whereof he stands Indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

S s s s s s s

Cl.

Cl. of Cr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements had he at the time of the High-Treason committed; or at any time since to your Knowledge?

Foreman. None that we know of.

Mr. Rosewell. Then the Lord have mercy upon the Jury. My Lord, I humbly request this Favour, that they may be asked separatim, whether they be all of the same Opinion.

L. C. J. That's never done, Mr. Rosewell, unless there be any difference suggested from amongst themselves:

Mr. Rosewell. I ask it in regard to them themselves; for I have heard many times the Jury go by the major part; and I would know whether they be all of that Opinion. Therefore I beg they may be asked that Question.

L. C. J. You must be contented, Mr. Rosewell; in case there were any difference, we should hear of it from amongst themselves.

Cl. of the Crown. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court has recorded it. You say that Thomas Rosewell is Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands Indicted; but that he had no

Goods, Chattels, Lands or Tenements at the time of the High-Treason committed, or any time since, to your Knowledge; and so you say all?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of the Crown. Gentlemen, the Court dismisseth you.

L. C. J. Marshal, you must take him into your Custody, being now Convicted.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I would heartily beg, for the Jury's sake themselves, that that Question may be asked of them.

L. C. J. We must not indulge any Innovations. It is not usual. You may ask them, if you please; see whether they will answer you. We must go according to the Forms of Law.

Mr. Rosewell. Then, my Lord, if all these Gentlemen's Estates were joyn'd in one, I would not change Conditions with that Man of them who should possess the Whole.

L. C. J. Mr. Rosewell, We must have no Reflections upon the Jury.

Then the Prisoner was taken away, and the Court broke up.

Die Lunæ 24 Nov. An. Dom. 1684: B. Regis.

Dominus Rex vers. Rosewell.

THIS Day Mr. Rosewell being brought up to the Court, to receive Sentence, the Court proceeded as follows.

L. C. J. Brother Fenner, have you any thing to move?

Mr. Ser. Fenner. My Lord, we wait upon the Prisoner at the Bar to desire Judgment upon the Conviction that was here the other Day for High-Treason.

L. C. J. Against the Prisoner at the Bar do you mean?

Mr. Serj. Fenner. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. Then call him to his Judgment.

Cl. of the Crown. Thomas Rosewell, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thou hast been Indicted for High-Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death of the King, and the Subversion of the Government: Upon that Indictment thou hast been Arraign'd: Upon that Arraignment thou hast Pleaded not Guilty: And for thy Tryal thou hast put thy self upon God and thy Country; which Country has found thee Guilty. What hast thou to say for thy self, wherefore Judgement should not be given against thee, to die according to the Law?

(Then he was made to kneel and rise again.)

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I humbly hope that your Lordship will not give Sentence against me upon this Indictment; considering the Circumstances of it. I have, my Lord, protested to this Honourable Court in the Presence of the great God, the Searcher of Hearts, my Innocency in this Case; but I have been found Guilty by the Jury on whom the Lord have Mercy. I do still protest my Detestation and Abhorrence of the Fact, even in my very Soul; and I do humbly beg your Lordship and the Court to compassionate my present Condition; and with humble Submission to your Lordship, I would enter into my Discourse upon that Hypothesis; for I would be still taken thus, even in this Conviction to deny the Thesis; that I ever was guilty of speaking such Words as are laid in the Indictment. But upon the Hypothesis, supposing that I were Guilty, I do humbly conceive that these Words, as they are laid, are not Treason. They are very foolish and ugly Words; and may be a very great Misdemeanour in Law (if true, which still I must over and over again insist upon) but they are not Treason. And I beg your Lordship will do me the Favour to let the Indictment be read once more.

L. C. J. Ay, with all my heart.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly thank your Lordship; I desire it may read in Latin.

L. C. J. Read it to him in Latin.

Surrey J. Furatores pro Domino Rege super Sacramentum suum presentant, &c.

(The whole Indictment was read.)

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly thank your Lordship. There are some things that I shall offer to your Lordship in Arrest of Judgment out of this Indictment; and I request your Lordship to hear me with Patience, being here for my Life. I pray Judgement may be arrested for these Causes: That there is not any Crime sufficiently set forth for your Lordship to give Judgment upon. My Lord, I humbly take it for granted that in all Indictments of Treason, there must be some particular Matter of Treason assign'd; and that it is not a sufficient Indictment in general, that a Man did intend to depose the King, or to raise Rebellion, without some Overt-Act positively asserted to be done by that Person; the general Intention being only an inducement to the Charge. The special Matters that set forth the particular Acts of Treason are those that make the real Charge, upon which the Court and the Jury

Jury are to proceed. Now, my Lord, if that special Matter that is alledged be insufficient, with all humble Submission, tho' there be never so many such sorts of Facts proved, and found by the Jury, the Party cannot be convicted of High-Treason: For in this case the Party has the same Advantage to except against the particulars alledg'd, to prove the general suggested Treason, as against the general Treason it self. Now, with humble Submission, my Lord, again I say, that the Matter here suggested is insufficient; as will evidently appear by what I am going to offer to your Lordship.

The first and principal Objection that I have, is against the Inuendo's, which are so many and so strange in these Words that are alledged against me. These Inuendo's, my Lord, I say, are naught and void; and I presume that it will be allowed to me upon reading of the Words by themselves, as bad and as foolish as they are. Without these Inuendo's, there could nothing be made out of such Words as these are, neither Treason nor any thing else.

Then, my Lord, in the second Place laying aside the Inuendo's, I must insist upon the repugnancy and insensibility of the Words laid in the Indictment, being in Latin, and such Latin as I believe your Lordship never saw; and upon these two Points, I desire that Judgment may be arrested; and I humbly pray Council may be assign'd me to make them out in better form.

L. C. J. What say you to it, Brother Fenner, and the King's Council?

Mr. Serj. Fenner. I cannot see that he has alledg'd any Objection which here requires an Answer from any of us that are of Council for the King.

L. C. J. Yes, Brother; Methinks he does.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he does pretend to object against any of the Overt-Acts alledg'd in the Indictment; your Lordship observes, this Indictment is upon the Statute of the 13th of this King, wherein Words are made Treason, if they intend any Hurt or Imprisonment to the King's Person. For his Objection as to the Inuendo's, he does not assign wherein they are repugnant or insufficient. He does assign in particular, indeed, that it is insufficient, being a general Crime; which yet he does not say is not sufficiently laid; for it is said, that he did compass and imagine the Death and Destruction of the King: And to effect that compassing and imagination, he did speak such and such Words, which by the Statute are made Treason, if they tend to attempt by Preaching or Writing any Imprisonment or Harm to the King's Person. Then for him to come to Talk of Standing to their Principles, after he had spoken of two wicked Kings together, (meaning the late King, and the Present) and that then we should overcome our Enemies; what is that but Preaching in order to raise a Rebellion and Insurrection, tending to the Destruction of the King; and his Government? All this is laid in the Indictment; the Jury find it spoken maliciously, and with such an Intention as we have laid; and therefore we think that it is sufficient.

L. C. J. But if I take the Gentleman right, (for I tell you before hand Justice must be done to all People impartially. The Crime is a very great Crime that he stands accused of; and the Jury have found him guilty of the Crime laid in the Indictment: But if I take him aright) he does not say that Words are not sufficient to create a Treason, but the Words here as they are laid in this Indictment are not sufficient: And as I take it, there is no great difficulty in the Matter; but the Words would have been sufficient to have supported the Accusation, if they be well laid. But the Question is, whether the Words that you have laid here be so positively affirm'd to have been spoken by the Prisoner, and to relate to the Government, as they ought to be in an Indictment of High-Treason.

Mr. Att. Gen. That the Indictment must make out; and the Jury have found him Guilty, according to the Indictment.

L. C. J. But that is his Objection, they are not so in the Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, they are laid as the Witnesses swore them; as your Lordship can't but remember.

L. C. J. That they are not positively affirmed, but only alledg'd under an Innuendo; that is, he spoke such and such Words whereby he compared the King to Jeroboam, and the like; and we had two wicked Kings together, but it would stand to our Principles, we should overcome our Enemies, Innuendo the King. The alledging of the Words spoken in the Indictment is positive, if there be sufficient Matter in the Words to make them applicable to the Government, so as to make it Treason. But if you only say he spoke them, Innuendo so and so, that is not positive enough to make the Indictment good. I take it the Objection runs that way.

Mr. Roswell. My Lord, I humbly thank your Lordship for explaining my meaning; it is so.

L. C. J. In an Action on the Case, if you say the Defendant spake such and such Words, if you do not lay it that he spoke them of the Plaintiff; Innuendo the Plaintiff in repeating the Words won't do. So here, if you had brought it in the Indictment; that having discourse of the late King and this King, he had spoken these Words, We have now had two wicked Kings, &c. You then had brought it home to him: But you do not lay it that it was spoken of them at all, but only in the Innuendo; whereas you ought to say first, That he spoke of the late King, and this King; and then said, We have had two wicked Kings together, Innuendo the late King, and this King.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I do not know, how we could have done it better than we have done.

L. C. J. Look ye, we give no Opinion; but the Objection has weight in it upon my Word. As I told you before, in common Cases, an Action of the Case for Words, or the like, you must lay a Communication concerning the Plaintiff, or an Innuendo will not be a sufficient Averment of its being spoken of him. In an Action of the Case for Words, till within this Seven or Eight Years, they were obliged to lay a Colloquium of the Plaintiff, and of his Trade; and that to Defame him, were spoken of him at such a Time such Words, as that he was a Cheating Knave; where the Word Knave would bear an Action; a bare Innuendo would not do, that was not enough. But now I confess since Declarations are made a little more concise, you need only say dixit de Querente, such and such Words without

without a Colloquium, but you must aver it to be spoken of the Plaintiff. I never thought it good in such a Case, to say of a Merchant he is a Bankrupt Knave, (Innuendo the Plaintiff) unless he say he spoke of his Trade and Merchandise. So that the Objection does seem to carry very much weight in it.

Mr. Sollicitor. My Lord, if your Lordship would give me leave, I would endeavour to answer the Case as your Lordship has put it; for my Lord, no doubt in all common Actions of the Case for Words, it must be aver'd that the Words were spoken de Personâ, of the Plaintiff; but the First part of the Indictment, in this Case, shews that the Words must be spoken of the Person of the King, and of the late King; for it says he did conspire the Death and Destruction of the King, and to depose him from his Government, and to manifest that traiterous, wicked Intention of his; Ed Intentione he did speak these Words of the Government, we have had two wicked Kings together, meaning this King and the late King.

L. C. J. If you had said so, that he spoke these Words of the King, you had answered my Objection; but the Conspiracy of the Death of the King being only a general form for Treason, will not make good an Indictment of High-Treason; but you must show some Acts or Words to evince and prove that that was his Intention; that he did either speak such and such Words, or did such and such Actions. It is not a good Indictment to prove that he did conspire, for he spoke such and such Words; but that to carry on his Conspiracy he did speak such and such Words of the Government; that must be positively alledged.

Mr. Sollicitor. We do so, my Lord; for we say, & ad easdem nefandas proditones, &c perimplendas, He spoke such and such Words, we have had two wicked Kings together, Innuendo this King and the late.

L. C. J. You have Innuendo'd it too much I do doubt; for all the Facts are laid under an Innuendo, without a positive Averment.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord; I think it is as fully laid as it possibly could be.

L. C. J. Come, Mr. Attorney, if in Cases of common Actions for Words, there be such Strictness requir'd, ten Times more ought there to be in an Indictment of Treason, where a Man's Life, and All, is so much concern'd. I am not satisfy'd I assure you that this Indictment is well laid, tho' I give no Opinion; but in all Justice we ought to assign him Council to make out his Objection.

Mr. Att. Gen. All this, my Lord, is only in delay.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, De vitâ Hominis nulla est Cunctatio longa. I think we ought to assign him Council; and the rest of my Brothers are of that Opinion too.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let them read Colonel Sidney's Tryal, and the Indictment there; and they'll find it the same thing.

L. C. J. I cannot tell whether there are any such Innuendo's there, I believe not; but I know not if there were, if in case it had been moved in arrest of Judgement, what the Court would have done then. But I think we ought to assign him Council to make out his Objection.

Mr. Sollicitor. The very Fact, that makes this Treason is his stirring up Sedition and Rebellion within the Kingdom; and we say, to effect it he had these Expressions in his Pulpit, we have now had two wicked Kings together (meaning this King and the late) who have suffered Popery to come under their Noses; but if you will stand to your Principles (meaning the People) we shall overcome our Enemies (meaning the King and Government.)

L. C. J. Ay, but you do not say that he spoke these Words of the King: This you should have said at first; because the speaking of these Words is the very Overt-act; and if he did not speak them of the King (which you ought to affirm) but only by way of Innuendo, that cannot, we think, be so good nor sufficient.

Mr. Just. Withins. I take it that these are the main Words that are to maintain this Indictment of Treason; and the Question is whether they ought not to have been aver'd that they were spoken of the two Kings.

L. C. J. We do not give any Opinion, Mr. Attorney; but because there seems to be some reasonable Doubt, and Weight in the Objection, we desire to have it argu'd; and therefore will assign him Council.

Mr. Rosewell. I humbly thank your Lordship.

L. C. J. We do think it fit to look into it, before we proceed any further in a case where a Man's Life is concerned.

Mr. Rosewell. I pray God to bless your Lordship.

L. C. J. Nay, you have no need to thank me; for I desire to do Justice to all Men.

Mr. Rosewell. But I desire to return my hearty thanks to your Lordship, for explaining and making out what my Unskilfulness in the Law would not permit me to do. God be your Reward for it.

L. C. J. Well; Who would you have to be your Council?

Mr. Rosewell. If your Lordship pleases, Mr. Wallop, Mr. Pollexfen, and Mr. Thomas Bampfseild.

L. C. J. Let them be assign'd of Council for him. But, Mr. Rosewell, I think it is not improper for me upon this Occasion to take notice of this that is in my Mind relating to your Affair; because I observe it is a Matter of great Expectation, and so was at your Tryal, and here is a great Croud of People now; that as this Fact is found, if the Indictment falls out to be a good Indictment (which is the Question that now depends before the Court) so that you come to have Judgment of High-Treason pass'd upon you, and to Suffer according to that Judgment; what will become of these 400 People that were your Auditors at the Time that these Words (that are thus found and adjudged to be Treason) were spoken? And I speak it for the sake of all Conventiclers, and Frequenters of such Meetings as these are. If you that are the Preachers and Teachers, the Mouths of such Congregations, do utter Treason, and so they conceal that Treason, what a Condition are they in? what are they Guilty of? Therefore if People will consider, they would do well to think, that when they go to such Places, they go at a great Peril; being to answer for Themselves, their Lives, and Estates upon the Prudence of the Expressions (to say no more) that come from the Teachers. I only put you in mind of this, because I would have all Standers by, and the Auditory (which I see is very great) in Mind what Danger and Risque they run in thus offending the Law.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, I do believe, that no one in the World (besides these Witnesses that here were produced against me) can ever testify the least disrespectful Word spoken by me of the late King, or of his present Majesty.

L. C. J. Well; when will you be ready, Gentlemen?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we desire to have as much time to prepare our selves as we can.

L. C. J. Two or three Days time will serve.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is fit we should know what Points they intend to insist upon, that we may prepare to answer them.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, that must be; but I perceive his main Objection is, what I tell; Let him be brought by Rule higher upon Thursday, because the Court may have time to consider of what shall be said on both Sides.

Mr. Rosewell. My Lord, these Gentlemen are Strangers to me; but I dare rely upon them, from the Character I have heard of them, that they will do me all the Justice that they can.

L. C. J. Well, they are assigned of Council for you. But I could not forbear giving that hint that I did, that this might be a Warning to People, how they transgress the Law in going to such Meetings.

Die Mercurij 26 Novemb. 1684.

Rex versus Rosewell.

L. C. J. MR. Pollexfen, Have you any thing to Move?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I have one Word to Move for my self, and the others, that are appointed to be of Council for Mr. Rosewell. We think it our Duty to apply our selves to your Lordship for this Favour; that to enable us the better to do our Duty for the Person for whom we are assign'd, your Lordship and the Court would please to order that we may have a Copy of the Indictment. We do acknowledge, that it is not an usual thing to have Copies granted (tho' there be no exprefs Law that we know against it) in capital Matters; but where any Doubt does arise upon the Penning the Indictment, and Council is assign'd; to enable them to do what is fitting for them to do for their Client, Copies of the Indictment have been granted; as particularly in the Case of Fitzbarris, in order to the Plea that he was to put in; and I my self was one of the Council at that time.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, I make no doubt in the World, it is in the Power of the Court to order a Copy of the Indictment, if they see Cause; but if you remember, (for you were of Council in that Cause too) it is not to be granted, because it is asked. For my Lord Russel had no Copy of the Indictment, tho' he insisted very much upon it: And it was in the Case of Fitzbarris granted, that he might particularly apply his Plea (if he had a Mind to it) to the Indictment it self.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I do not desire a Copy of all the whole Indictment; but of so much thereof, as may be enough for us to know the Foundation upon which we are to go. I do remember we were call'd in, in my Lord Russel's Case, upon the Point of Challenge, for want of Free-holders; but that was not in the Point of the Indictment; and there I cannot see what we had to do with the Indictment; but here we must understand how it is laid really in the Indictment, that we may apply our Arguments to the Case; and that I believe was never denied.

L. C. J. Look ye, if you speak to me privately, as to my own particular Opinion; it is hard for me to say that there is any exprefs Resolution of the Law in the Matter: But the Practice has been always to deny a Copy of the Indictment. And therefore, if you ask me as a Judge, to have a Copy of the Indictment delivered to you in a Case of High-Treason, I must answer you, shew me any Precedents where it was done: For there are abundance of Cases in the Law which seem hard in themselves; but the Law is so, because the Practice has been so; and we can't alter the Practice of the Law without an Act of Parliament. I think it's a hard case, that a Man should have Council to defend himself for a Twopenny-trespas, and his Witnesses examined upon Oath; but if he Steal, commit Murder, or Felony, nay, High-Treason, where Life, Estate, Honour, and all are concern'd; he shall neither have Council, nor his Witnesses examined upon Oath: But yet you know as well as I, that the Practice of the Law is so; and the Practice is the Law.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we heard the other Day the Indictment read, and so may have some little Account of the Indictment; but we desire such a Copy as may enable us to argue as we ought to do; and as the Court will expect from us, being assigned by the Court.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, if we should offer any thing that is not in the Indictment, it's all one as if we held our Tongues; and if we have only a loose Account of the Indictment, that may be as bad as if we had a false one: And therefore we desire, to the end that we may argue ad idem, that your Lordship will please to favour us that we may have a Copy of so much of the Indictment, as upon which our Objections may be grounded.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, you may remember a particular Case; I have forgot the Name; but I believe you may remember it; where a Prisoner at this Bar desired to have the Indictment delivered to him to read; but it was denied him. It is hard, I confess, and so are many other Things in the Law; but I am wonderfully tender of making Precedents: And therefore if it has not been practiced, I do not see how we can do it.

Mr. Just. Winbins. That is the usual Practice, my Lord; but it is in the Power of the Court sure to grant a Copy; or at least of so much as is necessary for them to apply themselves to. There have been many Cases of Murders where they have had Copies of the Indictment, in order der to move in Arrest of Judgment; as this Case is.

Mr. Just. Walcot. But have there been any in High-Treason?

Mr. Just. Withins. I do not take it that there is any difference between the one Case and the other; they being both capital Crimes; and Council being assign'd they must know what they are to speak to.

L. C. J. I would know when ever a Copy was granted to enable the Party to move in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Just. Withins. My Lord, when there is a Motion in Arrest of Judgment, and Council is assign'd, that is a Thing they ought to know, how to demean themselves in their Arguments.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we submit it to you. We desire the Favour that we may acquit our selves as we ought to do; and as the Court (we know) expects from us.

L. C. J. As far forth as I could do, being in the Case of Life, I would indulge you: But I tell you, I am loath to be the Author of Precedents in Cases of this Nature, one way or other; especially in this Case, where I know you cannot but understand by what was spoken here to-ther Day, what the Objection is, and where the Stress of it lies: Every Man at the Bar must needs understand it.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we know People have various Understandings; and the case is many times variously stated, not only in our Minds, but in our Books.

L. C. J. Well, we know you understand your selves well enough: And what we could grant we would.

Mr. Just. Withins. It may be Mr. Pollexfen does it only to make way for an excuse, when he comes to argue, that he is not so well prepared as he should have been; but we know him well enough.

Mr. Pollexfen. But, my Lord, if we miss the Words of the Indictment, we hope your Lordship will not think us impertinent in having made this Motion, which is for our Selves, not for our Client: And therefore we hope you will Pardon us, if in case we mistake; which we could have had no colour to have desired, if what we had to say were guided by a true Copy of the Record.

No Copy was granted, nor Rule made.

Die Jovis, 27 Novembris 1684. B. Regis.

Dominus Rex vers. Rosewell.

THIS Day Mr. Rosewell was brought to the Bar, and the Court asked the Council assign'd for him, what they had to say.

Mr. Wallop. May it please your Lordship, I am of Council with Mr. Rosewell, by your Lordship's Appointment; he being here a Prisoner now at the Bar. My Lord, I am inform'd (for I have not seen the Proceedings, nor heard the Indictment read) that it is an Indictment for treasonable Words; and many treasonable Words; and likewise, as I take it by Information, these Words are apply'd by divers Innuendo's; so that for ought I can apprehend by what I am inform'd (which I must still keep to) it is so uncertain, insensible, involved and intricate, that no safe Judgment, as I humbly conceive, can be given upon it.

My Lord, to consider these Words; First, if you please, I shall state them as discharged of the Innuendo's, and put them to your Lordship barely and nakedly, as they are in the Indictment, and as they were sworn, and are to be supposed by the Conviction to have been spoken. The Words are these, as they stand discharged of their Innuendo's. That the People make a flocking to the King under pretence of healing the King's Evil, which he could not do; but we are they to whom they ought to flock, because we are Priests and Prophets, that by our Prayers can heal the Dolours and Grievs of the People. We have had now two wicked Kings together, who have suffered Popery to enter under their Noses; who can be liken'd to no other Person but the most wicked Jeroboam: And if they would stand to their Principles, he did not fear but they should overcome their Enemies as in former times, with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling.

These, my Lord, are the Words nakedly in themselves; and these are said to be spoken in a Publick Assembly, where they were likely to do hurt to the Government. Thus, I say, they stand without any of the Innuendo's. Now, tho' your Lordship will have, and justly ought to have, a good Account given you of such Words as these, how they came to be spoken, even taking them as they stand discharged of the Innuendo's; yet I humbly conceive with Submission, they do not contain any intention of deposing or destroying the King, and so can have no treasonable Intention in them: And then your Lordship, I suppose, will likewise expect to have a good account of these Words in another respect; how Words which in the hearing of them barely and nakedly spoken, could not carry a treasonable Intention, I say, how it comes to pass that in the writing of them down in an Indictment they become High Treason.

My Lord, these Words as they stand discharged of the Innuendos, are loose, extravagant, insensible Words; sounding rather towards Phrenzy, than Treason. So that as they stand without further Explanation by an Innuendo, they are perfectly insensible, and one cannot tell what they refer to, or whom; and if the Words, Ex vi termini, without further Averment, contain no treasonable intention and meaning, and so consequently have no Treason; it may seem very difficult and hard to maintain, how, out of the Assembly in which they were spoken, being put into Latin, in an Indictment, they should become Treason: They not being Treason at Rotherhithe, where they were spoken; how they should be made Treason at Kingston or here, where they are dress'd up in another Form. Indeed, I know no way that it can be done, but by adding some other Words by some other Hand. And, my Lord, I suppose it was so so done by those who framed this Indictment that is before your Lordship, by inserting, and adding this Multitude of Innuendos.

But I suppose then, they that would insert these Innuendos must have a good Warrant to insert them: For if they are inserted without Warrant in Law, then it must be acknowledg'd to me that the Indictment is not good; and I humbly conceive it to be a Rule in Law, that no Innuendo can warrantably be inserted in an Indictment, Information, or Declaration, upon an Action of the Case for Words, unless the Defendant first himself be averr'd, and that directly to have mention'd a Person in certain, to whom those Words may be referr'd; and it must not slide in by Supposition, but it must appear in the Body of the Discourse of the Defendant. And the Reason is evident, in all Cases of Slander, and particularly in these of treasonable Words; for how could the Hearer understand whom the Preacher meant, or he that discoursed so and so; and so be influenced to Rebellion, unless he had named the Person of whom he spoke; as here, unless the Defendant had named the King to whom the Words he spoke should be referred?

My Lord, the Treason of the Words is in stirring up Sedition and Rebellion; and if then the Words cannot terminate upon the King, and the Hearers could not collect that to be the Intention of the Speaker, these Words could not influence a People to Rebellion and Sedition. And according to this Rule, I conceive that most of the Innuendos in this Indictment are not warrantable.

For my Lord, as to the first Words, to take them in order, tho' I take it, that that is the most remote Matter from the Crime charged; yet let us strike off these Innuendos as we go along, if we can. There it is Quod populus, &c. the People (meaning the Subjects of our Lord the King) keep a flocking to the King, to cure the King's Evil, which he cannot do, &c. Here the first Innuendo is, the People (meaning the Subjects of our Lord the King). Now he had never before named the People of England; but the Innuendo fastens that meaning upon the Word (People.) Which with Submission, my Lord, is always a Sign of a naughty Innuendo; and it is without Warrant of Law; an endeavouring to give an original certainty to uncertain Words; which is more than the Office of an Innuendo will allow or warrant. I say, my Lord, it always bears a bad face, where Words first appear with an Innuendo, and have no certainty even in the Beginning of them but by the Innuendo: that with Submission, is to be rejected, the Innuendo not doing its proper Office, for which it ought to be used in Law: For Populus may intend any People; it may intend the French People flocking to the French King, (and he does heal the King's Evil in the same manner; nay, pretends to it as a sole Gift to him, his Predecessors and Successors: But I only put that for an instance) and all the Innuendos, if you observe them, are of this Nature. The Words first appear without any light, but what these Suppositions give them; and therefore, I say, they are to be rejected.

But now, my Lord, I come to that which is more particular, Non habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges in simul; We (meaning the Subjects of the King) have had two wicked Kings (meaning King Charles the First, and this King) together. Now that we say is altogether void, for there was no mention of any Kings; wicked Kings or good Kings, Pious or Bad, before in the Discourse; to which, according to the Office of an Innuendo, these Words are to be apply'd. My Lord Coke in his 4 Rep. fol. 17. B. has this Case.

* John Jeames brings his Action against Alexander Rutlech, for speaking the following words concerning him, to one John Bonner. "Hang him (prædictum Johannem Jeames innuendo) he is full of the Pocks. (innuendo the French Pocks.) I marvel that you (prædictum Johannem Bonner innuendo) will eat or drink with him (prædictum Johannem Jeames innuendo) I will prove that he is full of the Pocks (innuendo the French Pocks.) Upon a Motion in Arrest of Judgment, it was Resolved by the Court, that in every Action of the Case for Slander, two things are requisite. First, That the Person who is Scandalized be certain. Secondly, That the Words spoken be apparent Slander. The Office of an innuendo is to design the same Person that has been named before: And is in Effect, instead of a Prædict. But it cannot make the Person certain, that was uncertain before. In the present Case, it was evident that the Plaintiff did speak the Words of the Defendant. But as to the second Thing, it did not appear that the Words spoken did mean the French Pocks; and Words are to be taken in mitiori sensu.

And

And I humbly conceive this Book is a most pregnant Authority that states the Matter truly, with a Judgment of Law, and the Reason of it; and all the Books that come after this, borrow their Light from what is laid down as the Rule of Law in this Case; as there are an infinite Number of them, which I shall not trouble your Lordship with particularizing; only just to name some of them. 5 Co. 20. Hob. 45. and 2 Cro. 126. wherein they say, That altho' the Plaintiff be particularly nam'd by a special Name; yet if the Declaration comes to Name him in an Action of the Case for Words, at the first Appearance with an Innuendo, then that Innuendo is Void; tho' his Name be expressly alledg'd in the very Words, yet they will reject that Innuendo, as not doing the proper Office of an Innuendo: And that Judgment shall be Arrested, tho' the Jury found that the Party spoke such Words: And this is upon the Rule in 4 Co. before-mentioned.

Now, my Lord, to apply this Rule in the 4th Report to the Case before your Lordship; we say there was no mention at all before of any two Kings; nay, not of any King, in his Discourse, to which the Innuendo should refer; and the Innuendo being join'd to the Words first spoken, without any Discourse laid concerning such a Person, or Averment to be spoken of such an one before, the Innuendo cannot give any certainty to that which had no such original Certainty; that being against the Office of an Innuendo, and so is to be rejected. And the meaning of the Books, and of that great Rule which I first cited is this, That the Defendant must himself in his Discourse, first set up such a Light about the Words of the Person concerning whom they are spoken, that the Intention of the Speaker may with ease be collected; then comes the Innuendo with a Beck or a Nod, as it were; and that Collection is to be the nutus to shew who was meant; but it is not sufficient to give an original Certainty, where such a Certainty is not fix'd before the Innuendo comes. The Defendant himself must set up such a Light as will carry the Intention to the End of the Discourse.

Then it is said Duos iniquos Reges, in the Plural Number; meaning the late King Charles and his present Majesty; now King Charles the First was never pretended to be mention'd before; why then according to that Rule, as to him the Innuendo signifies nothing at all; and then it must be taken in common Understanding, We have now had two wicked Kings together, Innuendo our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, against whom the Treason must be said to be committed: But this is very harsh, and insensible, and impossible; it is harsh in all respects both of Grammar, and Reason, and Law; it is insensible because it is impossible; and it is impossible because you must else make two Kings to be one, or one King to be two, and the Innuendo must serve both ways; which I believe your Lordship will hardly undertake to do.

And besides, my Lord, there is another Inconsistency in these Words, habuimus nunc, that's contradictory; habuimus refers to the Time past, and draws one Way; nunc to the Time present, and draws another Way; and when there are such Inconsistencies and Incoherences, how can any Man make a Judgement in this Case where the Life of a Man especially is concerned?

But, my Lord, if habuimus be that which being first shall take place, then these Words refer to any two Kings that we have had, under whom Popery hath been let in; and so we must run back from Harry the 8th up to the Conquest, nay beyond the Conquest to the Saxons, and other former Kings, to the first that Established the Christian Religion, which was then subject to the Papacy. And it will be hard to construe them wicked Kings for so doing at that Time; as any Man's reading, that knows any thing of the History of England, will easily tell him. So that it is unintelligible and insensible, even that way; and to be sure, if it be so, that we have had two wicked Kings together, referring so far back, it cannot at all concern the present King.

My Lord, I shall be short; I only state these things before you, and recommend them to your Lordship's Consideration. Then come these Words, which it seems are most relied upon, if they would stand to their Principles, he did not not Question, but they should be able Inimicos suos vincere; Innuendo the King and the Government. This is the most insensible, (as I apprehend) of all; and it is in the fatallest part, it being there that the Treason must lye, if there be any. Now my Lord, we first say, there is no mention at all of any Enemies throughout all the Words precedent; there is no Averment that the King was Enemy to any body, or any body to him; and therefore the Innuendo, for this reason, is to be rejected; and the rather, in that it makes the King and his Subjects to be Enemies one to another; which is an Imputation that ought not to be admitted; and I dare say, will not be by your Lordship. Therefore in this Case, to put such a Sense, in such a Weighty Matter, (being a Matter of Fact,) upon such Uncertainties without any further Averment of the Intention and Meaning of the Speaker to be so and so; and without any thing but such Inuendo's, is very hard: For now perhaps the Jury only from this Inuendo were perswaded that all these things pointed upon the King and the Government; and did take it that the Law was so; that the Words intended as much: Then do they give their Verdict of a Matter that was never averr'd, and for want of an Averment could never be put in issue, so that the Party could have a Tryal whether he were Guilty as the Indictment says.

My Lord, I shall cite no Books more than I have done. I humbly conceive that putting that great Rule in the Book I first mention'd, and the reason of the thing together, and the subsequent Authorities that I have cited; and they stand so fair and clear to avoid this Indictment, that to trouble your Lordship further were to embroil the case; therefore I shall say no more out of the Books. But the Rule is a firm, reasonable, undeniable Rule, which must rule all Cases that come under the Reason of it. And I never heard that Book was ever contradicted; but all subsequent Judgments were agreeable therunto.

Mr. Just. Withins. What Folio is it, Mr. Wallop, in the 4th Rep?

Mr. Wallop. Folio 17 B.

Mr. Just. Holloway. It is —'s Case, is it not?

Mr. Wallop. Yes, Sir. My Lord, I have stript the Words of the Inuendo's. You will not not I am sure put, nor can an Inuendo put such a Violence or Force upon Words, as to make them Treason, when in themselves they have no such meaning. Inuendo's are to follow the meaning of the Words as they lie in the Record, and not to draw the Meaning of the Words after the Inuendo; for you will never, (especially in a Case of Life) press Words, or strain them to speak more than willingly they mean or intend. It is not the practice of the Law so to do, to make any such Stretches. Quinimis emungit, elicit sanguinem, he that wrings the Nose too hard will draw forth Blood; that is the Rule of that great Lawyer, my Lord Coke, who applies that Saying to the forced Straining of Words beyond what in themselves they naturally and easily will bear. And it is plain that God is not well pleased with such Emundions: Nor does the Law of the Land at all allow it, but absolutely forbid it; for the Law of England speaks thus, In dubiis & generalibus, benignior sensus est preferendus; in all dubious, uncertain, and general Cases, the most benign and candid Interpretation is to be taken: So that if there should be a doubt about these Words, what Sense they be taken in; the Law of England does enjoyn your Lordship to take the Way that lies on the Right hand, and make the most favourable Construction that can be of them. We say then, the Words (as I conceive) standing quite otherways and without the Innuendo's, are insensible; at least uncertain to what they should be applyed, or to whom; and then if there should be a Doubt, (though indeed in one respect I think there is none; yet if there should remain a Doubt) I say your Lordship and the Court are to take that which is the most mild and gentle way of construing these Words.

My Lord, I shall not trouble your Lordship further in the matter; for I think it is seen by its own Light, and these few Touches that I have given of that general Rule as applyed to the particular Case before your Lordship: And I do not question but they will be apply'd by your Lordship and the Court, in their Consideration of the Case: Therefore I lay it at your Lordship's Feet, and humbly pray that the Judgment may be arrested.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I am assign'd by the Court to be of Council for Mr. Rosewell, the Prisoner at the Bar; and therefore humbly desire your Lordship would please to spare me a Word of the same Side with Mr. Wallop. The Case, that is, this Part of the Indictment hath been put (according to what our Information is) right by Mr. Wallop; but because there may be many Words in the Indictment, (and there are so) some of a higher Nature than others; therefore I beg leave to put the Words distinctly as they lie; and I shall endeavour, with Submission to your Lordship, to shew what Words are in themselves Treason; and what are not Treason, tho' they may be a great Misdemeanour, and highly punishable by the Law, and by the Court.

My Lord, Tho' the Statute of the 25 Ed. 3. does provide that for the Convicting of any for Treason, there shall be an Overt Act; yet I do not hold, nor do I think, but that there may be Words that are an Overt Act, and consequently Treason within that Statute; but then what sort of Words these are, is that which I would humbly offer to your Lordship to discourse of: For my Lord it plainly appears that Words in themselves that are very evil and wicked, yet are not Treason, nor are to be Punish'd by virtue of that Statute of the 25 Ed. 3. As in one Cro. 117. & 125. Hugh Pine's Case. The Words there spoken by Pine, are most evil and wicked Words; yet by all the Judges of England they are agreed not to be Treason.

But, my Lord, for a further Determination of this Point, what Words are Treason and what not; give me leave to mention the Statute of 13 Car. 2. which I understand to be the Statute upon which the Prisoner is Indicted, and the two Branches of that Statute: for the First tells what is Treason, and the Second what is not Treason, but only Misdemeanour; And that second Branch of the Statute says, That if any Person shall maliciously and advisedly publish or affirm the King to be an Heretick, or a Papist; or that he endeavours to introduce Popery, or maliciously and advisedly by Writing, Printing, Preaching or expressly Speaking, publish, utter or declare any Words, Sentences, or other Things, to stir up the People to hatred, or dislike of the King's Person, or the Established Government; then he is disabled to have or exercise any Place or Office, Civil or Military, and be liable to such further Punishment as by the Common Laws or Statutes may be inflicted in such Cases: By which, I take it, the meaning to be Fine and Imprisonment, or bodily Punishment; But not the Punishment that is appointed to the Judgment of High-Treason, or loss of Life or Member.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I humbly crave your Lordship's Judgment whether this shall be permitted, that the Council should enter into such a Discourse as this. The Question (I take it) that your Lordship appointed to be Spoke to is; Whether this Indictment as to Form, be sufficient for your Lordship to give Judgment upon: But Mr. Pollexfen is going into that which is a far greater Point; whether these Words abstracted from all their Innuendo's are Treason, or no. My Lord, the Prisoner did not move that in Arrest of Judgment; and whether your Lordship expects any such thing should be spoken unto, that was not moved or stirred by him; I must submit it to you. The Jury found that these Words were spoken with an intent to depose the King. Whether that your Lordship will permit it to be argued whether such Words are Treason in their own Nature, is of quite another Consideration.

Mr. Pollexfen. Good Mr. Attorney, Pray spare us. We come to show that if in their Nature they import not Matter of Treason, then the Innuendo's cannot help them, so as to make Treason of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I did not understand that it was your Lordship's Pleasure the Council should have liberty to argue any such thing as whether the Words be Treason, being found to be spoken with such an Intention; but whether these Innuendos have sufficiently been laid to maintain the Indictment in point of Form.

Mr. Pollexfen. If you leave out the Words Innuendo, then sure we may speak to the Words themselves.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Attorney, either you mistake Mr. Pollexfen; or I do; For I take it, that he is entering into the Consideration of these Words, as they are laid in the Indictment; that are

T t t t t t z

are uncertainly laid, so as that they will not support an Indictment of Treason.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, He is arguing that if they were spoken of the King, yet they would not be Treason.

L. C. J. Will he say so? I dare say he will not.

Mr. Att. Gen. He is arguing upon the Statute, what Words are Treason, tho' spoken of the King, and what not; which, I take it, is not the Question now.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We humbly offer it to your Lordship, whether it be according to your Lordship's Rule and Intention that he was to argue whether the Words were Treason; or only whether the Form of the Indictment, as to the Innuendos, was good and sufficient.

L. C. J. Taking the Words to be sufficiently set forth in the Indictment, and found by the Jury to be spoken of the King, especially the last Words; Do you think we would suffer that Question to be debated, whether they were Treason or not? God forbid. I will not sit here to hear that Question at all so much as made or put, I'll assure you. I took him not to argue at all any thing that way.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, hear me; I am going only to this; for I would not offer any thing beyond what is fit for me to offer, and for the Court to hear: But this we say. That the Words, the effective Words are not so sufficiently laid in this Indictment, as to make them amount to Treason; I am only going to that.

L. C. J. Ay; That's the stinging Part of the Question; and so I understood him before.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I only mention'd that of the Statute, that there were two sorts of Words there taken notice of; to shew that I thought these Words were not within that Branch that is said to be Treason.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mr. Pollexfen. I will keep my self to the first Clause of the Statute; for what I mean, is this. That if these Words come not within that first Branch which makes the Treason, then your Lordship cannot give Judgment upon this Indictment. For tho', my Lord, it may be these Words are extraordinarily ill; and being spoken or Preached, may have an ill sense or meaning with them; yet I would observe to your Lordship, there are other Penalties and Punishments provided for some sort of Words, than there are for others.

But then my Lord, let us consider the Words of the first Branch of this Statute. If so be any Person does compass the Death, or bodily Restraint, or other harm to the King's Person, or to deprive the King, or levy War against the King, &c. And this compassing and imagination does express by Printing, Writing, Preaching, or malicious and advised Speaking, they shall suffer Judgment of High-Treason. Now then, all that I would come to is this, that this same treasonable Printing, Writing, Preaching or Speaking, must be of such Words as shall intend the Death, bodily Hurt, Restraint or Imprisonment of the King's Person; or Levying of War.

My Lord, having said this, the next thing is to come to the Words themselves; and to take them as they are in themselves without the Innuendo's; and see what the Natural Sense of them will be: And we'll take them in the Natural Order as they are laid in the very Indictment, and found by the Jury.

The first Passage of them is quod Populus, &c. (meaning the People of England, the Subjects of our Lord the King) made a flocking to the King (meaning our said Lord the King that now is) to cure the King's Evil, which he could not do; but we are they to whom they should come, being Priests and Prophets, that by our Prayers can heal the Grievs of the People. Now, my Lord, with humble Submission, it is plain that as to these Words, they have not in themselves any tendency to Treason at all, whatsoever Reflection they may make upon the King; they are the Words of a Priest magnifying his own Office, and his Power with God Almighty; but they do not come up (I think) to this Crime, for which the Prisoner at the Bar stands accused.

Then the next Words that follow are these, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges in simul, qui permiserunt Romanam superstitionem intrare in eorum conspectu, &c. and whom can be liken'd to none but wicked Jeroboam. My Lord, these I do acknowledge are very wicked and bad Words, especially if they must be apply'd as the Indictment has set them forth, to the late King and his present Majesty: Yet these very Words (under favour) will not amount to the Charge of High-Treason. They deserve very severe Punishment; but they seem not to come up to any thing of an Intention, or compassing, or designing the Death, bodily Hurt, or Imprisonment of the King; or the levying War against him. This I speak, my Lord with Submission, and I believe your Lordship may be of the same Mind.

But then, my Lord, the next Words that follow, are the Words (I suppose) that are rely'd upon to make out this Accusation; Quod si ipsi starent ad fundamentalia, ipse non timebat, &c. That they should overcome their Enemies as in former times, with Ram's horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling. These, my Lord, seem to be the Words in which the Crime consists. Now, my Lord, if these Words in themselves are so uncertain, or such as do not tend or relate to the present King, or the present Government, to stir up Sedition or Rebellion against them; then they will not be Treason, because they do not so relate.

Now, my Lord, these Words if you take them alone without the former Clause, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges in simul &c. closed with the Innuendo, that he meant the late King and this, I see not possibly how they can be said to relate to the present King and Government to make them Treason within this Act. Which way can it be? if they would stand to their Principles, they should overcome their Enemies: How can they be intended to be meant of the King, and his Loyal Subjects? Then let us consider the Words that go afore, whether they will help any thing or no; habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges in simul. These Words of themselves stript of the Innuendo, do not express what two Kings are meant by them. If you take the Words strictly, that We have had two Kings now together, in simul; as the Word signifies, it must be two Kings at one and the same time; But take it in the English Phrase (as perhaps they would have it turned into English) We have had now two wicked Kings together (meaning the late blessed Martyr, and his now Majesty) then it must be, we have had now two Kings Kings successively; but it is a strange thing to render such Latin into such English, which seems to be in the Nature of the Words themselves, such as will bear no such Sense or Construction as that. And then the qui permiserunt Romanam superstitionem intrare in eorum conspectu; if the first words do not in themselves express what Kings were meant, these Words that follow can give no manner of Certainty to them at all: For here's not so much as any Innuendo; nor can the Words that follow them (qui assimilari possunt, &c. which can be liken'd to none but wicked Jeroboam) in any sort shew any certainty to whom the Words are to be apply'd, or illustrate whom the Speaker meant.

But now that which is the next Clause is the worst Clause of all, Sed si ipsi starent ad fundamentalia, &c. Ipsi in all ordinary Construction of speech in all Language, being coupled to the former Words, (and so I think the rule in the Grammar is, and will be read by any reasonable Person that reads) must refer to the next Antecedent. And then who are they that are last spoken of? It must be the two wicked Kings, let them be who they will, that were meant by those wicked Kings; for there is no other Person that does intervene as spoken of, to whom they should be refer'd. The former Words are spoken in the first Person, and plural Number; we have had, speaking in the Name of himself, and they that were his Auditors; and then to come with ipsi after he had mention'd two Kings who had suffered Popery to come in, and were to be liken'd to Jeroboam, changes the form of the whole Speech: It should seem according as it is laid in the Indictment, to run thus; and then I desire your Lordship to consider the Sense and Grammar of them; We had now two wicked Kings together, who have suffered Popery to come under their Noses; we cannot compare them to any but wicked Jeroboam: And if they would stand to their Principles, then he did not doubt but they should overcome their Enemies as in former times, &c. Why then if ipsi according to Grammar and ordinary reading, being a relative must refer to that which went last before, there is nothing in all the Sentence before, but, We, (that is he and the People that heard him;) and the two Kings that he spoke of; and the two Kings being last spoke of, it must in all Grammar I say and Sense be understood of the Kings. Then let us see what Sense we can make of it; We have had two wicked Kings that have permitted Popery under their Noses, that they can be compar'd to none but wicked Jeroboam: and if they stand to their Principles he did not fear but they, (the Kings) should overcome their Enemies. In all ordinary and fair Reckoning, I cannot see how they can mend it, but the Ipsi must refer to the Reges; and the Eorum fundamentalia, ipsorum Regum, if you take these Words as they do lye; and if they have any Sense or Meaning at all in them, this is the proper and natural Sense and Meaning of them.

For it is pretty hard to apply the Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges to the ipsi qui starent ad fundamentalia. In all Probability he spoke it thus, (if it continued on in a Discourse, which I can say nothing to, being only to speak to the Words as they are laid in the Indictment;) and if we do but stand to our Principles; I do not doubt but we shall overcome our Enemies as formerly, &c. But ipsi is a Variation of the Person, and according to all Grammatical Constitution, we know how it must be expounded. The other seems to be the natural reading of the Words, but the Indictment has not pursued them; but has made them instead of that, to be quite Nonsense, supposing them to have been spoken as the Jury have found them.

But my Lord; if they don't well bear that Sense which I think they should properly and naturally bear, if they had been right laid; the Question then is whether we can make these Words as they are laid, to bear any such Sense as the King's Council (by their Innuendos) have placed upon them; that is if they, (meaning his Auditors) should stand to their Principles, then they should overcome their Enemies (meaning the King and his Loyal Subjects). Truly my Lord, I cannot see how that can be, how ipsi should be me; I and mine Auditors should stand to their Principles.

But setting that aside, come we then to the main Words. He did not fear but they should overcome their Enemies. The great force of these Words lye in the Word Enemies. What is meant by Enemies? For all the rest without that, would not signify any great Matter, with Submission to your Lordship, as I think: And therefore here comes the great Burden, and that which is the sharp Sting of all this Indictment. And to make Enemies to signify the King and his Subjects, my Lord, is a very wonderful Innuendo, as I believe ever was attempted to be made. So it seems to me with Submission to your Lordship; the Word Enemies it self is a Word of so large Comprehension that it reaches to a great part of the World. God knows Mankind is so very unhappy as that every one hath very many, and too many Enemies. Who is not an Enemy? A Man scarce knows; its well if he does. And this is a thing that's mighty hard, that so general a Word should have so hainous a particular Application.

There then rests the Burden of the Case; whether Inimicos should signify the King and his Loyal Subjects. If in the natural Grammar, the former Words of Ipsi starent ad fundamentalia, be, as I have shown, to be refer'd to the duos Reges as the last Antecedent, then it must mean that the duo Reges would overcome their Enemies; and then there is no hurt in all these Words; but whatsoever was spoken is very commendable and very allowable: But if you would take it otherways, I see not how it can be done without the greatest Strain in the World of so general a Word, to make inimicos mean the King and his Subjects.

Now my Lord, let us see how they intend to help it out, and that is by these Innuendos. The Nature of an Innuendo hath been already open'd to your Lordship by Mr. Wallop. I shall not repeat anything of that which was said before; for that I cannot take to be any Service to the Prisoner at the Bar, to take up your Lordship's time in Repetitions. The Books have been cited, and Reason it self will direct to that; for must not a Man be convicted by his own Words as well as punished for them? It is not sure the skill of the Clerk to put in an Innuendo (or of any one else) that shall be construed to make my Words to have any other Sense than I that spake them intended them in. If the words are not clear, why then they cannot affect the Auditory so as to have any evil Influence upon them them to incite them to Sedition or Rebellion ; for sensible words must influence sensible Men : But words that are insensible can have no influence at all upon rational Creatures. Then shall an Innuendo make that an Offence, which without it, was not an Offence ; especially so great an Offence, as that of High-Treason ? Surely not.

Besides my Lord, all our Books are against making any such Construction. Roll's Abr. 1. Part 84. There is a whole Bead Roll of them to prove, that Innuendos will not help where the Words in themselves have any Incertainty in them. The bare setting down the Words with Innuendos are not an Averment sufficient to maintain an Action, or an Indictment. The Cases there are indeed upon Actions of the Case for Words, which in reason are under the same Rule.

For my Lord, there are two Ways to apply words that are uncertain, to bring out the true Intent and Meaning of them, to whom they are to be apply'd ; the one is by a Colloquium precedent ; and where there is a Colloquium precedent of such Matter as will lead in the Sense of the words, which without it were not to be understood, there the laying that Colloquium makes the words come to be sensible ; and there is this reason for it, whenever that's done, the Colloquium must come in Evidence and must be proved : But I never yet knew an Innuendo offer'd to be proved. Another Way is this, where words are laid in a Declaration with an Averment precedent to be spoken of such a Person, then the words with an Innuendo after that Averment, show sufficiently what is meant by them. If so be scandalous words are spoken, as to say, Thy Landlord, your Brother, your Master, your Servant, your Son is a Thief, or the like : In these Cases the words in themselves do not express the Man of whom the Scandal is raised, but they give such a Denomination of the Man, that may by the Hearers be sufficiently known. Why then in that Case, if in the Declaration it is averr'd that the Plaintiff was his Landlord, was his Brother, was his Master, was his Servant, was his Son, and that these words were spoken of him ; and thereby it comes to be made apparent to the Court what is meant, and who is meant, that is well ; and all that must be proved to the Court upon Evidence ; or the Action cannot be maintain'd. By such means as this, it is made plain and demonstrable, that there can no Doubt remain, either with the Court or the Jury, to whom the Injury is done, and of whom the Scandal is utter'd. And these are the only two Ways that ever I could observe were allow'd to be sufficient to maintain any such Action ; And there the Innuendo comes very properly in to assist the Averment, or the Colloquium.

But now my Lord, here in this Case, here's nothing of that kind but only a bare Innuendo, that such and such were meant, without either a Colloquium that there was a Discourse concerning such and such Persons ; or an Averment that the words were spoken of the Persons.

My Lord, I cannot tell what Precedents they will offer to your Lordship of former or later Times. We have had but a very little time to look into it ; and have not that recourse to the Precedents on the Crown's side, that the King's Council have. But my Lord, for Precedents that may have pass'd sub silentio, without having the Question stir'd, I suppose will not be allowed by your Lordship and the Court as Precedents against us. But I think there will be no Instance given where ever any such thing came in question, that ever Judgment was given against the Defendant.

My Lord, this seems to be the sense and nature of the words as they are laid in this Indictment, stript of the Innuendos ; and your Lordship knows what a Case we have now before you. We are in the Case of the Life of a Man, which is much favour'd in Law ; and if there be any doubt or uncertainty, your Lordship will lean rather towards the favourable Side ; and if according to the Rules of Law, words to make Men Criminal shall not be strained or forced beyond their plain, natural Meaning ; sure they shall not to make a Man capitally so : For the greater the Crime is, the greater Consideration the Court will have to see that there be no strain'd, forc'd Constructions to bring the Life of a Man in danger : And therefore I humbly pray that Judgment may be Arrested.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, I am of Council in this Case for the King ; and notwithstanding any thing that has been said, I do conceive, that there is High-Treason well alledg'd in this Indictment, of which the Prisoner is found guilty, against whom I must demand your Judgment. My Lord, there is a great difference in this Matter ; that is, whether the words are Treason, as they were spoken by him ; and whether or no this Treason, admitting it to be Treason, be well disclosed by this Indictment : For my Lord, I think to preach in a Publick Assembly, that we have had two wicked Kings together who have permitted Popery to come under their Noses, and then to go on with it to Stand to their Principles (for so the words are laid in this Indictment) and they should overcome their Enemies as in former times with Rams-horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling, is a very high Aggravation of such words. And my Lord, if you remember the Evidence, as I doubt not you do, it was all spoken in a Publick Assembly, before 4 or 500 People ; and they were spoken without any words intervening whatsoever. These were the only words that were spoken relating to this Matter : So that these must carry their own pregnant Sense with them, of exciting the People to stand to their Arms against the wicked Kings, or else they are of no Signification. And thus they are laid in the Indictment, and found by the Jury to be spoken positively to stir up the People against the King, to depose him, and to raise Rebellion within the Kingdom. This I say, is positively affirmed, and laid down in the Indictment. But now whether or no these words are in point of Form so laid, that the Court must understand them with relation to the King and Government, and as an Argument to stir up the People, is the Question : For if they be so, then they are well laid to support this Conviction of Treason.

Now for that, my Lord, I would only first say, they must either import Treason in themselves, or they do not. If they do import Treason in themselves, no Addition of the Person concerning whom they were spoken (as that they were spoken of the King) will mend the Case,

Cafe, or make it better. Tho' it be laid never so much to be spoken of the King, and that be never so much averr'd; yet if it be not spoken to disturb the Government, or to raise Rebellion and Insurrection, the adding a thousand times that it was spoken de domino Rege would not avail. They confess they have no Precedents to produce; and I believe truly they have not: And so they only go by way of Argument, taken from Actions upon the Cafe for words: Whereas there is a great Disparity in the Cafe between Actions of the Cafe for words, and Informations or Indictments for words that are Criminal or Capital; and I know if they will look into the Precedents that are in Print, in the Entries and in the Reports of Informations or Indictments, they will find it is never, or very seldom, or rarely done; it being look'd upon as to no Purpose, or as perfect Surplusage, to lay that such or such a thing was spoken, de domino Rege, de Gubernatione. But in Criminal Cafes, and not Capital, it is commonly thus; of which there are Multitudes of Instances: That such a one being of an ill Mind, to raise Commotion in the Kingdom, and stir up Sedition, spoke these and these words. This was the constant Form in your Lordships time, as your Lordship can remember, in the Informations that were, or the Indictments of Persons that had spoken words relating to the Duke of York. I can remember when your Lordship us'd to say, Never consult me, but follow the ancient Precedents, which I dare undertake to say are all thus; and so I shall shew by and by, it has been in Indictments of Treason: And tho' perhaps one or two might at any time be otherways drawn, (of which yet we can find none) yet, this hath been the constant Form for any thing that I can find; and it is of very great Consequence to say at this time of Day, That what has for 100's of Years together been the constant Practice, and way of Indictments and Informations, is not good; it were to turn all things topsie turvie, and to make great confusion in Prosecutions, and the Practice of the Law in Criminal Matters. I shall therefore shew your Lordship that here is such a certainty as the Law does require, and as is usually practis'd; and that the Words in themselves are such, that they must have relation to what we have laid down in the Indictment, and to nothing else.

But then they do lay down this for a Ground, which I think I may grant them very easily, and yet it will signifie nothing to what they mean; I would wipe off all these Innuendos, leave them out of the Cafe, for I never expect any help from them at all; and then I do agree that an Innuendo without a strong, urgent Averment that the People which hear the words spoke, and the Court that are to pass Judgment upon them shall say forcibly appears from the words themselves, who was meant, and what was meant, will not support the Indictment, nor has the Verdict fortify'd it at all.

But they tell you in Actions of the Cafe, if John-a-Stiles be called a Bankrupt; if he will bring an Action against the Party that spoke these words, he must aver, and affirm, that they were spoken de quarente, of that particular Person that doth bring the Action; and so it is, the Law is so, and the Reason's plain; because there are many John-a-Stiles's perhaps, and the Plaintiff that brings the Action is but one; and therefore if he does not shew that the Discourse was of that John-a-Stiles who brings the Action, it is uncertain who was meant, and cannot be supported by a bare Innuendo. But I take it in these Cafes, wherever the precedent Averment is necessary, there must be a distinct Proof of that Averment; as if John-a-Stiles be called Bankrupt, (in the Cafe I mention'd) and he brings his Action and avers the Discourse to be de Quarente; and he calls Witnesses, who prove the words to be spoken, that the Defendant did say John-a-Stiles was a Bankrupt; and the Court demands this Question of the Witnesses, but do you know what John-a-Stiles the Defendant meant? and he shall answer, no, we only heard the Party say John-a-Stiles is a Bankrupt: It is apparent that Evidence will not support the Action; for that Averment must be proved, that he that brings the Action was intended, and that there was a Discourse concerning him. There must be, I say, the Proof of the Averment to make up that certainty of the Application of the Words which the Law requires. And therefore in what Cafe soever it be, if the words be the only Proof, or if the words carry sufficient in themselves to shew of whom they were spoken, it is ridiculous to say there must be an Averment that they were of such a one; because Words cannot prove themselves.

For my Lord, where ever words by strong and pregnant Intendment do carry Slander, and of such a particular Person, there the Books are express that there needs no Averment, that they were spoken of such a one; as in the Cafe of Fleetwood and Curle, Hob. 267. which is a Rule for all Cafes upon Actions of the Cafe for Words. Sir Miles Fleetwood being Receiver of the Court of Wards, brought an Action of the Cafe against Curle, for that he (having Speech with one Whorewood) did speak of the Plaintiff these Words, Mr. Deceiver (Innuendo the Plaintiff) had deceived and couzened the King, &c. He did there alledge the Words to be spoken of the Plaintiff. In that Cafe, upon not Guilty pleaded, it was found for the Plaintiff; and it was moved in Arrest of Judgment, that it did not appear by the Words spoken, that they were spoken of the Plaintiff: For Mr. Deceiver had no Propriety to that purpose; and the Innuendo would not make it certain; when it appeared to the Court that the words would bear no certainty, tho' he did alledge the words to be spoken of the Plaintiff in that Cafe; because there may be many Deceivers or Receivers; and he must prove it particularly spoken of himself. But then the Book is express, that after a Verdict, tho' he did not averr it was spoken of him in his Office, yet Judgment should be given for the Plaintiff, because there is a pregnant, violent, certain Sense, that may lead the Court and Hearers to take it so to be meant, and cannot be other ways imagin'd; and therefore the Court will not imagine it. As if a Man spoke of an Attorney, that he is a Knave, and spoke not of his Practice; why then the Action won't lye: But if he be named an Attorney in the Declaration, and the Hearers knew him to be an Attorney; in that Cafe, it was rul'd not necessary to have any such Averment; for the words themselves did import it in the Original Cafe, that it was spoken of him in his Office by the Word Deceiver; that having an Allusion and Ironical resemblance to the Name of his Office; fice; and in the other Case, because the Hearers knew him to be an Attorney.

So my Lord, upon these Grounds, Judgments have gone in those Cases which they themselves do so much rely upon; Actions for the Case for Words; wherever the Words import pregnantly such a Sense, there does not need such an Averment. But I shall shew that in Informations and Indictments this cannot be necessary, and the Reason seems plain: For here as we have laid it, and as the Truth is, we all know it, there is but one King, and one Government; and when Words are laid to be spoken to excite Commotions, or Rebellions, or Insurrections, they are but external Declarations of the Mind; the Treason that he is charg'd with, that is inward, it is the thoughts that are Treason. But it is true, the laying that alone, that he did so compass and imagine, without some outward Declaration, would not be good in an Indictment, any more than the outward Declaration without the inward Intention. But the Treason is, that he did imagine to raise Rebellion and War within the Kingdom, to stir up the People against the King, and to depose the King, and bring him to Death, and deprive him of his Crown and Dignity; and then goes the Indictment on, and says, to the end that he might effect this Treason, he spoke such and such Words, which by that new Law (that Mr. Pollexfen mention'd) will amount to Treason in Speaking, as well as Writing. I say, it is positively charged in the Indictment, that he did thus and thus speak to stir up the People to Rebellion and War against the King; and then come the Words, If indeed any collateral Words be spoken, which in their own Nature import not a Tendency to incite and stir up the People against the King, it would be naught with Innuendo's; and so it would be if there were twenty Averments. But I think that this is as strong an Averment as can be (what we all know to be true) that there is but one King and one Government. And then he spoke the Words in a Publick Assembly, We have had so and so, and if they would do so and so; which carries forcibly and pregnantly this Sense, that it cannot be intended to be spoken against any one else, but against the King and the Government; especially now after the Verdict, when the Jury find that he did all this to raise up the People against the King. All the Discourse is in it self pregnantly and forcibly tending that Way.

My Lord, we are now upon the Form of the Indictment. Put the case there are many idle Expressions in it, as I may grant there are; yet if the greatest part import Treason, Sedition, and Rebellion; and are laid to be done to incite the People to Rebellion; and so found by the Jury; then the Indictment is well laid, and Judgment must be given for the King. The first Words are highly derogatory to the King, and must be understood to be spoke of him. If the Prisoner had thought these Words would not have been Treason, if he had demurr'd in the Case, by that, as the Jury find it now here, he would have confess'd it to have been spoken of the King; for it is said he spoke it to the People, and he spoke it of the People of England; and to say that Populus may mean the King of France's People, as Mr. Wallop would have it, certainly no Man can think that: For when he speaks in English, to an English Auditory in a Publick Assembly, That the People make a flocking to the King, how can that King mean the King of France? And how can the Word People, by any Intendment, but a very foreign and strange one, be interpreted to mean that the French People should come over hither for to be cured of the King's Evil, when (as he himself says) the French King claims such a Power? No, That does fix it particularly upon our own King.

Pray let's consider then, what possibly can the Intendment of these Words be that follow, We have had now two wicked Kings together? as for that Objection of the Word insimul, that it means together at one time; that sure can have very little in it; it being to be taken according to common Understanding in our Dialect; and in English to say we have had now two wicked Kings together; every one will understand it, we have had them one after another, because we have but one King at a time.

And then, my Lord, if the latter Words were left out, with Submission, I conceive upon the Authorities that are in our Books, these Words would have been Treason upon the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. For, my Lord, in a publick Assembly of People, which is an unlawful Assembly as this was, to speak such Words of the King would be Treason. For put the case he had collected a number of armed Men, at Hounslow Heath, and there exhorted them to stand together; that the King was a wicked Prince, and had misgovern'd himself in the Administration of the Government; I think that would be Treason within the Law. By the new Statute, to say the King is a Papist, plainly is a Præmunire; but to say the King is a wicked King, and has misgovern'd himself in introducing Popery; that's a Step further than what the Act makes a Præmunire; for these are Words to stir up the People against the King, especially preach'd in a publick Assembly.

Then, my Lord, you'll take all these Words together; first after he had drawn away that great Authority, and great Power that the God of Heaven hath given to the King in curing the King's Evil, and declar'd him to be a wicked Prince, by suffering Popery to come under his Nose, and that he was to be compar'd to none but wicked Jeroboam: And then to exhort the People, to stand to their Principles, and he did not doubt, but they should overcome their Enemies. What can be plainer Treason? For it is plain, that he did speak to the People, to the Congregation; and that can never be understood otherways by the Court, nor by the Hearers. For that Interpretation, that the King should overcome his Enemies; it is foreign and ridiculous; and not to be imagin'd by any body that has either Sense or Reason about them.

But my Lord, I shall leave all this (the Jury having now found it) to shew what Precedents we could prepare for your Lordship; how things of this Nature have been used to be drawn; For we have made for the little time we had, as good a Search as we can; and I have found several: And indeed, I cannot find one otherways, than as this is. And for late Informations, and Indictments, if you examine the Clerks that now are, they'll tell you, that there is not one otherways: But that if it be said to be done with an intent to raise Rebellion or War against the King, or Sedition, or the like; and then say, he spoke such and such Words, that is sufficient.

But

But I will shew your Lordship some ancienter Precedents, some few which will shew how the Practice was heretofore.

The first is 3 H. 8. Rot. 17. in the Indictment against my Lord Grey, of High-Treason; after the general Charge of machinating the Destruction and Death of the King, and Subversion of the Government; It is said there, that Proditorie he did speak these Words, 'That the King's Grace should be driven out of the Realm, and the Prince's Grace should never Succeed.' And it is not averr'd that these Words were spoken of the King, and of the Prince; nor was there any need it should be averr'd; for the Words plainly import they were spoken of them; and the laying it, that it was to raise Sedition within the Realm, was sufficient to make them High-Treason.

Then the next is my Lord Cobham's Case, 2 Jac. Sessione 1^{ma}; for it is one of the great Records that lye in the Chest, amongst the Artana. But by the Book in the Office, we have a Copy of it; but there is the Record in the Chest, and there it is, 'Posteaque 12. die Junii, ultimo præterit. ac diversis aliis diebus & vicibus, tam postea quam antea, dixerunt, &c. (for there are other Defendants) Proditorie, 'there will be no good till the King (meaning our Sovereign Lord the King) 'and all his Cubbs (meaning the Children of our said Lord the King) 'were quite taken away, &c. I leave out the general Charge of the Machination and contriving of the Death of the King; but to the intent to effect that Treason, such Words were spoken, without any Averment that they were spoken de Rege. There was no mention of the Progeny of the King before; or that the Cubbs that were spoken of, were the King's Children; neither would the Words Regalis Progenies, answer the English Word Cubbs; which was a Word abusively mention'd by him. But in that Case it was held to be a good Indictment; and Sir Walter Rawleigh was condemn'd upon it.

Another is William's Case; and that's very like our Case in the first Part; that is, the first Words insisted upon are laid positively to be spoken of King James, by an Innuendo. Pasch. 17. Jac. Rot. 40. there after the Machinans & intendens &c. it is laid that he such a Day of September, Proditorie devisavit a treasonable Book, call'd Balaam's Ass; wherein there are such and such Passages apply'd to the King by the Innuendo. There is nothing said of that, to be spoken of the King, de Rege; but the Words of the Book, carrying their own plain Sense and meaning in them that they must be intended of the King, and the Government; that was sufficient to maintain the Indictment; and he was executed. The Innuendo's are not material. If it can have no other Sense, that is enough to maintain the Indictment.

My Lord, In Fitzbarris's Case, which your Lordship and all the Court remember; part of the Libel related to the Duke of York, by the Letters D. of Y. and sometimes only call'd by the Letter Y; and the King himself by the Letters Cb. And the Innuendo is, Meaning our Sovereign Lord the King; and there is nothing averr'd in that Case, and indeed, there can be be nothing averr'd; for by the import of the Thing it must have that Sense.

Colonel Sidney's Case, my Lord, you'll find to be the same: There's no Averment; but the Words of the Libel are brought in with an Innuendo.

And you have another Indictment at Salop, 21 Car. 2. One Pitt was Indicted of High-Treason, and convicted for these Words, 'If the King should hang, or banish any of the Papists, his Throat shall be cut.' This is laid in the same Form in the Indictment, as we have it here in our Case. If you please it may be read that he did advise, proditorie, speak such and such Words if the King (meaning our Sovereign Lord the King, without any previous Discourse of the King, or saying it was spoken de Rege) should hang or banish any of the Papists (quasdam personas male dispositas, &c. innuendo) his Throat shall be cut. He was convicted (I say) and I think was executed, tho' I cannot directly tell that: But this is the Record of his Conviction.

So I take it, it is (with Submission) that the Precedents go all along, both in Criminals that are not Capitals, in Indictments and Informations; and also in Indictments for High-Treason. The charging the Words to be spoken to stir up Sedition and Rebellion within the Kingdom, without the help of any Averment whatsoever, is sufficient; that is a strong Implication that they are spoken of the King and Government.

And my Lord, as to these Words they could not be laid otherways, than they are in this Indictment; for this is all that the Persons that are the Witnesses swore was Spoken. Your Lordship remembers it, it was so when they were here, they could swear no more. So that to have averr'd that he spoke to them de Rege & Gubernatione, would have put a proof upon us that our Witnesses would not have come up to. We must have prov'd a Discourse of the King and Government, and a Swearing of the Words would not have been a Proof of that. The Jury has found that this was done to stir up Sedition and to levy War; therefore I conceive according to the constant course of the Precedents, there is no need of any Averment; but the Words are well laid and well prov'd; and he well convicted.

To say that Enemies is a very general Word, and that we have Enemies of all sorts, and that therefore a bare Innuendo cannot make it mean one more than another, is odd in this Case; For I would fain have any Man assign me what sort of Enemies he could be thought to mean in such a Discourse; he could not mean Spiritual Enemies; because the Instruments that they were to be destroy'd with, were carnal Weapons, broken Pitchers, and a Stone in a Sling. These are not fit for overcoming Spiritual Enemies; but they must be such Enemies as can be destroy'd by such Instruments; Carnal Enemies, that are to be vanquish'd by outward Force. And then what Enemies can such a publick, unlawful Assembly have but the Government? All that are of their own Side and Party, are none of their Enemies. And it cannot be taken distributively, that every particular Man has his Enemy, that's a foreign Understanding: But when he spoke to the Congregation in a Conventicle, that they should overcome their Enemies, being so unlawfully assembled, that must be the Government. And had he not told you before who were the Enemies that he plainly meant? He had said that the King was a wicked Man; and

according

According as he represented him, an Enemy to God and Man by introducing Popery into the Kingdom. And you are to consider the Time when, and the Place where these Words were spoken. We know that in these Conventicles, it has been the constant Cry, that we should be all over-run with Popery, and the like: And therefore that is considerable in the Case.

My Lord, I make a great Difference between Words spoken in private, and Words spoken in a great and large Assembly. It is the same Thing as if it had been spoken at the Head of an Army; especially when People meet contrary to the Laws of the Land in Defiance of the Government; and gather together in such great Multitudes; and have such Discourses and Opinions broach'd amongst them. I cannot see truly how it is possible to have been better laid, being Sworn directly as it is laid; and especially being found to be all spoken to disturb the Government, and to raise Sedition and Rebellion. Therefore I must submit it to your Lordship; and pray your Judgment against the Prisoner for the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I beg leave to add one Word on the same Side. That which I shall apply my self to, is, to shew that this is a very good Indictment, in the Form of the Indictment, and that upon this Matter which the Prisoner is proceeded against; for it could not be better.

My Lord, the Fact charged upon the Prisoner is as Mr. Attorney has open'd. These Words were spoken in a Conventicle, The People make a flocking to the King to cure the King's Evil, which he cannot do, &c. These are the Words upon which the Prisoner was committed: These are the Words upon which he is proceeded against; and These are the Words which have been found against him. And, my Lord, more Words than these are not alledg'd to be spoken by the Prisoner, nor proved to be spoken by him at his Tryal upon this Indictment. Therefore if these Words are High-Treason, this is a good Indictment in Substance, if it prove so too in Form. And whether these Words are not themselves Treason, I shall not now speak, but shall only go to shew (as I said) that it is a good Indictment in Point of Form. For these Words are his Crime, as spoken in that Conventicle; and the only Crime of which he was accus'd, and of which he is found guilty.

Now, my Lord, let us see how the Indictment is. He is charged with compassing, imagining, and intending to raise Rebellion, and levy War in the Kingdom; and to depose the King; and to bring the King to Destruction: That is the Charge of High-Treason, in the Kind of it. Now, as that is the Charge, it is of absolute Necessity to alledge an Overt-Act, which must be proved too; and, if there be not an Overt-Act, the Indictment is naught. Well then, the Treason is compassing the Death of the King, and intending to raise Sedition, and levy War. What is the Overt-Act charg'd upon him? Why, to bring such his wicked Purposes to pass, he did traiterously speak, publish and utter [the Words of the Act of Parliament in 13 Car. 2.] in an unlawful Assembly, in the Presence of divers of the Kings Subjects, these Words that I repeated before to your Lordship.

Now, my Lord, I ask; Are these Words Treason in themselves, or are they not? If they are Treason of themselves; then the Indictment is certainly good in Form, without saying, that he spoke the Words of the King, or of the People of England, Subjects of the King. For either they do import that of themselves, or they do not. If they do import it of themselves, the saying that he did speak them of the King, and of the People, would have been impertinent and idle; because it is a thing manifestly plain of it self. If they do not import this of themselves; then had it been charged that they were spoken of the King and of the People, this must have been proved.

To go on then, my Lord: If it must have been proved; it must have been proved either by the Words themselves, or by something else. If it were to be proved by the Words themselves; why then it returns to the old Question, and we need not alledge it. If it were to be proved by something else; then the Fault is not in the Indictment, but it must be want of other Matter than what our Witnesses would prove; which, I am sure, would have been a very great Fault in us to have drawn upon our selves. But if the Words import of themselves the Meaning to be of the King, and of the People of England; then it is plain they make the Treason of themselves, and there requires no Averment.

As now, for Instance, (my Lord) to change the Words a little, to illustrate the Case; as suppose it had been charged in the Indictment, that to bring his wicked Purposes forth to effect, he did speak these Words in such an Assembly, Procure to your selves Arms, and make your selves ready by such a Day, and go to Whitehall and kill the King; Would any Man have said here, that it was necessary that we should say in the Indictment that he dixit de Populo, vel de Rege, so and so; No certainly, it is not necessary, because the Words plainly import their own Meeting.

So here in this Case; if the Words themselves necessarily import to be spoken of the King, it is as impertinent here to say dixit de Rege, dixit de Populo, as in that Case; because it is no more than what they necessarily and naturally import of themselves: Which shews that this Averment that they would have, is absolutely immaterial; and, if it had been charg'd, would have requir'd some other Proof than the Words themselves. And so the Fault cannot be, as they would alledge, in the Form of the Indictment; but in the Substance of the Words, that they do not import in themselves such a Meaning. And therefore, I think (with Submission) I have maintain'd the Form of this Indictment, beyond all Contradiction; and, notwithstanding all their Objections, it is a very good Form without the Words, dixit de Rege, vel de Populo.

As Mr. Attorney said, it is necessary (my Lord) in Actions on the Case for Slander, to aver, dixit de querente, because he must ascertain the Person of whom the Words are spoken, to be the very Plaintiff; for there may be divers of the same Name: And you must always, upon a Record, ascertain the Person, to entitle the Plaintiff to the Action; But where Words are pregnant, and full of themselves, there needs no Averment in such a Case; which, without without such Pregnancy; would be necessary, and if not done the Action would fail. As in that Case that was cited by Mr. Attorney of Sir Miles Fleetwood; if it had been that the Words were, Sir Miles Fleetwood has deceived the King, it would not have born an Action, unless it had been averr'd to have been spoken of him as of conzening the King in his Office: Because generally to say a Man has conzen'd the King, will not bear an Action, it is so loose. But when he says Mr. Deceiver; the Ironicalness of that shall not excuse him, but rather demonstrate both who and what he meant; that it shall be apply'd to him as doing it in his Office. And, being so, it must necessarily be understood to be a very great Slander, and then it needs no Averment. So says the Book.

So that where Words are plain and full, even in an Action on the Case, there requires no Averment: But in Indictments, they being for Offences against the Government, the very ancient Forms used will govern the Case; as well as the Reason and Nature of the thing; that no one can be meant, by such sort of Words, but the King and the Government: And for that I rely upon the Precedents that have been cited, that the Forms were always thus. The Precedents (with humble Submission) where the Overt-A&t laid in the Indictment is by Words spoken, that it is said, dixit de Domino Rege, &c. there is not one that does ever carry it so, but the Forms are constantly in the same Manner with this that is now before your Lordship, without such Averment, as carrying plain Surplusage, to averr that which the Words necessarily import.

To say, my Lord, in this Case (as we hear it objected on the other Side,) That these Forms pass'd sub Silentio, and no such Objection was ever made: I say that is no Objection to our Indictment; for the Argument sure turns the other way; because the Forms have been constantly in this Manner that ours is, therefore it is assign'd that what they offer is no Objection at all; for, doubtless, in so long a tract of time, when so many learned Men sate on the Bench; and so many learned of the King's Council attended the King's Courts, and so many Persons have been indicted, try'd, and suffer'd upon such Indictments, who would have saved their Lives (no doubt) if they could, by making such Advantage of such an Exception; that is a strong Argument that it was never thought an Exception. So that, besides the Reason of the thing, the Precedents are all with us, which hath always been accounted a good Argument.

My Lord, a great many of us remember the Indictments of latter Times; particularly that of Colonel Sidney: Tho' there is another Overt-A&t laid in that Indictment too, yet that is nothing to this Case. If there be but one Overt-A&t laid in the Indictment, it must be proved by two Witnesses; but if there be several Overt-acts laid in the Indictment, and one is proved by one Witness, and the other by another Witness, that is sufficient to maintain the Indictment. In Mr. Sidney's Case there was to one Fact but one Witness; and therefore it was necessary to lay another Overt-A&t, which was proved by other Witnesses. And one Overt-A&t comes to this point that's now in Question before your Lordship. It is in this Form directly, without any Averment that the Words were spoke, or written de Rege or de Regimine; but that the Book contain'd so and so: And the Thing it self speaks it self of whom it was meant. If therefore the Words in that Case, being proved, were necessarily to be apply'd to the Government of England, there need no Averment: No more does there here.

My Lord, not to trouble your Lordship further in so plain a Case; the Precedents being thus, and it being known to be the constant Practice in point of Form; I would fain know what they would have had us do. The Witnesses swear these are the Words, and there are no more; how then can we frame a better Indictment than upon the Words that they swear were spoken? My Lord, we pray your Judgment for the King.

L. C. J. Well, have you done on both Sides?

Mr. Attorney. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Truly for my part, I think this is a Case of great Consequence on the one side; and on the other. I hear it's said there are abundance of Precedents in the Case; some have been mention'd; and it is necessary we should look upon these Precedents before we deliver any absolute Opinion. But truly I must say, Mr. Attorney's Precedents have with me very little weight. And I must differ from Mr. Attorney in another Thing: For if in Case the last Words were out of the Case, of standing to their Principles, and overcoming their Enemies, Do you think, that because it is said in the fore part of the Indictment, that he intended the Death of the King, and to raise Rebellion, and therefore said, there were two wicked Kings who suffer'd Popery under their Noses, and were to be liken'd to Jeroboam; that that would be a good Indictment for High Treason? Then it were plain the A&t of Parliament, 13 Car. 2. was made to no Purpose. For tho' I doubt not in the least, words may be an Overt-A&t of High Treason, in compassing the Death of the King, upon the Stat. of 25 Ed. 3. I make no difficulty in the World of that: So was my Lord Cabbam's Case; and so were the Cases in Harry the Eighth's Time, 'We will drive the King out of England, or any thing of that Nature: I say that would be an Overt A&t sufficient to bring a Man within the Compass of the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. because those are exprefs words tending to the death and destruction of the King, the deposing him and depriving him; and they call him the King. But if a Man comes and says, That such a one with a Purpose and Intent to destroy the King, said these words, That the King could not cure the King's Evil; that's not such an Overt A&t, as to make good an Indictment of High Treason. And to say that the King introduces Popery under his Nose into the Kingdom; why it's a very high Crime; but it is prescribed by the A&t of Parliament to be prosecuted only as a Misdemeanour, and punished by Præmunire. If you look into that Statute, you will find which way the words shall have a Tendency that are to convict a Man of Treason; that is, that tend to the Imprisonment, bodily harm, death or destruction of the King; or raising Insurrection and Rebellion; or levying War within the Kingdom, that is High Treason. But words that do not necessarily tend to any such thing; as to say the King is a Papist, introduces Popery, is Popishly affected; Phrases that some People delight in; that has a peculiar Punishment appointed to it by this Act. And this is all taken care of, to shew the Judges how they should proceed, being careful of leaving it loose in so great a Case as High Treason. And the Parliament seems to be the more careful in it; because they make the treasonable words such an Offence during the King's Life only. Now as Mr. Solicitor puts the Case by way of Illustration in other words; I make no difficulty, but to bid Men prepare Arms, and go to White-hall, and kill the King, would be rank down right Treason. Would any Man in the World doubt to averr, that that were an Overt Act? No Man living would. But if I will say, that to compass and imagine the King's Death, he bid them rise up and go to White-hall and they should overcome their Enemies, does that import the King? There's no necessity of that. The King cannot be said to be an Enemy, unless it be plainly declar'd by the Party himself who he meant. And then to say, how could it be made better? No doubt of it, it might easily be made better if it had been consider'd of. For if you had come and averr'd, that these Words were spoken concerning the King, and the People of England, certainly it would have made it more certain. I don't bind my self now in my Opinion, by what I now tell you; but I am only breaking the matter. If you had said, that he said, if we will stand to our Principles, we shall destroy them, I think it had made the Case stronger ten times; but you have not so donè. Indeed I am not so fond in my Imagination as the Council for the Prisoner seem to be; That we have had two wicked Kings together, who have suffered Popery to come under their Noses; that therefore we must run it up to King Ethelbert, and I don't know who; no, that plainly in common English speaking, means two Kings successively; and it must be made a strange, forc'd Construction, if we should interpret it that he did not speak these Words of the late blessed Martyr and his present Majesty. And because Enemies is in the Plural Number therefore to make it Nonsense, because one is destroy'd, (if the words had been well laid as they might) therefore it could have no relation to him that was left, (I say) would make a strange forc'd Construction. That might be well enough if the words had been properly laid. But when you come to speak of Enemies, innuendo the King and his Subjects; how can that possibly be? For you had talk'd of no body before that they are said to have a Displeasure to; and therefore without saying that the King is an Enemy to say, Stand to your Principles, and you shall destroy your Enemies, Innuendo, The King, is I doubt to stretch it a little too far. But whereas I have put the words how I think they should have been laid; says Mr. Solicitor the Truth is, they were not so spoken as you would have them laid; but they are laid as they were spoken, and as they were sworn; and that's a Point of Fact to be left to the Jury, whether they aim'd at the King and Government, or not. Do you think that an Answer? for it would be the same Argument in an Action of the Case for Words? Where it's plain it must be dixit de quarente, you do so, and so. My Declaration must averr it, and I must prove it too. If I do not say it, tho' I prove it, that won't maintain the Action; if I do say it, and not prove it, it will not maintain the Declaration; all's naught; and what is there more in this Case? If you had said it, that would have directed the Jury plainly upon finding the words as laid in the Indictment, to have found what was the Intention of the Party by these Words. These are things (I must confess) that wonderfully weigh with me. It is in a Case of a capital Offence, where the Life of a Man is concern'd. If the Precedents have all gone so, there is some weight in that: But if the Precedents be only such as you have spoken of, Words directly telling who is meant; they have no manner of likeness to the words in this Indictment; because there they could never import any thing else.

In the next place, I am stumbled at another thing, Mr. Attorney; and that is, the difference of the Persons in one part of the Words, and t'other. You have begun in the first Person Plural; We have had two wicked Kings together; and as the Latin Words are, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges in simul; but afterwards you say, and if they, Ipsi, will stand to their Principles, he did not doubt but they should overcome their Enemies. It had been best to have laid them, as (certainly in common understanding) they must be believed to be spoken; if you or we, will stand to our Principles; and then the very Innucendo would have been more sensible and applicable.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But my Lord, it was sworn so by the Witnesses, that he said, if they.

L. C. J. The words say he preached, We have had, that is he, and the Congregation assembled; and then it is afterwards turn'd to they. I make no difficulty in the World, but that we have had two wicked Kings together, was intended of the late King and this; and if it had been all ledg'd, That afterwards he had said, We shall overcome them, and a Jury had found that these words were spoken with such an Intention as is laid in the Indictment, it would have been Treason. But both in Grammar and Reason, when you come to say, and si ipsi, &c. Pray to whom should that relate? What's the English of ipsi? Is it we or they? If it be they, in the third Person, there are no third Persons spoken of, but the two Kings; and they are the last Antecedent. For my part, it does stumble me, it is a thing of great Consideration. I speak not, as I said, to bind my self in Opinion; but I think if ye had put the words Nos instead of Ipsi, it had come nearer to the Understanding of Men, both in Grammar and Sense. For I exclude my self, and them I speak to, if I put it in the third Person; and your Innucendo (I said) can no way help it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I did not think, that that did rest upon your Lordship at all as any Objection.

L. C. J. It does rest, I assure you, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If we had done otherways, we should not have laid it as the Truth is; and the Latin does not alter the Case; for the word spoken was they.

L. C. J. Ay; but certainly he said (no doubt) You or We; if you will stand to your Principles; it's Nonsense else.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I take that to be well enough; for here are three Sentences. The first is, That the People make a flocking to the King, &c.

Quod

Quod Populus, &c. The next is, Quod nos habuimus, &c. And then the third is, Quod si ipsi. Now Quod governs the particular Sentence; and it being a particular Sentence by it self (with humble Submission) it is good in Grammar and in Sense too.

L. C. J. Suppose you were to speak it in English. Mr. Solicitor, suppose you were to speak it, Now we have had two wicked Kings together, who have suffered Popery to come in under their Noses, (meaning, the late King and this) there perhaps the Innuendo is sensible, and no doubt of it, then he must mean them? But to say, If they will stand to their Principles, they shall overcome their Enemies; Pray to whom does that they relate?

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, with humble Submission, you put the Case of an entire Speech, made in the Person of the Preacher and the Congregation; and as the Words were spoken all at one time. I would make it an entire Speech too; but it seems to be several Sentences, and therefore that differs the Case. For taking it that these are three distinct Sentences, they might be spoken in a several manner by varying the Person; and so they were Sworn. And suppose he had only spoke the last Words; an Indictment for this in the third Person had been a good Indictment: And if it had been charged in that Case Quod dixit & asseruit quod si ipsi, &c. and then in Evidence come and prove these Words; would not that have been good?

L. C. J. Truly, I think, Mr. Solicitor, if the Indictment for these last Words alone, had been in the third Person, it is a Question whether that might have been a good Indictment, if you had come in Evidence, and proved, that he had said of the King and Government, If you will stand to your Principles, you shall overcome your Enemies. Though I deliver no absolute Opinion of that; because there ought (I think) to have been an Averment, that they were spoken of the King and the People.

Mr. Soll. Gen. In an entire Speech, (my Lord) there the Relative must be apply'd to the last Antecedent, according to Grammar.

L. C. J. And I think it must be taken to be an entire Speech; and you lay it in the Indictment to be so; and then the Relative must go to the last Antecedent; or else Dr. Busby (that so long rul'd in Westminster School) taught me quite wrong; and who had try'd most of the Grammars extant; and used to lay down that as a positive Rule in Grammar, that the Relative must refer to the next Antecedent.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Solicitor, If you make it several Speeches, then it's ten times worse; for then the latter Part is so uncertain without an Averment of whom the Words were spoken, that sure it can never be made good.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Suppose it had been Uterius dixit; would that have made it a distinct Sentence? If it would, our Proof it may be was, that it was an entire Speech; but yet consisting of several Sentences, and must have the common understanding as to their relation one to another.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Objection of quod ipsi &c. was not moved by the Prisoner at the Bar; and therefore we did not expect to speak to it.

L. C. J. It is started here now by the Council. And it is a Question truly with me, whether this can be any way sensibly apply'd, as you would have it: Surely the Innuendo can never make it good.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I say sling all the Innuendo's out of Doors; the Words in themselves will do it.

L. C. J. Why then we must see whether it be a good Indictment in point of Form, or rather in Point of Substance, as you have laid these Words; without saying they were spoken de Rege. It is a Question of great Weight and Concernment, both to the King and to the Prisoner; and therefore we must take good time to consider of it before we deliver a settled Opinion. But, Mr. Solicitor, you very well remember that Staley's Case was otherways. For, tho' the Words were, the King of England is a Tyrant, &c. yet there it is said, and expressly averr'd that he spoke the Words de Rege.

Mr. Att. Gen. Could Colonel Sidney have moved in Arrest of Judgment, this that the Prisoner now starts? No, he could not sure. He might have moved for a new Tryal—

L. C. J. Certainly (Mr. Attorney General) that Case comes not up to this. Where the Words import in themselves that the King is meant; or any way circumstantially; it does necessarily imply they could be meant of no one else; and that would be good without the Averment: Which was the Case of Colonel Sidney, where the Matter declar'd in the Libel was plainly down-right relating to the Government, that if he did so and so he must renounce his Crown, and the like. How can that be apply'd to any but the King? The People of England have committed the Kingdom to his Power, &c. Why, how can it be interpreted that any Body else is meant?

Mr. Att. Gen. When will your Lordship please to give Judgment?

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, we will consider of it. It is usual, in Cases of less Difficulty than this, to take time of Consideration. I do not say, but that looking upon the Precedents perhaps I may alter my Opinion; and therefore do not speak this to bind my self: But we will consider of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I look upon it that the Government is greatly concern'd in this Matter; more than ten such as the Prisoner at the Bar.

L. C. J. It is true (Mr. Attorney) the Government is greatly concern'd; and the Prisoner is greatly concern'd, for his All is at Stake. I do say a good Indictment might have been made, I am sure

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is the best we could make; for we had no Proof to make out any Averment, because these were all the Words he said.

Mr. Att. Gen. After the Jury have found the Words as laid in the Indictment, was it ever ask'd of a Jury; These Words were spoken of the King, or they were not; but you have not said that they are spoken of the King, for it is not laid in the Indictment? Would that ever vitiate the Verdict?

L. C. J. Mr. Solicitor, Pray, would you have us give Judgment, That the Jury could not find that the Words were spoken of the King?

Mr. Pollexfen. The Jury have not found that that they were spoken of the King; for there is no such thing averr'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nor they have not found them to be not spoken of the King: But they have found them to be spoken to stir up Sedition.

Mr. Solicitor. We are never bound by Law to aver that we cannot prove. And therefore I put all upon that Dilemma: Either the Words import of themselves to be spoken of the King, or they do not. If they do not; if we had said, dixit de Domino Rege, it must have been proved; and that would have been to have left it to the Jury whom he did mean. And if they be not self-evident, God forbid the Jury should be charged to find out such a Meaning; but if they are self-evident, they need no Averment.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Truly, we think it may be good Evidence to a Jury; and it is every Day done in Cases of Actions for Words. It is left to the Jury to consider whether he meant the Plaintiff, John-a-Stiles, or any other: And the Evidence is help'd by this or that Circumstance, where the Words do not naturally import it.

Mr. Just. Walcot. I do think that the Averment that these Words were spoken of the King, is a Point of Fact that ought to be averr'd, and proved. Might not the Jury, in this Case, have found that they were not spoken of the King? If they had found that, why, they would have acquitted him; if they had found they were, and you had not alledg'd it, why then they had found more than the Indictment would lead them to.

L. C. J. Well, this is only by way of Discourse; not that we bind our selves by our present Opinion. We must look upon it. We will not give our Judgment suddenly in a Case of this Nature.

Mr. North. Will your Lordship please to spare me one Word?

L. C. J. Ay, Sir; let every Man be heard, in God's Name.

Mr. North. My Lord, as to this Objection; quod ipsi relates to the two wicked Kings spoken of just before; that cannot be: For you take Notice that these Words of the two wicked Kings relate to the late King, and to the present, as the Indictment says. One of the Kings is dead; so that you cannot understand it to be of the two Kings, that should overcome their Enemies; and therefore it must be the People. This Populus being a Noun of Multitude, and taken in the Plural Number, ipsi will very well relate to it.

L. C. J. Mr. North, The Argument turns both Ways upon that; and certainly he did not express himself after that rate. It is so loose a hung-together Indictment as truly I have scarce seen. For my Part, I would know how it come to pass, that we should not have as much Certainty in Indictments, as we have in Actions upon the Case.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, there must be Certainty in all Cases; and we think there is Certainty enough in this for your Lordship to give Judgment upon.

Lord Ch. Just. Mr. Attorney, I believe if you fate in our Places you would not think so. All our Books require greater Certainties in Indictments than in Actions on the Case: Nay, in Causes of this Nature, we are bound, by our Law-Books, to be of Council for the Prisoner; which we are not in Civil Causes, where the Prisoner may chuse his own Council. And we have not one Act of Parliament to help the defect of forming Indictments, as we have in Civil Actions; but still in all the Statutes made in Jeofails, there is an Exception of capital Offences, to shew that our Ancestors would not help Uncertainties or Insufficiencies in Form, where the Life of a Man was concern'd. This seems to carry a great Consideration with it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I was very willing and desirous your Lordship should assign the Prisoner this Learned Council; because we did suppose they would have produced some Precedents of a better Form than this: But they have cited none.

L. C. J. And you have cited never such a Case as this. Mr. Attorney. And if we can find no other like Case, we must be govern'd by the Reason of the thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we hope you will expedite it, for the sake of the Government.

L. C. J. Certainly, I think, it is very uncertain who are meant by Enemies; it may be Mr. Solicitor; Mr. Attorney; it may be the Court; no Body knows who it is: For every Body knows, that to Preachers in Conventicles, and to those that meet there, the Judges, and all that are for the Support of the Laws, may be reckon'd to them as Enemies. But when it is so uncertain who are meant, how can we supply it by such an Innuendo? That there might have been a good Indictment fram'd upon such Words as these, as he in all Probability spoke them; and he justly found guilty, is no Question with me at all. And (as I said the other Day, for the sake of the Auditory) if he be guilty of speaking such Words, and of Treason in speaking them; what will they be guilty of that were present, and heard the Words spoken? They may thank God that we have a gracious King, that does not take all the Advantages the Law gives him against those that break his Laws.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, your Lordship was pleas'd to mention Staley's Case to me. As I do remember it, it is not as your Lordship says: But it is, That he, to perfect his wicked Treason, (speaking of the King) said so and so. Now, if an Averment be necessary, this is a naughty Averment; for it is not positively averr'd that he did speak of the King.

L. C. J. Well, we will look upon it. And I would ask you, Mr. Solicitor, Whether if he said, (as it is most likely he did,) If you will stand to your Principles; and you put it in si ipsi, whether that would be good?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we put it in as the Witnesses swore it.

L. C. J. They did swear the Words according to their Apprehension; but, no doubt of it, in common Form he must speak them as I say.

Mr. Att. Gen. They swore the Words so; and we could lay them no otherways.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Attorney, will you move any thing?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then we will consider of it. And take you back the Prisoner; and you shall have a Rule of Court to bring him, when the Court is ready for Judgment.

Then the Prisoner was carried back to the King's Bench; and no Judgment was given that Term: But the next Term Mr. Rosewell pleaded the King's Pardon at the Bar of the Court of King's Bench; and was Discharged.

*A Defence of the late Lord RUSSEL's Innocency. To which are prefix'd two Letters upon the Subject of his Lordship's Tryal.
By Sir ROBERT ATKYNS, Knight of the Bath.*

[N. B. This should have been printed before The Magistracy and Government of England vindicated, pag. 174.]

First LETTER concerning my Lord RUSSEL's TRYAL.

' S I R,

 AM not without the Apprehensions of Danger that may arise by advising in, or so much as discouraging of Publick Affairs; yet no fear of Danger shall hinder me from performing that Duty we owe to one another, to counsel those that need our Advice, how to make their just Defence when they are called in question for their Lives; especially if they are Persons that have by their general Carriage and Conversation appeared to be Men of Worth, and Lovers of their King and Country, and of the Religion establish'd among us. I will follow the Method you use, and answer what you ask in the Order
I find in your own Letters.

' I cannot see any disadvantage or hazard by pleading the general Plea of Not Guilty: If it fall out upon the Proofs that the Crime is only Misprision of Treason, and not the very Crime of Treason, the Jury must then find the Prisoner not guilty of Treason, and cannot upon an Indictment of Treason find the Party guilty of Misprision, because he is not indicted for the Offence of Misprision, and Treason and Misprision of Treason are Offences that the Law hath distinguished the one from the other, and the one is not included in the other; and therefore if the Proofs reach no farther than to prove a Misprision, and amount not to Treason, the Prisoner may urge it for himself, and say that the Proofs do not reach to the Crime charged in the Indictment: and if the Truth be so, the Court ought so to direct the Jury, not to find it.

' Now being present in Company with others, where those others do consult and conspire to do some Treasonable Act, does not make a Man guilty of Treason, unless by some Words and Actions he signify his Consent to it, and Approbation of it: but his being privy to it, and not discovering it, makes him guilty of Misprision of Treason, which consists in the concealing it, but it makes him not guilty of Treason. And if the same Person be present a second time, or

Vol. III.

oftner, this neither does not make him guilty of Treason; only it raises a strong suspicion that he likes it, and consents to it, and approves of it, or else he would have forborne after his having been once amongst them. But the strongest Suspicion does not sufficiently prove a Guilt in Treason, nor can it go for any Evidence: And that upon two Accounts.

' First, The Proofs in case of Treason must be plain, and clear, and positive, and not by Inference, or Argument, or the strongest Suspicion imaginable:
Thus says Sir Edward Coke in many places in his third Institutes, in the Chapter of High Treason.

' Secondly, In an Indictment of High Treason, there must not only be a general Charge of Treason, nor is it enough to set forth of what sort or species the Treason is, as killing the King, or levying War against him, or Coining Money, or the like; but the Law requires that in the Indictment there must be also set forth some Overt or Open-Act, as the Statute of the 25th of Edw. the 3d calls it, or some instance given by the Party or Offender, whereby it may appear he did consent to it, and consult it, and approve of it.
And if the bare being present should be taken and construed to be a sufficient Overt or Open-Act, or Instance, then there is no difference between Treason and Misprision of Treason; for the being present without consenting makes no more than Misprision, therefore there must be something more than being barely present, to make a Man guilty of Treason, especially since the Law requires an Overt, or Open-Act, to be proved against the Prisoner accused. See Sir Edward Coke's third Institutes, fol. 12. upon those Words of the Statute, (per overt fact) and that there ought to be direct and manifest Proofs, and not bare Suspicions and Presumptions, be they never so strong and violent:
see the same fol. in the upper part of it upon the word (Proveablement.) And the Statute of the 5th of Edw. 6. Chap. 11. requires that there should be two Witnesses to prove the Crime: so that if there be but one Witness, let him be never so credible a Person, and never so positive; yet if there be no other Proof, the Party ought to be found Not Guilty: and those two Witnesses must prove the Person guilty of the same sort or species

X x x x x

' Species of Treason. As for Example, if the ' Indictment be for that Species of Treason of ' conspiring the King's Death; both Witnesses
' must prove some Fact or Words tending to
' that very sort of Treason: but if there be two
' Witnesses, and one proves the Prisoner con-
' spired the Death of the King, and the other
' Witness proves the conspiring to do some other
' sort of Treason; this comes not home to prove
' the Prisoner guilty upon that Indictment: for
' the Law will not take away a Man's Life in
' Treason upon the Testimony and Credit of one
' Witness, it is so tender of a Man's Life, the ' Crime, and the Forfeitures are so great and ' heavy.

' And as there must be two Witnesses, so by the ' Statute made in the 13th Year of his now Ma' jesty, Chap. the 1st, (intituled, For the Safety of ' his Majesty's Person) those two Witnesses must
' not only be lawful, but also credible Persons:
' See that Statute in the 5th Paragraph. And the ' Prisoner must be allowed to object against the ' Credit of all, or any of the Witnesses; and if ' there be but one Witness of clear and good
' Credit, and the rest not credible, then the Testi' mony of those that are not credible must go for ' nothing, by the Words and Meaning of this Sta' tute: See the Statute. Now were I a Jury-Man,
' I should think no such Witness a credible Wit' ness, as should appear either by his own Testi' mony, or upon proof made by others against ' him, to have been Particeps Criminis; for that ' proves him to be a bad, and consequently not
' so credible a Man; especially if it can appear
' the Witness has trapann'd the Prisoner into the ' committing of the Crime: Then the Witness
' will appear to be guilty of a far higher Crime
' than the Prisoner, and therefore ought not to ' be believed as a credible Witness against the ' Prisoner; for he is a credible Witness that has
' the Credit of being a good and honest Man,
' which a Trapper cannot have; and this Tra-
' panning proves withal, that the Trapper did
' bear a Spite and Malice against the Person
' trapann'd, and intended to do him a Mischief,
' and designed to take away his Life. Shall such ' a one be a credible Witness, and be believed a' gainst him? God forbid!

' Then again; It cannot but be believed, that ' such Persons as have been guilty of the same
' Crime, will out of a natural Self-love be very ' forward and willing to swear heartily and to
' the purpose, in order to the Convicting of ' others, that they may by this Service merit their ' Pardon, and save their own Lives: And for this ' Reason are not so credible Witnesses, such as the ' Statute of the 13th of Car. 2. does require.
' Read over the whole Chapters of Sir Edward ' Coke of High Treason, and of Petty Treason;
' for in this latter of Petty Treason, there is much
' Matter that concerns High Treason.

' I wish with all my Soul, and I humbly and ' heartily pray to Almighty God, that these Gentle-
' men that have given so great Proof of their ' Love to the true Religion, and of the just Rights
' and Liberties of their Country, and of their ' Zeal against Popery, may upon their Tryal ap' pear innocent. I am so satisfy'd of their great
' Worth, that I cannot easily believe them guilty
' of so horrid a Crime. I pray God to stand by ' them in the time of their distress.

' I wish I might have the liberty fairly to give ' them the best assistance I could, in that wherein
' I might be any way capable of doing it. I be' seech Almighty God to heal our Divisions, and ' establish us upon the sure Foundations of Peace
' and Righteousness. I thank you for the Favour
' you have done me, by imparting some publick
' Affairs which might perhaps have been unknown
' to me, or not known till after a long time, for
' I keep no correspondence.

' When there is an occasion, pray oblige me by ' a further account, especially what concerns these
' Gentlemen: And tho I have written nothing
' here but what is innocent and justifiable, yet
' that I may be the surer against any disadvantage
' or misconstruction, pray take the pains to tran-
' scribe what Notes you think fit out of this large
' Paper; but send me this Paper back again inclosed
' in another, by the same hand that brings it.

' There is nor ought to be no such thing as ' constructive Treason, this defeats the very Scope
' and Design of the Statute of the 25th of Edw. 3.
' which is to make a plain Declaration, what shall ' be adjudged Treason by the Ordinary Courts of ' Justice: the conspiring any thing against the ' King's Person, is most justly taken to be to con-
' spire against his Life.

' But conspiring to levy War, or to seize the ' Guards, is not conspiring against the King's ' Life: For these are Treasons of a different ' Species.'

Your faithful

Friend and Servant,

The Second LETTER.

S I R,

' I Thank you for the unexpected Account you
' gave me by your first Letter; but this exact
' Narrative you have now sent me of the Tryal
' of that Honourable Excellent Person my Lord
' Ruffel, has exceedingly obliged me. It was a ' thing I much desired, but I knew not from what ' hand to gain it; for I was a little impatient to ' hear what could be prov'd of so foul a nature
' as High Treason against a Person of whom I ' had ever entertained a very high esteem: and
' tho I had a very small and short Acquaintance
' with him, yet no Man that has known any ' thing of the Publick Affairs, or of our late
' Transactions, could be a mere Stranger to his ' great Worth. He had as great a Name for a ' true and honest English Gentleman, and for ' good Temper, and Prudence, and Moderation,
' as ever I knew any Man have, and was generally
' belov'd by all that love our Religion and Coun' try. I presume your Relation of the Proofs at ' his Tryal is certainly true in every part, and ' in the very words, and it is a thing that might ' be had by many hands, the Proceedings being so
' publick, and I suppose deliberate: Presuming it
' to be true, this I will affirm, that upon this Evi' dence,

‘ dence, both that against him, and for him, ‘ (might I have been permitted to have made ‘ his Defence for him at his Tryal after the ‘ Evidence given) I could easily have satisfy’d any ‘ equal and understanding judicious Man, that my ‘ Lord ought to have been acquitted; and had I been ‘ one of the Jury that try’d him, I make no doubt ‘ I could clearly have convinced all my Fellows ‘ (if they were honest and indifferent) that they ‘ ought not to have found him Guilty. The Spec- ‘ ies or Sort of High Treason that the Wit- ‘ nesses inclin’d to prove against him, was a Con- ‘ spiracy with others to levy War against the ‘ King.

‘ The two first Witnesses, viz. Rumsey and ‘ Sheppard, tho what they say may raise a strong ‘ Suspicion upon my Lord, and make it probable ‘ that he was guilty, yet neither of them do come ‘ home and close to the Person of my Lord Russel; ‘ as they do (I confess) against the Earl of Shaftes- ‘ bury, Sir Thomas Armstrong and Ferguson.

‘ The first does not affirm, that the Lord Russel ‘ did join in the Discourse, or agree to any thing ‘ in the Consult, but only says, he was present; ‘ which extends no further than to make a Mis- ‘ prison of Treason, and this too not directly ‘ and positively, as legal Proof ought to be, to ‘ convict a Man of Treason: the latter (Shep- ‘ pard) when he applies what he swore to the ‘ Person of the Lord Russel, only says, He be- ‘ lieves the Lord Russel was there at that time ‘ when the Discourse he speaks of was used; which ‘ is a very imperfect uncertain Proof, and not ‘ positive enough: so that neither of these were ‘ full Witnesses. As to the Evidence given by the ‘ Lord Howard against my Lord Russel, it is ‘ strange to me, (as the Evidence is stated) that ‘ any Credit should be given to it; that he should ‘ be believed against those Execrations, that (it ‘ seems) he had so solemnly, and so lately used to ‘ the contrary of his Evidence; especially when ‘ by giving this Evidence, he must merit his own ‘ Pardon, and save his own Life, which extremely ‘ takes off from the Credit and Weight of his ‘ Evidence.

‘ What Mr. West says, in reference to my Lord ‘ Russel, was but bare Opinion and Hear-say, and is ‘ no proof at all in Law; so that instead of two ‘ plain, direct, manifest, and positive, and two ‘ credible Witnesses, as the Law requires in Trea- ‘ son, here is not, in my opinion, so much as one ‘ positive credible Witness. The Lord Howard ‘ (as your Case and Narrative states it) is not ‘ credible, tho direct and positive; none of the ‘ other three are positive, tho more credible. In ‘ the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, ‘ of Treasons, the word (Proveablement) as Sir ‘ Edward Coke observes upon it, in his Third In- ‘ stitutes, fol. 12. imports direct and manifest ‘ Proofs, not Presumptions and Conjectures, and ‘ (as may be added) not Probabilities: and so ‘ the words (per overt fact) do (as he observes)

‘ strengthen that Sense of the word (Proveable- ‘ ment;) and the Act of Treasons made since this ‘ King’s Time, requires there should be two cre- ‘ dible Witnesses. Now, tho the Lord Howard ‘ was not, by the Evidence offer’d against him by ‘ the Lord Russel, utterly disabled from being a ‘ Witness; yet I will be bold to say, it made ‘ him no credible Witness in this Case. That the ‘ Lord Russel made no use of these Things in his ‘ Defence, tho a Man of Parts, is no wonder to ‘ me; the ablest Man under that Terror, and ‘ upon so speedy a Proceeding, and where it is ‘ impossible to be so composed and free from ‘ distraction, may easily pass by many just Ad- ‘ vantages, which a Stander-by, with less Abilities, ‘ might quickly have apprehended. I am far from ‘ reflecting upon the Court that try’d him; this ‘ matter that I observed, rested principally upon ‘ the Jury. And he is found Guilty and Con- ‘ demn’d, and it may be before this comes to your ‘ hand, put to death too: If it hath so happen’d ‘ (as possible it may) that the Earl of Bedford, and ‘ his other great Relations, have prevail’d with ‘ the King for a Respite of the Execution, I wish; ‘ and heartily beg of Almighty God, that these ‘ Considerations may yet be made use of to the ‘ King, (with whom it then rests) as Tabula post ‘ Naufragium, to save the Life of this Noble Lord. ‘ Much more than this may be said, were there ‘ such an Opportunity before the King, (and I so ‘ intend it, and no otherwise) and if I might be ‘ any ways serviceable in it, I would come up to ‘ London bare-foot, rather than neglect so good an ‘ Office. And I ever thought it a Severity in our ‘ Law, that a Prisoner for his Life is not allowed ‘ the Assistance of a grave and prudent Lawyer, ‘ or some other Friend, to make his Defence for ‘ him, even as to Matter of Fact, as well as to ‘ Law. I know ’tis said, the Court is of Counsel ‘ for the Prisoner; but for my part, I should never ‘ desire to depend upon that only. I know what ‘ this is by Experience. If the Case be in any part ‘ of it mistaken, I have lost all my Observations, ‘ and beg your pardon for all this trouble; it is ‘ out of the great Honour and Zeal I have for ‘ that good Lord: but the Narrative you give is ‘ very ably and well composed, and in very good ‘ Method; and, I think, could not have been bet- ‘ ter done, which inclines me to think it very true ‘ also. I could be contented the Earl of Bedford ‘ (to whom I am known) might have the view of ‘ this Letter, if it come not too late, and may be ‘ thought of any use; I heartily thank you for ‘ your Favour, which obliges me to be

Friend and Servant,

R. A.

A Defence of the late Lord RUSSEL's Innocency: By way of Answer or Confutation of a Libellous Pamphlet, entitled; An Antidote against Poison.

1. THE Pamphlet styles it self, An Antidote against Poison; but it is so far from deserving that Title, that it may be truly said, That the Antidote it self is the rankest Poison.

We read in History, That the Noble Emperor, called Henry of Luxemburgh, was poisoned in the Sacrament; and Pope Viktor was poisoned in receiving of the Chalice. Who could have suspected such horrid Villany in the Administration of such sacred and solemn Rites? Who could without Horror and Amazement contrive the mingling of a deadly Poison with the Bread and Water of Life? To make those consecrated Elements (which ought to be the Savour of Life unto Life) to be the dreadful Messengers of sudden Death? Surely had those outward Signs been changed into the very Body and Blood of the Lord of Life, (as they that acted in those execrable Villanies profess'd to believe) there must needs have been a Miracle wrought in altering likewise the Substance and malignant Nature of those Poisons, that they should not have wrought those direful Effects; which yet they did. There appears the like wicked Policy in the Author of this Pamphlet; who, under pretence of prescribing an Antidote against Poison, under the Vizor and Disguise of preventing Mischief, does most deceitfully infuse the worst of Poisons, and labours to intoxicate a whole Nation. This Author would have the World believe that the Noble Lord, in the composing of his Speech, was wholly govern'd by his Confessor; and that the Compiler of it was infected with those Doctrines, that the Northern Climate has of late furnished us with. The very Language and Spirit of Coleman! Sure the Soul of Coleman is by Transmigration enter'd into this Author: It is easy to guess at his Religion. He supposes all that were present at my Lord's Tryal, must needs be surprized to find the Truth of the Case so untruly and unfaithfully set down in my Lord's Speech. But whoever will take the pains to read the Tryals, publish'd by Authority, (which no Man will suspect of Partiality towards the Person tried) will receive abundant Satisfaction in the Truth of what was said by the Lord Russel, and discover the shameless Impudence of this malicious Author.

The Indictment (as we find it printed at large in the Tryal, fol. 29.) charges the Prisoner, That he intending to disturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and to move War and Rebellion against the King, and to subvert the Government, and to depose, or put down, and deprive the King from his Title and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England, and so bring and put the King to Death and Destruction; 2 Novem. 34 Car. 2. and at other Times, maliciously and traitorously, with divers others, did Conspire, Compass, Imagine, and Intend,

1. To deprive the King of his Title and Government.
2. And to kill the King, and to subvert the Government.

3. And to move Insurrection and Rebellion against the King.

And to fulfil and perfect these Treasons and traitorous Compassings and Imaginations, the said William Russel did meet together with divers other Traytors, and Consult, Agree, and Conclude,

1. To move and stir up Insurrection and Rebellion. And,

2. To seize and destroy the King's Guards.

The Operative and Emphatical Words of this Indictment are the Intending, Conspiring, and Concluding.

The Things intended and conspired were,

1. To move and stir up War and Rebellion against the King.

2. To depose the King.

3. To kill the King. And in order to the accomplishing of these horrid Crimes,

The Things concluded on were,

1. To move and stir up Insurrection and Rebellion.

2. To seize and destroy the Guards. This is the very Sum and true Method of the Indictment, if it be truly printed in the Tryals.

Note, Here is no open Act or Deed charged to be done by the Lord Russel, unless his meeting together with others be meant to be an open Act or Deed: But then, again, that Act of Meeting terminates merely in Consulting, Agreeing, and Concluding. They met only to consult, agree, and conclude; but they acted nothing in pursuance of that Consulting, Agreeing, and Concluding, for any thing that appears in the Indictment: So that the Meeting properly hath not the Nature of an Acting or Action, or of a Thing done. But the Effect of the Indictment is, That the Lord Russel and others did consult, agree, and conclude to do something; but the Indictment stops there, and goes no further, for it sets not forth any thing done at all. So that here is no Overt-Act or Deed, and therefore the Indictment is void; for there is no Act charged but meeting, and that was merely in order to consult and agree: And they did agree upon a Thing to be done; but it is not said they did it, or did any thing towards it. I repeat this the oftner, that it may be the better understood and minded, being very material. Read the Indictment.

The Indictment is grounded upon the Statute of 25 E. 3. cap. 2. (the old Statute of Treasons.) So the Attorney-General declares himself, fol. 49. of the Tryal.

Now let us see how far this Charge in the Indictment will make my Lord guilty of any Treason within that Statute.

The Body of that Statute of 25 Ed. 3. of Treasons, is printed together with the Tryal; (see the Tryal, fol. 50.) so that it need not be repeated here, though there are some other Clauses in that Statute not printed in the Tryal.

The

The occasion of making that Statute, appears to be the Variety of Opinions that then were, what should be accounted Treason, and what not; which was very mischievous to the Subjects, and gave too great a Liberty to the Judges of the ordinary Courts.

To cure this mighty Mischief, and to prevent that arbitrary Power of Judges, this excellent Statute makes a Declaration what shall be adjudged Treason by the ordinary Courts of Justice. Not but that there might be like Cases, or other Facts amounting to Treason, besides those there enumerated; but those other Facts or Treasons must not be adjudg'd by those ordinary standing Courts, (such as the Goal-Delivery of Newgate, and the Court of the King's-Bench at Westminster it self are:) But in such Cases those Courts must forbear proceeding, and the Case must be reserved for the Determination of the King and Parliament. See that Statute in the printed Statutes at large.

So that the Court of Goal-Delivery at Newgate must judge only, and proceed upon no other Treasons but what are there enumerated and specified.

Now the Treasons in that Statute enumerated and specified (for the Word Specified is the very Word used by that Statute) are these:

1. Compassing or imagining the Death of the King, Queen, or Prince.

2. Violating, or carnally knowing the Queen, King's eldest Daughter unmarried, Prince's Wife.

3. Levying War against the King. Not a compassing or imagining to levy War, but an actual levying War: It must be a War begun. And several other Sorts of Treasons are there specified, not to our purpose to be recited.

The Statute further requires, That the Person indicted be provably attainted of some one of these Treasons by Overt Deed, that is, some open manifest Act or Deed done, which must of necessity also be expressly set down in the Indictment, and fully and clearly proved at the Tryal by two Witnesses.

See Sir Edward Coke's Third Institutes, in his Chapter of High Treason, fol. 12. in his Exposition of the Words of that Statute, (per Overt Fact) and there, fol. 5. upon the Words (Fact Compasser) he tells you the Nature of that Open Deed that the Statute intends. It must be a Deed, and not mere Words: It must be a Deed tending to the Execution of the Treason imagined. That Deed must be an open Deed, that is, it must be fully proved, and made open and manifest at the Tryal by clear Proof.

So that if the Indictment fail of setting forth one of those Treasons that are there enumerated, it is not a good Indictment upon that Statute.

If it do set forth one of those Treasons, yet if it do not set forth some open Deed done by the Party indicted, that is, such a Deed as does properly and naturally tend to Execution of that sort of Treason set forth in that Indictment; in such case also the Indictment is not good.

If both these, viz. the Treason intended, and a proper suitable open Deed, be well set forth in the Indictment, (which make a good Indictment) yet if that very sort of Treason intended, and that open Deed or Fact, so set forth in the Indictment, be not also fully, clearly, and manifestly proved upon the Tryal against the Prisoner, he ought to be acquitted.

Vol. III.

It will not suffice either to prove it by one Witness, or to prove any other sort of Treason, (not charged in the Indictment, nor any other Over-Deed) other than what is so set forth in that Indictment, tho it be by never so full a Proof; but upon that Indictment the Prisoner ought to be acquitted, if that special Treason, and that special Overt or Open Deed, set forth and expressed in that very Indictment, be not fully proved.

Now let us examine the Indictment in this Case against the Lord Russel, and the Proofs against him, as they are published by Authority, and observe how they agree with the Statute, and how the Indictment and Proofs agree the one with the other.

It may be admitted that here is in the Indictment against the Lord Russel, a Treason sufficiently charged and set forth, viz. one of the Treasons specified in that Statute of 25 Edw. 3. namely, That the Lord Russel did compass and imagine the Death of the King. This is not denied, but it is duly charged in the Indictment. For those other Charges in the Indictment, viz. His intending to depose the King, and his intending to move or levy War and Rebellion against the King; these are inserted into the Indictment as Aggravations of that horrid Crime of intending to kill the King, or as open Acts of the other; but of themselves alone, they are no distinct substantial Charges, nor are they any of the Treasons specified in this Act, upon which Act this Indictment is solely grounded. For tho by the Act of 13 of this King that now is, cap. 1. entitled, An Act for the Safety and Preservation of the King's Person, it is made High Treason (during the now King's Life only) to compass or imagine to depose the King, or to compass or imagine to levy War against the King, if such Compassing or Imagination be expressed by speaking or writing, (altho without any open Deed) yet the Lord Russel was not indicted upon that Statute, (as the Attorney-General himself acknowledged openly at the Tryal) but only upon the old Statute of 25 Ed. 3. So that those late-made Treasons are not to our purpose.

So that the only Treason charged in the Indictment, as a substantial Charge, is that of imagining to kill the King. And so the Lord Chief Justice agrees in his Direction to the Jury. See the Tryal, fol. 61.

But where is that other Requisite, that other most material part of the Indictment, of the Open Deed or Act? without which the rest serves for nothing: For it is not enough by this Statute to make a Man guilty of conspiring or imagining the Death of the King, unless the Party indicted have expressed that Imagination by some open Deed; and that must be plainly set down in the Indictment too, or else the Indictment (as was said before) is no good Indictment. And it must appear to the Court upon the Indictment not only to be an open Deed, but such a Deed as has a natural Aptitude and Tendency to the Execution of that very Treason so imagined. And there is no such set forth in this Indictment; and therefore the Indictment it self was insufficient and void.

And that which seems to have a colour of an Overt-Fact, or open Deed, set forth in this Indictment, was not fully and sufficiently proved neither: And then, tho the Indictment had been sufficient, yet for want of due Proof, the Party indicted ought to have been acquitted.

To

To these two Points or Matters shall the ensuing Discourse confine it self. And if this Undertaking be made good, the Antidote will appear to be a rank Poison, the Lord Ruffel's Speech justified, and his Innocency and Loyalty cleared, and his Honour vindicated.

The Overt-Fait, or open Deed, set forth in the Indictment, (if there be any) are the Things said to be consulted of, agreed and concluded on; viz.

1. To move and stir up Insurrection and Rebellion.
2. To seize and destroy the Guards. (Peruse the Indictment carefully.)

Now neither of these are Open Deeds, in the Nature of them.

The First, which is to stir up Insurrection and Rebellion: This is a distinct Species of Treason it self; it is the same with a Levying of War, (specified in this Statute of 25 Edw. 3. which is the only Statute we have to do with in this Case of my Lord Ruffel;) and if it had been set forth in the Indictment as a Deed done, or Thing acted, that is, if it had been laid in the Indictment that the War was actually levied, or the Insurrection or Rebellion actually raised or stirred up, (as it is not, for it is only mentioned as a Thing agreed and concluded on, and not done) yet it had not been a sufficient proper Overt Fait, or Open Act, to make it a good Indictment: because (as is said before) levying of War is a distinct Species from that of compassing to kill the King; and therefore cannot be made an Overt Fait, or Open Deed, to manifest an Imagination of killing the King: For that one Species of Treason cannot be a proper Open Act to another Species of Treason, as will be proved hereafter.

Sir Edward Coke in his third Institutes, fol. 14. in the third Clause or Paragraph of that Folio, tells us, That the Connexion of the Words is to be observ'd, viz. [thereof be attainted by Overt or Open Deed.] This, says Sir Edward Coke, relateth to the several and distinct Treasons before expressed; whereof that of imagining to kill the King, and that of levying War against the King, are two distinct Species of High Treason. And therefore, says Sir Edward Coke, the one of them cannot be an Overt-Act for another, that is, levying of War cannot be an Overt-Act for that sort of Treason in imagining to kill the King, much less when the Indictment does not charge it as a War actually levied, but only an Agreement or Conclusion for levying a War. Such Agreement can be no Open Deed to manifest an Intent or Imagination of killing the King. This is the main Question between us.

The other only Colour or Pretence to an Overt-Fait, or Open-Deed, must be that of seizing or destroying the King's Guard: For no other but these two are set forth in the Indictment, or look any thing like Overt or Open-Acts.

And this latter is nothing like to an Overt-Fait, or Open-Deed, in the Nature of it; for it is not said to be done, but only agreed on, and concluded on to be done. If it had been but alledged in the Indictment, That in pursuance of this Agreement or Conclusion of the Conspirators, a View was accordingly taken of those Guards, and reported to the rest (whereof the Lord Ruffel was one) that it was feasible, (whereof there is some Colour or Proof against some of them) this had been more to the purpose: But being laid so imperfectly as it is, the Indictment it self must needs be insufficient, for the Reasons before given.

But, alas! the Noble Lord is gone; and he is gone from whence he would not be recall'd, a Place of infinite Bliss and Glory, out of a spiteful malicious World: It is we, it is the King and Kingdom, it is the whole Protestant Part of the World that suffers the inestimable Loss of him: Not to speak of the unspeakable Grief of his dear and disconsolate Widow; and other Noble Relations; Factum infectum fieri nequit. So that we may seem to labour in vain, and it comes too late. But something may be done for the Benefit of his hopeful Posterity, and some small Satisfaction may be made to his Noble Family, by a Writ of Error for reversing of this Attainder, and the avoiding of the Record; for the Statute of 29 Eliz. cap. 2. extends only to such Attainders for High Treason as then had been before the making of that Statute, and does not hinder a Writ of Error in this Case, if the King will sign a Petition for it.

But to examine this last Overt-Fait, or Open-Deed, a little further;

Viz. To seize and destroy the King's Guards.

The Guards! What Guards? What or whom does the Law understand or allow to be the King's Guards, for the Preservation of his Person? Whom shall the Court that tried this Noble Lord, whom shall the Judges of the Law that were then present, and upon their Oaths, whom shall they judge or legally understand by these Guards? They never read of them in all their Law-Books: There is not any Statute-Law that makes the least mention of any Guards. The Law of England takes no notice of any such Guards; and therefore the Indictment is uncertain and void.

The King is guarded by the special Protection of Almighty God, by whom he reigns, and whose Vicegerent he is: He has an invisible Guard, a Guard of glorious Angels.

*Non eget Mauri jaculis nec arcu;
Nec venenatis grævada sagittis,
Crede, Phœretra.*

The King is guarded by the Love of his Subjects:

The next under God, and the surest Guard.

He is guarded by the Law and Courts of Justice.

The Militia and the Trained-Bands are his legal Guard, and the whole Kingdom's Guard.

The very Judges that tried this Noble Lord were the King's Guards, and the Kingdom's Guard, and this Lord Ruffel's Guard against all erroneous and imperfect Indictments, from all false Evidence and Proof, from all Strains of Wit and Oratory misapplied and abus'd by Counsel.

What other Guards are there? We know of no Law for more. King Henry the Seventh of this Kingdom (as History tells us) was the first that set up the Band of Pensioners. Since this the Yeomen of the Guard; since them certain Armed Bands, commonly, now a-days, (after the French Mode) called the King's Life-Guard, ride about and appear with naked Swords, to the Terror of the Nation: But where is the Law? where is the Authority for them?

It had been fit for the Court that tried this Noble Lord on this Indictment to have satisfied themselves, from the King's Counsel, what was meant by these Guards; for the alledging, and setting forth an Overt-Fait, or Open-Deed, in an Indictment of Treason; must be of something that is intelligible by Law, whereof Judges may take notice by Law. And herein too the Indictment fails, and is imperfect.

But admit the seizing and destroying of those who are now called the King's Life-Guard, had been the Guard intended within this Overt-Fait, or Open-Deed; yet the Indictment should have set forth that de Facto the King had chosen a certain Number of Men to attend upon and guard his Person, and set forth where they did attend, as at Whitehall, or the Meuse, or the Savoy, &c. and that these were the Guard intended, by the Indictment, to be seized and destroyed: That by this setting forth the Court might have taken notice judicially what and who were meant. But to seize and destroy the King's Guards, and not shew who, and what is meant, makes the Indictment very insufficient.

So much as to the Indictment it self.

In the next place, let us look into the Proofs, as they are at large set forth and owned in the printed Tryal; and let us consider how far those Proofs do make out the Charge of the Indictment, viz. the Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King, and how far they make out that Overt-Fait, or Open-Deed, (such as it is) of seizing or destroying the King's Guards, in order to the effecting of that Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King. And it must appear by Proof to be in truth so intended by the Conspirators, and levelled to that end; for if it were done, yet if it were done quite to another Intent and Purpose, and not to that of Compassing the King's Death, it does not come home to this Indictment.

There are but three Witnesses that can be thought to bring the Matter home, and to fix any thing upon the Lord Russel, Colonel Romsey, Mr. Sheppard, and the Lord Howard.

It is true, two of the three, that is, Col. Romsey, and the Lord Howard, positively prove a traitorous Design, or a Discourse at least, by some of the Company, of making an Insurrection or Rebellion, or (to speak it in the Language and Phrase of this Statute of 25 E. 3.) of levying a War against the King, (for all these signify one and the same thing) and they prove the Lord Russel was sometimes present at those Meetings: But is that enough? Admit he were present, and heard the Debate of it, (which yet is not fully and directly proved) yet if he did not join in the Debate, and express and some way signify his Approbation of it, and consent to it, it makes him not at all criminous. It is true, his After-concealing of it might have made him guilty of Misprision of Treason; but that is a Crime of another Nature, and is another distinct Genus of Crimes, of which he was not indicted.

Col. Romsey, as to the Overt-Fait, (as they would make it) says, There was some Discourse about seeing what Posture the Guards were in: And being asked by one of the Jury, By whom the Discourse was? he answers, By all the Company that was there, (whereof, as he said before, the Lord Russel was one.) So that my Lord Russel may (I agree) be understood to be one that discoursed about seeing what Posture the Guards were in. Nay, the Colonel says, All the Company did debate it: And he says further, The Lord Russel was there when some of the Company undertook to take the View of those ral to what purpose the View was to be? the Colonel answers, It was to surprize our Guards, if the Rising had gone on.

The Chief Justice observing to the Witness, that he ought not to deliver a doubtful Evidence, and to speak it with Limitations, that made it not so positive; as by saying, I apprehend so and so: then the Colonel grows more positive, and says further, That a Rising was intended; but afterwards he says, There was no debate of the Rising. At last the Witness being asked by Sir George Jefferies, whether the Prisoner were present at the Debate concerning the Message from the Lord Shaftesbury to the Company then met, and the Answer return'd to it; he flatly says, The Prisoner was present at that Debate, (which Debate did indeed concern the Rising.) Being ask'd by the same Person, whether my Lord was averse to it, or agreeing to it; he answers like an Echo, Agreeing to it. Nay, then he says, my Lord Russel did speak, and that about the Rising of Taunton, and that he did discourse of the Rising: but what were his Words? Being question'd again by the Chief Justice, whether my Lord did give any Consent to the Rising, he answers still like an Echo, My Lord did. And this last Answer is the weighty Part of his Evidence, if there be any weight at all.

Now mind the Defect of the Witness's Memory in some other most material Passages. He thinks the Lord Grey did say something to the same purpose, with the Answer deliver'd by Ferguson to the Lord Shaftesbury's Message.

He does not know (says he) how often he himself (the Witness) was at Mr. Sheppard's House where this Debate was. He says he was there more than once, or else I heard (says he) Mr. Ferguson make a Report of another Meeting to the Lord Shaftesbury. And then he says, That this was all at that time that he remembred; and before this he had said no more against the Lord Russel, but that he was present; and after this upon much interrogating of him, he proceeds to tell a great deal more, indeed all the rest that has been before observ'd to proceed from him. And after all, he says he thinks he was not there above a quarter of an Hour. He says he was not certain whether he did hear something about a Declaration there, or whether Mr. Ferguson did report it to my Lord Shaftesbury, that they had debated it. And the Witness speaking of a View to be taken of the Guards, to surprize them; the Lord Chief Justice seems to be surpriz'd at that Word: The Guards! he never met it in all his Books. What Guards? why you know it is mention'd in the Indictment; but he might yet very well ask what Guards? And the Colonel answers, The Guards at the Savoy and the Meuse.

The Colonel says, He thinks the Duke of Monmouth, and the Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armstrong, were the Persons that undertook to view the Guards. And he thinks, Sir Thomas Armstrong began it, and Mr. Ferguson. And he says, further Direction was given to take a view of the Guards, if the Rising had gone on, (as it never did) and then he mentions the very Day that had been appointed for the Rising, viz. the 19th of November; and that the Message from the Lord Shaftesbury was, he thinks, a matter of a Fortnight before that Day, or something more; for he thinks it was concluded Sunday fortnight after my Lord Grey met. The mention of my Lord Russel's Consent to this Rising, ing, comes in at the last, and after many Questions ask'd him, and not till that very particular Question was put to him; and he answers in the very same Words as the Question was ask'd. The Chief Justice ask'd him in these Words, Did my Lord give any consent to the Rising? The Colonel's Answer was, Yes, my Lord, he did. But how did my Lord Russel signify that Consent? What Words did he use that may clearly express it? For this is the pinching Proof, if it had been certain and clear'd by remembring the manner of his Consenting, or how it did appear. Why was not this put home to the Witness? This is the material Part of his Evidence, without which the rest had not come home to the Prisoner: And why did not the Witness deliver this of himself, and before his giving this home Evidence he had said, That was all at that Time that he remember'd? And this was at the same Time with that of the Message, and of the Discourse about viewing the Guards. He afterwards doubts whether he was any more than once there with that Company, or whether he heard Mr. Ferguson report things to the Lord Shaftesbury; which shews a wild kind of Memory in a Witness, and the Colonel is no Fool, nor Baby; so that there is but one Time positively spoken of by this Witness. How strangely uncertain is he in the Matter of the Declaration, to which he was examined? A most noted Thing, and he cannot tell whether he heard any thing of it there, or whether Mr. Ferguson told him of it. It is to be suspected too, that what he has delivered positively at last so late in his Evidence, and after so much interrogating of him, was but mere hearsay too, and then it would not have been any Evidence. He has not, it seems, a good distinguishing Head or Memory, as a Witness ought to have in case of Life, and a Life of so high a Value as this of that Noble Lord.

And many other material Passages this Witness delivers under that Limitation, as he thinks.

The Rising was intended, but never took effect; and the View was no more than appointed and undertaken: but the Seizing of the Guards, as this Witness says, was not to be unless the Rising had gone on; which it never did. He speaks nothing of any View made of the Guards, or any Report upon it: but he swears my Lord Russel consented to the Rising. That is his stabbing Evidence; but by what Words, or how he signify'd his Consent, not a Word, tho' mighty material.

But what is this Conspiracy for a Rising? and a Conspiracy to seize the Guards? (in case the Rising had gone on:) What are these to the Crime charged in the Indictment against the Lord Russel, for conspiring the Death of the King?

Here is not a word of any such Matter, nor of seizing the Guards in order to it, no not one Word.

And that is the only material Part of the Indictment (as shall appear more plainly hereafter.)

The second Witness, Mr. Sheppard, mentions the meeting (at his House) of the Duke of Monmouth, and among the rest, the Lord Russel, and they discours'd of surprizing the Guards; and that the Duke, the Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armstrong, (as he remembers) went one Night to view the Guards, and the next Day at his House they said it was very feasible, if they had strength to do it. And then he says there was two Meetings there, and, as he remembers, my Lord Russel was both times there. Being ask'd by the Attorney-General, besides the seizing of the Guards, if there were any discourse of a Rising; he answers, He did not remember any further Discourse, for he was often gone out of the Room: And this is the effect of that he says.

If any thing of this comes near my Lord Russel, it is those Words, first giving an Account of who they were that were met, and that my Lord Russel was one of them; he says the Substance of their Discourse was how to surprize the King's Guards. This may be true, if one or two of the Company only discourses it; for it does not necessarily affirm, that every one did speak in that Discourse. He does not mention one Word spoken by my Lord Russel, nor that he approv'd of, or consented to any thing. At the worst, for any thing that he says, it can be but Misprision: He can say nothing as to the intended Rising. Now Colonel Romsey's Evidence is altogether of that Rising, and the seizing of the Guards was to have been if the Rising had gone on; and this was at the same time that Mr. Sheppard speaks to: and yet Mr. Sheppard being ask'd if there was any Discourse of a Rising, he answers, he did not remember any further Discourse.

Nor does Colonel Romsey certainly remember any thing of a Declaration read amongst them, whether he heard it there, or whether by Mr. Ferguson's Report of it to my Lord Shaftesbury; which is one of the principal things that Mr. Sheppard speaks to, (besides that of seizing the Guards.) And as to the Declaration, Mr. Sheppard says, he cannot say my Lord Russel was there when that Declaration was read.

So they agree in nothing but in the Discourse of seizing the Guards, and that my Lord Russel was then present.

So that as yet the Sum of the Proof by Colonel Romsey is, that my Lord Russel consented to the Rising, which is too general; and the Sum of the Proof by Mr. Sheppard is, that my Lord Russel was present in Company when the Company discours'd of seizing the Guards, but he knows nothing of the Rising.

The third Witness (the Lord Howard) discourses much about a Conspiracy to rise, but he speaks most (of what he says) by report from the Earl of Shaftesbury, and from the Duke; so it goes for no Evidence against my Lord Russel, and the Chief Justice did the Prisoner that Right, as to declare as much to the Jury: and the Lord Howard clears the Duke from any such horrid Act as the killing the King, the Duke said he would not suffer it; and if the Duke be innocent in that, it is probable that my Lord Russel, and the rest of the Company that met, had no discourse about killing the King, nor any Thought that way; which yet is the great and only substantial Charge of this Indictment, which must still be minded and observ'd.

My Lord Howard does indeed prove two several Consults, one at Mr. Hampden the younger's, the other at my Lord Russel's about the middle of January last, and after, and that my Lord Russel was at both; and these Consults were of an Insurrection, and where to begin it, and of providing Arms and Money, and of sending into Scotland to settle an Understanding with the Lord of Argyle:

Argyle: and being asked what my Lord did say, he answers thus, viz. Every one (says he) knows my Lord Russel is a Person of great Judgment, and not very lavish in Discourse. But did he consent? was a Question ask'd by Sir George Jefferies: the Lord Howard answered, We did not put it to the Vote, but it went without Contradiction, and I took it that all there gave their Consent. That my Lord Russel join'd in the Council of Six, that he approv'd of his being chosen for one, that he said one Word in these two Consults, there is not any Proof by the Lord Howard; only he says, He took it that all there consented. Is that enough? O strange Evidence!

I will not here take notice, or examine how far the Lord Howard is a credible Witness in this Case, but refer the Reader to the Testimony of my Lord of Anglesey, Mr. Howard, and Dr. Burnet: or how far any of the three Witnesses are to be believ'd, having all three upon their own Testimony been Participes Criminis, and it is suppos'd have their Pardons, or are promis'd Pardons: Not that this is offer'd to disable them quite from being Witnesses, but surely, all things consider'd, it much lessens their Credit in this Case; nor does it make them the more Credible, because no other Witnesses can be had. But then consider that most Excellent Character given of the Prisoner by Persons of Honour, and of the highest Esteem for Ability and Integrity, and such as contradicts, and is inconsistent with the Charge of the Indictment, and whatever is of weight in the Evidence against him; and especially if you give any Credit to the Lord Howard himself, who upon his Oath does declare, as in the Presence of God and Man, That he did not believe that either the Duke of Monmouth, or my Lord Russel, had any design to murder the King; which is the only effectual Charge of this Indictment. These things consider'd, it seems very strange to me, how the Lord Russel could be found guilty of a compassing and imagining the Death of the King; for so is the Verdict.

This answers most of the Observations made by the Author of the Antidote upon my Lord Russel's Speech, restraining the Expression, as he says, of his Innocency to the Design upon the King's Life, and to killing of the King, and of his omitting to mention the general Rising; which, as this Author boldly affirms, was fully proved upon him; and that my Lord's Professions of his Innocency, as to any Plot upon the King's Life, or to kill the King, or his knowing any thing thereof, these (says the Author) are no plain Declarations of his Innocency, as to the Crime charged and proved upon him, of conspiring and consulting to raise an Insurrection. Nor was there any need of my Lord's answering that, for it was little material.

How uncertain, how disagreeing, how unapplicable to the Charge of the Indictment those Proofs are, has been fully observ'd already; and the Author grossly mistakes in his Judgment, when he takes the conspiring and consulting to raise an Insurrection, to be the Crime charged in the Indictment; for (as was observ'd before) the Charge of the Indictment is, the compassing and imagining to kill the King; and that of a Conspiracy to raise an Insurrection, or to levy War, is none of the Crimes or Treasons enumerated or specified in the Act of 25 Edw. 3. and therefore could not be the Crime charged in the Indictment, which is grounded only upon that Act of 25 Edw. 3. (as the Attorney-General acknowledges) for it is an actual levying of War, and not a conspiring only to levy War, or raise an Insurrection, that is the Treason specified in that Act of 25 Edw. 3. And therefore the mention of other things are but by way of Aggravation, for the more ample setting forth of the Crime charged, which is of compassing the King's Death: and that the conspiring to make an Insurrection, cannot be an open Deed to prove a compassing the King's Death, has been already spoken to, and shall be yet more fully.

Vol. III.

Nor is the Author more mistaken in his Observations upon the Matter of Fact, and his unwarranted Conclusions and Inferences raised from thence, than he is in his Determinations of Matters in Law arising from that Fact.

The Death of the King (says the Author) in that Law of 25 Edw. 3. is not restrained to killing of his natural Person, but extends as well to his civil Death as natural: As to conspire to depose the King, to imprison him, or laying any force or restraint upon him; these (says the Author) are all High-Treason, for compassing his Death, natural or civil. If so, why then we are at never the more certainty for this excellent Law of 25 Edw. 3.

I agree, that conspiring to depose the King, to imprison him, are Treasons; but it is not so plain that they are Treasons within this Law of 25 E. 3. upon which this Indictment is grounded. It is true, they are made Treason by the late Act of 13 of the now King, and have by several temporary Acts (such as this of 13 Car. 2. is) been made Treason: but this proves that they were not judged by those Parliaments, that pass'd those temporary Acts, to be Treasons within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. For why then were these temporary Acts made? What need was there of them? Sir Edward Coke, 3 Inst. fol. 9. in the last Paragraph but one of that fol. says, A Conspiracy to levy War is no Treason; he means within the Act of 25 Edw. 3. but it has been made Treason since Sir Edward Coke's time, viz. by 13 Car. 2. And let it be remembred, that the great End of making this excellent Law of 25 Edw. 3. (as appears by the Preamble) was to avoid Uncertainty, and Variety of Opinions, and to prevent the Arbitrariness of Judges, in the ordinary Courts; and the Act takes care, that doubtful Cases, such as are not plainly within the enumeration of the Act, are to be reserv'd for the Judgment of the King and Parliament. And herein consists the Excellency of this Law: Quoad fieri possit, quam plurima Legibus ipsis definiantur: Quam paucissima Judicis arbitrio relinquantur. And as the learned Lord Bacon in his Advancement of Learning, fol. 447. says, That is the best Law, which gives least Liberty to the Judge; he the best Judge that takes least Liberty to himself: Misera est servitus, ubi Jus est vagum. And this Law is a Declaration of Law, and therefore ought not to be extended to like Cases in the Construction of it: And it is made in the Punishment of the greatest Offences, and is as penal as a Law can be; and therefore ought not to be expounded by Equity, that is, to be extended to like Cases.

It is true, the Opinion of the Judges hath been, That conspiring to depose or imprison the King, is a compassing or imagining the Death of the King. And if a Man declares by Overt-Act, that he will depose or imprison the King; this, says Sir Edward Coke, 3 Inst. fol. 6. upon the Word (Mort) is a sufficient Overt-Act, for the Intent of killing the King. Mind him well, he does not say, that conspiring to depose or to imprison the King, is an Overt-Act, to prove the conspiring the King's Death; which is the Opinion the Antidoter maintains, and for which he cites all his Cases afterwards cited. But Sir Edward Coke says, That conspiring to depose or imprison the King, being declar'd by Overt-act, this Overt-Act is also a sufficient Overt-Act for the Intent of killing the King.

the

It is one thing to conspire to depose the King,

And another thing to declare, that Conspiring by some Open-Act: They differ as much as thinking does from acting. Now in this Case of the Lord Ruffel, the Author of this Antidote, and some others (as appears by the printed Tryals) would have us believe that very conspiring to levy War, is an Overt-Act to prove the compassing and imagining the King's Death: For which there is not the least ground from Sir Edward Coke. First they are different Species, as Sir Edward Coke observes in his third Institutes, fol. 14. the third Paragraph; and therefore (says he) the one of them cannot be an Overt-Act for another. That is, Conspiring to levy War, may the actual levying of War too, which is one Species of Treason, cannot be an Overt-Act for the compassing the Death of the King, which is another Species of Treason. But this is that the Antidoter labours; only says Sir Edward Coke, the Overt-Act of the one, may be an Overt-Act for another Sort or Species of Treason.

And I agree it, if the Overt-Act in the one sort of Treason, may as fitly and as properly in its own nature, and as equally be also an Overt-Act in the other sort, and had a Tendency to the Execution of that other sort. And it also does appear by the Proofs, to be so intended by the Conspirators: As for example; Actual seizing of the King's Guards (not a Conspiring to seize the King's Guards, and such Guards as are not plainly set forth in the Indictment what they are) may in its nature be an Overt-Act, to make manifest the compassing of the King's Death, and is an Act proper enough, and has in its nature a Tendency towards the Execution of the Conspiracy to kill the King: But then it must be proved to be so intended and designed, that is, in order to the killing of the King. But if it appear otherwise upon the Proof (as here it did) that it was not so intended, but design'd merely in order to a Rebellion, and levying of War (for which also it is as apt, and proper in its nature, and has as great a Tendency that way;) then it cannot be applied nor made use of as an Overt-Act, to prove the compassing the King's Death, (as in this Case of my Lord Ruffel's it was:) For this (as Sir Edward Coke well says, fol. 14. the latter part of the third Paragraph of that Folio) would be to confound the several Classes or Species of Treason: And the Confusion of Species is abominable in Nature.

And where Sir Edward Coke seems to comply with the Opinion and Practice of some Judges, that the Overt-Act of Deposing may be a good Overt-Act of Killing, (which, with the Distinction that I have offered, is just enough) yet he has some Hesitation; for he concludes that Opinion of his with these Words, fol. 6: in his third Institutes, upon the Word [Mort:] But (says he) peruse advisedly the Statutes of 13 Eliz. cap. 1. And why those Statutes? Because by those Statutes conspiring to depose the Queen is made Treason; which needed not, (as has been observ'd already) if it was Treason, within that Clause of Compassing the King's Death, within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. The like may be observed in many other such temporary Laws, as that of 25 H. 8. cap. 22. 26 H. 8. cap. 13. 28 H. 8. cap. 7. 1 Edw. 6. cap. 12. and 5 & 6 Edw. 6. cap. 11.

And it is worthy Observation, tho by way of a short Digression, that in many, if not in every one of these temporary Laws of Treason, there is an express Clause and Provision still, that Concealment, or keeping secret of any High Treason, should be adjudged Misprision of Treason: As if there were great need of that Caution, lest the Judges might judge concealing of Treason for High Treason.

Now to shew the Tenderneſs that the Judges heretofore shewed in the expounding of this Statute of Treasons of 25 Edw. 3. and how cautious they were in extending it beyond the strict Sense and Letter of the Statute, read the Case in Mich. 19 Hen. 6. fol. 47. Case 102. A Man was indicted in the King's Bench of Petty-Treason (which is declared too by the same Statute of 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2.) for killing his Mistress, whom he served. And because the Words of this Statute of 25 Edw. 3. declares it Petty-Treason where the Servant kills the Master, they were in doubt whether it ought to be extended to the Mistress, or not. And there the Judges of the King's Bench (before whom the Case was) sent to the Judges of the Court of Common-Pleas, then sitting, and to the Serjeants there, to know their Opinion of the Case. And by Advice of all the Judges of both Courts, it was adjudged Petty Treason for the Servant to kill the Mistress, not only within the Meaning, but within the very Words of that Statute; for Master and Mistress are in effect but one and the same Word, they differing only in Gender.

Sir Edward Coke says, 3 Instit. fol. 20, & 22. The Judges shall not judge a simili, or by Equity, by Argument, or by Inference of any Treason; but new or like Cases were to have been referred to the Determination of the next Parliament: Ubi terminata sunt dubitationes Judiciorum, says Bracton.

Let us in the next place examine the Authorities in Law, and Book-Cases, cited by this Author of the Antidote, and see how far they make good his Opinion, That meeting and consulting to make an Insurrection against the King, or raise a Rebellion, (which is the same with levying War, within the Words of 25 Edw. 3.) tho the Rebellion be not actually raised, is High Treason within this Law of 25 Edw. 3. For so he proposes the Question, Fol. 5. of his Book. And if he does not confine his Argument to that Statute, he says nothing to the Lord Ruffel's Case.

To prove the Meeting and Consulting to make an Insurrection against the King, or raise a Rebellion within the Kingdom, (tho the Rebellion is not actually raised) is High Treason within the Statute

Statute of 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2. (which, put all together, is the Position the Antidote maintains :) He cites the Case of Constable, mentioned in Calvin's Case, Sir Edward Coke's 7th Rep. fol. 10. b. and thence infers, That whatsoever tended to the deposing of Queen Mary was adjudged Treason for compassing her Death.

And this no Man denies; and it agrees with the Judgment of Sir Edward Coke, in his Chapter of Treason, fol. 6. upon the Word [Mort,] where he says, He that declareth by Overt-Act to depose the King, does an Overt-Act of compassing and imagining the Death of the King: And so says Sir Matthew Hale's Pleas of the Crown, fol. 11. towards the latter end. But what is this to the Point in hand, which merely concerns a Meeting and Consulting to make an Insurrection, or raising a Rebellion, which is the same thing with Conspiring to levy War? Conspiring to depose the King, and conspiring to levy War, are different Things; as conspiring to levy War is clearly held to be a distinct Treason from conspiring the Death of the King: And therefore the former of these (as hath been before observed) cannot by Law be an Overt-Act of the latter, as appears by the said Treatise of the Pleas of the Crown, fol. 13. towards the latter end. Nor was conspiring to levy War, without an actual levying of it, any Treason within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. upon which Statute only the Indictment of the Lord Russel is grounded, as is acknowledged by the Attorney-General. And therefore to supply that Defect, the Statute of 13 Car. 2. does expressly make it to be Treason. But the Lord Russel was not indicted upon that Statute of 13 Car. 2. and for this Reason he ought to have been acquitted upon this Indictment grounded only upon the Statute of 25 Edw. 3.

And if practising with a foreign Prince to make an Invasion, (when no Invasion followed, as the Case of Doctor Story was) Dyer 298. be all one with conspiring to levy War, when indeed no War is raised; it is out of all dispute that such Practising and such Conspiring cannot be Treason within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. tho it be Treason within the Statute of 13 Car. 2.

In the Case of the Lord Cobham, 1 Jacobi, there was more in the Case than conspiring to make an Insurrection, (which is all that the Author of the Antidote takes notice of :) There was also an actual Rebellion raised, as appears by the said little Treatise, filed, The Pleas of the Crown, fol. 13.

for the People were there assembled to take the King into their Power, as that Book puts the Case of the Lord Cobham.

And so it is in the Case of the Lord Grey: For there they had not only conspired to make an Insurrection, but, further, to seize the King, and get him into their power; which is a direct Conspiring against his Person, which naturally tends to the Destruction of his Person, and is the same with conspiring his Death, as hath been usually expounded: But 'tis otherwise merely to conspire to make an Insurrection, which can be no more than conspiring to levy War. The Case of Sir Henry Vane and Plunket had many other Ingredients to mount them up to Treason, which difference them from my Lord Russel's Case.

As to the Point of Misprision of Treason, with which the Author of the Antidote concludes, I have fully declared my Opinion already in the former part of this Discourse; and, I think, plainly evinced, That tho the Noble Lord might be present while others might between themselves privately debate Matters, and conclude upon them, yet it did not clearly appear by any Proofs that this Noble Lord ever gave the least Consent (to what was so concluded; without which Consent it could not amount to Treason, but at the most be a Misprision only. Nor must any Man's Life be taken from him upon Presumption or probable Arguments, but by plain, direct, and manifest downright Proofs. But a more strong, and indeed a violent Presumption lay quite the other way, that this Noble, Prudent, and Pious Lord, could never be guilty of such a Crime, as to conspire the Death of King Charles the Second: It was extremely against his Interest so to do; for the Life of that King, so long as it continued, by the Blessing of God was the great Security, both he and all good Protestants had against the greater Danger that might happen by the Change arising by the Death of that King, of losing our Religion, and all our Civil and Religious Rights, as the Experience we have lately had, hath sadly taught us. And if any thing were consulted between this Excellent Lord, and those with whom he met, as is more than probable, it was how to secure themselves against those Dangers they saw so near approaching, if the Life of King Charles the Second should fail; there was so great a Cause to fear them, considering who was like to succeed in the Throne.
